The National Labor Relations Board has found that members of a Denver union did not violate the Landrum-Griffin Act when they passed out handbills asking the public not to buy tobacco distributed by a struck wholesaler.

Four of the five NLRB members agreed that the "publicity" provision of L-G protected members of Teamsters Local 537, unaffiliated, when they distributed handbills that were "substantially accurate" in urging the public not to buy products of the struck Lohman Sales Co. The board said union members were not protected when they urged drug and food store employes not to buy or order Lohman products.

Member Phillip Ray Rodgers dissented in part. Both Rodgers and the majority members—Chairman Frank W. McCulloch, Boyd Leedom, John H. Fanning and Gerald A. Brown—quoted 1959 statements by Pres. John F. Kennedy, then Sen. Kennedy—on the meaning of labor law changes, in justification of their position.

Key points in the decision were these:

- Handbilling is not the same as picketing and is protected by the L-G "publicity" provisos so long

Labor Day Schedule Of Radio Speeches

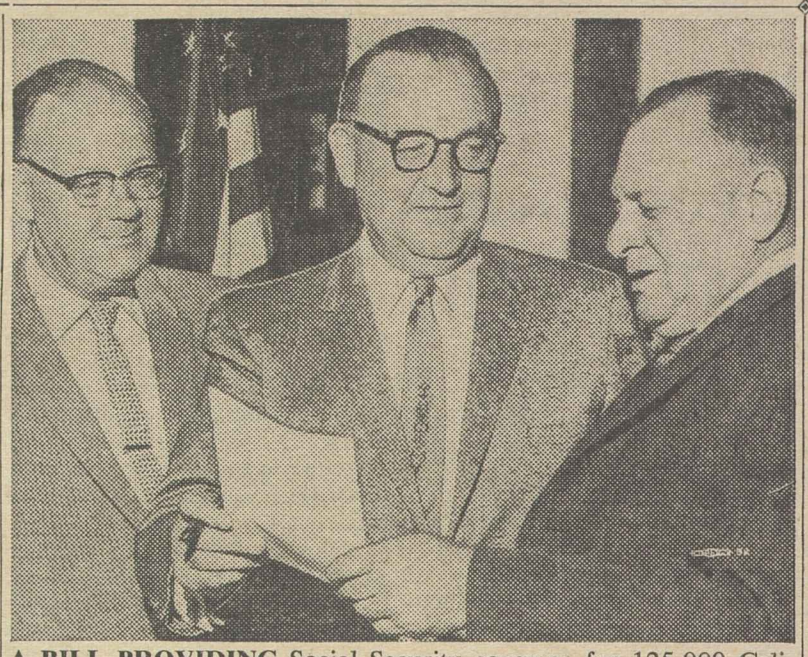
All four radio networks will broadcast Labor Day addresses by AFL-CIO officials on Sept. 4. The schedule (Eastern Daylight Time) is as follows:

ABC network—7:15 p.m. —Vice Pres. Walter P. Reuther.

CBS network—7:45 p.m. —Vice Pres. George M. Harrison.

NBC network—8:05 p.m. —Pres. George Meany.

Mutual network — 9:15 p.m.—Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler.



A BILL PROVIDING Social Security coverage for 125,000 California state employes has been signed by Gov. Edmund G. Brown, center. Among the leaders in the long fight to get the bill enacted over employer opposition were (left) Sec.-Treas. James L. McCormack, State, County & Municipal Employes, and Harry Finks (right), California AFL-CIO legislative representative.

In Senate Testimony:

AFL-CIO Supports Disarmament Unit

Organized labor has declared its strong support of a proposed U.S. Disarmament Agency for World Peace & Security, urging Congress to put greater stress on its "study and planning of the economic aspects of disarmament."

Andrew J. Biemiller, director of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Legislation, told the Senate Foreign Relations Committee that "no objective is closer to the hearts and minds of men everywhere, no goal more cherished, than disarmament and peace." He stressed the need for studying the economic effects, cautioning that lack of planning could have grave consequences.

Walter P. Reuther, president of the AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept. and head of the Auto Workers, said in a statement filed with the committee that the new agency "with a strong economic division as an integral part of it, can give the lead in preparing programs which will assure an orderly transition to a disarmed state in America."

Failure to utilize the nation's human and mechanical resources may mean, Reuther warned, "they may simply be left unused, adding to the already heavy burden of unemployment and idle capacity of our plants."

Pres. Kennedy on June 29 sent Congress a draft of legislation to create the new agency, writing it was needed "to make an intensified effort to develop acceptable political and technical alternatives to the present arms race."

Biemiller said the new agency would give "essential continuity" to the government's efforts and to personnel who have been working on the disarmament problem in the past usually on an ad hoc basis. He made clear labor's concern over the economic aspects of the problem.

More than half of our national budget is presently devoted to support our military forces," he said. "Any substantial reduction in these expenditures is bound to have an immediate impact on our nation's economy.

"Unless we are prepared for it,

Goldberg Hails Unions For Cooperation on L-G

A "fair and cooperative attitude" by unions has enabled the Labor Dept. to administer the Landrum-Griffin Act "in a manner consistent with the betterment of labor relations," Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg has reported to Congress.

Goldberg hailed the "high degree of compliance" with "this relatively new piece of legislation" in letters to the chairmen of the Senate and House Labor committees—Sen. Lister Hill (D-Ala.) and Rep. Adam Clayton Powell (D-N.Y.).

He sent the committee chairmen a summary of the operations of the Labor Dept.'s Bureau of Labor-Management Reports for the 1961 fiscal year which showed:

- "Organized labor, by far the largest group affected by the law, offered genuine cooperation" in administration and enforcement.
- The "sincerity" of labor's cooperation, despite union opposition to many provisions of the Landrum-Griffin Act, is demonstrated

Bipartisan Plea Made By Kennedy

By David L. Perlman

Liberal forces in Congress sought to salvage key elements of Pres. Kennedy's long-term foreign aid program after the conservative coalition in the House ripped out the heart of the Administration bill.

A 197-to-185 vote in the House —subject to reversal as the AFL-CIO News went to press—limited the foreign aid program to one year and made it impossible for the President to give a binding pledge of continued assistance to nations which, at U.S. urging, embark on long-term programs to develop their resources, raise living standards and strengthen their economies.

Kennedy, staking his prestige on the outcome, personally led the fight to reverse the House action. In a dramatic statement he appealed for bipartisan support to "demonstrate that this nation is still united in its determination to meet its responsibilities and halt the spread of communism and Castroism by every available means."

The President pointedly reminded Republicans that "for eight years the Democrats in both houses gave Pres. Eisenhower overwhelming support in every major vote on foreign policy and foreign aid."

"It is urgent," he declared, "that this bipartisan principle be maintained in this crucial hour of the nation's history."

It was the President's interven-

Output Hits Record High As Jobs Lag

The nation's industrial output rose again in July, hitting a new record high, the Federal Reserve Board has reported.

But, the board observed, unemployment has remained at its 1960-61 recession peak of nearly 7 percent despite the steady five-month rise in production.

The board said its seasonally adjusted index—a measure of total factory, mine and utility output—rose to 112 percent in July. The 1957 output serves as the base of 100.

The index had slumped to a 1960-61 recession low of 102 last February. Since then, production recovery has been steady. The rise was 2 percent in July, as it had been in June.

The index had been 110 percent in June, equaling a near record

Plumbers Direct Locals To Set Up COPE Units

Kansas City, Mo.—An aggressive program of political education extending into every local has been directed by the 28th convention of the Plumbers and Pipe Fitters.

A constitutional amendment mandating the program was adopted unanimously by the 2,600 delegates to the UAPP convention here. Previously, the union had "encouraged" such activity.

The new section of the constitution instructs locals to establish political education committees to inform members and the public on issues and candidates in national, state and local elections, to sponsor registration and voting drives, and to coordinate political activities with those of other unions.

James L. McDevitt, national director of COPE, later told the delegates that if labor studies the voting records of congressional candidates and gets out its own vote, "we'll more than make up in '62 the losses we suffered in Congress in '60."

"If we gain just 40 seats in the House," McDevitt predicted, "there'll be no more Taft-Hartley, no more Landrum-Griffin and no more threats from Smith of Virginia or Barry Goldwater."

He laid particular stress on the importance of relaying congressional voting records to local union members and their families.

"Once they look at that voting record," he declared, "you won't have to worry about what they're going to do when they go behind the curtain. No sane person ever cast a ballot to deprive his family of its rights."

A highlight of the convention was a visit by former Pres. Harry Truman, who drove in his own car from his home in Independence, some 15 miles away. When the delegates hailed him with cries of "Give 'em hell," Truman said smilingly:

"It's not necessary to do anything but tell the truth. When you do that, if people are wrong they think they are catching hell."

The former president told the delegates the labor movement had developed statesmen as its leaders and that they are working for the welfare of the entire country.

Reelected to five-year terms were Pres. Peter T. Schoemann, Sec.-Treas. William C. O'Neill, and other national officers. In the only contest, 3rd Vice Pres. G. C. Archambault defeated Leo St. Laurent for a new term as representative of the Canadian district.

In other actions, the delegates:

- Continued the life of the union's current national agreement.
- Raised minimum local dues from $2.50 a month to $3 and the per capita from $1.50 to $2.
- Adopted the AFL-CIO legislative program with specific backing for proposals to lower the age for receipt of social security to 55 for women and 60 for men and to increase the individual income tax exemption from the present $600 to $800.
- Adopted an expanded apprenticeship and journeyman training program.

assistance as an instrument of private morality instead of public need."

- The three-month limitation on assistance, which would "permit the bureaucrats to decide when a person is hungry."

The real source of the public welfare problem, Perlis said, is not the "chiseler" or the "free-loader," but the "hard-core family—the emotionally-ill family in which the neurotic dependency needs of the father and mother are passed on to their children and their children's children in an endless chain of frustration and defeat."

The Newburgh plan, he charged, would "tear away the last shred of dignity and hope for these emotionally disabled people." He said what is needed is "a constructive approach to the hard-core family—rehabilitative services associated with public assistance, just as physical rehabilitation is now becoming a part of physical disability compensation programs."

Also needed, he asserted, are a full-employment economy, adequate social insurance, and "sane and sensible" public assistance standards which would "help people to help themselves."

Public assistance is "the last resort against hunger," Perlis told the CLU officers, and should be given to people "in need, on the basis of need, and without regard to the cause of the need." This, he said, is the "moral intent of public assistance laws."

Kennedy Greets Convention:

Federal Aid to Education Key Theme at AFT Meeting

Philadelphia—The need for a comprehensive program of federal aid to education was a major theme at the Teachers' 45th convention here.

"The battle to save our civilization does not rest with the missile race," said AFT Pres. Carl J. Megel in his keynote address. "It will be won or lost in the classrooms of our nation's schools."

Megel said that the American public must recognize that what was good enough in education yesterday and today will not be good enough for tomorrow. He added that the place to begin improvements in the educational system is the schools themselves, with better curricula, better treatment and increased recognition of teachers, and better school financing to supply enough modern, adequately equipped classrooms.

"All these are necessary," he said, "because today more than ever education is the prime requisite for the establishment and maintenance of a peaceful world."

Addressing a Democratic Human Relations luncheon at the convention, Ralph McGill, publisher of the Atlanta Constitution, declared:

"I am for an equitable system of federal aid—I believe that every American boy and girl—in the remote villages of the Dakotas, in the slums of this or any other city, in the poorer rural areas of the South—wherever they may be—are a responsibility of the whole people."

At the opening session, in Independence Square, Sen. Wayne Morse (D-Ore.), co-sponsor of the school aid bill passed by the Senate, urged the Roman Catholic hierarchy to modify its stand opposing federal aid to public schools unless loans are provided for private and parochial schools.

A companion bill to the Senate measure was blocked in the House Rules Committee, with supporters blaming Catholic opposition for its defeat.

Morse said he would be in favor of loans to private schools with provision for repayment with interest. But he charged that the Catholic clergy was insisting on the loans as a price for a public school aid bill and was thus seeking to block the "legitimate aims of a majority of our people through pressure tactics." The success of such action, he said, would lead to a "whirlwind of resentment" and revive "the latent religious quarrels of past history."

In a message to the convention, Pres. Kennedy said the nation's need for more highly trained people can be met "only by strengthening our educational system at every level, from kindergarten through graduate school." He said that with the support of such organizations as the AFT, "education will continue to advance toward the quality of excellence we all seek."

Saul Miller, AFL-CIO director of publications, speaking at a Union Teacher Press Association luncheon, described the changing tone of the labor press, which, he said, "reflects a basic shift in the labor movement itself."

"The trade union member," he said, "does not so much have to be convinced that trade unionism is in his own best interests and in the interests of the nation as to be given the pertinent information on the goals and objectives of the trade union movement—the battles still to be won and the threats to the security of his union . . . Facts and information—not bitter name-calling or highly emotional attacks—are emerging as the necessary tone for the labor press in the Sixties."

Reviewing the union's gains over the past year, Megel noted that the AFT had reached an all-time high of 61,000 members.

He condemned the right-wing John Birch Society's announced plan to infiltrate Parent-Teacher Associations and labeled the society a threat to American liberties and an attempt "to enslave the minds of men."

NLRB Speeds Missile Site Dispute Action

Rule changes to speed up hearings and decisions on jurisdictional disputes at missile sites and other defense establishments have been put into effect by the National Labor Relations Board.

The NLRB amended its rules and statements of procedure to shorten the period between the filing of charges and the hearing, and to eliminate the filing of briefs except for good cause. Under the new rules, a hearing may be held 10 days after charges are filed, the board said.

The changes implement the policy stated by Pres. John F. Kennedy in an executive order issued May 26.

Union Cooperation Vital To Survival, Typos Told

Dallas—The technological revolution in the graphic arts and the need for a united front in dealing with management are pressing reasons why the printing and related trades must learn to work together, Typographical Union Pres. Elmer Brown told the 103rd convention of the organization.

"There is strong evidence that our fellow craftsmen fully realize, as we do, that the old dog-eat-dog-and-devil-take-the-hindmost era is a luxury none of us can afford," he said.

"Scabbing on each other's picket lines, riding on each other's coat-tails in contract negotiations, jurisdictional disputes, cross-purpose collective bargaining, and all the other unhealthy, uneconomic and self-defeating practices that have marked our conduct in the past must be eliminated if we are to survive."

Brown reported to delegates that a series of meetings of representatives of printing and publishing unions, launched last year with the purpose of achieving an eventual amalgamation will be continued.

The labor unity theme was repeated in a subsequent address by Pres. Anthony J. DeAndrade of the Pressmen, who told the ITU delegates:

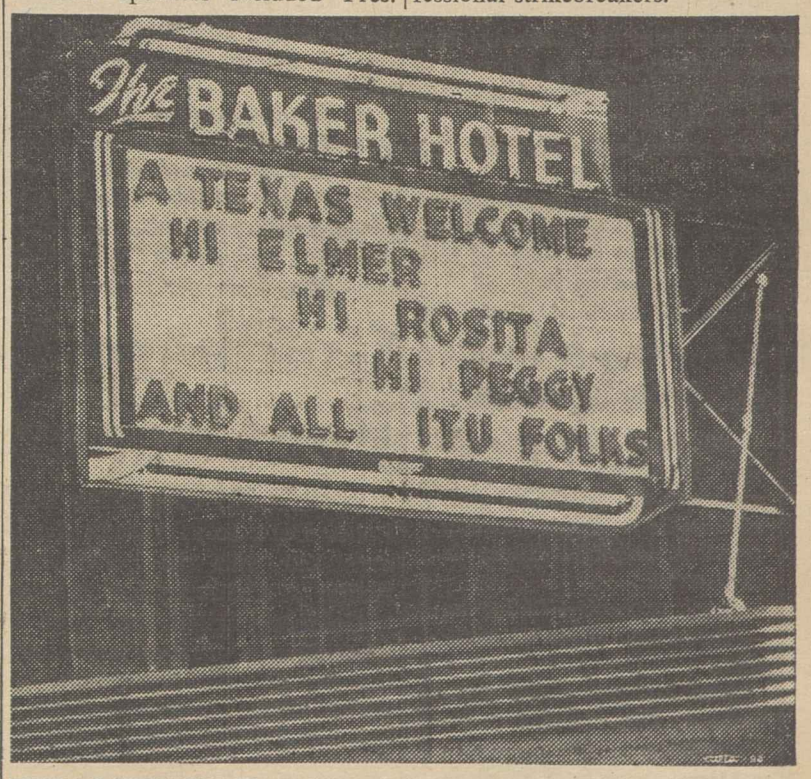
"I believe the only type of organization that can be successful for us in the future is total merger of all the graphic arts and paper-converting unions into one large union."

Other speakers included Pres. Wilfrid T. Connell of the Photo Engravers; Mendel Segal, president of the Union Employers Section of the Printing Industry of America; Public Printer James Harrison; George N. Dale of the American Newspaper Publishers Association; Al Barkan, deputy director of the AFL-CIO Committee on Political Education, who presented the union with a citation for exceeding its COPE quota for five consecutive years, and Edward Goshen, director of the Labor Dept. Bureau of Apprenticeship & Training.

Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg, on hand to present an Award of Merit to Brown for his efforts on behalf of wage-earners, announced the promotion of Goshen to the BAT director's post. A veteran member of the ITU, Goshen had been serving as assistant director of the Apprenticeship bureau.

Goldberg also read a message from Pres. Kennedy praising the ITU for traditionally meeting its responsibilties to the nation.

In his keynote address Brown said the union's outstanding achievement of the past year was its campaign for the enactment of state laws to curb the use of professional strikebreakers.



TEXAS WELCOME, emblazoned on marquee of the Dallas hotel where the Typographical Union held its 103rd convention, greeted ITU Pres. Elmer Brown, his wife and his granddaughter. Other officers were similarly greeted and both Dallas newspapers issued souvenir editions in honor of the convention.

No Progress Reported:

UAW Board Directs Big 3 Strike Votes

Detroit—The Auto Workers' executive board, acting on reports of no progress in six weeks of negotiations with General Motors, Ford and Chrysler managements, has authorized local unions to take strike votes.

UAW Pres. Walter P. Reuther said the board warned that unless satisfactory progress is made in the next 10 days, it will at its next meeting on Aug. 29 be "obligated" to pick one auto maker as a target. Ford, GM and Chrysler contracts expire on Aug. 31.

A strike vote at American Motors plants was postponed pending further negotiations. The company has proposed a new contract effective Sept. 6 with a 7-cent hourly wage boost and a profit-sharing plan indicating, according to Reuther, its willingness to "explore in an intelligent, meaningful manner the basic problems" of its 23,000 union workers.

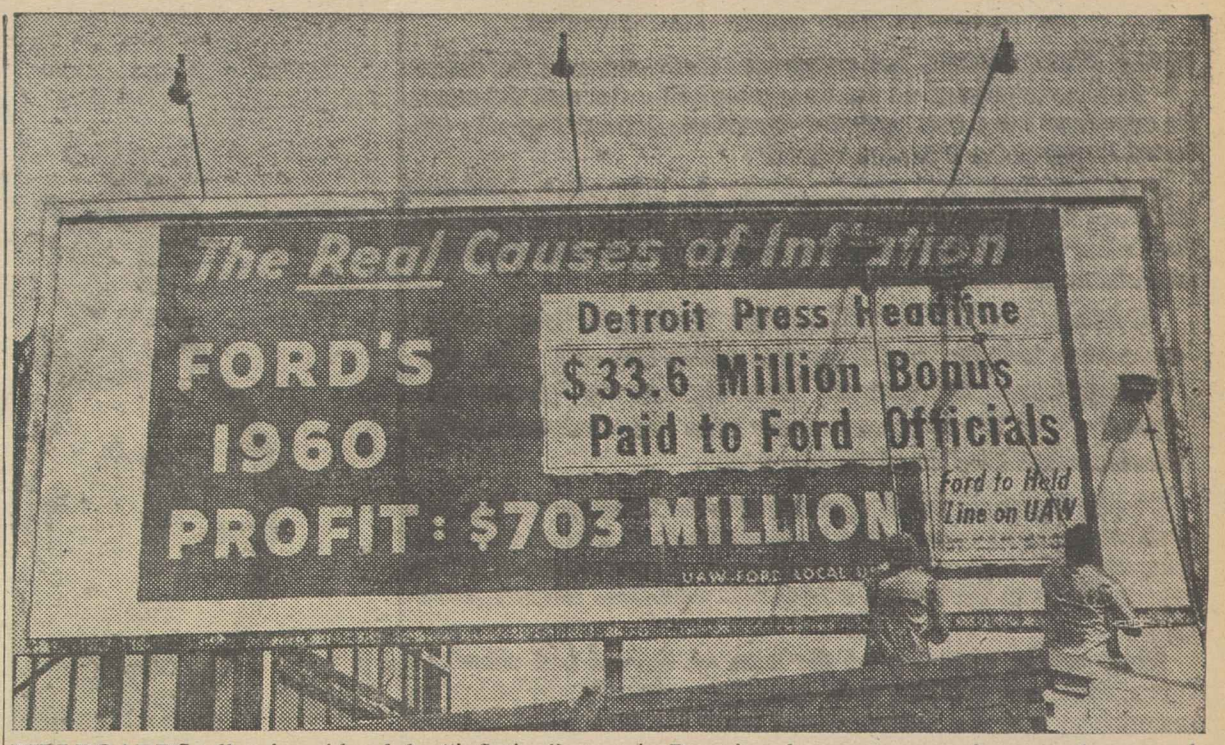
At the same time the GM Conference Board of the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers authorized the taking of strike votes by Aug. 27 in six locals representing 26,000 GM workers. The locals are in Dayton and Warren, O., Rochester, N. Y., New Brunswick, N. J., and Chicago.

Other developments were these:

- Chrysler rejected UAW proposals to put hourly paid workers on regular salary like office workers, or to join the union in seeking legislation of benefit to the industry. Chrysler was the only "Big Three" auto maker to respond to UAW proposals in these areas.
- Ford negotiations are slated to move Aug. 21 from Dearborn to the Detroit-Leland Hotel in downtown Detroit, to what the UAW called "neutral ground" away from company offices.
- Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg will come here Aug. 26 for a talk to the National Catholic Conference on Interracial Justice. Previously he expressed his interest in a peaceable settlement of negotiations.

Reuther, in his statement on negotiations, said he hopes union and management negotiators will join once again to "demonstrate to the world that free labor and free management are capable of making collective bargaining work."

Among the union's objectives are improvement of the wage formula, better pension and retirement clauses, improvement of the supplementary unemployed benefit provisions, and improved health insurance plans.



BILLBOARDS tell union side of the "inflation" story in Detroit, where auto manufacturers have used press, radio and television to accuse the Auto Workers of asking for "inflationary" contract improvements. as the handbills are substantially accurate.

- Lohman is a producer of goods, though he does not manufacture any products, and therefore is affected by the law.

The board majority rejected the arguments by Lohman and others that handbilling was tantamount to picketing, and that Lohman was not a manufacturer and therefore not covered by L-G, which refers to producers and products.

Local 537 was certified in November 1959 as bargaining representative of Lohman drivers and warehouse employes, who went on strike Dec. 2, 1959, when negotiations did not result in a contract. The union handbilled Lohman customers that month and in January 1960, and the NLRB general counsel issued a complaint alleging violations of the L-G secondary boycott provisions.

Typos' Goshen Heads Bureau In Labor Dept.

Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg has named Edward E. Goshen, former executive secretary of the Denver Typographical Union, as director of the Bureau of Apprenticeship & Training.

Goldberg said Goshen has distinguished himself over the years "both as an ITU official and as a public official."

Acting director of the bureau since December, Goshen has had 24 years of service as field representative, supervisor, chief of field operations, deputy director, and executive director of apprenticeship service.

Goshen has been an ITU international representative and has served on local, state and federal apprenticeship bodies. He organized the first Colorado apprenticeship agency and was its first state director.

15-Cent Rate Raise Asked for Learners

The Labor Dept. has proposed an increase of 15 cents an hour in minimum wage rates for most learners.

Under the proposal, learner rates would range from $1 to $1.25 an hour, compared to the current rates of 80 to 97.5 cents an hour.

Wage-Hour Administrator Clarence T. Lundquist noted the increased learner rates thus would keep pace with the higher federal minimum wage which takes effect in September. The 1961 amendments to the wage-hour law raise the legal minimum to $1.15 an hour from the current $1 an hour.

Lundquist also proposed that "henceforth all requests for learner certificates be denied in the shoe manufacturing industry and in the rainwear, robes and leather and sheep-lined clothing divisions of the apparel industry."

He also proposed the continuance of regulations which set forth general policies on the denial or restriction of learner certificates under the new $1.15 an hour legal minimum.

The Wage-Hour law permits the Labor Dept. to set substandard rates by administrative action. Lundquist, in proposing the higher learner rates and other changes, said interested parties may file written statements of support or opposition by Aug. 27.

Lundquist pointed out that learner rates established in 1950 and 1956 also were not less than the legal federal minimum wage in effect at the time.

Unions' L-G Role Lauded By Goldberg

by the fact that 98 percent of all alleged violations "were settled through voluntary compliance." Legal action had to be undertaken in only 33 cases. A total of 79,706 reports were filed with the bureau, all but 593 from labor organizations.

- As an example of union efforts to ensure compliance with the law, some 4,000 unions submitted complete organization reports during the past year even though they were not required to do so. These reports were required on a one-time-only basis 90 days after enactment of the 1959 law.
- Most of the 1,882 violations which were remedied through voluntary compliance were minor.

Pointing up some of the problems the act has created for small local unions, the agency said visits to locals which failed to respond to correspondence involving errors in L-G reports revealed that:

"Most of these unions were found to have no office; two-thirds of the union officers had to be contacted at home; 85 percent had no secretarial help at all in filling out the forms, and only 5 percent had legal or accounting help . . . The majority of these locals were very small, having fewer than 100 members."

Of the 33 court cases brought by the Secretary of Labor, 14 involved alleged improper union election procedures. The year also marked the first court cases filed against an employer, the Olson Rug Co. of Chicago, and a "labor consultant"—the Illinois Detective Agency.

Noting that "relatively few" reports have been filed by employers and labor consultants, the Labor Dept. declared:

"It is difficult to determine whether or not all such required reports have been submitted. The payments and arrangements that must be reported are those which frequently are known only to the participants."

NLRB Orders Representation Vote On Panama-Owned 'Runaway' Ship

The Seafarers have won an order from the National Labor Relations Board directing an election on a "runaway," ship owned by a foreign corporation, manned by an alien crew and sailing under a foreign flag.

It was the third of a series of rulings this year in which the board has upheld the claim advanced by the SIU and other maritime unions that shipping companies cannot evade U.S. laws by registering their ships under the flags of Panama, Liberia, Honduras or other nations while the ships sail mainly in American waters with U.S. cargoes or passengers.

Involved in the latest ruling is the S.S. Yarmouth, a passenger ship sailing from U.S. ports, principally Miami, on cruises to the Caribbean. The vessel is owned and operated by the McCormick Shipping Corp., a Panamanian concern, though its exclusive U.S. agent is the Eastern Shipping Corp., officered mainly by Americans.

An NLRB panel of three members, with Philip Ray Rodgers dissenting, has ordered a secret ballot election no later than Sept. 10 among unlicensed crewmen on the Yarmouth. Members Boyd Leedom and John H. Fanning based their decision on these factors:

- The Yarmouth berths, is drydocked, takes on most of its supplies and advertises for passengers in Miami.
- Some 95 percent of the passengers and 85 percent of the cargo originate in the U.S.
- The vessel and its operators are "engaged in an essentially domestic U.S. enterprise" having a "continued and substantial impact on U.S. commerce."

The McCormick and Eastern companies have argued that the board had no jurisdiction over the Yarmouth because it is a Panamanian vessel, owned and operated by a Panamanian corporation and manned by a crew composed mostly of non-resident aliens.

Leedom and Fanning said the key is not whether a vessel is foreign owned or manned but whether "substantial contacts" exist between the maritime operation and important U.S. interests.

"We find," they said, "that the maritime operation of the companies possesses those substantial U.S. contacts which bring it within the jurisdictional coverage of the National Labor Relations Act despite the foreign registry and status of the crew."

Previous board rulings on "runaway flag" ships were made in February and July. In the first, the board ruled 3-2 that the West India Fruit & Steamship Co., Inc., broke the U.S. labor law when it interfered with the right of seamen on the car ferry Sea Level to join the Seafarers.

In the Sea Level case the owner was American, the crew Cuban, the flag that of Liberia. But the ship was engaged principally in U.S. commerce between Florida and Caribbean ports, the board found.

Later it upheld the SIU also in ordering the Peninsular & Occidental Steamship Co. to bargain with the union, put any resulting contract into writing, and reinstate eight seamen fired from the cruise ship Florida, sailing between Miami and Nassau, B. W. I., under the flag of Liberia.

The SIU and the Maritime Union have waged a long campaign to have the NLRB assume jurisdiction over foreign flag vessels.

Retired Labor Paper Publisher Dies at 82

Salt Lake City—Matthew I. Thompson, former owner and publisher of the Utah Labor News, has died here at 82.

Born in Holmes City, Minn., he was an organizer and past president of the Utah Federation of Labor, and a member of Salt Lake Typographical Local 115.

Safety on Labor Day Backed by Kennedy

Pres. Kennedy has thrown his support behind the Labor Day Safety Campaign being conducted by organized labor and the National Safety Council.

"Labor Day is dedicated to the dignity of American workers and their contributions to the progress of our country," he said in a statement.

"Labor's national holiday was never intended to be commemorated by the injury and death of thousands of workers and their wives and children from accidents on the streets and highways, boating, and other holiday activities.

"I urge every American, whether he works with his hands or his mind, and his family, to observe the coming national holiday without the suffering and sadness resulting from unnecessary accidents.

"I wish each of you a safe and most enjoyable holiday."

A Look at the Record

THE HYSTERICAL anti-union tone that dominated the debate leading to passage of the Landrum-Griffin Act and the attack on organized labor that preceded the debate created a grossly distorted image of the labor movement.

Now two years after passage of the act Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg has given the lie to this distorted image in a report on the Labor Dept.'s Bureau of Labor-Management Reports, which administers the Landrum-Griffin Act.

Goldberg told the chairmen of the House and Senate labor committees that for the 12 months ending June 30, 1961, the "fair and cooperative attitude" of unions and the "genuine cooperation" of the labor movement have been instrumental in effective administration of the new law.

Despite the strong union opposition to the Landrum-Griffin Act, Goldberg's report reveals that 98 percent of all alleged violations were settled through voluntary compliance. And of a total of 79,706 reports filed with the bureau, all but 593 were from labor organizations.

Many unions went beyond the letter of the act and submitted extensive reports detailing their operations, expenditures and other material so that the bureau would have the completest possible information on union operations.

Some of the handful of cases that reached the court stage represent honest differences of opinion between unions with long, democratic traditions and Labor Dept. officials regarding proper rules of conduct for union elections.

Goldberg's report deserves the attention of those members of Congress who were bombarded with anti-union material two years ago distorting and misrepresenting the operations of labor organizations.

Labor's sincerity in cooperating to provide full information to the government is in keeping with its long tradition of advancing the best interests of its members and the nation.

Penalty for Poverty

THE BASIC INHUMANITY of the Newburgh, N. Y., "welfare program" has been placed on full public display with the latest edict that all persons receiving public assistance will be photographed in the future.

The photographing of public assistance recipients is a natural extension of the "know-nothing" code that has motivated Newburgh's 13-point "welfare" plan. The Washington Post in an editorial entitled "Penalizing Misery" comments:

"Has Mr. Mitchell (city manager) thought of tattooing, we wonder? These are at once more permanent and reliable methods of identification and they have the virtue at the same time of making the receipt of relief seem even more humiliating and unattractive."

Public assistance is a last resort against hunger and should be given to people on the basis of need and without regard to the cause of that need. The unemployed, the helpless, the hopeless indigents cannot be wished away by threats to punish them for their misery.

This is what's involved in Newburgh, where photographing the aid recipients is part of a plan to tear away the last shred of dignity and hope for fellow human beings.

Bows After 61 Years of Service:

John Brophy Challenges Labor To Lead the Way in New Era

Excerpts are given below from a talk by John Brophy, special representative of the AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept., at a farewell in Washington marking his retirement after 61 years of distinguished service to the U.S. and international labor movements.

THE LABOR MOVEMENT today is searching for new ways and purposes, trying to achieve a consensus of labor—as to what its next program must be to meet the imbalance in our economy and the disorders that result from haremscarem mechanization—to bring some system, to bring some intelligent social planning in the interest not alone of the workers but of our common good, of our society. It's also true that the labor movement has the problem not only of matters of national concern but in the international field.

I think it was John Donne, some 350 years ago, voiced a great truism. Donne was a poet, a divine of his time. He said: "No man is an island." He was saying in effect what religious doctrine has preached, that mankind is one, than an injury to one is an injury to all—as the labor movement puts it.

Individuals are interdependent—what one does, what one doesn't do has an effect upon others. No one is safe by himself for long going it alone. That is true of individuals, but it's also true of organizations of every kind; it's true of employer associations; it's true of the political parties; it's true of the political state; it's true of the trade union movement.

An individual national organization may for a time seem to be going forward with special success, but a time comes when these gains are cut back to the general level. Furthermore, even independent unions outside the fold of the federation, insofar as they have any security or achievement to their credit, they do it in the climate of labor opinion and labor influence and labor support. All these organizations depend for whatever success of the moment that they may have upon the fact that a broad climate of opinion has been built up by a great federation of labor.

And so whatever the shortcomings — the failure to find quickly and easily the new purpose, the new devotion, the great new objectives of civilizing our economy and bringing it into balance in relationship—whatever the shortcomings may be today, the labor movement because it is basically and intrinsically democratic and concerned with people will ultimately find the answer.

It will find the answer because men and women like yourselves gather together and discuss these things endlessly, searching ever for the clarity and the firm purpose to carry forward the social ideals of a democratic society and a democratic trade union movement.

I DO NOT DESPAIR of the setbacks of the day, of the setbacks of the moment. They call upon us to think clearly and more definitely in the search for the truth and the correctness of program and policies.

The past 25 years or more has been a glorious one in the annals of the American labor movement. But we cannot live with the past. In the past we met the challenge. In the past the labor movement broadly faced up to its problems, and went forward. And so every generation must face the problems a changing society brings to us, and all that the gains of the past mean as far as the future is concerned is that we start from a higher level to face up these challenges.

In the field of social welfare, in the field of more effective trade unionism, in the field of international affairs, this broadening, this acknowledging that man, organizations within our society, national states no matter how strong at the moment they may be, in the last analysis they have to meet the challenge of life and social purpose which is to make life easier and better for mankind and enrich it in their march forward.

Because while it is true that man must have bread, he does not live by bread alone; bread has to be sweetened or it has to be salted with the zest of continuing struggle and purpose to live for another one. And it's only in that cooperation, nationally and internationally, it's only in that degree of cooperation on the part of the whole labor movement that we can move forward to the next step.

This is an assignment to you men and women, younger than I am, an assignment with destiny. The destiny is human dignity and enriching democratic life anew and on additional levels.

It's for this endeavor that I call you to the next forward advance of the American labor movement in the interests of America, in the interests of American labor, and in the interests of worldwide labor.

America's Problems: Reaction, Complacency and Mediocrity

By Edward P. Morgan

(This column is excerpted from the nightly broadcasts of Edward P. Morgan, ABC commentator sponsored by the AFL-CIO. Listen to Morgan over the ABC network Monday through Friday at 7 p. m., EDT.)

HOW IS THE COUNTRY standing up under pressure during this simmering summer of 1961? Has the thundercloud of threatening conflict over Berlin sharpened and sobered our thoughts about even the near future? Has Cosmonaut Titov's dizzying ride around and around and around the planet given us an inferiority complex or a challenging inspiration? It is hard to say.

Morgan

The mail brings a letter from a Texas friend who is depressed by events and people's almost reflex reaction to them. Sometimes, she wrote, "I have the feelings of the man who said, 'stop the world, I want to get off'." One of the things that disturbed her most was the attitude of so many citizens who seem to long to fight but don't want the effort to cost anything.

We Americans haven't had much experience in living, working or thinking under sustained pressure such as the cold war has accumulated. In an article in the August issue of Harper's Magazine, Adlai Stevenson takes a thoughtful look at our behavior and particularly how we are being affected by what he calls the 'three great distempers of the public mind—reaction, complacency, and mediocrity."

"The central traditions of our country are liberal, generous, and forward-looking," Stevenson wrote. "But, in times of stress our history has continued to throw up groups of irreconcilable reactionaries whose solution to the problems of the age lies in violence, hysteria, distrust, and fear-mongering. The Know-Nothings, the Ku Klux Klan, the McCarthyites, the white segregationists—all these are recurrent manifestations of the spirit of irrational reaction.

"I do not know whether our new tensions are breeding—in the John Birch Society—yet another outburst of this destructive and defeatist spirit. But I do know that history gives us only one verdict on the outcome of looking in times of crisis to a fearful and backward conservatism. The outcome is quite simply defeat. . . . Times of challenge are times for new frontiers, not last ditches."

But, Stevenson warns, "complacency, not frenzied John Birchery, may be our chief weakness because, sunk in the wealthiest living standards in depth that the world has ever seen, the American society at large can be afflicted by "inertia, indifference, exaltation of the pleasure principle, a falling away in curiosity and human sympathy," while three-quarters of mankind still lives in grinding poverty. "History," Stevenson writes with sophisticated but goading anger, "is neither made nor changed by the complacent and the comfortable. On the contrary, it is made against them and at their expense."

WHICH BRINGS HIM to the third great distemper, mediocrity. "The need for great acts of statesmanship," he says, 'is more urgent than ever before. Wherever we look there confronts us a stark crisis, demanding greatness for its resolution. And most of them have nothing directly to do with communism. They would exist in any case. All that communism does is, by its extra pressure, to make their resolution more urgent."

He goes on to enumerate some of our major slippages and failures—our lag behind Western Europe in the growth rate of our economy; our inability to halt the growing level of built-in or hard-core unemployment; our dodging of the problem of population bursts; our utter lack of planning which threatens to engulf our national life in a series of "shapeless, soulless urban sprawls."

Then there is the larger need of integrating the North Atlantic community of nations into a real community, which is politically cohesive and economically viable as the first concrete example of what Stevenson calls the kind of "confederal association under law which the nations of the world must ultimately achieve if they are to avoid the final horrors of atomic war."

Today, Adlai Stevenson asks, "who has the initiative? Who is making the schemes? Who is bold and adventurous? Who is cautious and 'reluctant to do even what is necessary?' Have free men become the conservatives and the Communists the adventurers and innovators? Can there be more to Khrushchev's confidence that he will 'bury us' than brash self-assertion? Has he captured a sense of history that we in the West have lost?

"I hope I know the answer to these questions," Stevenson concluded. "I hope that I can say that while free society may have slumbered for a little and rested and drawn breath, it is ready again for great purposes and great tasks, and that its creative imagination, rearoused and refreshed, is equal to all the crisis and challenge of our perilous days."

It is an eloquently stubborn hope that one somehow does not want to disappoint.

Washington Reports:

Congressmen Hail Progress in U.S. Scientific Space Probing

TWO MEMBERS of the House Science and Astronautics Committee took an optimistic view of America's progress and potential in space exploration in an interview on an AFL-CIO public service radio program.

Rep. Ken Hechler (D-W. Va.) and Rep. James G. Fulton (R-Pa.), interviewed on Washington Reports to the People, viewed Soviet Russia's enhanced prestige as based on its success in developing a more powerful rocket thrust. But they emphasized United States achievements in scientific space exploration.

Fulton said pictures he has seen of manual controls on the Soviet space capsule convinced him they are rudimentary compared with U.S. developments in this area.

Hechler, while acknowledging the Soviet Union's progress in outer space, discounted the military threat posed by manned space capsules. He said the real military danger comes from inter-continental ballistic missiles and he urged stepped-up U.S. defenses against them.

To the comment that the Soviet Union has put a man in orbit and the U.S. hasn't, Fulton said:

"Yes, but we could have. We could have extended the Ham (the chimpanzee) flight and with retro-rockets taken him out. Our U.S. course has been that we feel the life of the man is so important that we take absolutely every precaution. You can't tell how many manned flights the Russians have had that never got up.

"I would also predict that we can leapfrog Russia so far as developing a big booster is concerned," Hechler added. "I think the question of military threat is serious because we do not now have an adequately developed defense against the ICBM. I think we should put emphasis on putting Nike Zeus into production."

RUSSIA HAS MADE such spectacular manned orbital flights because it started on a narrow base, Fulton observed. The U.S., with a broader base of activity has made greater advances in communications and meteorological satellites, he declared.

"We will soon have an Army Advent Research and Development satellite up," he said. "The Advent program will put satellites up 22,300 miles above the earth at the equator.

"There will be three of them. They will be communications satellites that will not move, will be over the same place and face downward. We will be able to send thousands on thousands of words a second through these satellites."

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

(Willard Shelton, whose commentary on the Washington scene normally appears in this space, is on vacation.)

DESPITE THOSE PICTURES of the drought-parched northern plains that are beginning to appear, the United States has always been a "water-wealthy" nation. That isn't going to be true very much longer.

As the August 1961 report of Population Bulletin points out, "few Americans are aware that the nation's fresh-water supply might be in serious trouble by the end of the century unless immediate, large-scale measures are taken to conserve this irreplaceable resource, protect its purity and develop new supplies."

By the year 2000 we will be able to supply our population with between 600 and 650 billion gallons of water a day—but this is our fixed water supply, all that the nation will ever have, and we will have to depend on reuse of the same water and desalting of ocean water if we are to meet increased demands.

Right now water pollution is one of our major problems, pollution both from industrial wastes and sewage. Unless the country becomes more aroused over the pollution problem, the nation as a whole is in for the water shortage tragedy that afflicts many other nations, such as Spain and North Africa.

There are many parts of western United States where water is being "mined" to such an extent that reserves have dwindled.

GROUND WATER SUPPLIES are now very limited in parts of Kentucky, West Virginia, Illinois, Indiana, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Tennessee, Georgia, Missouri, Oklahoma, Arkansas and Kansas.

The Middle West, even with its magnificent Great Lakes, has its water troubles and may feel the pressure of increasing demands on its water supplies to flush away its sewage and industrial wastes within the next 10 years.

The Great Plains "dust bowl," covering some 14 million acres, once again is threatening to return and a repetition of the dust storm disaster of 1934-35 is a possibility.

The populous East more and more is faced with pollution problems that threaten its drinking water with one city drawing its water from another city's wastes. Today, we are wryly told, millions of us drink "antiseptic sewage." Even the "antiseptic" becomes suspect when New Jersey has to forbid clam digging in Raritan Bay and Chesapeake Bay has polluted oyster beds.

Industrial pollution in all likelihood may be even greater than pollution by sewage. Great portions of Pennsylvania, lower New York, Maryland and Delaware, Ohio, Illinois and other industrialized states are polluted by acids, alkalis, oils, greases, salts of copper, zinc, cyanides and even radioactive materials.

FORTUNATELY, AFTER YEARS of shameful neglect and inadequate steps, the U.S. has taken a major step in meeting the problem of providing good fresh water to all our people. Despite the usual cries of "states rights" and federal intervention, Congress has just enacted a Water Pollution Control bill that may serve to check the worst pollution abuses.

Under the leadership of Rep. John A. Blatnik (D-Minn), who long has been interested in national resources, Congress has amended its 1956 Water Pollution Act, greatly strengthening it. This provides a $570 million federal program for control of pollution. Matching grants will be made to states and local communities for building water-treatment and sewage-disposal plants.

The new legislation also puts teeth into federal enforcement powers so that municipalities which neglect their responsibilities and pass their sewage on to others may be brought before the courts. The 1961 victory of anti-pollution forces in Congress who believe the federal government must take a strong hand should put to rest any further ideas that water pollution can be safely left to local care.

Outside of the air we breathe, water is probably the one completely nation-wide resource that is vital to us as a nation, to our strength and even to our security. To leave it to local and state action is to risk catastrophe.—Washington Window (PAI).

"WE'LL LEAPFROG THE RUSSIANS in manned orbital flight," Rep. Ken Hechler (D-W. Va.), left, member of the House Committee on Science and Astronautics, asserted in an interview on the AFL-CIO public service educational radio program. Rep. James G. Fulton (R-Pa.), right, also a member of the committee, said Russian satellite controls are comparatively crude.

House Group Acts:

Changes Approved In Disclosure Act

The House Labor Committee has approved—with one major limiting amendment—an Administration-proposed bill to strengthen the 1958 Welfare & Pension Plan Disclosure Act.

Despite opposition from some business groups, the bill appears assured of considerable bipartisan support. It gives the Secretary of Labor limited authority to investigate welfare fund reports and provides stiff penalties for sticky-fingered administrators. Committee Chairman Adam Clayton Powell (D-N.Y.) said he will seek to bring the bill to the House floor under suspension of the rules, a move requiring a two-thirds majority.

The AFL-CIO, in testimony before House and Senate committees, had called for "strong and enforceable legislation" to protect funds held in trust for future benefits to "millions of wage and salary earners."

The existing law, which merely requires summary reports from fund administrators, has proved to be only "token legislation," the AFL-CIO said.

In approving the bill, the committee adopted an amendment restricting the authority of the Secretary of Labor to investigate the operations of welfare and pension funds and the accuracy of reports filed with the Labor Dept.

If the Secretary has "reasonable cause" to suspect a report filed for a fund, he would first have to ask for a certification of the report by "an independent certified or licensed public accountant." He could make his own investigation only if, after receiving the certification, "he continues to have reasonable cause to believe investigation may disclose violation of the act."

Supporters of the limiting amendment asserted it was necessary to prevent "fishing expeditions."

Other provisions require administrators to use prescribed Labor Dept. forms to submit reports on welfare and pension funds and make bribes, kickbacks and embezzlements federal felonies.

In other congressional action:

- The Administration was still searching, with no indication of success, for some means of unblocking a federal school aid bill in this session of Congress.
- Labor-backed legislation to set up federally-assisted retraining programs, already approved by both Senate and House committees, was tentatively scheduled for floor action in both houses the week of Aug. 21.
- Congress passed and the President signed a bill creating an additional post of assistant secretary of labor, with authority over programs to assist women workers. The Senate promptly confirmed Mrs. Esther Peterson, director of the Labor Dept.'s Women's Bureau and former legislative representative of the AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept., in the new post.

The Administration-supported, Senate-passed school aid bill remains bottled up in the House Rules Committee, along with bills extending the National Defense Education Act and authorizing financial assistance to public and non-profit colleges.

The Senate Labor & Education Committee has reported out a bill extending for one year the program of federal aid to "impacted areas"—communities where there are large numbers of federal and military personnel.

Some supporters of a general school bill advocate amending the impacted areas bill to include at least some federal aid for school construction. Others are strongly opposed to this tactic, contending it would kill the chances for a comprehensive aid-education program in the second session of Congress.

'Met' Perils Live Music, Union Claims

New York—Metropolitan Opera Co. management has been warned to take care of the economic needs of its 92-member orchestra or imperil the future of "live" symphonic music.

The warning came from Pres. Alfred J. Manuti of Musicians' Local 802, who has accused the Met of holding a loaded gun at the heads of orchestra members by threatening to "cancel the season" every year that negotiations are held.

Mayor Robert F. Wagner has proposed that the dispute be given to a three-man arbitration panel. The union said it will poll its members on the proposal provided Met management will agree to a full season this year. Management is insisting on the right to a three-year contract without agreeing to a full season.

Negotiations deadlocked after union members rejected a management offer of a pension plan and new wage minimums going to $176 a week in three years—an increase of $5.87 a week. General Manager Rudolf Bing announced the season, scheduled to start Oct. 23, was "off" due to "exorbitant union demands." When Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg offered his services at the direction of President Kennedy, contract talks were resumed.

"The Met is a national asset, and all citizens share the President's concern that a settlement be promptly effected," Goldberg said.

The Musicians have asked that basic wages be raised from the present $170.13 a week to $248—a figure which it is willing to negotiate.

Basic salaries at the Met have risen only $11 a week in eight years, Manuti said.

Output Hits Record High As Jobs Lag

achieved in July of last year. The record high had been the 111 percent reached in January 1960 when industry spurted after the end of the steel strike.

While some economic observers were reported as impressed with what they view as a rapid recovery, others have taken issue.

Leon Keyserling, chairman of the Council of Economic Advisors under Pres. Truman, told the Joint Economic Committee of Congress he saw "nothing in the contours of the current upturn to indicate that it is unlikely to be followed by another stagnation and then another recession, unless there are vigorous additions to national economic policies."

While the industrial production index as a whole stood at 112 in July, the manufacturing group stood at 113. The manufacturing index also had been 110 in June and 110 in July a year ago.

Employment in manufacturing, however, was down by 302,000 in the year since July 1960.

SIXTY-TWO YEARS of devoted service to the labor movement were hailed when John Brophy (second from left), special representative of the AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept., went into retirement a few months before his 78th birthday. Sec. of Labor Arthur J. Goldberg (right) read a message of greeting from Pres. Kennedy. At left is Assistant Sec. of Labor George L-P Weaver; between Brophy and Goldberg is IUD Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey, who presided, while Mrs. Brophy is seated.

John Brophy Retires, Is Lauded by Kennedy

John Brophy, one of the leaders of the American labor movement, has stepped aside after 62 years of dedicated service to trade unionism.

He went into retirement with the good wishes of Pres. Kennedy at a fete given by the AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept., with which the veteran of a thousand organizing campaigns had been associated since the AFL-CIO merger.

"Trade unionism and the nation," Kennedy wrote in a message read by Sec. of Labor Arthur J. Goldberg, "owe you a great debt for the role you have played in helping to build a stronger economy and a better way of life for all of our people."

He called Brophy's part in building the unions which have so helped to raise living standards in the last century "an important one," emphasizing that "your vision and leadership gave courage and conviction to countless thousands of mass production workers in the 1930s."

"Few men have lived their lives without wavering from their basic convictions either through fear or personal ambition," the President wrote. "In your years of service to the cause of industrial unions and to the government, you qualify as one of these rare and courageous individuals.

"As a leader of American life, you are fortunate to have participated in so many of labor's historic events during the last six decades. Even more important, however, labor and the country have been fortunate in having been the beneficiaries of your dedication and devotion."

Goldberg presented Brophy with the department's Award of Merit. IUD Pres. Walter P. Reuther, president of the Auto Workers, sent a warm message of congratulations expressing regret he was unable to attend because of negotiations.

James B. Carey, IUD secretary-treasurer and president of the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, who presided, hailed Brophy as "one of the heroes of the labor movement" and read a statement signed by the IUD officers which declared that "every major industrial union owes an unending debt" to Brophy.

Brophy, born in England 78 years ago next Nov. 6, was brought to this country as a child and went to work in the Central Pennsylvania bituminous coal mines in 1895. He joined the UMW in 1899 and rose to become president of Dist. 2, a post he held for 10 years.

He was an original member of the CIO as well as its first national director, later becoming director of industrial union councils. He remained with the CIO as a member of the Steelworkers when the UMW withdrew, carrying out important assignments for Philip Murray and Reuther as presidents.

He served in many government advisory posts and on boards, including the National War Labor Board, was active in the international labor movement and is a member of the AFL-CIO Community Services Committee.

Chick Federoff Of USWA Dies

Pittsburgh—Anthony J. (Chick) Federoff, long-time president of the Steel City Industrial Union Council, former CIO regional director in western Pennsylvania and special assistant to Pres. David J. McDonald of the Steelworkers, died of a heart attack here. He was 59.

He was born in nearby Bridgeville and went to work in a glass factory at the age of 12, going on strike soon after in a futile attempt to win a raise of 2 cents an hour in his pay of 10 cents. When the strike failed he went into the coal mines, joined the Mine Workers and was elected secretary of his local at 17.

Named a UMW organizer in 1933, he was later assigned to the CIO and while organizing in Michigan was kidnapped by auto company goons from a Bay City hotel on the eve of his 35th birthday, brutally beaten and tossed into a snow-covered field. His assailants, apparently fearful of a murder charge, returned, put him in a taxicab and ran it into a river. The cold water stopped the flow of blood and he was found in time for surgeons to put a silver plate in his skull, which was split from ear to ear. He wore the plate until his death.

Surviving are his widow and a daughter.

Meany Urges Unions to Bid For Area Aid

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany has called on affiliated unions in distressed areas eligible for aid under the Area Redevelopment Act to urge the creation of local committees and to insist upon labor representation.

Meany pointed out in his letter that aid is not automatic and an area's eligibility for aid does not guarantee assistance.

Meany enclosed a list of industrial and rural areas already declared eligible for aid. He sent a list also of AFL-CIO representatives named to the National Advisory Committee on Area Redevelopment, and he designated Frank L. Fernbach, an economist in the AFL-CIO Dept. of Research, to assist affiliates on special problems.

William L. Batt, Jr., the new Area Redevelopment administrator, is now assembling a federal staff to be located in Washington and in regional offices, Meany noted. He said inquiries could be addressed to Batt at the U.S. Dept. of Commerce, Washington 25, D. C.

"The federal aid now available for chronically depressed industrial and rural areas—technical assistance, industrial and commercial loans, public facility loans and grants, worker retraining and other—will not be extended automatically," Meany warned. "Each community must vigorously seek this aid; then it must be properly used."

Meany then urged labor to take the initiative:

"To set this aid program in motion quickly, AFL-CIO affiliates in all eligible areas must urge the immediate establishment of local area redevelopment committees where they do not already exist. Furthermore, we must insist upon official AFL-CIO representation on these committees."

Strike Losses At Postwar Low

Time lost because of strikes in the first half of this year was less than one-tenth of 1 percent of the estimated working time of all U.S. workers, the Labor Dept's Bureau of Labor Statistics has reported.

BLS said loss in working time was the lowest since the end of World War II—6.72 million man-days. Also a new low record in the same period was the number of workers involved in strikes—621,000 workers in 1,680 stoppages.

Meany Asks UN Aid In Berlin Abduction

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany has made public an urgent plea to the United Nations to investigate the kidnapping of a German labor newspaper editor by Soviet Zone police on June 16.

In a cable to Sec. Gen. Dag Hammarskjold, Meany said Heinz Brandt, editor of Metall, who had been living in West Berlin since 1958, had been held in incommunicado since being seized by the Soviet Zone police.

In a companion wire to Sec. of State Dean Rusk, Meany urged that the United States delegation to the UN be instructed to support this request in defense of the right of free speech in West Berlin." The AFL-CIO president urged that Hammarskjold instruct "the appropriate agency of the UN to take up the Brandt case.

Survey Shows Uneven Prosperity:

Rise in Income Widens Gap Between Richest and Poorest

The AFL-CIO has described as "encouraging news" a government report that average family income rose again in 1960, but assailed as "indefensible" what it pointed to as a widening gap between lower and higher income groups.

"Even more disturbing," the federation's Dept. of Research said in an analysis, "the tragically insufficient income share of the lowest income fifth is tending to fall further."

Some 7.2 million families—one of every eight—existed on incomes of under $2,000 in 1960, the analysis stressed.

The evaluation of the Commerce Dept.'s annual family income report was presented by Economic Trends & Outlook, prepared by the Dept. of Research and appearing in the August issue of the AFL-CIO American Federationist. The article is entitled "U.S. Incomes Up—But Who Gets What Share?"

'Average' Distorted

The government report showed that average family income in 1960 reached an all-time high of $6,900, the Dept. of Research noted. But it cautioned that this "average" is pulled upward by very high incomes.

The "median" income, the analysis pointed out, comes to $5,600. The median is a midpoint figure, with half the families above and half below it.

The article observed that family income in terms of "real" or constant dollars experienced "a marked upward sweep" since 1947, falling off in only four years.

"By 1960, for example, 67 percent of all families had real incomes—before taxes—of more than $4,000, compared to 54 percent back in 1947," the article said.

But, the analysis continued, "although the proportion of American families who live in poverty or on its fringe continues to go down, the total still remains indefensibly high."

The Commerce Dept. study showed, the article observed, that $385 billion in personal income was received by the nation's 56 million families in 1960.

However, 7.2 million families—13 percent of the total—which existed on incomes under $2,000 received only 2 percent of total personal income.

"By way of contrast, the 3.4 million families with incomes in excess of $15,000—6 percent of them all—received $86 billion. Their share was 22 percent of the family income total," the article said.

The analysis said the worsening trend was revealed by figures showing how income groups fared over recent years.

Dividing income groups by fifths for 1955, 1957 and 1959, the lowest fifth was shown to have received 4.8 percent, 4.7 percent and 4.5 percent of total income. The average in 1959 for this group was $1,500.

The same worsening applied to the second and third lowest fifths—thus embracing the 60 percent of American families making up the low and moderate-income groups. The second fifth declined from 11.3 to 11.1 to 10.9 percent and averaged $3,580 in 1959. The third fifth fell from 16.4 to 16.3 to 16.2 percent in its income share and averaged $5,370 in 1959.

In contrast, the second highest fifth raised its income share to 22.7 percent and averaged $7,500 in 1959. The highest income fifth boosted its share steadily to 45.7 percent and averaged $15,110 in 1959.

To those who claim that the federal income tax, with its steep progressive rate, "levels down" and redistributes income, the Commerce Dept. study presents data showing "this claim is more fiction than fact," the Dept. of Research declared.

The figures show the federal income tax increased the income share of the lowest fifth to 4.9 percent from 4.5 percent; the second fifth to 11.4 percent from 10.9 percent and the third fifth to 16.8 percent from 16.2 percent.

On the other hand, the second highest fifth had its share increased to 23.1 percent from 22.7 percent and the highest income fifth had its share cut slightly to 43.8 percent from 45.7 percent.

Low-Income Groups Lagged

While families in all the income fifths enjoyed improvement in their real spendable income status over the 1955-59 period, the AFL-CIO said, the low-income groups lagged far behind in relative gains.

The analysis declared that family income is not rising fast enough to utilize the nation's productive capacity; that the continuing gap between the affluent and the poverty-bound is "indefensible;" that the shares of the lower groups should be improved; and that ability to pay should be the principle of taxation.

DIAMOND ANNIVERSARY gift to the Brewery Workers from the Intl. Union of Food, Drink & Tobacco Workers—the international free trade union secretariat—was this handsome clock, presented during the union's convention in Baltimore. Pres. Karl F. Feller of the Brewery Workers accepts the gift from Hans Naetcher of Geneva, Switzerland, president of the worldwide federation.

Brewery Union at 75 Maps Vigorous Future

Baltimore—Seventy-five years young, the Brewery Workers took a sentimental journey back to this city of its birth.

In a bustling convention, the 320 delegates participated in sharp debate, re-elected the national officers and mapped plans for vigorous organizing activities.

From Pres. Karl F. Feller the union heard a pledge to "preserve and strengthen an organization which is democratic, honest and forward-looking." Citing the great tradition of the union and its battles with three generations of beer barons, Feller said:

"Our members want no part of dictatorship, whether in labor or government; they want no part of racketeering, whether in politics or in business; they want no part of exploitation, whether by employers or by labor leaders."

Stressing the Brewery Workers' pride in a role as a "union with a heart," Feller called racial intolerance a blot "on the moral conscience of America" and said incidents of racial violence are causing American democracy serious harm in every section of the globe.

The convention heard words of praise from Pres. Joseph A. Beirne of the Communications Workers, Jacob Clayman, administrative director of the IUD; Al Barkan, deputy director of COPE; and Rep. Ed Garmatz (D-Md.).

Beirne praised the union's record of service to its members and the public. He contrasted the Brewery Workers' sense of public service with those of unions expelled by the AFL-CIO for corrupt leadership. As a result of the activities of a few unions, the CWA head said, Landrum-Griffin—"a bad law, an ill-conceived law"—was passed "and now all labor has to pay the penalty."

Beirne hailed the Ethical Practices Codes of the AFL-CIO as "one of the great historic steps taken by labor." He said AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany "deserves a lot of credit" for this step. He suggested that unions like the Teamsters, "instead of talking tough . . . would do better to be thinking hard."

The delegates turned down a proposal advanced by the officers and board for conventions every four years, and voted overwhelmingly to maintain the present biennial system.

Also upset was a proposal for compulsory retirement of officers at age 65, even if this occurred in the middle of a term. The delegates voted that any officer becoming 65 could fill out his whole term.

The union was expected to consider problems arising from automation and from the use of the "reconstituted beer" process.

Commuter Service Up To Cities—Harrison

Railroad commuter service can be maintained only by municipal operation with help from the state and perhaps federal aid, Pres. George M. Harrison of the Railway Clerks contended in a nationwide radio broadcast.

"I don't think it can be done under private enterprise," he added, "because the public seems to exercise pressure on our regulatory authorities which prevents them from establishing rates that will be compensatory for the commuter service."

"I think that's the only solution for it," he added.

Harrison flatly denied charges of "featherbedding" made by some rail management figures against railroad workers.

"They talk long and loud about 'featherbedding' but they come forth with no facts to substantiate their slogan of accusation," he declared. "The truth of the matter is that railroad employes have the finest productivity increase record of any American industry. Since 1946, 500,000 have lost their jobs due to technological progress."

Harrison made it clear railroad unions do not resist technological progress, but maintained the industry should share its fruits "with the victims among the employes who have to make the sacrifices."

Harrison aired his views on Labor News Conference, on the Mutual Boardcasting System network, under questioning by Joseph Loftus, Washington reporter for the New York Times, and Joseph McCaffrey, editor of McCaffrey Reports, a congressional news service for radio stations.

He cited Philadelphia as an instance of municipal subsidization of commuter service. The city sets fares, pays for the service out of the revenue received and takes care of any deficit out of tax income, he said.

Two Teamster Locals Join Brewery Workers

Baltimore—Delegates to the Brewery Workers convention here greeted with cheers the dramatic announcement that two Cincinnati locals of the Teamsters, with nearly 3,000 members, have voted near unanimously to affiliate with the Brewery Workers.

The action was part of a mass breakaway by 4,000 Cincinnati members of four Teamster locals led by James T. Lukens, a longtime foe of IBT Pres. James R. Hoffa.

Brewery Workers Pres. Karl Feller welcomed the new locals, hailing their decision "to disaffiliate from a union whose name has become synonymous with corruption in the American labor movement."

He emphasized that the locals decided to join the Brewery Workers voluntarily and that no raiding was involved. Feller added: "I believe their courageous action will give heart to countless others in the Teamsters who are sick to death of ingrown corruption, racketeering and dictatorship."

Affiliating with the Brewery Workers were former Teamster locals of milk drivers and soft drink drivers.

At the meeting at which the 2,200-member Cincinnati milk drivers' local voted to quit the Teamsters and affiliate with the Brewery Workers, Teamster Vice Pres. Harold Gibbons demanded the right to address the meeting. The members declared he had no right to do so but voluntarily offered him 10 minutes to speak his piece.

When the 10 minutes—carefully timed by members—were up, there was no applause until one member got up and called for "three cheers for Lukens." The hall rang with the cheers.

With 1,800 members present, the vote was 1,798 to 2 for disaffiliation from the Teamsters.

Meeting in two divisions, the soft drink drivers—with 491 of 692 members present—cast only four votes against disaffiliation.

A meeting of a funeral drivers' local voted unanimously to disaffiliate and to seek an AFL-CIO affiliation. The 600-member taxi cab drivers were scheduled to vote by secret ballot on approval of their executive board's unanimous recommendation for disaffiliation.

Feller pledged full support to the Cincinnati workers against expected efforts by the Teamsters to obstruct the free choice of the membership of the four locals and to protect contract rights.

Gibbons reportedly has served notice that the Teamsters will not give up their Cincinnati locals without a fight and officials of the union from Detroit, Cleveland, Chicago and other areas were brought into Cincinnati in a last-ditch effort to hold the four locals.

Official of Teamsters Indicted on Tax Charge

Detroit—A federal grand jury here has indicted Henry Lower, former president of Teamsters Local 376, on two counts charging filing of false tax returns in 1956.

House Coalition Rips Foreign Aid Bill

Kennedy Asks GOP Support For Program

tion—through phone calls and personal appeals to virtually every senator—which broke the back of the conservative Democratic-GOP coalition in the Senate and led to the decisive 56 to 39 defeat of an amendment by Sen. Harry F. Byrd (D-Va.) which would have denied authority to finance long-term development loans by borrowing from the Treasury.

Some Setbacks

On subsequent votes, Administration forces suffered some setbacks, as authorizations for both economic and military aid were cut back, and agreed to a compromise giving Congress greater review powers over Treasury-financed loans. But the principle of long-term commitments remained intact.

It was this principle—a pledge to the world that America will not tire of its heavy burden—which AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, in a recent address, called "basic to a truly sound approach to the new challenges of our time."

Passage of the foreign aid bill, Meany declared, "will do more to convince the Kremlin that we mean business than anything else we can do."

The Administration program called for $4.3 billion in both military and economic aid during the coming year. The heart of the program, however, was authority for the President to use up to $8.8 billion from the general funds of the Treasury over a five-year period to finance long-term development loans. It is this provision which has been attacked as "back-door spending" by opponents, who claimed that Congress would be surrendering its constitutional controls over the government's purse strings to the executive branch.

The House coalition, which had been readying a carbon copy of the Senate's Byrd amendment, swung behind an even more drastic proposal by Rep. D. S. Saund (D-Calif.) and passed it by a 12-vote margin. The action can be reversed on a rollcall ballot.

The Byrd amendment would have authorized a four-year spending program but would have required Congress to appropriate the funds year-by-year. The Saund amendment went further by eliminating any long-term authorization and reducing the total foreign aid authorization for the 1962 fiscal year to $1.2 billion. Even this amount could be cut when the actual appropriations bills are brought before Congress.

The House leadership, aware that the aid program faced an uphill battle, had offered an amendment to reduce the five-year borrowing authorization to three years and to provide for a degree of congressional review. Before this compromise could be put to a vote, the Saund proposal was adopted.

'Alliance for Progress' Formed

As the bill approached a final vote in both houses, delegates from the United States and the nations of Latin America proclaimed, in Punta del Este, Uruguay, an "Alliance for Progress" in which Latin America pledged far-reaching social and economic reforms and the United States pledged to provide a major part of $20 billion in outside aid needed over a 10-year period to help raise living standards and build strong economies. The U.S. guaranteed $1 billion for the current 12-month period.

GERALD A. DANIELS (left), Oil Workers organizer, discusses his assignment to Okinawa for the ICFTU with Michael Ross, director of the AFL-CIO Department of Intl. Affairs.

Oil Worker Organizer To Aid Okinawa Unions

An organizer for the Oil, Chemical & Atomic Workers has been appointed as representative in Okinawa for the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions.

Gerald A. Daniel, an OCAW staff member since 1954, earlier was president of Auto Workers Local 706 in Indianapolis, and attended American University in Washington from September 1960 to June 1961 studying international labor.

He succeeds Intl. Rep. Howard T. Robinson of the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers who has been working with trade unionists on the island for two years.

Daniel's appointment to the ICFTU post is a further implementation of a program to build a strong labor movement in Okinawa. It was touched off in 1956 when an ICFTU report revealed that a Communist-oriented political group was attempting to infiltrate the young labor organization just formed by island workers.

The report recommended that experienced trade unionists, preferably American, be sent in to help workers build an effective, independent union movement.

AIW Wins Vote At Georgia Mill

Rossville, Ga.—Workers at the Peerless Woolen Mills have voted 910-to-654 for the Allied Industrial Workers in a National Labor Relations Board representation election here.

AIW Pres. Carl W. Griepentrog said union support at the plant built up rapidly after the Peerless mills, long under a paternalistic family ownership, was acquired by the giant Burlington Industries textile chain. Uncertainty over job security and seniority rights following the transfer of ownership was the chief factor in the vote for union representation, he said.

The AFL-CIO Dept. of Organization worked closely with an AIW organizing team headed by Don D'Ambrosio, the union's regional director, and AIW Intl. Rep. W. M. Smith.

McDonald Sees Steel Import Barriers Costing Jobs in U.S.

Erection of artificial barriers against steel imports would cause American steelworkers "to lose a great deal more than they would gain," Steelworkers Pres. David J. McDonald has advised a House Labor subcommittee.

"They would lose jobs which they hold as a result of exports, although they may not be aware of this fact," McDonald said in a statement presented to the subcommittee by Meyer Bernstein, USWA international affairs director. The subcommittee, headed by Rep. John H. Dent (D-Pa.), is hearing testimony on the effect of imports and exports on U.S. employment.

"Our real trouble in steel," the McDonald statement said, "is not imports but business conditions at home. If we were to take decisive measures to strengthen our economy and thereby expand job opportunities, there would be no problem concerning imports."

Even in a recession, the USWA president noted, steel imports represent but a small part of domestic consumption. Only in 1959, when the steel strike cut off U.S. production, did imports exceed 5 per cent of the total consumption in this country.

Direct shipments by steel mills to foreign consumers, McDonald said, in normal times always are considerably in excess of imports. And in unusual circumstances, when imports have equaled or exceeded exports in terms of tonnage, such as the 1959-60 steel strike period, the value of exports would nevertheless normally exceed the value of imports, he said.

This, the statement observed, is an important consideration because export products are predominently those that require the most man-hours of work and thus enhance employment opportunities.

"We gain jobs today as a result of international trade in steel mill products," McDonald declared.

There is an even greater gain, he said, in the export of steel that requires further finishing after it leaves the mills. And in the category of indirect steel—such as machinery, automobiles and trucks—"we are exporting more than three times as much steel in manufactured form as we import."

The subcommittee also heard testimony from R. Conrad Cooper, executive vice president of U.S. Steel. Cooper, although he complained that union wage demands put the domestic steel industry at a competitive disadvantage with foreign producers, also discounted the effect of imports and blamed "internal economic problems" for the decline in American steel production.

He opposed stricter import curbs and said his company believes strongly "in a free and growing international trade which no industrial nation can turn aside except at its own economic and political peril."

Peace Corps Backed As Permanent Agency

The AFL-CIO has reiterated its strong support of legislation establishing the Peace Corps on a permanent basis in testimony before the House Foreign Affairs Committee.

AFL-CIO Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller described the program as "potentially one of our keenest methods for winning men's minds to the cause of freedom."

At the same time he cautioned that the participants "must be broadly representative of American society," including workers with needed skills as well as college-trained individuals.

Biemiller told the committee that the AFL-CIO "is cooperating in the recruitment of workers with varied skills—plumbers, electricians, machinists and others—whose services are so necessary to the underdeveloped nations."

He urged that the projects undertaken by the Peace Corps and other U.S. aid programs "be translated into conditions of economic and social justice for the masses." He cited as examples "the building of a school, a new road from town to market, a community development program, the teaching of English to African workers, the training of rural youngsters in the operating of a small lathe."

Biemiller said Peace Corps recruits "should be prepared to discuss with all the basic nature of American democracy, its emphasis on freedom . . . and its fundamental belief in economic, political and social justice . . . A Peace Corps recruit, with all the good will in the world, cannot be a match for a Communist heckler unless he thoroughly understands the meaning of freedom and democracy."

He quoted the recent statement by the AFL-CIO Executive Council which declared the Peace Corps "can serve as a real contribution in our struggle to help establish social, economic and political justice throughout the world" although "it will not, by itself, solve the enormous problems of hunger and disease."

Labor Urges Agency for Disarmament

unless we have planned for it, the economic consequences could be grave."

Therefore, he added, while the proposed legislation lists the economic consequences of disarmament as one of the agency's study objectives, organized labor would suggest that "additional emphasis on this question" be written into the bill.

Disarmament is a question deserving of the closest study, Biemiller said, adding:

"No objective is closer to the hearts and minds of men everywhere, no goal more cherished, than disarmament and peace."

And yet, he added, the United States has failed to devote adequate study and planning to the consequences of arms reduction here and around the world—on how to control military forces, how to provide for proper inspection of armament deduction and the economic implications.

While the current outlook is "not optimistic," Biemiller said, "we should not allow present world tensions to divert us from the rigorous study of disarmament problems."

The opportunity "for substantial and acceptable disarmament" may occur in one, 10 or 50 years and "when it does occur, we must be ready for it" he said.

Earlier the Senate Foreign Relations Committee had unanimously approved, with only minor changes, the Administration bill setting up the Peace Corps on a permanent basis and authorizing appropriations of $40 million for the 1962 fiscal year.

The committee rejected, by an 11-6 vote, a motion to reduce the first-year authorization to $25 million.

ANG Protests Editor's Jailing

The Newspaper Guild has protested as "a gross violation of freedom of expression and freedom of the press" the re-arrest of Mochtar Lubis, Indonesian editor, by the Sukarno government.

Lubis, long a critic of Pres. Achmed Sukarno, was first arrested in December 1956 without charges and without a trial, and his newspaper, Indonesia Raya, went out of existence. He was released from house arrest at the end of May 1961 and was permitted to attend the annual assembly of the Intl. Press Institute in Tel Aviv, Israel.

His re-arrest followed his return from Tel Aviv, where he had made a spirited address on the concept of freedom of the press and had attacked the Sukarno government for totalitarian methods. He had refused to sign a 19-point declaration imposed on editors by the Indonesian government.

UAW, American Motors Talk Contract

Meany Calls for Legislation To Stamp Out All Job Bias

Big Three Offer Held Inadequate

By Eugene A. Kelly

Detroit—The Auto Workers pressed for a new agreement with American Motors Corp. in the wake of almost identical contract offers from the "Big Three" of the industry which the union called "woefully inadequate."

With the UAW executive board due to meet here Tuesday to review the offers and decide if a strike should be called after Big Three contracts expire Aug. 31, the union filed unfair labor practice charges against General Motors with the Detroit office of the National Labor Relations Board.

GM refused to bargain in good faith, UAW Vice Pres. Leonard Woodcock said, by warning the union against "inflationary" contract terms but refusing three times to provide data on prices and profits that would enable UAW to determine if its proposals are in fact inflationary.

Meanwhile strike vote results poured into union headquarters here in the nationwide referendum among workers in GM, Ford and Chrysler plants. The ballots continued to run in favor of strike authorization by a 9-1 margin.

At American Motors, no strike vote was taken because of management's previous offer to make con-

IRS Gets $23 Million More to Nab Evaders

Recognizing the adage that it takes money to make money, Congress has voted an extra $23.5 million to the Internal Revenue Service to help it catch tax evaders.

The increase, included in a Treasury-Post Office appropriations bill passed by the Senate following House action, will enable the IRS to hire 3,365 new employes, including an unspecified number of tax agents.

IRS officials estimate that $5 more in taxes will be collected for every extra dollar spent on additional personnel. In the past, lack of manpower to check every return thoroughly has cost the nation billions in revenue, according to the Treasury.

BILL AIMED AT eliminating racial discrimination in apprenticeship training is only one of steps needed to insure equal job opportunity, AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany told House Labor subcommittee. He urged also a national FEP law.

Aid Battle Continues:

Senate Passes Bill To Retrain Jobless

By David L. Perlman

The Senate passed a labor-backed, Administration bill to retrain jobless workers in the skills needed in an automation-changed economy as the congressional spotlight shifted to domestic issues after an inconclusive battle over Pres. Kennedy's foreign aid program.

Senate passage of the four-year $655 million retraining bill by a 60 to 30 vote followed defeat of a Republican-led attempt to trim the bill back to an "experimental" two-year period. The vote was 44 to 43.

In the House, Administration leaders lined up behind a compromise school aid bill, sharply pared down from the broad aid to education program passed by the Senate and bottled up in the House Rules Committee. Speaker Sam Rayburn (D-Tex.) announced his support for the compromise plan after a White House meeting with Pres. Kennedy.

The Senate-passed manpower redevelopment and training bill contemplates the retraining of 100,000 workers, the bulk of whom would be heads of families with at least three years of employment experience. The bill also includes provision for training of youngsters in the 16 to 21 age group. The youth training program had originally been introduced in a separate bill but the Senate Labor Committee combined the two programs. Up to 5 percent of the training funds can be used for the 16 to 21 age group.

The bill authorized the Secretary of Labor to make a study of the

Bill on Apprentices Backed by AFL-CIO

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany has endorsed legislation aimed at eliminating racial discrimination in apprenticeship programs, while emphasizing strongly that more far-reaching measures are required to ensure equal job opportunity.

"There is racial discrimination in apprenticeship and vocational training programs and we in the AFL-CIO have opposed and do oppose it," Meany declared in testimony before a House Labor subcommittee, "We want it ended."

He expressed the hope that an apprenticeship bill sponsored by Chairman Adam Clayton Powell (D-N. Y.) of the House Education & Labor Committee would be "only a first step" in a legislative attack on discrimination. The bill would direct the Labor Dept. to encourage opportunities for minority groups in apprentice training and bar federal certification of programs which discriminate on the basis of race, creed or color.

The subcommittee, headed by Rep. James Roosevelt (D-Calif.) also heard:

- Pres. C. J. Haggerty of the AFL-CIO Building & Construction Trades Dept., who declared emphatically: "We support the object of the bill and we support the bill."
- A. Philip Randolph, president of the Sleeping Car Porters, who charged in a statement that trade union action to end discrimination in apprentice training has been "slow, spotty, fragmentary and woefully inadequate." He said he was "pleased to note" Meany's support of the Powell bill.
- Labor Dept. witnesses, who said the department is in sympathy with the objective of the bill but doubted that it would be "helpful."

Meany stressed that "the first element" in ending discrimination is to provide full employment.

"If there aren't enough job op-

Output Rate Lag Tied to Recession

By Robert B. Cooney

The recession has left the nation's economy with a scar of lower productivity as well as the wound of high-level unemployment, according to government reports.

The Labor Dept. announced that output rate per manhour increased by about 2.5 percent in 1960. This was lower than the postwar average rise of over 3 percent per year, the report noted, "largely because of the business downturn which occurred in the latter part of the year."

Fastest "Turnaround"

Meanwhile, the Commerce Dept. reported the gross national product hit an annual rate of $516 billion in the second quarter of 1961, "up sharply by $15 billion from the first quarter." This was a faster "turnaround" than in any of the prior three postwar recessions, the report pointed out, and brought real output back to the pre-recession peak of a year earlier.

3 Major Drug Firms Indicted In Antibiotics Monopoly Plot

New York—Three leading manufacturers of life-saving antibiotic "wonder drugs" have been indicted on criminal anti-trust charges by a federal grand jury here.

The companies and their top officers were accused of conspiring to monopolize the $250 million-a-year market through restrictive patent agreements which have forced consumers, hospitals and the federal government to pay "unreasonably high prices."

The indictment, a follow-up to last year's drug pricing investigation by a Senate committee headed by Sen. Estes Kefauver (D-Tenn.), names as defendants:

- Charles Pfizer & Co., and John E. McKeen, president and board chairman.
- American Cyanamid Co., and Wilbur G. Malcolm, chairman of the board.
- Bristol-Myers Co., and Frederic N. Schwartz, president.

Named as co-conspirators but not defendants were the Olin Mathieson Chemical Corp. and the Upjohn Co.

The 14-page indictment, secured by the Justice Dept.'s anti-trust division, made these allegations:

Until 1953, Pfizer and American Cyanamid had dominated the so-called "broad spectrum antibiotic" market with their patented products, Terramycin and Aureomycin respectively. These antibiotics are effective against a wide range of infectious diseases.

Knight to Convention:

Job Security Major Issue for Unions

Chicago—"The major concern facing the wage earner today is job security," Pres. O. A. Knight of the Oil, Chemical and Atomic Workers said in his keynote address before the union's sixth constitutional convention here.

Knight told the 1,000 voting delegates, union officers and guests "the most skilled worker with a good work reputation and long seniority is in danger today of layoff due to automation and the rapid changes being made by industry in its ways of doing things. And the laid off worker, no matter how great his skill and other qualifications, cannot depend on re-employment in a good job in our increasingly complex industrial system."

His concern for the unemployed was echoed by other top convention speakers. T. C. Douglas, head of Canada's New Democratic Party, said that a planned economy is the answer to his nation's unemployment problem. Douglas, Premier of Saskatchewan, said one-third of the workers in Canada didn't earn enough last year to pay income taxes. That's $1,000 for a single person, $2,000 for a married couple.

He said the New Democratic Party is launched on a "great crusade" to superimpose social-economic democracy on political democracy. Douglas, a Baptist minister before he entered public life, said North America is living under social-economic tyranny. He compared his party's program to the type of socialism found in England and the Scandinavian countries.

Secretary of Labor Arthur J. Goldberg said high unemployment is a problem of the first concern to the Administration. He listed the measures proposed by the Administration to curb the recession that was in progress when Pres. Kennedy took office. Goldberg said the consciousness of the people should be aroused to the problem of hard core joblessness and said all Americans who are ready, able and willing to work should have work.

He said that organized labor has earned "a respect and appreciation" among the uncommitted nations of Latin America and Asia that has enabled it to "exercise an enormous influence in the fight against communism." Goldberg, after his address, answered questions from rank and file delegates.

Knight called for a shorter workweek and said he was pleased with what the Administration has done to ease unemployment. He said if private enterprise fails to provide enough work for all who want jobs, the government should provide the work. Knight turned over to Premier Douglas $1,000 collected from members and raised through the sale of New Democratic Party buttons.

The convention defeated a bid to raise minimum dues from $3 to $5 and a resolution calling for referendum voting on officers. Elections are held at OCAW biennial conventions.

Approved by the Resolutions Committee and waiting final action by the delegates is a resolution calling for a union of unemployed workers. The resolution calls on the AFL-CIO and the Canadian Labor Congress to charter an organization to represent the jobless.

Knight urged a raise in per capita tax requiring a change in the union's constitution.

James McDevitt, director of the AFL-CIO Committee on Political Education, told the convention that a third party exists in American politics. He said the coalition of southern Democrats and northern Republicans works to undermine labor and social welfare legislation.

Meany Supports Tunisian Claims

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany has urged the government to take "initiative and leadership" at the United Nations General Assembly meeting to bring about "unconditional guarantee of Tunisia's territorial integrity and (the) complete right of Tunisian government to exercise full and unharassed sovereignty over all Tunisian territory."

In a telegram to Sec. of State Dean Rusk, Meany said such American action was "imperative" to contrast our country's support of self-determination with the outrageous Soviet violation" of that principle in Berlin.

Speedy evacuation of all Tunisian territory by French forces will promote the unity of world democracy, reinforce its ideals and strengthen its military defenses, Meany said.

Brewery Workers Get Warning on Job Loss

Baltimore—Local unions of the Brewery Workers will have to be alert against elimination of jobs through automation, the union's 75th anniversary convention warned.

Pres. Karl F. Feller cautioned that all new contracts should contain safeguards that will soften the impact of the new equipment that is revolutionizing the ancient industry.

The convention was told that tax hearings on another revolutionary process—to reconstitute beer from a concentrate—have been postponed until October in Washington. The process, developed by a chemical company, has been under study by the union and the industry since it was first announced several months ago.

Preliminary hearings have already been held before the Alcohol Tax Unit of the Internal Revenue Service. The union has taken the position that the agency has no right to fix a tax on a presently nonexistent product and wants Congress to review the entire matter.

Meany a Speaker

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany told the convention banquet that he had "a close connection" with their union in his early days and that it was a Brewery Worker who sponsored him and nominated him as president of the New York State Federation of Labor.

He congratulated the organization for its "long and honorable record . . . on the American trade union scene."

Pres. Walter P. Reuther of the Auto Workers brought the 235 delegates and a like number of guests his congratulations for a "long record of contributions to the whole labor movement." Noting that his father had been an organizer for the Brewery Workers for many years, he recalled that it was the first union he had known anything about.

Reuther told the convention he saw two essential tasks for labor in America: To rebuild "the old crusading spirit, roll up our sleeves and organize the unorganized;" and to do "the educational job of unionizing the organized."

There have been "ugly rumors," he said, about how he feels about unions outside the Federation—presumably a reference to the Teamsters. He brought cheers from the delegates when he declared "there is no place and there must not be any place in the American labor movement for crooks or Communists."

Top Officers Reelected

All the major officers were reelected without opposition. Vice Pres. John Dehner of Cincinnati resigned and was replaced on the general executive board by Anthony Sapienza of Cleveland. Robert Lewis of New Orleans was also named to the board.

Beatrice Dryer, Findlay, O., a cigar worker, became the first woman to achieve a major office in the international union when she was elected substitute vice president from Dist. 3.

Company Union Ordered Disbanded

Michigan City, Ind.—A major electronics firm—Thompson Ramo Woolridge, Inc.—which has no contracts with any national or international union has been ordered by the National Labor Relations Board to disestablish a company union, reinstate a fired employe and stop interfering with the right of workers to join Teamsters Local 298, unaffiliated, at Thompson's Dage television plant here.

Engravers Hear New Unity Plea

New York—Delegates to the 60th annual convention of the Photo Engravers heard an earnest plea by Pres. Elmer Brown of the Typographical Union to join in the effort now being made among printing trade unions to find a way to achieve economic unity.

Representing some 17,000 journeymen members, the delegates were told that "our immediate goal should be to bring about practical, economic unity of all our crafts."

"Once this is achieved, our ultimate goal of full amalgamation will evolve as a matter of course," he added.

The 59th convention of the IPEU has gone on record as being opposed to federation or organic merger, but IPEU representatives have been participating in discussions of both the inter-union working committee and its subcommittee.

The subject of unity was tied into a series of propositions being considered by various committees, whose recommendations and reports were to be acted upon in the closing days of the convention, according to IPEU Pres. Wilfred T. Connell. There was no indication, however, that the viewpoint expressed at the 1960 convention would be substantially altered.

Brown warned that "if we continue to fight our battle on from eight to 10 fronts; if we insist on spreading our forces so thin that we are vulnerable everywhere, then we are certain to suffer heavy casualities."

He emphasized that the immediate goal of the inter-union committee was to "solidify our strength and all our resources into one formidable force for our common good."

Out of this will come the leadership and ability to bring about uniform collective bargaining, sharply cut jurisdictional differences and standardize contract relations with employers, he predicted.

A plaque honoring the IPEU for five consecutive years in which the union exceeded its quota in COPE contributions was presented to the delegates by Assistant COPE Dir. Thomas Morgan, who noted that the union, established in 1900, had as early as 1916 passed its first political resolution in connection with congressional elections.

Federal Education Chief Urges Higher Salaries for Teachers

Philadelphia—Higher salaries for the teaching profession are imperative if American education is to match the technical achievements of totalitarian states while preserving the ideals of democracy, U. S. Education Commissioner Sterling M. McMurrin told the Teachers' 45th convention here.

Addressing the convention banquet, McMurrin said the task of the educational system in the pursuit of the nation's goals "is intimately tied up with the quality of teaching."

"We must move in the direction of fewer and fewer teachers of average and near average ability and more and more teachers of high level ability," he insisted, to the applause of the 750 delegates.

Although teaching attracts many who might command greater incomes in other fields, McMurrin observed, "we are not going to succeed in this large task of building the teaching profession into what it can be and must be without more adequate salaries."

Another aspect of the problem, he suggested, is teacher preparation, which he called "one of the soft spots of our society." He urged expansion of the basic concepts of the art of teaching, a greater emphasis in teacher education on the liberal arts and humanities, and higher entrance and retention standards.

On federal aid to education, McCurrin declared that the federal government has no designs on control of local school systems, as opponents of such aid have argued.

"I personally do not think there is any sense in which such local control is in jeopardy for the simple reason that I have been unable to find anyone who believes we should have federal control of education," he said.

Before adjourning, the convention took formal action urging enactment of state enabling laws to permit collective bargaining by teachers. Earlier in the week, AFT Pres. Carl J. Megel had voiced the union's national support for the efforts of its New York City local to win bargaining rights.

The delegates called for closer liaison with other unions, the bringing of student teachers into the area of labor philosophy, and better state laws governing teacher tenure and employment security.

They also protested the use of group IQ tests as a device that discriminates against culturally underprivileged children, supported efforts of the Freedom Riders and the enactment of broad civil rights legislation, and recommended that the AFT and the AFL-CIO jointly increase their efforts to organize white collar workers.

Introduced at the convention was a unit, "The American Labor Movement," for labor educators, teachers and students. Written by AFT Vice Pres. Paul B. High of Cleveland, it outlines suggestions for studying the development of trade unions and their achievements from the 18th Century to the present.

IUD Issues Annual Call To Convention

The AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept. has sent to its 59 affiliated unions the official call for the IUD's annual convention, to be held Nov. 16 and 17 in Washington, D. C.

IUD Pres. Walter P. Reuther and Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey said the convention will be asked to recommend programs and policies "that may be crucial for American labor, the nation and the free world."

"In the competitive war against communism," they said, "capitalism must prove that it can translate the benefits of advancing technology into higher wages and increased security for all."

The convention call noted that other matters to be acted on will include "industrial labor's role within the mainstream of the American labor movement, problems of work jurisdiction, the operation of the no-raiding agreement, and the operation of the IUD Internal Disputes Agreement."

tract improvements including a profit-sharing plan.

Top-level negotiations with the nation's fourth largest auto manufacturer were intensified when Pres. Walter P. Reuther joined the union negotiating team headed by UAW Vice Pres. Norman Matthews.

Reuther has said AMC's offer last month to raise wage by 7 cents an hour as of Sept. 6 and make other contract improvements indicated its willingness to "explore in an intelligent, meaningful manner the basic problems" of its 23,000 union workers. Some phases of the offer he had termed "unacceptable."

Of the Big Three's proposals which have an expiration date of Aug. 31, Reuther said:

"There are a number of areas in which they have picked up the principles we have suggested. But the economics are so woefully inadequate, the principles are not really being implemented in a meaningful way."

Woodcock, director of the union's GM Department, said he was "shocked and disappointed" by GM's offer. He called a meeting of local union presidents in GM locations to discuss the offer Tuesday.

Ken Bannon, director of UAW's Ford Department, said Ford's offer "does not meet the problems of Ford workers" though it does mean a "start" in negotiations.

GM's proposal to the auto union was followed by similar terms offered to the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, representing almost 25,000 GM workers. IUE called it "far short of the vital needs" of members, particularly as to job and income security.

The Big Three offers—the first they have made since negotiations started late in June—called for pay hikes of 2.5 percent a year, with a floor of 6 cents an hour; improved health and welfare language; retention of the cost-of-living plan with some changes which the union called harmful.

The union's proposals to the four major auto makers were drafted by union members at a special collective bargaining convention here in April. The union in effect asked managements to choose from among alternate methods of solving the problems of their workers in the field of more security for those now employed, and more jobs for those who have been laid off.

Major features of the UAW proposals were these: pay production and maintenance workers on a weekly basis instead of hourly; put an end to short workweeks and short paychecks; reduce or eliminate overtime while many workers stay on layoff; raise supplemental jobless benefits to 65 percent of take-home pay; improve the pension plan; set fair production standards.

Other features of the industry proposals were:

Short Workweeks—Employes who work less than 36 hours will be paid for time worked plus half pay for each hour less than 36. To qualify, an employe must have at least a year of seniority and must have drawn enough pay for the week to be disqualified for unemployment compensation.

Supplemental Unemployment Benefits—Maximum weekly benefits would be increased from $30 a week to $35; the amount of separation pay would be raised 25 percent; rules on reporting procedure would be eased; and most SUB administrative costs would be assumed by the company.

Pensions—Employes aged 65 or over, retiring with benefits payable after 1961, would receive $2.60 per month for each year of credited service after 1961, and $2.50 a month for each year of service prior to 1962.

Pension benefits for retirement between ages 60 and 65 would be increased for those with benefits first payable after 1961 by 20 cents a month per year of service to $5.20 per month for each year of credited service on and after Jan. 1, 1962, and $5 per month for each year of service before that date.

Other improvements were offered in pension benefits for early retirees, deferred retirement, and surviving widows; in hospital, surgical and medical benefits; group insurance; jury duty pay, and pay in lieu of vacation.

Ford, Chrysler and GM agreed that their proposals would take effect Sept. 1, provided national and local agreements are reached by that date, but benefit plan improvements would not take effect until Jan. 1, 1962.

Return or Pay Union, Runaway Firm Told

Philadelphia—An arbitrator has ordered a "runaway" blouse manfacturer to return to Philadelphia by Sept. 10 or pay $355,000 to the Ladies' Garment Workers and 215 stranded former employes.

G. Allan Dash, Jr., impartial garment industry chairman here, ruled that Sidele Fashions, Inc., violated an agreement with the Philadelphia Dress Joint Board of the ILGWU when it moved two years ago to a non-union plant in Ware Shoals, S. C.

Dash found Sidele had violated five sections of its contract by moving its plant outside the Philadelphia area before its union agreement expired; failing to make company records available to the union; failing to make proper payments to employe funds, and other violations.

The arbiter ordered the company to take these steps:

- Re-establish a blouse-manufacturing plant here of substantially the same size as the one it operated between Jan. 1, 1958, and Nov. 1, 1959.
- Pay $77,948 to the ILGWU health, welfare and retirement funds and to former employes.

After almost two years of hearings and pleadings, Dash ruled that if the company does not resume operations here and stay in business at least until Jan. 31, 1963, it must pay $179,490 into the welfare funds and $175,576 to compensate the union for dues loses projected over a 20-year period.

The company had lost two previous attempts to shake off the union—in U.S. District Court, where it challenged Dash's right to proceed with the hearings, and before the National Labor Relations Board, where a trial examiner ordered owners Mac J. Cahn and Sidney L. Schiro to bargain on layoff pay and rehiring rights.

The dispute began in 1959 when the owners formed another firm—Personality Sportswear, Inc.—in Ware Shoals and began making samples there. Later they closed the plant here and refused to employ Philadelphia workers in South Carolina.

The employer and the union previously had dealt with each other for 20 years. In 1952, after a plant closing, the union agreed to a 10 percent wage cut on the company's plea of financial hardship.

Unemployment Insurance Hailed on 25th Birthday

Pres. Kennedy has marked the 25th anniversary of the birth of the U.S. unemployment insurance system with a message hailing the program as a "milestone in the progress of social legislation" and urging that improvements be made to meet the needs of workers.

Since the first check—for $15—was paid to a jobless Wisconsin worker on Aug. 17, 1936, more than $28 billion has been paid out in insurance benefits.

Writing to Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg, the President said the money paid since 1936 has "eased the financial burden of many millions" of workers and has "contributed materially to softening the impact" of economic downturns on business by maintaining the purchasing power of unemployed workers.

"The contribution that the unemployment insurance program has made," Kennedy told Goldberg, "points up the desirability of the improvements we have recommended to Congress, which we hope will be enacted early in the next session."

The anniversary was noted also in a Labor Dept. report in which Goldberg pointed out that 46.5 million persons are covered by the federal-state program, as against 21.4 million in 1939.

Walsh-Healey Minimums Set In 3 Industries

The U.S. Labor Dept. has announced minimum wage findings under the Walsh-Healey Public Contracts Act for the paper and pulp, manifold business forms, and miscellaneous chemical products and preparations industries.

The minimums are those which the federal government will require be paid to workers who make the goods it buys from the affected industry. They are somewhat below the levels AFL-CIO urged.

For paper and pulp, Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg has determined that these minimum hourly wage rates should prevail: primary paper and pulp $1.75; rag paper and pulp $1.54; converted paper sanitary products $1.55; building paper and building board $1.64.

For the manifold business forms industry, Goldberg ruled that a $1.39 minimum wage should prevail. A tentative rate was set for miscellaneous chemical products: $1.42 for Group 1, $1.80 for Group 2.

For government contracts on or after Sept. 3, Goldberg has proposed a wage minimum of $1.15 an hour or more to conform with wage-and-hour law amendments.

Appeals Court Upholds Maritime Injunction

New York—Negotiations between three maritime unions and shipping companies are still stymied by refusal of the companies to come to terms on the "runaway" flag issue.

The unions reported "no substantial progress" in negotiations conducted here by the President's fact-finding board and the Federal Mediation Service. The board must report to Pres. Kennedy by Sept. 1, three weeks before an 80-day Taft-Hartley injunction runs out.

Meanwhile the U.S. Court of Appeals here refused to vacate the T-H injunction issued by U.S. Judge Sylvester J. Ryan. Three judges agreed with Judge Ryan that a maritime strike would "adversely affect" the nation's supply of petroleum products.

More than 75,000 seamen in five unions struck June 15 and were ordered back to work July 3 by a U.S. district judge here after Kennedy used what he said was the only remedy available, a T-H injunction. The men may strike again after the injunction expires Sept. 21.

There has been only one major break in the employers' solid front since negotiations were resumed—an agreement by the Moore-McCormack Lines and the Marine Engineers covering 44 ships and as many "runaway" ships as MEBA can organize. To reach agreement, Moore-McCormack "broke away" from the American Merchant Marine Institute, which still is holding the line against inclusion of foreign flag fleets in its contracts.

The fact-finding board and the mediation service brought together several negotiating committees which have not reached contract agreement—the Seafarers and the Alcoa Steamship Co.; the Masters, Mates & Pilots and the Tanker Labor Services Committee; MEBA and employers represented by the Merchant Marine Institute and the tanker committee.

The Maritime Union previously had reached contract agreement with employers, including the institute and the tankers. The American Radio Association has settled with East Coast and Gulf employers but Pacific Coast contracts are still open. ARA and the MMP are negotiating with the Pacific Maritime Association.

The major issue in the unsettled contracts is the question of "runaway" ships—American-owned vessels which sail under foreign flags. The National Labor Relations Board has ruled three times that U.S. unions have a right to organize the crews and bargain.

Striking Union, Hotel Resume Negotiations

Toronto—Negotiations have resumed for the first time in a month at the strikebound Royal York Hotel after a massive labor protest persuaded a women teachers' group to move a convention from the hotel.

The striking Hotel & Club Employes and the Canadian Pacific Railway, owner of the 1,600-room hotel, are holding exploratory talks aimed at a settlement offer that the union can present to its members.

The turning point in the four-month-old walkout came when the Ontario Women Teachers' Federation pulled its 1961 convention out of the Royal York only eight hours before it was scheduled to start.

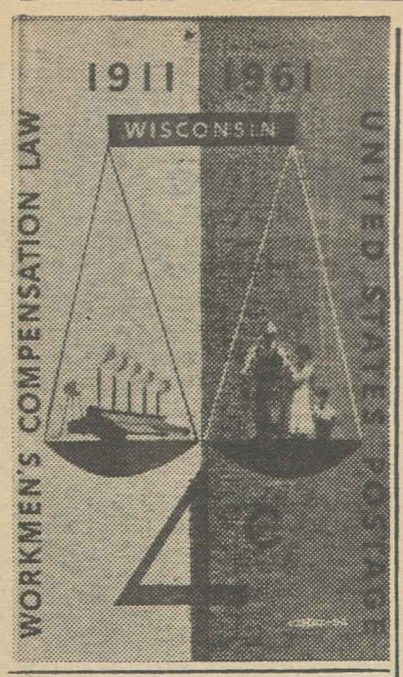
The group, whch had reserved 300 rooms and expected 700 delegates, withdrew when unions noted that teachers were asking for labor support in salary deadlocks with a few northern Ontario communities.

The Royal York management took another blow when the Canadian Conference on Education warned the hotel that it had to guarantee a settlement before the end of the year or it would take its convention to Montreal.

The new negotiations began two days after David Lewis, union lawyer, former national president of the Co-operative Commonwealth Federation and an architect of the labor-supported New Democratic Party, asked permission to sue the hotel for unfair labor practices.

Lewis told the Ontario Labor Relations Board that the Royal York perpetrated a "cruel thing" when it fired 700 strikers last month for refusing to return to work. "It was contrary to law and contrary to the social ethics expected of a large corporation like the CPR," said Lewis.

The board reserved decision. A verdict is expected in September.



Stamp Marks 50 Years of Job Injury Act

The 50th anniversary of the first state Workmen's Compensation law, enacted by Wisconsin in 1911, will be marked by the issuance of a four-cent commemorative postage stamp on Labor Day at Milwaukee.

Pres. Kennedy, Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg and Postmaster Gen. J. Edward Day will take part in a special White House ceremony Sept. 1 at which the new stamp will be introduced. Guests will include members of the AFL-CIO Executive Council, officials of postal service unions, and congressional leaders.

Perfect Justice Symbolized

The design of the stamp, contributed by Norman Todhunter, a member of the postmaster general's Citizens' Stamp Advisory Committee, is symbolic of the ideal of perfect justice, exactly balancing on the scales a workman, his wife and child, to the right, and a factory representing industry, to the left.

The Wisconsin law, which became effective May 3, 1911, was followed within a year by similar legislation in nine other states. Today, 54 workmen's compensation laws are on the statute books —those of the 50 states, the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico, the Longshoreman's & Harbor Workers' Act, and the Federal Employees' Compensation Act.

Although the workmen's compensation laws brought statutory protection, the legislation has failed to keep pace over the years with advancing standards of living. In 1940, for example, all but six of the laws provided maximum weekly benefits in excess of two-thirds of the state's average weekly wage. By 1959, only six laws provided benefits at that level.

Only 30 of the laws are compulsory for employers, and the exceptions permitted under many of them leave about 20 percent of the nation's workers without protection, according to Labor Dept. estimates.

The AFL-CIO has repeatedly urged improvements in the laws to give prompt and adequate indemnity for all workers and their survivors. Further, it favors enactment of a federal workmen's compensation act or, short of that, minimum standards fixed by Congress.

3 Drug Firms Indicted in MonopolyPlot

past 10 percent drop in the prices of two less powerful antibiotics, penicillin and streptomycin, the tight patent controls on the newer antibiotics kept the price virtually unchanged.

New Development

Development of a new variety of antibiotic, Teteracycline, threatened to break the monopoly and a patent war appeared in the making when Bristol-Myers, Pfizer, American Cyanamid and the Heyden Chemical Co. all filed patent applications. Heyden's claim was quickly acquired by Cyanamid and dropped.

The grand jury charged that the three remaining firms then entered into a conspiracy of licensing and cross-licensing, under which Pfizer was given a clear field to obtain the Tetracycline patent and the price was pegged at the same level as the two other broad spectrum antibiotics.

Since Bristol-Myers did not have a large sales force, it was given the exclusive right to sell Tetracycline in bulk form and the only two additional firms allowed to purchase the bulk product were to be the Upjohn Co. and the Squibb division of the Olin Mathieson Chemical Corp.

Grand Jury Charges

As a result of this agreement, the grand jury charged:

- The five companies "have been enabled to maintain unchanged substantially identical, non-competitive, and unreasonably high prices of all broad spectrum antibiotic products sold by them. Price competition . . . has been prevented and suppressed."
- "Pfizer, Cyanamid and Bristol have been enabled to make unreasonably high profits in the sale of their broad spectrum antibiotics products. Bristol has been enabled to make unreasonably high profits in the sale of bulk Tetracycline."
- "A judicial determination of the validity of Pfizer's Tetracycline patent has been prevented."
- "Introduction of improved forms . . . of antibiotics by other companies has been restricted and prevented and research in this field has been hampered."

The companies charged in the indictments vigorously denied violating anti-trust laws. The Cyanamid firm accused the federal government of "harassment" of the nation's drug industry.

Kefauver issued a statement "heartily commending" the Justice Dept. for having obtained the indictments and charging that "the cost of manufacturing these drugs is a fraction of the exorbitant prices for which they are sold."

A Rose by Any Other Name . . .

Achromycin, Tetracyn, Polycycline, Steclin and Panmycin are the same product —trade names used by the manufacturers of Tetracycline, one of the "wonder drug" antibiotics involved in the anti-trust indictments of leading drug companies.

At Senate Anti-Trust subcommittee hearings last year, Dr. Solomon Garb, professor of pharmacology at Albany Medical College, pointed up the confusion in naming drugs with this analogy:

"To understand fully the extent of the confusion caused by this usage, let us consider what would happen if drug manufacturers took over the manufacture of baked beans.

"They would all stop using the word 'beans,' and each would give the product a new, coined name. Some might use anagrams of beans, like Sneabs or Nabes, and others might call them Lo-Cals or Hi-Pros. Picture the confusion in the grocery store if beans were no longer named beans, but if each maker gave a completely new name to his product."

Sweet Racket Hit In FDA Complaint

The Food & Drug Administration has accused the maker of Tootsie Rolls, in effect, of taking candy from its customers.

The FDA has secured a court order enjoining the Sweets Co. of America, Hoboken, N. J., from continuing to ship the confection in interstate commerce because the product is short-weight.

The complaint, which named the firm and its treasurer, Joseph T. Hand, as defendants, charged that the "Multipak" carton of Tootsie Rolls containing six individually wrapped pieces of candy is labeled as containing 9 ounces, but actually weighs only 8.25 ounces. Tootsie Rolls being sold in vending machines also were under declared net weights of 1.25 and 1.75 ounces, it alleged.

IBEW Lifts Local Charter In Baltimore

The Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers has revoked the charter of Baltimore Local 28, on the ground that it has "refused to comply" with the IBEW constitution by conducting an unauthorized strike.

Intl. Pres. Gordon M. Freeman said the constitution was violated when members of the local voted June 13 to strike against 26 contractors represented by the Baltimore division of the Maryland chapter, National Electrical Contractors Association, without securing Freeman's authorization, as the constitution requires.

Notified by telegram June 15 that Freeman had refused to consent to a strike, the local walked out June 19. On June 22 it voted "non-concurrence" in Freeman's instructions.

The IBEW executive council will meet in Washington Sept. 11, to consider an appeal by the 1,400-member local. Meanwhile there were these other developments as the strike continued:

- The jurisdiction of Local 28 was transferred to a new local union with headquarters in Baltimore. Freeman announced that the new unit, designated as Local 24, would have the same territorial jurisdiction as the former local.
- Legal steps were started to divide the "real and personal assets" of the local among all the members and to ask for a court-appointed trustee.
- Chief Judge Roszel C. Thomsen of the U.S. District Court for Maryland dismissed a suit filed by the local against the IBEW under the Landrum-Griffin Act.

The court said the local has the "legal right to conduct an economic strike," but that there is "some force in the position" taken by the international that the IBEW president may revoke the charter of the local and that it may not act as an IBEW local unless the president's action is reversed on appeal.

The court asserted that relations between the local and the international have been "strained" for a number of years. It said IBEW policy has been to discourage strikes, and to provide for the arbitration of all disputes. This the local refused to do.

A. L. Totten Named to Virgin Islands Board

Sec-Treas. Ashley L. Totten of the Sleeping Car Porters has been named a member of the board of directors of the Virgin Islands Corp. by Pres. Kennedy.

A native of St. Croix in the Virgin Islands, he succeeds D. Victor Born. His home is in New York.

Labor Day Safety Urged by Haggerty

A plea that Labor Day 1961 be made the safest holiday in history has been sent all union members and their families by Pres. Cornelius J. Haggerty of the AFL-CIO Building & Construction Trades Council, chairman of this year's Labor Day Safety Campaign.

"Let's remember the spirit and purpose of labor's own holiday," he said, "by putting an end to the slaughter on our highways. Remember safe driving practices and courtesy on the road as you celebrate."

Haggerty's call bulwarked appeals for a safe holiday by Pres. Kennedy and AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany.

Kennedy urged "every American, whether he works with his hands or his mind, and his family, to observe the coming national holiday without the suffering and sadness resulting from unnecessary accidents."

Meany reminded not only AFL-CIO members but the nation that "our national holiday was never intended to be desecrated by the injury and death of thousands of men, women and children."

The Labor Day Safety Campaign is sponsored by the AFL-CIO Safety & Occupational Health Committee, the Labor Conference of the National Safety Committee and other labor organizations. Chairman of the AFL-CIO committee is Vice Pres. Richard F. Walsh, with John D. Connors as executive secretary. Vice Pres. Elwood D. Swisher of the Oil, Chemical & Atomic Workers is chairman of the NSC Labor Conference. NSC vice president for labor is Lloyd Utter, industrial health and safety director of the Auto Workers.

Although Labor Day 1960 was one of the safest in the past decade, Haggerty recalled, there still were 415 traffic deaths, 83 drownings and 28 boating fatalities. Labor has an obligation to do something about the situation, he maintained, "since most of the victims are workers and members of their families."

Holiday fatalities need not be repeated this year, he continued, though perhaps the heaviest traffic in history will take to the highways about 6 p. m. on Friday, Sept. 1.

"Accidents can be prevented if all concerned do their part," he declared. "Safety is everybody's job —on the highway, at work, in the home and at play. Union people are urged to help in this all-out effort to save lives and maintain the dignity of Labor Day."

Labor Hails Oral Vaccine Against Polio

The AFL-CIO has expressed gratification over the granting of a license by the U.S. Public Health Service for the manufacture of a live, oral vaccine that protects against Type I polio, the virus responsible in recent years for between 60 and 70 percent of all paralytic polio in this country.

"We are hopeful that the development of a method of producing a single oral vaccine effective against Types I, II and III, in easy-to-take form, will not be long in coming," said Dir. Nelson H. Cruikshank of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Social Security.

The vaccine, developed by Dr. Albert Sabin, may be taken in liquid or pill form whereas the Salk vaccine must be administered in a series of three or four injections.

Surgeon Gen. Luther H. Terry, in announcing the licensing decision, emphasized strongly that the Salk vaccine still "is the only weapon we have today to provide protection against all three types of polio."

"We are also pleased to know that the Public Health Service is purchasing 900,000 doses of the first manufactured lot of Sabin vaccine, to be held in reserve for use in potential epidemics," Cruikshank said.

"We very much hope that the Public Health Service will be working with state and local health departments, voluntary agencies, and the medical profession to the end that the failures in the early distribution of Salk vaccine will be avoided.

"The responsibility rests ultimately with the Public Health Service that as the vaccine is produced in quantity, its availability to every man, woman and child will become an actuality."

Pfizer, Ltd., of Sandwich, England, the first firm licensed to manufacture the Sabin vaccine, expects to have more than 50 million doses available by the 1962 polio season.

Top Apprentices Win Honors in Competition

Lafayette, Ind.—Apprentices from Brooklyn, Milwaukee and Newark took top honors in the Plumbers and Pipe Fitters' 8th annual National Apprentice Contest at Purdue university here.

In the plumbing competition, Joseph Prainito, Local 1, Brooklyn, won the $1,000 first prize.

Among the pipe fitter apprentices, Thomas A. Bohlmann, Local 601, Milwaukee, won the top award, also valued at $1,000.

In the sprinkler-fitting category, S. P. Herrick, Local 696, Newark, took the $500 top prize.

A record turnout of 107 apprentices, who previously had won state and provincial contests in the U.S. and Canada, took part in the five-day competition testing their skills.

Pres. Peter T. Schoemann, addressing the awards dinner, congratulated the apprentices and reminded them that their training in the craft must continue after they achieve journeyman status.

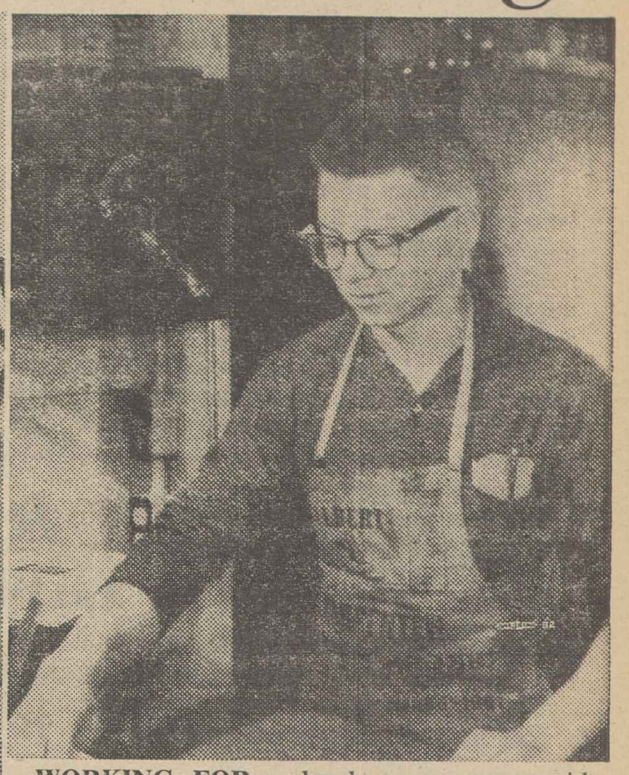
To help its members in their continuing need for education, Schoemann said, the union has established a comprehensive teaching program made possible by its International Training Fund. He noted that the fund had expended more than $2.5 million over the past three years on the training program. Financed by contributions from some of the larger contractors with whom the union has agreements, the fund started building up in July 1958 at the rate of a cent an hour per employe. It now gets 2.5 cents per manhour.

During the contest week, more than 400 of the instructors—including a number from public vocational schools—completed an intensive course at Purdue in modern teaching methods.

Unveiled for the first time in the course was a $15,000 instrument panel board duplicating the piping and controls of a typical automated industrial plant.

Scholarship Winners Set for College

SIX WINNERS of 4-year scholarships awarded by the AFL-CIO will enter the colleges of their choice this fall. They come from big cities and small towns in all sections of the nation. Above, Mary Florence Cogar of Concord, Calif., who plans to be a school teacher, gets practical experience working with a second grade class.

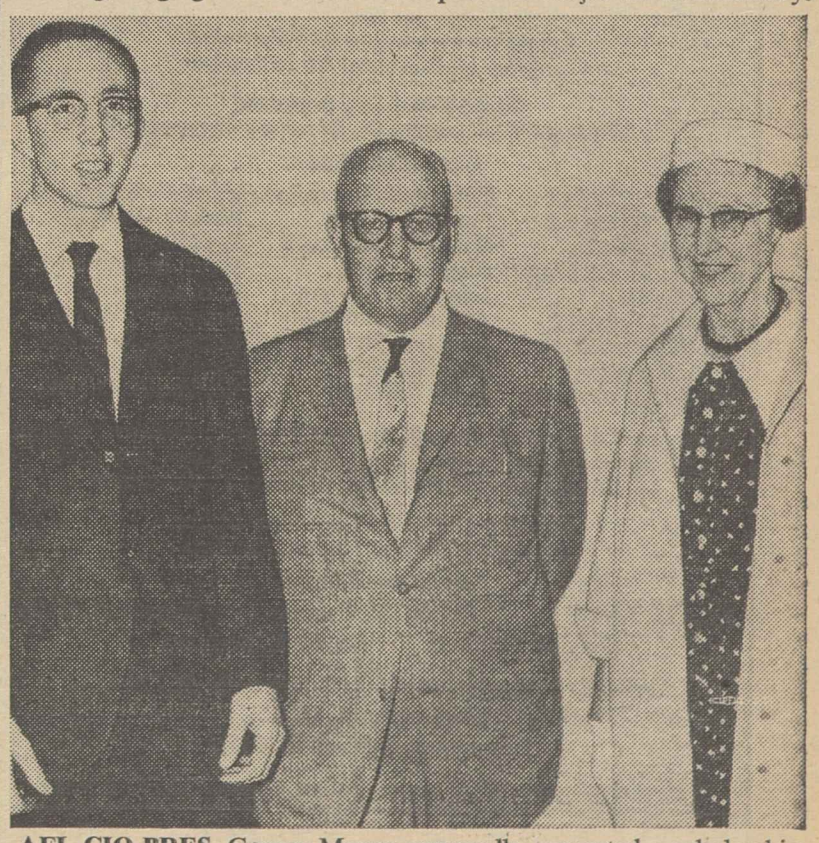


WORKING FOR a local newspaper provides extra income and practical experience for Harry Michael Whalen of LaMoure,, N. D. Harry has also worked as a service station attendant and a newspaper carrier, while finding time to edit his school paper, head his church youth group and graduate first in his class.

RONALD KERRY PENNINGTON of Birmingham was presented his scholarship certificate by Alabama State AFL-CIO Pres. Barney Weeks, right. Looking on proudly are his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Keith E. Pennington. His father is a member of Steelworkers Local 1013. He plans to major in electrical engineering.

GEORGIE ANNE WIGGINS, left, is shown with the staff of the Sunapee, N. H., high school yearbook, which she edited. Valedictorian of her class, she has won state awards for acting, science, writing, singing and French. She plans to major in biochemistry.

LOCAL 601 of the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers took special pride in the award to Phyllis Margaret Storm. Her father, who works at the Westinghouse plant at Pittsburgh, is a longtime member of the local. Shown at the award ceremony held by the union are Mr. and Mrs. Paul Storm, left, and IUE Education Dir. Ben Segal and Local 601 Pres. Paul Carmichael at right. The local added its own gift for Phyllis—a television set.



AFL-CIO PRES. George Meany personally presented a scholarship award to David Skipwith Cannell of nearby Annapolis, Md., shown here with his mother. David worked after school while ranking first in his class and participating actively in school and community activities. His career goal is research physicist.

Jobs and Discrimination

THE CONTINUING BATTLE to wipe out every vestige of racial discrimination in apprentice training—and in employment generally—must be waged at every level and with every available weapon.

It calls for action by local and international unions, by employers and by employer associations, by federal and state governments. It calls for education, persuasion and enforceable legislation. But the victory could be a hollow one unless the nation's economy can provide jobs and job opportunities.

When workers with 15 or 20 years of seniority are waiting to be recalled, there is little meaning in providing equal employment opportunity. When industry's future need for skilled workers is not being met by planned training of young journeymen or by upgrading skills of displaced older workers, not even the most rigid bans on discrimination will provide opportunity to meaningful numbers of Negroes and other minority groups.

Recognition of these facts must not diminish the drive to tear down the remaining barriers to equal opportunity, but should lead to a greater emphasis on the importance of building a healthy, full-employment economy.

Economic growth is more than an economist's phrase. It is as much a part of the fight against racial bias as any civil rights law.

The Art in Living

THE SITUATION AT THE Metropolitan Opera in New York represents much more than the normal labor-management negotiations. It underlines the dilemma of the professional musician everywhere and raises grave questions as to the future of professional musicianship in America.

Negotiations between the Metropolitan Opera and Local 802 of the American Federation of Musicians floundered because management showed a complete insensitivity to these broader issues as well as a contemptuous disregard of the immediate needs of the Metropolitan musician.

In the past eight years the Metropolitan scale has increased only one-half the general increase in living costs. The musician at the Metropolitan is in an intolerable situation; he cannot live and work with any sense of artistic dignity or economic security.

The Metropolitan is more than an opera house; it is a national institution, one of the great symbols of American culture. Because of its unique character it has certain privileges and responsibilities. One of those responsibilities is to its musicians who no longer can make the financial sacrifices demanded because the organization operates at a deficit.

The 1961-62 opera season can go on as planned if the Metropolitan Opera will try and work out the problems of its musicians and give them the economic security they so richly deserve for the difficult and exacting job they perform.

Honor Labor, Stay Alive

LABOR DAY is a day for celebrating the dignity of the American worker and the contributions of the trade union movement to the progress of the nation. But too often in past years it has become a "counting" holiday—a three-day weekend dedicated to news broadcasts with horrifying totals of lives lost in highway and other accidents.

Labor Day is a day to honor and salute American workers and their unions, a day to recall past struggles and plan further progress. It must not be desecrated by the suffering and sadness that results from unnecessary accidents.

Honor labor and stay alive!

Labor Day Messages:

Churches Call for Cooperation In Solving Social Problems

A COOPERATIVE APPROACH to the problems that beset labor and management and are shared by the government is called for by the country's three major religious faiths in their annual Labor Day messages.

The statement of Msgr. George G. Higgins, director of the Social Action Dept. of the National Catholic Welfare Conference, asserted that "we can no longer prudently ignore the fact that the future of freedom all over the world depends to a considerable degree on the health of the American economy."

"This, in turn, depends, more than ever before, on the willingness of labor and management to subordinate their own particular interests to the dictates of social justice and to think and act in terms of the national and international good," he continued.

"This is not to say that responsibility for the healthy functioning of the American economy rests exclusively with labor and management, nor is it to say that they by themselves are capable of solving all of our economic problems. The government also has an indispensable role to play—a greater role perhaps than some Americans are prepared to concede."

Msgr. Higgins listed problems which he said the Labor-Management Advisory Committee should weight "very seriously and very conscientiously." Some may be solved by labor and management, he said, others such as unemployment by a combination of public and private effort.

"We have no time to lose," he warned, "in developing such a coordinated approach to this very serious and potentially very dangerous problem."

He expressed the hope that the Labor-Management Advisory Committee will give "a new dimension and a new direction" to collective bargaining.

FULL EMPLOYMENT "within our new technology is an ethical imperative," said "Automation—Of Critical Concern to the Churches," the message of the executive board of the Division of Christian Life & Work of the National Council of the Churches of Christ in the U. S. A.

"To achieve it," the statement continues, "will require the best creative thinking and action on the part of everyone, including labor, management, agriculture, government, and the Christian churches.

"Immediately there must be retraining and relocation of workers, better provision for retirement and transfer of benefits, assistance in difficult psychological adjustments. All segments of the community must be willing to assume responsibility for such programs, even as labor must be willing to accept new techniques.

"But the total problem cannot be solved by stop-gap measures. Only a positive and determined effort for efficient, full production and full employment aimed at providing decent living conditions over the world can do that. To such an effort the National Council of Churches calls men and women on this Labor Day."

The maintenance of an adequate level of demand for goods and services that would keep the entire work force employed, the message said, "is not a problem which either employers or unions can solve alone."

"Our Christian faith makes powerful demands on us in this situation," it continued. ". . . . We have the opportunity to bring the comforts of health and decent living standards to untold millions of people both at home and abroad. As long as people anywhere are in need, our responsibility as Christians is to seek effective means of making resources available to meet that need.

"The distribution of our potential abundance to those in need within and beyond our borders will require new thought and action. Christian compassion and conviction have often shown the way to turn walls into doors. Christians can work in their private capacities, in their organizations, and through their governments to see that the needy are no longer in privation and want."

THE SYNAGOGUE COUNCIL of America through its president, Rabbi Julius Mark, hailed the "high dignity and worth" of those who work and recalled that "Jewish religious tradition has constantly upheld the rights of workers to organize for their economic betterment and to engage in the process of collective consultation."

"We earnestly believe," Rabbi Mark continued, "that the cooperative partnership and mutual reciprocity of management and labor will advance the enlightened best interests of both equally vital forces, and enrich the lives, liberties and security of the entire country.

"The translation of this spirit into a living reality should be paramount on the agenda of all men in these days of crisis. If we are to engage in the contest for the hearts and minds of men, the practice of free and responsible cooperation between labor and management in good faith, for the commonwealth of our citizenry, is essential.

"We must be ready to accept the mantle of leadership and responsibility which history now places on us to share the abundance with which the Almighty has blessed us and, in so sharing, see to it that no human being need lack the necessities and comforts of mind and body."

Schnitzler on Labor Day:

'Even Union Members Sometimes Forget...'

WHAT ARE YOU DOING this Labor Day? Taking a long weekend at the beach with the family? Going camping? Watching the doubleheader at the ball park? Or beating the traffic by just sitting in the back yard with your feet up?

Whatever you do and whoever you are, take a minute or two of your holiday to think gratefully of the trade union movement. For the trade union movement is responsible, not only for Labor Day, but for the other paid holidays and vacations you enjoy during the year. And the trade union movement brought about these benefits not only for union members, but for Americans as a whole.

Even union members sometimes forget what an impact our movement has had upon life in this country. To draw a fair comparison, let's go back—not to the Great Depression of the Thirties, when everyone knows we were in trouble—but to the prosperous years, the boom times, of the Twenties.

Holidays were a different matter then. Yes, the factories and the offices and the construction projects generally closed down on certain days—Christmas, New Year's, Thanksgiving, even Labor Day. Those were days off, all right; off the payroll as well as off the job.

Some salaried workers did get paid for holidays; in some cases, as many as four a year. Many others did not. And the record will show that the increase in the number of holidays and the length of paid vacations for such workers was pushed along by the gains won by unions for wage-earners.

But holidays, of course, are only a symbol of a much more sweeping change. Consider the matter of income, not merely in terms of dollars but in living standards.

In the "Roaring Twenties," when our country was supposedly so prosperous, workers lived in "working-class districts." That phrase covered most housing from almost-endurable tenements to rows of narrow, dark, identical little houses, huddled block after block on the edge of an industrial area, their little patches of yard too often blighted by soot from factory chimneys.

True, such districts can still be found; but no one thinks of them as "working-class." Today's worker is far more likely to live in a three-bedroom rambler on a tree-lined suburban street. He has at least one car, at least one TV set; his wife presides over an array of equipment that includes an electric refrigerator, washing-machine, dryer, vacuum cleaner, steam iron, pop-up toaster and many more that are commonplace today but were almost unheard-of 35 years ago.

Some will argue that these changes simply represent "progress," as though progress was an automatic process. It's true that our daily lives have been enriched by the products of human invention. It's also true that the worker of the Twenties couldn't have afforded those products even if they had been available.

What has made the difference? In a word, wages—wages pushed up under the leadership of trade unions to a point where they are more nearly in keeping with manhour productivity, and more nearly represent a fair share for workers of what their labor produces.

In this era, wages are too often considered only in terms of their possible effect on prices. A newspaper reader may be led to believe that higher wages are actually a bad thing; that they bring about inflation and "undermine the dollar."

Yet the fact is that the progress I have briefly described—progress that has been enjoyed by the whole working population, union or non-union, hourly-paid or salaried—was brought about because individual income has risen faster than living costs.

An essential element in this process, of course, has been higher manhour productivity, achieved by scientific and technological improvements. But unless the trade union movement had led the way in spreading the fruits of these improvements over a broader base, the benefits would have been restricted to a fortunate handful.

Today we find ourselves threatened by the very technology that has been so essential in the past. We find automation abolishing more jobs than it creates. We find, in the midst of this good life we have won for most Americans, millions of others whose livelihoods have suddenly disappeared.

And for this, too, there are some who put the blame on high wages. There are some who argue that if workers would only toil for less, employers would not bother to invest in new machinery.

We know these are all short-sighted arguments. The basic solution to the problems caused by automation is the same program that has revolutionized the American way of life in the last 35 years—higher wages, shorter hours, longer vacations, improved welfare programs, bigger pensions and all the rest.

Because our economy has grown increasingly complex and interdependent, the federal government must also play a part in the breakthrough to a new era—just as the New Deal helped to correct the shortcomings that brought the collapse of the paper prosperity of the Twenties.

But the labor movement has an even more vital role. We must continue to press for the economic and social gains that are indispensable to an expanding economy—the only kind of economy that can create jobs for a growing population.

So, during that minute or two you spare for thought on Labor Day, think back upon the peaceful revolution we have wrought in little more than a generation; and think ahead, as well, to the glorious future that can be ours if we follow the same path, with equal determination, in the years ahead.

Morgan Says:

Jailed on Informer's Testimony, Payton Returns Without Rancor

By Edward P. Morgan

(This column is excerpted from the nightly broadcasts of Edward P. Morgan, ABC commentator sponsored by the AFL-CIO. Listen to Morgan over the ABC network Monday through Friday at 7 p. m., EDT.)

HERE IS SOMETHING to take your mind off the cold war for a few minutes. The story, I'm afraid, is not a pretty one, though it has almost but not quite a happy ending.

In November 1958 the Textile Workers Union of America called a strike at two cotton mills at Henderson, N. C. The union had asked only for renewal of its contract—with no new demands. The Harriet-Henderson Mills company, however, raised several demands of its own including the withdrawal of a provision for arbitration of disputes, which the union refused. After a reasonably satisfactory union-management relationship that stretched clear back to the middle of World War II, this suddenly hardened company attitude struck some observers as a maneuver to weaken if not break the union.

Morgan

AT ANY RATE, negotiations deadlocked, the company imported strikebreakers from other states, the normal life of Henderson was caught up in a strangling turmoil of tension and isolated acts of violence resulted. Then came state troopers and finally the National Guard to restore "order."

The key man for the union in this picture was Boyd E. Payton, a vice president of the TWUA and regional director for the Carolinas, a region which, like much of the rest of the industrializing South, welcomes labor leaders as it would the devil.

One night in March 1959 he was attacked and painfully injured by a shower of rocks thrown at his car by unknown assailants. The then state attorney general, one Malcolm Seawell, dismissed the incident as a "hoax." Payton took a lie-detector test which confirmed his story of being attacked but state authorities took no action. On June 10, he announced he would sue Seawell for slander and defamation.

Less than four days later Payton and seven other union men were arrested. The charge: conspiracy to dynamite and burn Harriet-Henderson mill property. They were convicted on the testimony of an ex-convict named Harold Elzie Aaron who had a grudge against one of the defendants. After appeals failed, the eight went to prison. It has since developed that the North Carolina State Bureau of Investigation paid Aaron $1,100 in the case as an informer. Aaron is now under indictment in Virginia after a gun fracas last April involving a teen-age girl.

After Payton's trial, Harry Golden wrote in his celebrated Carolina Israelite that on long acquaintanceship with Payton—they both live in Charlotte—he simply could not believe his guilt, that there must have been a mistake. In the June 14 issue of the Christian Century, an article by Clair M. Cook said the only possible conclusion was that "Payton and the others were convicted on unbelievable evidence by a man who sought to entrap them; that the judge was rabidly anti-union; that the trial was held in an atmosphere of violent emotionality . . ."

Last June 1, the Henderson strike ended. The union lost.

In prison, Payton began to teach convicts to read and write and became a sort of "unofficial lawyer, doctor and social worker for hundreds." North Carolina's new young governor, Terry Sanford, reduced the sentences of the eight men—the judge had given Payton six to 10 years—and they are out on parole.

IN AN INTERVIEW with the Raleigh News & Observer before his release, Payton placed "a very high value on the experiences of these days and nights in prison" and said his work teaching others had been "extremely satisfying."

After a rest, Payton will go back to his union job. William Pollock, president of the Textile Workers Union, welcomed his release but said the record could not be cleared until Payton won a full pardon.

"I do not believe," Payton had told the News & Observer, "that anything worthwhile or permanent can be built on malice and hatred and I believe that both management and labor must soon learn to live with each other or both will suffer irreparable damage."

He spoke of no damage to himself.

Washington Reports:

Housing Bill Called Broadest in Years

THE 1961 HOUSING BILL is one of the most comprehensive in many years but its cost has been much exaggerated, Rep. Albert Rains (D-Ala.), author of the legislation, asserted in an interview on Washington Reports to the People, AFL-CIO public service educational program heard on 450 radio stations.

"The total amount of the new authorization provided in the bill is $4.9 billion," Rains said. "This is $100 million less than the Administration asked for.

"It should be pointed out that more than half this total amount—$2.8 billion—is for loans to be repaid to the federal government with interest. And all this will not be spent in one year; because of the nature of our housing program, this money will be spread over a number of years."

Rains explained provisions of the bill insofar as they offer benefits to those who plan to build, buy, rent or remodel a home.

"Among the principal benefits are the more liberal FHA mortgage terms," he pointed out. "In the case of a newly built home, a buyer can now get a mortgage with a term of 35 years instead of the 30-year limit in the previous law."

PERSONS WHO CANNOT afford to own their homes even under these terms, Rains explained, may be able to benefit from the authorization of 100,000 low-rent public housing units.

In addition, Rains talked about an additional $75 million for the direct loan program for housing for the elderly; an additional $2 billion for federal grants under the urban renewal program; an increase in the fund for community facilities loans of $450 million for water and sewerage facilities.

THE 1961 HOUSING BILL will do more than any bill in recent years to help see that every American has a decent home, Rep. Albert Rains (D-Ala.), author of the legislation, declared in an interview on Washington Reports to the People, AFL-CIO public service radio program.

Meany on Labor Day:

AFL-CIO Has Confidence in Destiny of U.S.

LABOR DAY IS COMPLETELY different from all other national holidays—unique in origin, in purpose and in spirit. It does not commemorate an historic event or a national hero. Instead it salutes the ordinary workingman. During the rest of the year, very little glamour touches the average American worker. But on Labor Day he and his fellows are given recognition for their collective achievement in building America, making it strong and keeping it free.

In other countries and in other civilizations labor has been looked down upon, frequently enslaved. Here in America, on Labor Day, leaders in public life, from the President down, join in paying tribute to labor's great and undeniable contributions to the nation's well-being and security.

It is too much to expect that this basic truth should be acknowledged every day, not merely on Labor Day. American workers and the trade unions that represent them do not need to be cajoled and praised to do their part. But it must be said that they deeply resent the constant barrage of criticism and attack, the foul blows that are aimed at them in almost every publication and over the air. American labor wants to be treated with respect and fairness not only on Labor Day, but throughout the year. It deserves nothing less.

Those who deliberately seek to poison the public mind against labor are only hurting themselves. They cannot match the invective hurled at us by Moscow. The Kremlin realizes that the strongest and most effective force against communism in the United States is the free trade union movement. The newspapers, magazines and broadcasters are merely playing into Moscow's hands when they try to defame and destroy our free trade union movement.

Their efforts are doomed to failure, in any event. The workers of this country have earned the confidence and good will of their fellow Americans. Through the trade union movement, they have helped to raise the American standard of living to the highest level of all time. They have supported every worthwhile liberal cause and have won great benefits for all the people of this country by economic, legislative and political action. America's vitality and progress during the past half century are due in no small part to the unyielding struggles of organized labor in behalf of the common good.

Labor Day is a serious holiday. Most Americans take time out to have fun and recreation, of course. But they also pause to reflect on the way we have traveled and on the road stretching into the future. This traditional inventory gives us the opportunity to evaluate our objectives and to survey the problems that must be overcome before we can hope to attain them. For the workers of this country Labor Day represents a day of re-dedication to the American ideal of freedom and justice.

Just as a plant needs sun and water, our free way of life needs peace and progress in order to grow. The preservation of peace has become the common goal of all freedom-loving people everywhere in the world.

For some years past and to this day, the threat of war comes from one source and one source only—the Communist conspiracy.

Of course, there is a great deal of talk in the so-called "neutral" and "uncommitted" countries to the effect that they are caught in the middle of a gigantic power-struggle between Soviet Russia and the United States.

This attempt to equate the policy and position of the two nations and to make them equally culpable for the critical international tension that exists today is nothing but undercover Communist propaganda.

It is Soviet Russia, not the United States, which menaces the peace of the world. It is Soviet Russia, not America, which seeks territorial aggrandizement, as the record since World War II proves. It is Soviet Russia, not the United States, which has vetoed every attempt in the United Nations to seek peaceful solutions for international problems.

Yes, it is Soviet Russia, backed up by Red China, which is the aggressor—the only aggressor.

If the United States were bent on an aggressive course, would we tolerate for one moment the insults, the provocations and the property seizures of the bearded dictator in Cuba?

If the United States wanted war, wouldn't we have started it years before, when America had a monopoly on atomic weapons and could have destroyed all the cities and industry of Soviet Russia within a week?

Surely it must be obvious to every unbiased and intelligent person on both sides of the Iron Curtain that America wants peace.

Khrushchev also talks of peace, but it is strictly double-talk. When he uses the word, it means peace only under subjection to Communist terror. When we refer to peace, we mean peace with freedom.

America has now served notice that we will defend the free way of life in the strategic areas of the world despite any warlike moves the Kremlin may make. If we have to fight, we will fight in support of our treaty obligations and in defense of our allies. Clearly, if we were to fail to do this we would only be hastening the day of our own downfall.

The trade union movement stands 100 percent behind Pres. Kennedy in the firm stand he has taken to resist any further Communist pressure.

I do not pretend to be a military expert, yet I am fully confident that in the event of an ultimate showdown Soviet Russia would lose and the United States would be victorious.

My confidence is based on two factors:

FIRST, the military significance of Russia's achievements in space has been exaggerated far beyond actuality for the twin purpose of boosting Russian morale and intimidating the free world.

SECOND, experience has shown that free labor can out-produce slave labor and it will take Russia many, many years to match America's industrial capacity.

We proved that in the last war against Hitler. We will prove it again, if necessary, against Khrushchev.

The Kremlin knows this, just as well as we do. That is why it has launched a new 20-year plan to match the American standard of living, and American levels of production.

There has been a great deal of concern in this country about the state of our missile program, and justifiably so. It is not pleasant or encouraging to realize that the Russians have been able to out-perform us in space.

When Pres. Kennedy took office in January, he gave a new emphasis and priority to the missile program that were previously lacking. The Air Force followed up by calling in union leaders to the Pentagon for the first time in February to brief them on the urgency of expediting the program. Less than two weeks later, the Building & Construction Trades Dept. of the AFL-CIO adopted a no-strike policy on missile base jobs. Soon afterwards all labor gave the government a no-strike pledge and industry a non-lockout pledge to speed the missile program. On this basis, Pres. Kennedy issued an executive order establishing machinery for the equitable adjustment of disputes at missile sites. Since then, according to official records, time lost due to work stoppages of any kind has been reduced to the vanishing point.

This is an example of the position of the trade union movement in any national emergency. Traditionally and presently, the trade unions have put the public welfare first.

But other actions must be taken too, if the United States is to pull ahead in the space age. The emphasis the Administration is giving to the space program and the prompt action of the Congress in supplying the President with the legislative measures he needed is, in our opinion, a good sign—a sign that America is once again moving ahead.

I wish that I could be as optimistic on other fronts but the truth is that the legislative situation is not generally good. On the domestic economic front there are a multitude of problems—and these problems have a direct bearing on the international situation and on our capacity to meet the Communist threat.

The military build-up which the Communist threat has made necessary and the additional costs of the missile and space program have provided a segment of America with the excuse they wanted for an attack not only on wages and working conditions but on social justice legislation.

The reactionaries in Congress are trying to tell the people of this country that we can't have guns and butter too. What do they mean by butter? They mean decent housing, they mean adequate social security, they mean school lunch programs, federal aid to education, assistance to widows and orphans and unemployment compensation.

Yet these are the things that strengthen America, not weaken it. America is not a bank, not a corporation, not an inanimate budget. It is people. Services and programs which help people in the most trying circumstances get back on their feet, which promote better education and health and wider understanding of American ideals are not only worth spending for—they are worth fighting for.

The one thing we have to fear is that our national economy will not keep pace with our growing population. With full production and full employment America will become invincible. But if our economy turns anemic, if it continues to suffer recurring bouts of recession, if mass unemployment becomes truly chronic, then we are in for serious trouble.

And we are in for serious trouble if we do not meet the problem posed by our growing work force. In the last decade, the work force grew at the rate of 820,000 a year—820,000 additional people came into the labor market annually. We were not able to find jobs for them—the unemployment figures prove that.

Starting this year, and for every year of the Sixties, the labor force is going to grow at the annual rate of 1,350,000; 1,350,000 more people every year. That's not a guess. That's a vital statistic—a fact of the wartime baby boom.

That means we must find 25,000 new jobs a week every week for the next 10 years just to put our new workers into gainful employment. That's a major problem for a democratic society—and it is one we can and must solve.

The Communists say our free economy is doomed, that it cannot provide full employment, that it is bound to collapse. We must prove—and we can prove—they are completely wrong.

We can prove it not by the government doing less but by its doing more to keep the national economy healthy and steadily moving forward.

Only those with limited vision and small minds want to cut back and retreat. America has not come to the end of the road nor has it reached its last frontier. We can get nowhere if we are obsessed with fear. Labor has confidence in America's destiny. We look to our government for bold and far-sighted leadership that will safeguard peace and begin to build a new era of prosperity in the next decade.

AN UPDATED VERSION of the AFL-CIO produced film, "Land of Promise," will be shown on the National Educational Television network and a number of commercial stations on Labor Day. Pres. George Meany has filmed a new interview outlining the labor movement's problems and goals for the year ahead. The interview is the closing portion of the award-winning film. "Land of Promise" was first shown on Labor Day 1960 over the American Broadcasting Co. television network and was highly praised by television reviewers. Narrated by stage and film star Melvyn Douglas, it traces the economic evolution of the United States and depicts the problems facing workers today.

Program Wins Praise:

'Briefing Session' AudienceResponds

Nearly 1,000 viewers have written in to request transcripts of one or more programs in the public affairs television series, "Briefing Session," and almost one-third of them added words of praise.

Twenty "Briefing Session" programs have been produced jointly by the AFL-CIO and the National Educational Television & Radio Center. The series is still being aired by many TV stations.

About 50 writers indicated they planned to use the transcripts as teaching materials. But the majority were apparently just private citizens who welcomed enlightenment on the issues of the day.

Edward P. Morgan, moderator of the program, was singled out for special praise in many letters, both for his "Briefing Session" role and his nightly news commentary.

"Morgan is superb and you are doing the American people a service in making him available," was a typical comment.

'One of the Best'

Other notes ran the gamut of laudatory adjectives:

"One of the best on television; informative and well-narrated." "Important and worthwhile." "Most interesting and educational." "Very helpful and provocative." "Completely delighted." "Greatly appreciate your choice of subjects and a small panel, not a large one." "Its objectivity and pertinence were commendable," and so on, by the hundreds.

Some requests for transcripts came from interesting sources. The Chamber of Commerce in Galveston, Tex., asked for 20 copies of "Housing America." A California newspaperman wrote for "Plight of the Migrant Worker" to help him in writing about the situation in the No. 1 migrant-worker state.

The Michigan State and Houston University journalism schools asked for "Mass Media in the U.S.;" the Indiana University Law School sought "Agriculture—Problems and Programs."

Many correspondents asked that the series be continued next year. Others thought the program should be extended to an hour. Some suggested additional topics for discussion.

At least one high school—Newton High School in Massachusetts—made "Briefing Session" a weekly assignment for students, with a classroom discussion after each program.

The offer of transcripts was not made until half the series had been completed, so comments were limited to the latter 10 programs. All received their share of praise, but the apparent favorites were the two final units, a two-part discussion by Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey (D-Minn.) and Arthur S. Schlesinger, Jr., the historian, on "Is Democracy Obsolete?"

"We need more programs on this subject to combat the John Birch Society propaganda," wrote one viewer.

Nursing Home Fire, Health Hazards Cited

A House-passed bill to expand federal grants for community health facilities could reduce the cost of medical care, Lisbeth Bamberger, assistant director of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Social Security, declared in a radio interview.

Miss Bamberger, interviewed on Labor News Conference, carried by the Mutual Broadcasting System, pointed out that the bill would double federal participation in the construction of non-profit nursing homes. It would also provide assistance for visiting nurse and other home care programs.

She pointed out that many elderly or chronically ill persons spend long and costly periods in hospitals because nursing home facilities are inadequate or unavailable. Nearly half of the nation's nursing homes, she said, are considered either fire or health hazards.

Urging Senate action on the bill at this session, she noted:

"By providing for alternative facilities such as nursing homes or home nursing services, the hospitals would be more efficiently used. Fewer hospital beds would have to be built and this, in turn, would have a good effect on hospital financing in general."

'Tent City' Negro Voters Cast Ballots

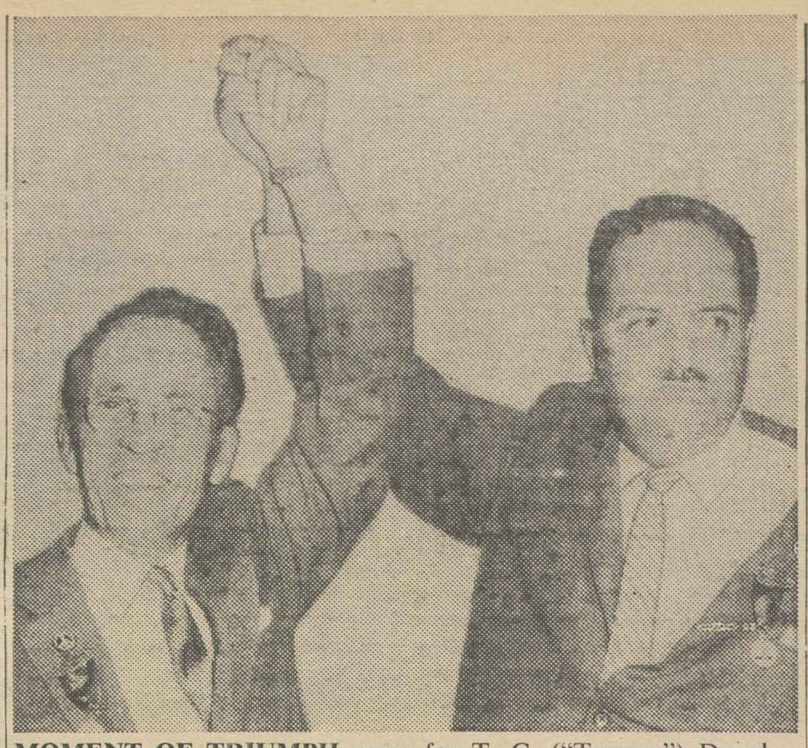
Brownsville, Tenn.—Negroes in rural Haywood County here have demonstrated dramatically that economic retaliation by white landowners and businessmen because they voted in last November's election had not intimidated them into giving up their franchise.

More than 400 Negroes went to the polls in a county election recently and voted "without incident," Tennessee State AFL-CIO Sec. Matthew Lynch has reported.

Still pending is a Justice Dept. suit, filed under the Voting Rights Act, to enjoin businessmen and landowners from economic retaliation, including eviction of sharecropper families.

Lynch also reported that contributions from AFL-CIO affiliates, plus a $2,000 donation by the AFL-CIO Executive Council, has enabled some 53 Negro families in Haywood and Fayette counties to remain on the land until their crops are harvested and sold.

The donations provided subsistence money during the summer for families whose normal sources of credit were cut off. The AFL-CIO aid program, with payments of from $20 to $100 a month based on need and family size, will continue through September, when the crops are sold.



MOMENT OF TRIUMPH came for T. C. ("Tommy") Douglas, left, premier of Saskatchewan since 1944, when he was elected national leader of Canada's New Democratic Party at its founding convention in Ottawa, Ont. Holding his hand aloft is the rival he defeated, Hazen Argue, national leader of the Co-Operative Commonwealth Federation, which with the Canadian Labor Congress sparked formation of the NDP.

Kaiser Gives Backing To Anderson-King Bill

Industrialist Edgar F. Kaiser has told Congress that the social security system provides the only "simple, sound and fiscally responsible" method of financing health care for the aged.

In a statement submitted to the House Ways & Means Committee, Kaiser strongly endorsed the Administration-backed Anderson-King bill and vigorously denied that it would be a step toward "socialized medicine."

Speaking both as head of Kaiser Industries Corp. and as president of the Kaiser Foundation Health Plan—the nation's biggest prepaid, group practice program—he declared that even the best voluntary programs cannot provide adequate health care for those who need it most.

A social security health care provision, Kaiser said, would provide a foundation which could be improved by voluntary programs just as social security retirement benefits are improved by supplemental company retirement plans.

In another statement recently presented to the committee, New York State AFL-CIO Pres. Harold C. Hanover said a recent study of his state's 1.68 million residents over the age of 65 showed that 80 percent had incomes of less than $2,000 a year. He said less than 14 percent of the hospital bills of this group were paid for by voluntary health insurance programs.

Goldberg Upheld On Union Records

The right of Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg to subpoena union books and records for inspection has been upheld by a U.S. Court of Appeals in a case involving two Teamsters locals—one headed by Pres. James R. Hoffa.

The Cincinnati circuit court ruled that IBT unions and their officers lack the privilege of "insulating the union books and records against reasonable demands of government authority."

The court reversed a February ruling of a Michigan federal court declining to enforce the subpoenas unless Goldberg could show reasonable cause for believing the Landrum-Griffin Act had been or was about to be violated.

The case involved Pontiac, Mich., Local 614 and Detroit Local 299, of which Hoffa is president. Goldberg said it was a "significant" court test of the law. A similar test brought by Goldberg against the IBT is pending in the District of Columbia.

Metropolitan Opera, Musicians Renew Efforts to Save '61 Season

New York—A new proposal by the Musicians here and a counter-proposal by Metropolitan Opera management kept alive the hope that the 1961 "Met" season can be saved.

Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg, who intervened in the contract dispute at the request of Pres. John F. Kennedy after the Met had announced twice "the season is off," said he was heartened by the offer and counteroffer, and by a report that Rudolf Bing, Met general manager, is returning from Europe to sit in on negotiations.

Before Kennedy and Goldberg took a hand, AFM Local 802 had asked for substantial improvements in the present base rate of $170 a week and in "fringe" benefits. The management proposed a three-year contract and a new wage scale of $176 a week. When this offer was turned down, the Met said the season was off.

Mayor Robert F. Wagner, embroiled in an election campaign and a fight with the Republican state administration over schools, also stepped in to keep the talks alive. The city's Dept. of Labor has been involved in the sessions along with federal mediators.

The negotiations were resumed after Goldberg, in Denver to make a convention speech, met with Pres. Anthony A. Bliss of the Metropolitan Opera Association. Bliss assured him that, if agreement on a contract is quickly reached, the Metropolitan will operate provided it can get the necessary singers, the labor secretary said.

"I therefore request the parties immediately to resume meaningful negotiations so that a realistic settlement can be promptly concluded.

"The Metropolitan Opera, as the President has said, is a national cultural asset, and should go on as it has done continuously since 1892."

Jobs Sought for Minnesota Indians

St. Paul—The Minnesota Labor Committee for Human Rights has set up a subcommittee headed by AFL-CIO Reg. Dir. Carl Winn, "Jobs for Minnesota Indians," to help Indian youths find employment which will enable them to develop their potential skills.

The committee, on which clergymen and representatives of social agencies and human relations group serve with labor leaders, works closely with the Committee on Indian Affairs of the Governor's Human Rights Commission.

Keep Idealism, Holleman Bids Texas Labor

Galveston, Tex.—Assistant Sec. of Labor Jerry R. Holleman warned the Texas State AFL-CIO convention that labor must not lose its "sense of purpose, of idealism."

Holleman, who headed the state federation until his appointment to the Kennedy Administration early this year, called on Texas labor to:

- Make common cause with migrant workers, farmers, senior citizens, school teachers, Latins, Negroes and others in need of help.
- Win the unorganized workers, the technicians, white collar workers and retail workers with a program "broad in scope, unselfish, skillfully and intelligently executed."
- Bring about enlightened labor relations in Texas and the South—areas which have "never accepted either the 10 Commandments or the first 10 Amendments"—so as to end a system described as "juleps for the few and pellagra for the crew."

Referring to a factional dispute at the convention, Holleman called for a reaffirmation of labor unity, declaring that "being overcome by your enemies would be a tragedy for Texas, but to die by your own hands would be treasonable to your cause."

The state body's two full-time officers were elected without opposition. H. S. (Hank) Brown, who had been named by the executive board to succeed Holleman, was re-elected president. Roy Evans, public relations director of the state federation, was elected secretary-treasurer after Fred H. Schmidt, who had held the post since merger of the state central bodies in 1957, declined to run for re-election. Schmidt was elected to the board.

The convention, however, failed to produce the two-thirds vote necessary to increase the per capita tax from 8 cents to 12 cents. The count was 98,484 for the increase to 64,276 opposed. A subsequent move for a 2-cent per capita increase was declared passed by a standing vote of 394 to 189, but the increase was held in abeyance pending a ruling of a protest.

The convention also heard an eloquent appeal for organizing the unorganized by Archbishop Robert E. Lucey of San Antonio.

The archbishop, denouncing the exploitation of migrant farm workers, declared:

"Citizens at the bottom of the social ladder get precious little consideration in this state, and the philosophy of powerful individuals and corporations in Texas is generally unfavorable—sometimes violently unfavorable—to labor unions.

"It is passing strange that all the decent and humane citizens in our society are 'socialists' because they believe that the strong should care for the weak, even with public funds if private charity cannot do the job. I find no cause in logic or in history for giving socialists all the credit for constructive legislation in the field of human welfare," he said.

Unfair Labor Charges Go Up

The greatest three-month total of unfair labor practice charges in the 26-year history of the National Labor Relations Board was filed in the April-June quarter—2,222 against employers, 1,215 against unions.

Filings during the quarter increased by almost 8 percent over the first quarter, the NLRB said. It reported a rise also in representation election requests—from 2,775 in the first quarter to 2,815.

Of elections held during the quarter, unions won 54 percent.

Unemployment from Automation Spurs Call for Immediate Action

Solution of America's most pressing economic problem—the continuing high rate of unemployment resulting from automation—cries out for immediate action at every level of government, business and labor, the AFL-CIO has declared.

"Automation won't wait for answers," warns Labor's Economic Review, a feature of the August issue of the American Federationist, the AFL-CIO'S monthly journal. The article, titled "The Impact of Automation—A Challenge to America," was prepared by the AFL-CIO Dept. of Research.

From 1953 to 1960, the combined effects of the new technology and a too-slow rate of economic growth erased 3 million jobs in mining, manufacturing and railroading alone and added 2 million persons to the unemployment rolls, the article recalls.

But it holds "the big thrust" of automation is still to come and will push not only into the basic economic sectors but also into white-collar jobs and service trades, fields which formerly were relied upon to absorb some of the technological displacement in factories.

"Now a real step forward is needed," the AFL-CIO states, "not only to make up for the gap from the past but to provide for the quickening pace, the widening scope of the new technology . . .

"Every sector, every layer of government and private activity must participate in solving problems which affect us all."

Bargaining Helpful

So far, the article observes, the only solid progress in finding answers to automation's impact has been achieved by labor and management through collective bargaining. Cited as examples are the fund established under the Armour-Packinghouse Workers-Meat Cutters agreement of 1959 to explore methods of coping with technological displacement and the longshore funds, which provide actual payments to assist workers during periods of transition.

Listed also are a number of adjustment procedures negotiated to meet specific problems arising from the introduction of new equipment, such as advance notice to permit planning for the change; fair and orderly procedures for layoffs, rehiring, transfers, promotions, retraining opportunities and changes of job classifications and wage rates; and special efforts in pension planning and job engineering to resolve the problems of older workers.

But because it is limited to immediate, specific problems, the collective bargaining process alone cannot meet the long-range challenge of automation, the article argues. Essential, too, are broad, coordinated programs by federal, state and local governments, it claims.

The first responsibility of the federal government, the AFL-CIO states, is the establishment of "an overall environment of rapid economic growth, at least 5 percent a year, to absorb rapidly rising numbers of new workers and to provide alternative work chances for those displaced by new technology."

Needed from the legislative branch, the magazine suggests, are congressional programs to help spur maximum employment, production and purchasing power.

Areas of Cooperation

From the executive branch should come better information, the article states.

The article also urges greater cooperation among federal, state and community agencies to:

- Re-examine and strengthen programs for vocational, technical and apprenticeship training and retraining.
- Establish a nationwide system for partial income maintenance during retraining for displaced workers.
- Improve the counseling and job placement functions of the U.S. Employment Service.
- Provide relief for economically distressed areas under the area redevelopment program, just getting under way.

Automation's Benefits 'Wasted,' Keenan Holds

Woodstock, Md.—A stepped-up rate of economic growth, stimulated by the federal goverment, is "the basic necessity" for reaping progress from technological change, Sec. Joseph D. Keenan of the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers told a seminar at Woodstock College.

"Many of the potential social benefits of automation have been wasted," said Keenan, "because technical change has been rapid and widespread in recent years while the economy has been slowing down.

"Much of the rising productivity and growing labor force have not been translated into expanded production of needed goods and services, but rather into rising unemployment and part-time work, idle plants and machines, and a growing number of distressed communities."

The AFL-CIO vice president was one of 27 representatives of labor, management, education and government taking part in the seminar, titled "The Ethical Aftermath of Automation."

Keenan said that although organized labor's immediate concern is the welfare of workers caught up in the new industrial revolution, "our intention is not to turn back automation, nor to simply stand in fear of it."

"Our desire is to meet and accept this new thing, and to help guide it in the direction it must go for human betterment," he said. "If we don't, we will find ourselves victimized rather than blessed."

He noted that labor agrees on automation's potential benefits:

"It can relieve much of the burden of human drudgery; it can make possible levels of production almost undreamed of; it can mean a higher standard of living for each and every one of us. Given proper direction, automation can, in the long run, mean all of this and more."

Kennedy Pledges Action:

Job Lag Continues As Output Increases

on the economic developments, announced his intention to ask for a standby program of public works projects, "barring unforeseeable national security developments," in a letter to Sen. Joseph S. Clark (D-Pa.). Clark is sponsor of such a measure.

Kennedy said security developments might force a deferral but, barring this, the principle of standby authority for capital improvements would be part of his program.

"If such authority is granted," he wrote Clark, "I would use it resolutely against unemployment and economic recession."

Kennedy said this authority would be requested with other measures "to protect our economy against unacceptably high levels of unemployment."

Of 'Deepest' Concern

"I have no intention of 'learning to live with' prolonged and severe unemployment, with all that it means in human misery and economic waste," he said. "This is a matter of deepest personal concern on my part."

He said he would not be satisfied by anything less than "prosperity and full employment."

The Clark bill, strongly supported by the AFL-CIO, would authorize $500 million in federal grants to state and local governments to cover 45 percent of the cost of public works projects.

Other data released by the Federal Reserve Board and the Labor Dept. confirmed the recent trend of higher production, productivity and profits while unemployment remained at a recession peak of 6.9 percent with 5.1 million jobless in July.

From a February low point, manufacturing production rose 12 percent while manufacturing employment increased but 4 percent.

The Labor Dept., in reporting the 2.5 percent productivity increase for 1960, observed that "in general, productivity gains tend to be less than average during periods of economic decline, but higher in recovery periods such as 1959, when the increase was more than 4 percent." The annual yearly increase since 1909 has ben 2.4 percent.

Patterns Traced

The productivity rate, which measures production per manhour of work, fails in recession periods because production workers are laid off while managerial and other salaried personnel are retained.

In the recovery periods, productivity rises usually are relatively large with the recall of some production workers, combined with greater mechanization.

Prevailing Pay Bill Signed in Pennsylvania

Harrisburg, Pa.—The long-term fight of organized labor and other groups in the state for prevailing minimum wages on public construction projects ended in victory when Gov. David L. Lawrence (D) signed the new Prevailing Wage Act.

The law requires that the prevailing minimum wage for the craft in the particular locality be paid each employe of all contractors or subcontractors on public projects. A clause to this effect must be written into all contracts for the construction, reconstruction, demolition and maintenance of public properties of the state, boroughs, townships, school districts or any state agency or instrumentality.

The legislation will be administered by the Secretary of Labor & Industry, who in determining rates will take into consideration those set up in union contracts.

"This new legislation," said Lawrence, "will not only benefit Pennsylvania workers, individually, but our overall economy. Fair-minded employers and workers alike will be pleased that Pennsylvania now has taken her place beside the federal government and other states with this enlightened public policy."

Labor Urges Broadening Of Water Bill

Two Senate committees now holding hearings on a Water Resources Planning bill have been urged by the AFL-CIO to expand the scope of the measure to encompass all natural resources, including atomic energy.

Andrew J. Biemiller, director of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Legislation, told the Interior Committee and the Public Works Committee that the AFL-CIO regards the bill as a step in the right direction—"that of achieving unified policy and unified, comprehensive planning as foundations of the federal government's resources activities."

But because the bill affects only water and related land resources, it "does not achieve what we regard as adequate coverage of the natural resources front," said Biemiller, who is chairman of the AFL-CIO staff subcommittee on atomic energy and natural resources.

As introduced by Sen. Clinton P. Anderson, the bill would create a cabinet-level water resources council to function as a central planning agency and would provide the basis for establishing river basin commissions to investigate and plan at the regional level. It also sets up a 10-year program of federal grants-in-aid to assist states in planning for resources development.

Biemiller noted that the proposed legislation provides no responsibility for the council to undertake resources planning keyed to national goals. He suggested that the bill be amended to include this, concluding:

"It is high time that this country's resources efforts be pulled together and pointed toward the future in unified fashion. Organized labor believes that with all natural resources placed within the field of responsibility of a natural resources council, and with planning authority for future needs vested in such a council, we will begin to move forward to make our natural resources better serve the pressing needs of a future America."

John M. Barry Joins News Staff

John M. Barry has joined the staff of the AFL-CIO News as an assistant editor.

For the past five years he has been assistant editor of the Guild Reporter, publication of the Newspaper Guild, and for three years before that was the union's assistant director of research and information.

A native of Nashua, N. H., he was a reporter for the Nashua Telegraph and president of the Guild local there before his appointment to the ANG staff.

12 of 13 Code Points Upset:

Court Blocks Enforcement Of Newburgh Welfare Plan

Newburgh, N. Y.—City Manager Joseph McD. Mitchell encountered the first legal barrier against his controversial program to cut relief spending when State Supreme Court Justice John Donahoe granted a temporary injunction barring enforcement of 12 of the 13 points in Newburgh's new relief code.

Mitchell, author of the code, immediately announced he would appeal and that city officials, while obeying the injunction, would pursue "other measures which are showing promise of being just as effective."

He declared that "the only way the State Board of Social Welfare and the attorney general can stop our welfare reform will be to take over the operation of the welfare department or remove us from office."

State Atty. Gen. Louis J. Lefkowitz had sought the injunction on behalf of the state Social Welfare Board.

Mitchell also came under fire from Roy Wilkins, executive secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, who accused the city manager of smearing Negro citizens by calling southern migrants to the city—mostly Negroes—"lazy, criminal and immoral."

"There is much talk of illegitimacy, of laziness, of drinking and carousing, of slum districts—all of this to slander the race in the public mind without using the designation Negro," Wilkins told the conveniton of Negro Elks in New York City. "Now the truth is that Negro migrants in Newburgh are a microscopic part of the population. The truth is that there are more white people on relief up there than Negroes.

The only provision of the welfare code excluded from Judge Donohoe's ruling is the requirement that physically able welfare recipients must report monthly to the welfare department for a review of their cases.

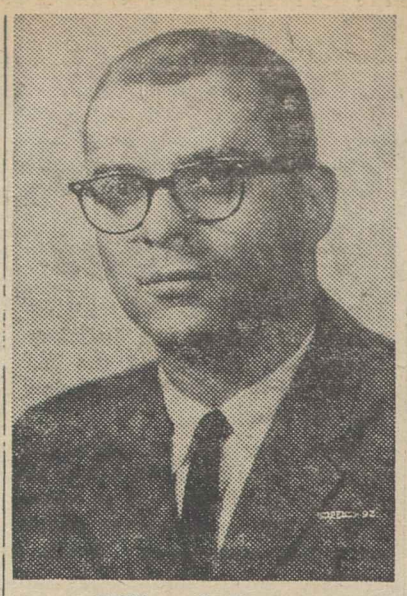
Among the provisions to which the injunction applies are the denial of relief to unwed mothers who bear more illegitimate children, the three-month maximum on aid except for the aged, blind and disabled, and the assignment of able-bodied men on relief to work for the city.

Commenting on the work relief provision in an address to the Newburgh Lions club, Leo Perlis, director of AFL-CIO Community Service activities, described it as "the next thing to slave labor."

He said it was "tantamount to forced labor on jobs which may not be suitable; on jobs which may be on strike; at wages which may be substandard, without procedures and guarantees for collective bargaining, the handling of grievances and appeals."

Perlis said no one objects to work relief for able-bodied men if it is administered justly, with wages paid in cash to persons performing work for which there is a real need.

"Otherwise, he said, "there are grounds for suspicion that this work is 'made-work' for punitive purposes . . . the next thing to slave labor."



William C. Berman

Sarvan K. Bhatia

Green Fellowship Won By Student from India

Columbus, O.—A graduate student from India has been awarded a William Green memorial fellowship at Ohio State University for the 1961-62 school year.

Sarvan K. Bhatia, who received his bachelor's and master's degrees from Punjab University in India, is one of four students here who will receive financial help from the William Green Memorial Fund. Two graduate fellowships and two undergraduate scholarships are provided each year out of income from a $100,000 grant made as an enduring memorial to the long-time president of the former AFL.

Bhatia, the first foreign student chosen under the program, is studying for his doctorate in the field of industrial relations. Prof. Alma Herbst, chairman of the selection committee, described him in a letter to AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany as "an outstanding student" in the graduate courses he has taken.

Also awarded a graduate fellowship was William C. Berman, who is preparing his doctorate dissertation on labor's role during the 1930's and 1940's. He has taught courses in the university's history department and has already passed his general examinations for the doctor of philosophy degree.

Undergraduate scholarships for 1961-62 have been awarded to:

- LeRoy Coffex, a junior majoring in labor economics. The son of a rural minister, he has maintained a high scholastic average and impressed the selection committee with "his intellectual grasp of material" and his "dedication."
- David Porter Stevens, entering his senior year combining pre-medical studies with a liberal arts course.

The committee was impressed with Stevens' conviction that a broad background in the humanities is necessary before entering a specialized field and by his "unusual leadership qualities."

Ex-Teamster Locals' Funds Frozen; Court Rejects Gibbons as Trustee

Cincinnati—Common Pleas Judge Charles S. Bell granted a temporary injuction, Aug. 24, tying up records and assets of four local Teamsters unions whose 4,000 members have voted to disaffiliate from the international union.

Judge Bell emphasized that the injunction was not granted on the merits of the case. He said that the time to argue the case involving the disaffiliation of the four locals would be when a permanent injunction is requested.

In order to preserve the assets "for whomsoever may be found to be the owners" no expenses outside of normal operating expenses can be incurred "without the express permission of the court," he said.

Judge Bell refused to recognize the appointment of Harold J. Gibbons, executive vice president of the Teamsters, as trustee for the locals. Gibbons was rushed to Cincinnati by Teamsters Pres. James R. Hoffa the day after the disaffiliation vote.

Meanwhile, AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany pledged the federation's "continued and wholehearted support" to two of the locals which have petitioned for National Labor Relations Board elections after seeking and receiving charters from the Brewery Workers. They are the Dairy Drivers, with 2,200 members, and the Soft Drink & Beverage Drivers, with 800.

After meeting with James T. Luken, president of the Dairy Drivers, Meany said the federation "heartily welcomes" the Cincinnati developments and pledged the continued availability of AFL-CIO Regional Dir. William Kircher "for any cooperation and assistance that he can give."

Meany called for prompt action on the NLRB petition "so that the workers will be able to register their feelings on official government ballots." He added:

"I am confident that in this election these rank and file workers will vote overwhelmingly to free themselves from the gangster domination of the Teamsters international union."

In another reference to the Teamsters, Meany declared at the Brewery Workers convention in Baltimore last week that "the AFL-CIO is not going to submit to the domination of the underworld in the name of labor unity. That just isn't going to happen."

He ridiculed published reports that the Teamsters have gained members under "little Jimmy."

An examination of AFL-CIO and Labor Dept. records, Meany told the Brewery Workers, reveals that the Teamsters' membership has in fact declined since the union's expulsion from the AFL-CIO—from 1,565,000 members in 1957 to 1,481,000 in 1960.

Meany's report on Teamsters membership later was confirmed by Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg, addressing the Oil Workers convention in Chicago.

"Hoffa makes many exaggerated claims about both the membership of his union and his own intentions and capabilities as a labor leader," Goldberg said. "He speaks of building an organization to rival the AFL-CIO. Yet the figures in my own department, filed under oath by the Teamsters union, show that the union's membership has declined under Hoffa from its high mark under his predecessor."

Disaffiliation Moves

Goldberg cited recent disaffiliation moves in Chicago and the St. Louis area, as well as those in Cincinnati, as evidence that Hoffa does not have solid rank and file support. Last month, some 5,200 Chicago cab drivers voted to leave the Teamsters and join an independent group. In St. Louis, the NLRB scheduled an election on the petition of 225 cab drivers to shift bargaining representation from the Teamsters to an independent union. At Sikeston, Mo., employes of the Scott County Milling Co. have voted 66 to 9 to withdraw from the Teamsters.

The Teamsters' bid to tie up the books and funds of the four Cincinnati locals was presented by David Previant, Milwaukee attorney who led a battery of eight lawyers representing the union. He maintained that the international had changed its constitution in 1957 so that affiliation with the Teamsters was not conditional upon affiliation with any other organization.

Previant also argued that the Teamsters' constitution prevents a local from dissolving as long as seven members oppose the move. "These members exist," he said.

But the attorney for the four locals, Bernard Fox, said he knew of only two members who favored staying with the Teamsters.

Gibbons has placed four-column advertisements in Cincinnati newspapers urging members of the locals who oppose the withdrawal to get in touch with him.

Gibbons also has sent telegrams to all local banks ordering a freeze on all assets. Lukens, however, said the attempted freeze had been expected. Members of the locals have been assured that their funds were removed some time ago from accounts in the international's name and that the money will be used for their exclusive benefit.

The Dairy Workers have assets of $350,000; Soft Drink & Beverage Drivers, $5,000; Funeral & Livery local, $18,000; and Cab Drivers, $4,000, according to published reports.

The split between the international and local unions has been a long time coming, says Luken. He traced the beginning of it back to 1953 when William Presser, Hoffa's lieutenant in Ohio, sent his brother-in-law, Harry Friedman, into Cincinnati "to take over."

Friedman, who sported a criminal record, didn't go down with the local members, who felt they, rather than outsiders, should run union affairs in Cincinnati. Opposition formed and Luken found himself at the head of it.

"This, of course, didn't make me too popular with Presser," Luken said. Later, in Chicago, he opposed Presser again and was told "I'm sick and tired of you. . . . Either you get in line or get out."

He also got the word from Hoffa who, Luken says, told him that Presser was "boss of the Teamsters in Ohio," and warned him that if he "wanted to get along, do what Presser tells you."

The fight has gone on since then.

Labor Backs New Market In Mortgages

Congress has been urged by the AFL-CIO to take one more step in the redevelopment of distressed areas by establishing a government corporation to "provide a secondary market" for mortgages on industrial property in those areas.

Endorsement of a bill on which Senate hearings are being held was voiced by George D. Riley, AFL-CIO legislative representative, who told a Senate Banking subcommittee that the proposed legislation should help "spur private initiative" in the lending field and relieve some of the demands for federal assistance which have accumulated in distressed areas.

Pointing out that Congress created the Federal National Mortgage Association in 1938 to halt a drop in mortgage lending and home building activities, Riley said the proposed bill is needed because the regions it seeks to serve have long been on the "economic sick list."

Jobless Pay Campaign Set In Maryland

The coming referendum drive to defeat Maryland's regressive unemployment compensation measure was spotlighted at the three-day convention of the Maryland-D. C. AFL-CIO.

The bill adopted by the Maryland legislature over strong opposition from organized labor would impose new and severe qualifications on the receipt of unemployment insurance benefits. A State AFL-CIO petition campaign, which secured more than 17,000 signatures, has forced the issue to a statewide referendum.

Delegates to the politically oriented convention voted to establish a special committee to raise funds, in addition to COPE contributions, for a drive to educate Maryland voters on the nature of the bill.

James L. McDevitt, national director of COPE, advised the delegates that Maryland this year not only added further restrictions, but failed to make significant improvements in other features of its unemployment compensation law. He noted that several counties have been designated economically distressed areas and urged the active participation of COPE units in the referendum campaign.

The unemployment compensation measure was a big factor in the convention's decision to oppose the re-election of Gov. J. Millard Tawes in 1962.

State Pres. Woodrow F. Strong accused Tawes of representing himself as a liberal in the 1958 campaign and then "handing labor one disappointment after another." Other areas in which the Tawes Administration fell short, he said, were minimum and prevailing wages, workmen's compensation, collective bargaining rights for public employes and graduated income tax measures.

The convention reelected Strong, First Vice Pres. C. B. Windsor, Second Vice Pres. J. C. Turner, Sec.-Treas. Charles A. Della and most other officers.

The delegates also voted to increase per capita dues from 5.5 cents to seven cents.

Senate Passes Bill to Retrain Jobless

Conferees Tackle Aid; New School Plan Set

nation's manpower needs and resources, to contract with employers for on-the-job training and to cooperate with the Dept. of Health, Education & Welfare in utilizing vocational school retraining programs.

Workers selected for retraining would be entitled to weekly allowances, based on average state unemployment compensation benefits, for up to one year.

Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg said the Administration is "highly gratified" with the Senate action. He described the bill as "a key part of the Administration's program of fighting unemployment and getting people back to work." A companion measure has been reported by the House Labor Committee and is awaiting Rules Committee clearance.

Revival of the school aid issue came after HEW Sec. Abraham Ribicoff won leadership support for a "bare bones" compromise proposal. The compromise school aid plan which will be introduced as two bills includes:

- Federal grants of $325 million for a new one-year program for classroom construction in school districts classified as "distressed" because of extreme overcrowding and inadequate financial resources.
- A one-year extension of federal grants to schools in "impacted areas" where there are large concentrations of federal employes and military personnel.
- A one-year extension of college student loan provisions of the National Defense Education Act.
- Authorization for $1.5 billion in federal loans and grants to colleges for construction of academic facilities over a five-year period.

The Senate has passed an Administration bill authorizing $2.55 billion in grants to public schools over a three-year period. The House counterpart of this bill has been locked in the Rules Committee by an 8 to 7 vote.

A conference committee sought to salvage as much as possible of Pres. Kennedy's long-term foreign aid program through a compromise between sharply differing bills passed by the House and Senate.

The Senate bill came close to the Administration's proposal. It authorized a five-year aid program, including $8 billion in Treasury funds for long-term loans to help underdeveloped nations raise living standards and strengthen their economies.

The House, with the conservative coalition in the saddle, rejected all long-term proposals and passed a limited one-year authorization bill.

Rockefeller Rebuffed

Kennedy made a dramatic appeal for bipartisan support to overturn a 197-to-185 vote which killed the long-term aid proposal. His appeal found only one vocal ally—New York's Republican Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller, who wired all GOP congressmen urging them to back the President's request. Many Republican congressmen wired Rockefeller telling him in effect it was none of his business.

After a nose count by Administration leaders in the House gave no assurance that the vote would be reversed, the decision was made to drop the fight and depend on the conferees to come up with an acceptable compromise.

The Senate dipped fitfully into the civil rights issue in a confused two days of debate which began when Majority Leader Mike Mansfield (Mont.) and GOP Leader Everett M. Dirksen (Ill.) sought to bypass the Judiciary Committee and extend the life of the Civil Rights Commission for two years.

To do this, they moved to suspend the rules so as to attach the extension as a "rider" on an appropriations bill—a maneuver requiring a two-thirds vote. While a Judiciary subcommittee has approved an extension bill, the full committee—headed by Mississippi's Sen. James O. Eastland (D)—has made no move to bring it to the floor.

Northern Republicans and Democrats alike came up with a long list of additional civil rights proposals, and Mansfield finally put aside the appropriations bill, riders and all, until later.

Filibuster Debate Due

Scheduled for the tail end of the session is debate on a motion to amend the Senate rules to permit filibusters to be cut off and cloture imposed by vote of 60 percent of senators present and voting. A two-thirds vote is now required.

In other action:

- The House passed legislation requiring federal agencies to notify the Justice Dept. when they receive identical bids on government contracts. Businessmen bidding on contracts would be required to certify that there had been no collusion with other companies. The legislation, sponsored by Rep. Wright Patman (D-Tex.), was prompted by the anti-trust convictions of leading electrical equipment manufacturers early this year.
- The House Ways & Means Committee gave up efforts to complete action on Kennedy's tax reform proposals at this session of Congress. The committee said it hoped to report a bill "by early February, 1962."
- Scheduled for early Senate action were a pair of bills to aid migrant workers, both sponsored by Sen. Harrison A. Williams, Jr. (D-N. J.). They would provide federal grants for construction of health facilities for migrant workers and for providing education facilities for children of migrants.
- The House Government Operations Committee approved an Administration bill to set up a new Cabinet Dept. of Urban Affairs & Housing. The Senate committee earlier approved a similar bill.

THE FIRST WOMAN assistant secretary of labor, Mrs. Esther Peterson, joins the President's "Little Cabinet" at a swearing-in ceremony at the Labor Dept. In her new post she will continue as director of the Women's Bureau. Administering the oath is Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg as Sen. Frank E. Moss (D-Utah) holds the Bible. At left is Sen. Maurine Neuberger (D-Ore.). Mrs. Peterson's husband and four children are in the background.

Meany Gives Support to Legislation Ending Apprenticeship Plan Bias

portunities for the population as a whole, there obviously won't be enough for Negroes and other minority groups—either as apprentices or anywhere else," Meany pointed out.

Next, he said, "is the need for a national Fair Employment Practices Act, with full powers of enforcement."

"We take the position that if we're going to tackle this evil of job discrimination, as we should, we ought to do a thorough job of it," he added.

Meany said broad fair employment legislation "has and will continue to have the full and energetic support of the AFL-CIO."

"But if your committee prefers . . . to concentrate at this time on the more limited field of apprenticeship, we will also support you on that," he said.

Tracing labor's progress in eliminating racial barriers in employment, Meany emphasized that "the initiative in breaking down these barriers has been, in every case, exercised by the union."

"I do not know of a single case in which the employer has wanted to provide equal opportunity against the opposition of the union," he said. "On the other hand, we have a number of heartening examples of vigorous union action to wipe out discrimination in this field."

Meany cited positive anti-discrimination steps which have been taken by a number of state federations, building trades councils and international unions, but made clear his belief that "progress has been much too slow and much too limited in scope."

Pointing to the voluntary structure of the trade union movement, he said:

"Local unions do resist and sometimes even reject policies laid down by the parent organization. If the action of the local union arises from the determined conviction of its membership, it is not easy for a democratic organization, like a trade union, to reverse that action—even if it is wrong."

'More Vigorous' Role Urged

Because of these limitations, Meany said, and because of the employers' lack of interest in eliminating job bias, the AFL-CIO "has consistently urged the federal government and the state governments to take a more vigorous part in this cause."

Meany voiced reservations about a section of the Powell bill which would bar the Secretary of Labor from any form of cooperation with discriminatory apprenticeship programs, declaring the effect might be to "cut off the opportunity for reform through leadership and persuasion."

Haggerty told the subcommittee that as executive secretary of the California State AFL-CIO—the post he held before his election to the BCTD presidency—he had worked actively for passage of both a state FEPC law and legislation outlawing discrimination in apprenticeship.

He said the department's affiliated international unions fully support the AFL-CIO's constitutional ban on discriminatory practices.

'Trapped In No-Man's Land'

Declaring that "it would be fruitless to deny that discrimination exists in the building and construction industry, as it does in other industries," Haggerty expressed the opinion that the Landrum-Griffin Act has made it more difficult to translate "policy formed at the national level into acceptance or compliance at the local level . . . "

"Local unions have gotten the impression that they now have complete autonomy and need not respond to national policies," he said.

Randolph said acquisition of skills by Negro workers is essential "to their survival and progress in the new industrial world of automation."

"Because Negro workers are trapped in the 'no-man's land' of the unskilled, they constitute the hard core of joblessness, which means that these workers remain unemployed through depressions, recessions, booms, inflation and deflation," he said.

Testimony by Assistant Sec. of Labor Jerry R. Holleman and Edward E. Goshen, director of the Bureau of Apprenticeship, expressing sympathy with the aims of the Powell bill but questioning its value was later "clarified" by Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg.

Goldberg in a letter to Powell emphasized the Administration's determination to wipe out discrimination in apprentice training and pledged cooperation with the committee "in perfecting legislation" in this area.

Goldberg also denounced as "contrary to the Labor Dept.'s present policies" racial designations on apprenticeship applications in the District of Columbia. Earlier the D. C. apprenticeship director had stated that the designations were solely for internal statistical and counseling purposes and were not listed on any forms shown to employers. Goldberg ordered the practice halted and ordered an immediate investigation.

'Berlin Is Our Fight,' Meany Tells Parley

Baltimore—"Berlin is our fight, if West Berlin goes down . . . the cold war and the dictatorial might of the Kremlin are that much nearer to the United States," AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany warned at the 75th anniversary banquet of the Brewery Workers.

The free world's leadership, he emphasized, falls upon the United States "whether we will it or not." He added:

"This isn't just the fight of the Kennedy Administration.

"This isn't just the fight of organized labor.

"This is the fight of organized business and everyone else concerned. And I can assure you that the trade union movement is well aware of its responsibilities."

America's leadership, Meany made clear, does not stem from a monopoly of anti-communism. The most convinced anti-Communists, he said, "are the people behind the Iron Curtain."

"If they had a gateway from Poland and Czechoslovakia as they had from East Berlin to West Berlin, they would be streaming across the borders," he added.

Meany said the United States has the resources to maintain a high standard of living for its people and still give generously to help other nations. America's record, he noted, is one of "phenomenal progress unmatched in the history of the world."

Declaring that the trade union "is going to do its job" to help preserve freedom, Meany pointed out that "no dictator that ever lived allowed a free trade union to exist for one minute."

"Where there are free trade unions, there are no dictators," he added.

The problems facing the trade union movement today, the AFL-CIO president said, "are the problems of all America."

TWUA Asks Raise In Tariffs on Rugs

New York—The Textile Workers Union of America has urged Pres. Kennedy to raise the import duty on Wilton, velvet and tapestry carpets and rugs from 21 percent to 40 percent of value in line with a recent recommendation of the U.S. Tariff Commission.

TWUA Pres. William Pollock also urged Kennedy to negotiate agreements with such countries as Japan, Belgium and Luxembourg limiting their rug shipments to the United States "to insure the present productive level" of the domestic carpeting industry.

Labor Day Highlight: Wage-Hour Gains

2.5 Million Due to Get Pay Raises

The 1961 amendments to the federal wage-hour law will take effect Labor Day with an immediate impact on the wages and working conditions of 2.5 million low-paid workers.

In the greatest advance since the Fair Labor Standards Act was enacted in 1938, the new amendments will:

- Bring 3.6 million men and women within the protection of the law for the first time.
- Raise the pay floor of the 23.9 million workers already covered from the present $1 an hour to $1.15 immediately and to $1.25 an hour in two years.

These gains, adopted earlier this year by Congress after long pressure from organized labor, leave in greater prominence those workers in industries which remain exempt: hotel and restaurant employes, farm workers, laundry workers and others.

The federal wage-hour law had been amended in 1949 when the minimum wage was boosted to 75 cents but some 1 million workers were eliminated from coverage. In 1955 the minimum was raised to $1 an hour. The law also requires overtime pay of time and one-half for over 40 hours in a workweek.

The 1961 amendments thus represented both a raising and a broadening of protection.

The 3.6 million workers newly covered will be subject to the following schedule:

- Beginning Sept. 3, 1961, $1 an hour for all hours worked; no overtime pay.
- Beginning Sept. 3, 1963, $1 an hour and overtime pay at time and a half after 44 hours a week.
- Beginning Sept. 3, 1964, $1.15 an hour and overtime after 42 hours a week.
- Beginning Sept. 3, 1965, $1.25 an hour and overtime after 40 hours a week.

The newly protected workers include: retail and service 2.2 million; construction 1 million; seamen 100,000; suburban and interurban transit 93,000; gasoline service stations 86,000; fish processing 33,000 and telephone operators 30,000.

An additional 100,000 workers are located in firms where other workers are already covered and which do $1 million or more in annual sales.

The largest group of the newly covered workers—those in the retail and service area—are in large companies. Only those firms are covered which have $1 million or more in annual sales, exclusive of retail excise taxes, and which handle goods moving across state lines in an annual volume of $250,000 or more.

The new retail amendments, however, exclude hotels and restaurants;

UAW Asks GM to Match American Motors Benefits

PARADE QUEEN Ruby Gordon, waitress member of Hotel & Club Local 6 in New York City, will reign over the Labor Day parade up Fifth Avenue this year. The New York parade will be one of many celebrations throughout the nation to mark the 80th observance of the day set aside to honor America's workers.

Big 3 Pacts Extended, Negotiations Continue

By Eugene Kelly

Detroit—The Auto Workers are racing down the home stretch, straining for their goal of new contract benefits for 500,000 members after setting a Sept. 6 deadline for an agreement with General Motors and reaching accord on a profit-sharing settlement with American Motors Corp.

UAW Pres. Walter P. Reuther called the AMC agreement "the most significant thing we have done" in more than 20 years of auto industry bargaining. GM, he said, will have to match the benefits provided by the agreement if it wants to reach a settlement. So will Ford and Chrysler.

"We would be happy to travel" the profit-sharing route, the UAW leader said, without being "willing to strike over it." The union will insist on getting as much from GM, he said, as from AMC.

Reuther named GM specifically because the UAW executive board, meeting here to decide if a strike should be authorized against one of the Big Three, voted to make GM the target if a walkout is found necessary. It also:

- Extended Big Three contracts beyond their original Aug. 31 expiration date at the request of the U.S. Mediation & Conciliation Service. That will give the parties time to reach a peaceful settlement, Mediation Dir. William Simkin announced.
- Rejected contract offers by Ford, Chrysler and GM as "woefully inadequate."
- Warned that a strike will be called against GM, biggest profit-maker of them all, if satisfactory progress or final settlement has not been reached by 10 a. m. Wednesday.

Reuther took a hand in GM negotiations after sitting in on the final talks with AMC. The union's

Joblessness Rate Stuck Near 7%

The current stretch of high-level unemployment became the longest since the 1930s as the jobless rate held near 7 percent in August for the ninth straight month.

A decline of 598,000 in the number of unemployed was recorded between July and August, bringing the jobless total to 4.5 million, according to a summary report for the month released by Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg.

But the decline was seasonal and the adjusted rate remained at 6.9 percent, unchanged from July. It has ranged from 6.6 to 6.9 percent since last December.

The number of jobless workers was 754,000 higher than in August 1960, when the rate was 5.8 percent.

A slight increase in non-farm jobs was enough to set a new August record of 62.2 million employed and to send total employment to 68.5 million, also high for the month, the Labor Dept. report showed.

An encouraging aspect of the report was the drop of 200,000 in the number of persons out of work 15 weeks or longer bringing the figure to 1.4 million. Included in the latter figure are 900,000 persons who have been without jobs for 27 weeks or more, down 100,000 over the month.

The Labor Dept. described the improvement in long-term unemployment as "better than seasonal."

On the other hand, the number of non-farm workers on part-time rose 100,000 in August to 3.1 million.

In releasing the summary report, Goldberg predicted the unemployment rate would decline to a level of 5.5 to 6 percent by the end of the year "barring unforeseen circumstances." But that rate is still "too high" in the Administration's view, he said.

Asked what the Administration would do if high unemployment continued into 1962, Goldberg replied that Pres. Kennedy already has declared he would support in such circumstances a program of grants and loans for public works, similar to that set up in the bill proposed by Sen. Joseph S. Clark (D-Pa.).

Nation Strong, Free:

Labor Day Reflects Pride in Workers

By John Barry

America takes time out Monday, in an atmosphere of international crisis, to voice pride and confidence in the efforts of its workers to keep the nation strong and free.

Underlying the festive spirit of traditional parades, rallies and picnics on Labor Day 1961 will be a more serious theme, drawn from the cold war events in Berlin and elsewhere and expressed by Pres. Kennedy in his message to the people.

"This Labor Day again makes the vital distinction between opposing ways of life in the modern world," the President said.

"Today, as throughout our modern history, we rely upon the men and women of organized labor to help safeguard our democracy whose freedom is inseparably linked with their own."

Education Aid Killed By House Coalition

The Kennedy Administration suffered setbacks on foreign aid and school construction funds at the hands of the conservative coalition as the first session of the 86th Congress headed for its final weeks.

The coalition in the House killed finally for this session a watered-down, federal aid to education bill. Without debate it voted 242 to 169 to refuse to consider the measure reported out by the House Education & Labor Committee under special procedures that by-passed the House Rules Committee. The Rules Committee has bottled up three committee-approved education measures since July 18, forcing the compromise attempts.

Pres. Kennedy told a news conference a few hours after the defeat that the Administration would "be back next year" and that the "only one who loses today is not the Administration but

'Flag' Issue Pact Spurs Ship Peace

New York—Agreement by most major employers to maritime unions' demands for settlement of the "runaway flag" issue has strongly increased the outlook for a complete accord by Sept. 21, when an 80-day Taft-Hartley injunction expires.

Latest to settle were 24 companies with the Marine Engineers, and 15 tanker lines with the Masters, Mates & Pilots. MEBA won three-year contracts for members on 224 salt water ships, and MMP got four-year agreements covering 78 tankers.

The Seafarers narrowed the dispute over foreign flag ships to AWARD OF MERIT is presented to Oil Workers Pres. O. A. Knight by Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg for Knight's work on trade union programs in Latin America in cooperation with the Labor Dept. Watching the presentation are OCWA Sec.-Treas. T. M. McCormick (left) and OCWA Vice Pres. Elwood Swisher.

Oil Workers Propose Union for Unemployed

Chicago—A recommendation that the AFL-CIO and the Canadian Labor Congress charter unions for unemployed workers was approved by delegates to the sixth constitutional convention of the Oil, Chemical & Atomic Workers here.

The proposed union, according to the resolution, would provide direct representation of the jobless before national, state or provincial and local legislative bodies, publicize the needs of the unemployed, act for them before welfare and charitable agencies and help the idle find jobs.

The convention, in an economy move, reduced the number of union geographical districts from 16 to 9 and turned down a proposal that district directors be elected instead of appointed.

A floor fight over an effort to raise the per capita tax from the present $2 a month to $2.50 forced the convention into a concluding night session that did not wind up until 2:30 a. m.

The original proposal was defeated by a voice vote. A subsequent proposal to peg the increase at 25 cents was beaten by a roll call vote of 74,200 to 73,600. Delegates vote in terms of per capita strength, and about 250 locals were not represented at the convention.

Pres. O. A. Knight easily defeated Norman Krieger of Tonawanda, N. Y., and Al Chandler of Long Beach, Calif., in a bid for reelection. Sec.-Treas. T. M. McCormick was re-elected without opposition. Vice Presidents Elwood D. Swisher and B. J. Schaefer won new terms over the opposition of Reggie Rains of Ohio.

In other actions, the convention called for reenactment of the excess profits tax, greater safety in the atomic industry and stricter regulation of contracting out work by firms employing OCAW members.

Congress was asked to vote funds for a full-scale study of utilizing atomic energy for peacetime purposes and to repeal the Landrum-Griffin Act. The House was urged to abolish its Un-American Activities Committee.

The delegates also called for the creation of unionwide instead of company-by-company trust funds for welfare and insurance programs.

Meany Mourns Msgr. Monaghan

Rt. Rev. Msgr. John P. Monaghan, New York "labor priest" who died recently, was mourned by AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany as "the true friend of the underprivileged, the dedicated foe of exploitation, the selfless seeker of social justice."

"In the life of Msgr. Monaghan the quality of mercy was never strained," said Meany. "We are all the richer because of Msgr. Monaghan."

Msgr. Monaghan, an authority on the papel social encyclicals who had a deep interest and a wide acquaintance in organized labor, died in the rectory of St. Michael's Church, New York, of which he was pastor. He was 71.

He formerly headed the Catholic Labor Guild, was active as a speaker before labor, fraternal and civic groups, and wrote extensively for Catholic newspapers and magazines. He often spoke at Labor Day masses in St. Patrick's Cathedral, New York.

Born in Ireland, he was educated at St. Francis College, Brooklyn; St. Joseph's Seminary, Dunwoodie, N. Y.; the North American College in Rome and Fordham University. He was an instructor at Cathedral College, New York, and taught social backgrounds and English literature at Fordham.

Virginia Labor Parley Ends Hotel Bias

Norfolk, Va.—Negro and white delegates to the Virginia State AFL-CIO convention here were housed in the same hotel for the first time in the history of the organization.

All facilities of the 400-room Golden Triangle Motor Hotel, which opened in June, were open to the delegates without discrimination, including its swimming pool, dining and meeting rooms and dance floor.

Because of the segregation policies of most large hotels in the state, Negro delegates to past conventions were forced to obtain accommodations apart from convention headquarters.

About 10 percent of the more than 600 delegates and wives attending this year's three-day meeting were Negroes.

The convention's health, education and welfare committee urged state officers to work for the assurance of public school operation in all counties of the state. Prince Edward County closed its schools two years ago in an attempt to avoid court-ordered integration.

State Pres. Harold B. Boyd won reelection in a close contest with John R. MacKenzie of Roanoke. The vote was 366 to 340. Also reelected were Vice Pres. Julian Carper and Sec.-Treas. Brewster Snow. In other major actions, the delegates:

- Endorsed proposed medical care insurance for the aged financed through the social security system.
- Called for studies to help solve the employment problems caused by automation.
- Urged action by the next session of the legislature to establish a $1-an-hour minimum wage for the state.

Congratulations on achieving complete integration of the convention came from Dir. Boris Shishkin of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Civil Rights, who praised the delegates for following the traditions of George Mason and Thomas Jefferson in "carrying forward the historic fight for human rights and liberties, the fight begun by these great Virginians and great Americans."

New York—Increased organizing activity not only among skilled craftsmen but among all other workers within the industry was among proposals set for study in the closing days of the Photo Engravers' 60th annual convention here.

The 111 delegates, representing more than 17,000 members of the union, adopted a recommendation that the executive council consider establishing an office of director of organization and that local organizing committees be set up, with monthly reports to Pres. Wilfrid T. Connell.

Special attention was given to the creation of further photo industrial unions made up of those in the industry other than photo engravers. Sec.-Treas. Ben G. Schaller reported that affiliations in this group has shown a marked increase during the past year and that prospects were good for further expansion in a number of cities.

It was noted that many persons becoming members of photo industrial unions were new to labor organization. The convention adopted a recommendation that a special symbol be created for them comparable to that of the IPEU.

The convention approved Connell's action in naming two officials to participate in economic unity talks and conferences of the printing trades unions, but it reiterated the policy it set last year of opposition to federation or organic merger.

The delegates were informed that the international defense fund had reached its constitutional maximum of $500,000 and that the special assessment begun a year ago would be removed Sept. 1.

Only one change in the lineup of officers occurred through the retirement of First Vice Pres. Denis M. Burke, president of Local 1, New York, and the election in his place of Intl. Representative Edward A. Nyegaard, who was unopposed.

Miami, Fla., was selected as the site of the 1963 convention.

Last State to Unite:

New Jersey Labor Agrees on Merger

The AFL-CIO announced that agreement had been reached for a merger of the New Jersey State Federation of Labor and the New Jersey State CIO Council.

A merger convention will be held in the Sussex Ave. Armory, Newark, on Sept. 25. AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany will preside.

New Jersey is the only state where the central bodies are still separate. A merger convention was scheduled for May 1960 but was cancelled when negotiations between the two organizations collapsed.

The July meeting of the AFL-CIO Executive Council set a deadline of Oct. 1 for a New Jersey merger and the merger of the few local central bodies still separate. Unless unity in New Jersey was achieved by then, the council said, the charters of both state organizations would be lifted and a new, merged organization established under AFL-CIO direction.

The basis for the Sept. 25 meeting was a request by both state bodies that Meany decide all unresolved issues, with his decisions accepted as binding.

A merger agreement and a constitution for the merged organization have been drafted and forwarded to the state bodies.

The merger agreement provides that all present affiliates of both central bodies will automatically be eligible for representation at the merger convention, and any AFL-CIO organizations not now affiliated with either may be represented upon advance payment of three months' per capita dues.

Four executive officers will be elected—a president and secretary-treasurer, designated by the state AFL, and two executive vice presidents, chosen by the CIO. All will be full-time. An executive board will be comprised of 25 members chosen by the AFL, 12 by the CIO and two by the merged state executive board within 30 days after the convention.

The first set of officers will hold their posts until the 1964 convention, when elections will be held without regard to previous affiliation.

Rails Flout ICC, Assert Signalmen

Denver—Job losses in railroad signal departments, despite the expansion and modernization of signaling systems, triggered resolutions calling for a shorter workweek and separation pay allowances based on length of service at the 35th convention of the Railroad Signalmen.

Supporting these resolutions, delegates took the floor to describe management programs seeking to increase work loads by abolishing jobs and stretching out maintenance territories and by eliminating helper and apprentice jobs with callous disregard for present or future needs in the craft.

In the words of one delegate these practices seem to stem from a total disinterest, on the part of management, for safe and adequate maintenance programs. Interstate Commerce Commission rules and regulations governing installation and maintenance procedures for complex signaling systems are being violated every day, it was charged.

The convention went on record strongly endorsing a separate wage move, seeking wage rates commensurate with skills demanded by new techniques and technology.

Concern with management problems led the convention to adopt a strong resolution calling on the Kennedy Administration to support legislation which would give the railroads a fair shake in meeting competition from other forms of transportation.

Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg, told the delegates that the Administration is concerned with the problems in the industry.

"We are working in this Administration toward a modern and effective railroad industry that offers efficient service to its customers and stability of employment to its employes," he said. "The President has asked me to study in particular the effects on employment of recent changes in the industry, and I am undertaking that study now."

Pres. Jesse Clark, in his keynote address, touched on the merger problem.

"Proposed rail mergers," he said, "for the most part amount to the 'rich marrying the rich' at the expense of the public and the employes. We will oppose such mergers with all of our might and power and every foot of the way."

Clark, completing 15 years as head of the brotherhood, was returned to office for a three-year term without opposition.

C. J. "Chuck" Chamberlain, with over 20 years service with the Chicago & North Western Railroad signal department and more than 12 years service with the brotherhood in various offices, including grand lodge representative, was elected secretary-treasurer. He succeeds C. L. Bromley, who retired.

Dearing New Group Health Unit Director

Chicago—Dr. W. Palmer Dearing of Washington, from 1948 to 1957 deputy surgeon general of the U.S. Public Health Service, has been appointed to the newly created post of executive director of the Group Health Association of America.

The association was set up to promote prepaid group practice medical care and has had the strong support of many AFL-CIO unions. On its board of directors are several labor representatives, including Lisbeth Bamberger, assistant director of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Social Security.

Dearing, born in Palo, Ia., in 1905, attended Washington State College and received his medical degree from Harvard in 1931. After three years as an assistant in epidemiology at the Harvard School of Public Health, he joined the public health service, concluding his career there earlier this year.

During World War II he was assistant and then chief medical officer in the Office of Civil Defense and later was chief of personnel in the Health Division of the United Nations Relief & Rehabilitation Agency (UNRRA). He has recently been director of health services for the U.S. Office of Civil & Defense Mobilization.

He was one of the founders of the American Board of Preventive Medicine, is a fellow of both the American Medical Association and the American Public Health Association, and is a member of the American Society for Public Administration.

motels; movies; hospitals and nursing homes; auto dealers and farm implement dealers; schools for handicapped or gifted children; seasonal amusement operations and small stores with less than $250,000 in annual sales even if part of an enterprise with $1 million or over in annual sales.

On the exemptions concerning the hotel and restaurant industry and the so-called "seasonal" phase of the canning and food processing industry, the amendments to go into effect instruct the Secretary of Labor to study both problems and make recommendations to Congress in 1962.

In a provision covering Puerto Rico, the minimum wage there for those now protected will be increased by the same percentage as the mainland minimum. For the newly covered, the minimum pay rates will be set by the present industry committee procedure which allows for employe representation.

Organized labor struggled for 15 years to extend the coverage of the wage-hour law.

Of the 3.6 million newly covered workers, it is estimated by the Labor Dept. that some 663,000 will receive pay increases when the $1 minimum is applied to them from Sept. 3 on. Of the 23.9 million presently covered, it is estimated some 1.9 million had been earning less than $1.15 an hour and so will have their wages increased.

Cost of Living Jumps To New Record High

The nation's cost of living, after a half-year of stability, jumped to a record high in July, the government reported. The Labor Dept. said higher food prices pushed the Bureau of Labor Statistics' Consumer Price Index upward by four-tenths of 1 percent.

The CPI for July hit 128.1, a significant rise of five-tenths of 1 point over June's 127.6, the previous record high. The July figure means it now costs $12.81 for the "market basket" of goods and services which cost $10 in the 1947-49 base period.

The increase in July will mean a 1-cent per-hour-wage hike for some 300,000 workers in farm equipment plants, minor auto and auto parts firms, aircraft and missile companies and other metal-working firms. An escalator clause in their union contracts is tied to the July index.

A companion report on factory worker earnings said that "as a result of the seasonal increase in consumer prices, the buying power of factory workers' earnings was reduced by about one-half percent over the month." Spendable earnings—or "take-home" pay—were almost unchanged between June and July, the report noted.

Robert J. Myers, deputy commissioner of labor statistics, viewed the July jump as "not a very remarkable development."

Prices had risen an average of three-tenths of 1 percent in July for the past 10 years, he said; therefore, the five-tenths of a point hike was not so unusual. However, he noted the small rise in June and the larger rise in July did upset the relative price stability which had existed since late last year.

The index had fluctuated between 127.4 and 127.5 from November to May, then edged to a new high of 127.6 in June.

Half the increase in July was attributed to usual summer price boosts for fresh fruits and vegetables. These pushed the food group index to a new all-time high, though the index for food purchased for home consumption was still below the record high set in mid-1958 because of "substantially lower" current prices for meats and poultry, the report said.

Myers observed that the business recovery was behind some price increases. He added, though, there was no evidence of an inflationary trend. He foresaw record-level prices for August, with another rise ahead in September.

The report on factory worker earnings showed that spendable earnings—after the deduction of federal income and social security taxes—were $83.54 for a worker with three dependents and $75.93 for a worker without dependents. This represented a drop of about 20 cents over the month, but it still was at about the postwar high.

FEIA Pact Ends Dispute With Airline

The Flight Engineers have signed an 18-month contract with National Airlines calling for wages of $1,658 a month for DC-8 jet engineers, $1,336 on jet Electras, and increased scales also for engineers on piston-type planes.

FEIA Pres. Ronald A. Brown said the new agreement gives National's 125 flight engineers the "highest pay scales in the airline industry" and calls for the "continued use by National of the mechanical specialist-flight engineer."

The new scales are retroactive to July 1 and will be in effect until Jan. 1, 1963. They represent an increase of $213 a month for DC-8 engineers and $190 for those flying Electras. Salary scales for piston operations are commensurate with the jet-plane increases, the union said.

National has announced that it will continue to fly jet planes with a crew of two pilots and one flight engineer between Miami and New York.

National was one of seven lines involved in a walkout of flight engineers last February. A presidential fact-finding commission headed by Prof. Nathan Feinsinger of the University of Wisconsin has made one report to Pres. Kennedy and was scheduled to submit another soon.

Royal York Peace Talks Break Down

Toronto—Negotiations to settle the four-month strike of the Hotel & Club Employes against the Royal York Hotel have collapsed again and the strikers said they will ask other unions to help prevent supervisory employes from delivering food supplies to the hotel.

The latest talks ended as the hotel refused to change its offer—a raise of 2.5 cents an hour, and recall of strikers if and when jobs are available. This would scrap the seniority system at the Royal York, which has operated with 800 strikebreakers.

Four major functions scheduled for the hotel have been canceled until the strike is settled, and the Toronto Musicians Association said it may put 10 other Canadian Pacific Railway hotels on its unfair list because CR has advertised for nonunion musicians to play at the Royal York.

Strikers' morale got a boost when the lord mayor of Bristol, Alderman Charles Smith, member of the Letter Carriers in England, refused to enter the hotel.

TWUA Wins Vote At 8th Cone Mill

Salisbury, N. C.—The Textile Workers Union of America has won a National Labor Relations Board victory at Cone Mill here making it the eighth of the firm's mills to go union.

The NLRB vote went 310 TWUA, 234 no union and a handful of ballots voided or challenged.

U.S. Labor Relations Hearings Scheduled

Pres. Kennedy's task force on employe-management relations in the federal service will open a series of public hearings Sept. 13-14 in Washington.

Sessions also are scheduled for New York and Dallas, Sept. 19; Chicago and Denver, Sept. 21, and Atlanta and San Francisco, Sept. 25.

Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg, chairman of the group, said it would welcome views of citizens and organizations on such matters as the right of federal employes to join unions, standards for recognizing such unions, and participation of employes and their representatives in grievances and appeals.

Industry Gain Spurs TWUA Wage Claim

Monticello, N. Y.—Recent improvement in the fortunes of the textile industry should be reflected in higher wages and fringe benefits to bring labor standards closer to those of other industries, the Textile Workers Union of America has declared.

At its quarterly meeting here, the TWUA's executive council called textile pay and fringes "inadequate" and urged employers to take corrective steps. The council announced that the union would launch a campaign for wage increases throughout the industry.

A resolution adopted by the 22-man body noted that the industry has registered a substantial gain since the first of the year; prices are beginning to climb, and manhour output is rising at the rate of 4.5 percent.

"The immediate prospect is for continuing improvement," the resolution said. It noted that the industry will profit from the government's new multilateral agreement limiting imports of textile fabrics from low-wage countries.

Union employers also will benefit from the increase in the federal minimum wage to $1.15 an hour on Sept. 3, the council observed. This, it said, will reduce the competitive advantage of low-wage companies.

In other actions, the executive council:

- Expressed appreciation to Gov. Terry Sanford of North Carolina for paroling eight TWUA members imprisoned in the Henderson "conspiracy" case, but urged him to "blend his action of clemency with a full measure of justice by granting full pardons to each of these unjustly convicted men."
- Called for the centralization of the U.S. Employment Service "to match men and skills with job openings" in attacking the unemployment problem.

IBEW Issues New Charter In Baltimore

Baltimore—The Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers has established a new local here to replace Local 28, whose charter was revoked recently because it engaged in a strike without obtaining the approval of the IBEW through its international president.

IBEW Vice Pres. H. B. Blankenship of Cincinnati, whose region includes Maryland, presented the charter to Local 24 at a meeting in the Lord Baltimore Hotel.

With 44 charter members present, the new local then elected Allen K. Fuller temporary business manager and Philip T. Vail, an IBEW member for 43 years, as temporary president.

Also present were top officers of other locals in the union's Middle Atlantic region, including William G. Shord, business manager of Local 5, Pittsburgh; Robert McAlwee, business manager of Local 26, Washington; Louis V. Vehling, business manager of Local 52, Newark; William J. Middleton, business manager of Local 98, Philadelphia, and Pat Damiani, business manager of Local 363, Spring Valley, N. Y.

The unauthorized strike which resulted in the revocation of Local 28's charter was against the Baltimore Electrical Contractors.

The IBEW said the walkout violated the union's constitution, which directs that no strike may be called without the approval of the international through its president. The union noted that the National Industrial Conference Board, in a study of all union constitutions, found the same requirement in more than 90 percent of the documents.

Local 28 made a number of attempts in the federal courts to block revocation of its charter and to prevent the IBEW from chartering a new local in its place.

New Pamphlet Out On Automation

Automation's benefits will not come automatically and its problems are not insoluble.

A new AFL-CIO pamphlet, "Automation," discusses in simple terms the impact and the challenge of a changing technology.

A single copy of the pamphlet, AFL-CIO Publication No. 124, is available free. Up to 100 copies, the price is 3 cents each; 100 copies is $2.50. Orders should be sent to Pamphlet Div., AFL-CIO Dept. of Publications, 815 Sixteenth St., N.W., Washington 6, D. C. Checks should be made payable to William F. Nation Strong, Free: counterpart in Communist countries.

"While America's great abundance is widely shared by ordinary American citizens," Goldberg observed, "the peoples of the Soviet Union must content themselves with their government's distant promises of future prosperity."

The theme was echoed in the Industrial Union Dept.'s pledge of solidarity "to those free workers of Berlin and the West who today stand on the most critical battle-fronts against tyranny."

It was expressed in the Labor Day message of Pres. C. J. Haggerty of the Building & Construction Trades Dept., who praised affiliates and members for their contribution to the expansion of the country's missile-site network, declaring: "We will join with all labor . . . in dedicating ourselves to building the future of our country."

Underscored by McNamara

It was underscored by Defense Sec. Robert S. McNamara, who lauded "the skill and contribution of American workers to the strengthening of our nation's security and the security of the free world."

It will be carried down Fifth Avenue in New York City by nearly 200,000 marchers in the biggest Labor Day parade of them all, demonstrating "free labor's strength and its dedication to American ideals."

It will be paraded on the main streets of hundreds of smaller communities, like Decatur, Ill., where the banner will be "Unions for America and America for the World."

It will be voiced by labor and public officials at Detroit's giant annual rally in Cadillac Square, at the Common in Worcester, Mass., at the Crown Point Fair Grounds in Lake County, Ind., at a statewide union picnic in Lincoln, R. I., and at other Labor Day celebrations from coast to coast.

Radio Speeches Set

Radio networks will carry to the entire country the messages of AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler, Vice Pres. Walter P. Reuther and Vice Pres. George M. Harrison.

From abroad have come the greetings of David A. Morse, director general of the Intl. Labor Organization in Geneva, who noted that Labor Day this year "has particular significance in that it reminds us amid rising anxieties in many parts of the world of the urgent need to advance the welfare of working people everywhere."

In most communities the Labor Day observance will kick off Union Label Week, designated by the last conventions of the AFL-CIO and its Union Label & Service Trades Dept. for Sept. 4-10.

Foremost among the traditional event of the holiday will occur in Pennsauken Township, N. J., just outside Camden. There union officials will continue their custom of laying a wreath at the grave of Peter J. McGuire, the leader of the Carpenters and co-founder of the AFL whose call for "a general holiday for the laboring classes" led to the first Labor Day observance in 1882.

Religions Observances

All religious faiths will mark the day. Ministers and rabbis, at services over the weekend, will center their sermons on labor's role in society. Traditional among Roman Catholics are the Labor Day mass first celebrated in Chicago's Cathedral and since spread to other cities.

To all who observe the holiday, in whatever manner, AFL-CIO stressed its plea for safety. Haggerty, chairman of the 1961 Labor Day Safety Campaign, urged:

"Let's remember the spirit and purpose of labor's own holiday by putting an end to the slaughter on the highways."

Kennedy's Labor Day Message:

'Labor...The Reward and the Way'

WE COMMEMORATE TODAY achievement in human welfare—the economic and social protections our working people enjoy, the wide distribution of our wealth, the access to advancement and education, the strength of our labor organizations, the exercise of individual decision in guiding our institutions.

These are crucial issues in most of the world's societies, especially those with new political identities and modernizing economies. The root of genuine social revolution lies deep in the desire for a life better in material terms and—we believe—freer in spiritual terms.

Thus, this Labor Day again makes the vital distinction between opposing ways of life in the modern world. We celebrate the labor of our people precisely because we believe it to be an essential to man's dignity, performed freely and in good conscience, and commanding by right a just reward. We look upon man's toil as an expression of individual personality and will, not a commodity to be exploited for the benefit of a state or ruling political party. Tyranny deprives a man of the freedom and joy of his work.

These beliefs underlie our system of self-government in economic life. Our free and democratic labor movement is based upon the advancement of individual dignity. Today, as throughout our modern history, we rely upon the men and women of organized labor to help safeguard our democracy whose freedom is inseparably linked with their own.

Now these beliefs and this system face a stern test of history.

Here in America, technological change is altering the structure of industrial production and the content of jobs across a broad range of occupations. Old skills are rapidly outmoded. The demand for new skills outreaches the supply.

It is clear that the maintenance of a fully competent labor force requires constant reinvestment in skills so that greater job opportunity, resulting from an expanded economic life, can be capitalized upon.

Especially needful of attention is the situation of the older person who becomes unemployed and finds no market for his ability and the young man or woman who faces a competitive labor force without adequate training.

Perhaps in no other area of our national life is the need to realize our ideal so clearly an economic necessity as in the attainment of genuine equality of opportunity for all. We serve ourselves and the stature of freedom throughout the world by serving our moral commitment to equality. Our government, in its own employment policies, will hold to this commitment and it must predominate in the personnel and membership policies of all organizations whose power or activities affect the public interest.

Full employment through wider opportunity for the occupationally displaced and the minority group member rests ultimately, as do all of our ambitions for higher economic life, upon the ability of the economy to grow. This Labor Day we can find satisfaction that our government, this Administration and the Congress, have been successful in enacting legislation such as the Temporary Extended Unemployment Compensation Act, the new Minimum Wage law, the Area Redevelopment Act, improved Social Security, and the Housing Act that contributes to the economic welfare of all of our people. The guideposts to the further and greater progress we seek are these:

Wage and price policies that contribute to expansion without impairing our competitive posture in world markets; great productivity from a wise use of scientific discovery and the exertion of dedicated individual effort; the proper utilization of increased resources for the fulfillment of urgent national needs; statesmanship in collective bargaining that acknowledges the public interest.

We can well earn what we well need in America.

In setting the goal of our society at the realization of human dignity, we reach for the highest of stars and seek the outer limits of human capability. In this, now as always the new world for the spirit, the labor of free men is both the reward and the way.

Data for Negotiators Outlined in Article

The local union negotiator, representing the men and women in his shop as he sits across the table from management, isn't expected to be a trained economist. But he is expected to have facts at hand to back up his demands for higher pay, better working conditions or improved fringe benefits.

Collective Bargaining Report, a feature of the AFL-CIO's monthly magazine, the American Federationist—takes up the problem of the type of data needed and where it can be obtained.

A union negotiator, the article prepared by the AFL-CIO Dept. of Research points out, should get ready for collective bargaining by familiarizing himself with the principal economic data in these areas:

- Wage and benefit trends, including results of recent bargaining settlements nationally, in the industry and locally; current levels of wage rates for similar work.
- Economic conditions generally and in the particular industry or company.
- Changes in the cost of living.
- Family needs for reasonable standards of living.
- Changes in productivity.
- Profits.

Much of the article, in the August issue of the Federationist, deals with the sources of economic data.

First, of course, is the headquarters of the national or international union which normally would have the most complete data on recent wage settlements in the industry or trade.

Other potential sources, including government agencies, labor and business publications, libraries and commercial services, are described and analyzed. Special emphasis is given to the occupational wage surveys of the Labor Dept.'s Bureau of Labor Statistics.

The article has a word of caution, noting:

"The danger is that an officer may rely too heavily on economic arguments and then get lost or misled in an economic or statistical debate which may stray far from the merits of the union position. Negotiations should not be conducted on the basis of who can put together the most impressive looking or greatest quantity of data."

The article also emphasizes that "economic facts . . . are not a substitute for skilled leadership and strong membership."

"An employer determined to refuse a reasonable wage increase may not change his mind no matter how strong an economic case a union may make," it says. "But given a strong union, and particularly where management is reasonable, information on economic factors facilitates sound settlements."

Miami Strike Funds Sought By Pressmen

Miami—The Printing Pressmen have called on every member to contribute financially to the support of 100 members of Miami Local 46 who have been on strike since Aug. 1 against the Miami Herald.

IPPAU Pres. Anthony J. DeAndrade said the men walked out after working nearly 40 days without a contract and after the union's scale committee had held 29 unsuccessful meetings with management of the John S. Knight chain newspaper.

Token picket lines were set up at other Knight newspapers in Akron, O., Charlotte, N. C., and Detroit. Pressmen at the Detroit Free Press, only morning daily in Michigan, refused to cross the picket line for four days but were forced back to work when a federal judge issued a temporary injunction after a "secondary boycott" complaint was issued by the National Labor Relations Board.

DeAndrade said in the August issue of the American Pressman that it never has been the union's policy to "engage in industrial warfare" but that the Miami publisher refused arbitration and refused to compromise differences over a new contract.

The union hopes to prosecute the strike to a successful conclusion, DeAndrade wrote, "to prevent the establishment of working conditions below the standards achieved by printing trades unions" over a 75-year period.

The union's defense fund was depleted by the long strike against two Portland, Ore., newspapers, and cannot disburse strike funds again for several months, he said.

T. W. Gleason Named ILA Vice President

New York—Thomas W. Gleason, an organizer and negotiator for the Longshoremen, has been named executive vice president of the union at a meeting of the executive council here.

Gleason said the ILA is facing critical times due to the inroads of automation and that this would be one of his primary concerns in future negotiations with employers.

Successes Overshadowed:

Concern Over Jobs Marks Labor Day 1961

Holiday Finds Workers Uneasy Despite Gains

By Harry Conn

Job insecurity and unemployment have become the greatest concerns of trade unionists since Labor Day 1960.

These problems have been present since 1958, but month by month they seem to have grown almost to Frankenstein-monster dimensions, overshadowing some major trade union successes enjoyed during last year, especially in the political and legislative fields.

The election of John F. Kennedy as President and Lyndon B. Johnson as Vice President provided ample proof that trade union political action can be effective.

The new President turned to organized labor to help him fill many important positions in his New Frontier. His Secretary of Labor, Arthur J. Goldberg, was a top labor lawyer. And in the Labor Dept. many of his top official staff members—Jerry Holleman, George L-P Weaver, Esther Peterson, Charles Donahue—came from organized labor. Still more trade unionists went into Commerce, State, Defense and other departments and agencies in government.

At the same time, a labor-backed President in the White House helped to produce some domestic legislation that had not been possible during the eight years that Pres. Eisenhower was chief executive. These included minimum wage, housing, distressed area relief—all high on labor's priority list—in addition to other vitally needed measures.

The long Labor Day weekend will mean just one more day without work, however, for more than 5 million workers this year. For millions of others, knowing that automation and technological change are destined for their plants, it will be a period of uneasiness.

For those who deal in statistics the future does not look too encouraging. The American economy will have to run fast merely to stand still. The Dept. of Labor estimates that 1.25 million jobs will disappear due to automation each year and the labor force will increase by another 1.25 million.

2.5 Million New Jobs a Year

The critical question facing American workers and the Kennedy Administration is this: Where will we find 2.5 million new jobs each year?

What deeply concerns trade unionists in this picture is the widespread belief that we are out of the most recent recession with no real prospect that unemployment will be materially reduced in the near future.

There may be many other explanations for joblessness—runaway shops, unfair competition, obsolete products, foreign imports—but the overriding reason seems to be automation. Nearly every industry has felt its impact. Some examples:

- In office work, Computer Services, Inc., estimates that 100,000 computer installations will be made in 1961. Based on studies of the Labor Dept.'s Bureau of Labor Statistics, each installation will affect 140 jobs. This means that 1.4 million jobs would be hit by computers in 1961.
- The electrical industry, despite a boom in computer production, saw a decline of employment of 10 percent between 1953 and 1961. At the same time, production increased 21 percent.
- In the last year meat production was up one percentage point but the total number of workers dropped from 191,000 to 161,000.
- In the 10 years between 1950 and 1960 there was little change in steel production, but employment dropped 80,000.
- Railroad employment reached the lowest point in modern history during the latter part of 1960.

The Kennedy Administration has been successful in winning support for a number of proposals to help meet the problem, but in the opinion of trade union leaders, the program has been too moderate and they have urged stronger measures. Among these are tax reductions to aid purchasing power and all-out public works.

The year since last Labor Day saw other significant developments. These included:

POLITICAL ACTION—The effectiveness of trade union political action in the 1960 elections played an important role in the election of John F. Kennedy as President and Lyndon B. Johnson as Vice President. The large, industrial states provided the necessary margins in a close contest. Union activity received important credit for helping to make this possible. Even those most critical of trade unionism have acknowledged that the political programs of organized labor produced results.

LEGISLATION—Although there were major bills backed by organized labor which were not passed by Congress, more union-supported measures were passed by the first session of the 87th Congress and signed into law than at any time since the New Deal days.

COLLECTIVE BARGAINING—The size of most settlements during the period between Labor Day 1960 to Labor Day 1961 will average increases of 3 to 5 percent plus liberalization of various fringe benefits. In most contract negotiations the need for more job security has frequently dominated the discussions. This was particularly true in the auto, electrical manufacturing and aircraft negotiations. Major negotiations took place in these industries plus apparel, communications, farm equipment, maritime, meat packing, oil, paper, railroad, rubber and textiles.

One of the most significant developments in the collective bargaining field was the agreement of the operating railroad unions and the carriers to present their dispute over work rules to a presidential commission.

STRIKES—The maritime strike, affecting some 80,000 unionized seamen, was the most publicized strike during the last year. Pres. Kennedy reluctantly invoked the Taft-Hartley 80-day injunction which expires Sept. 21. Meanwhile, the dominating issue is the right of the unions to organize American runaway ships flying foreign flags of convenience to escape unionization, decent wages and taxes.

The Textile Workers Union of America called off its two-year strike against the Harriet-Henderson Cotton Mills, Henderson, N. C. Later Gov. Terry Sanford commuted the sentences of seven strikers who were serving prison terms for alleged conspiracy to dynamite the plant. The seven, including Vice Pres. Boyd Payton, were paroled.

Trade unionists will celebrate their Labor Day weekend in many ways. Close to 200,000 in New York City will march in a Labor Day parade, as will thousands more in other cities. Others will enjoy picnics, parties or a visit to a lake or ocean beach. (PAI)

AFL-CIO Broadens Views:

Trade Union Horizons Expand To Take in World's New Nations

By Alexander Uhl

Rarely has organized labor in the United States been as deeply concerned over the course the world is taking as it is at this Labor Day celebration time. American relations with the United Nations; the new aggressive turn of the Soviet Union in its drive for world power; the emergence for the first time of a Communist-dominated government in Latin America—the Castro dictatorship in Cuba; the need for organizing a free labor movement among the young nations of Africa; the whole problem of American security, threatened as it has seldom been before in an age when nuclear weapons may literally destroy whole nations if not the world itself.

Over the year, the AFL-CIO has made a number of moves and taken strong positions on many matters concerned with the fight on Communism.

At its summer meetings the AFL-CIO Executive Council issued an unusually strong statement bluntly declaring that the Berlin crisis held within it "the gravest source of danger of a world war."

Declaring that the international crisis has been "acutely aggravated in recent months," the Executive Council accused the Soviet Union of arming and inciting regimes hostile to the United States, such as the Castro regime in Cuba, and of fostering so-called wars of liberation.

It also accused the Communists of seeking to destroy the effectiveness of the United Nations and of thwarting real efforts toward nuclear control and disarmament.

The council strongly supported a firm position by Pres. Kennedy in the Berlin crisis and called on him for full-scale efforts to rally the support of our allies against any Communist aggression. A resumption of atomic testing in the interest of our own national security was suggested as a possibility.

Kennedy Supported

Special concern also was shown by the council in its statement on inter-American relations not only with reference to Communist penetration, but the presence of right-wing dictatorships in other countries such as the Dominican Republic. It expressed unreserved support for Kennedy's pledges that the United States "would not abandon Cuba to Communism."

In addition to those warning statements, the AFL-CIO has been developing strong programs of its own. It seeks establishment of free labor movements in Latin American countries where they have been destroyed and in building free labor movements in the emerging African countries where a vast amount of education remains to be done.

An important step was the Executive Council decision to help establish a fund or foundation for the development of union leadership in Latin America.

This calls for creation of a non-profit, tax-exempt foundation to be supported by the AFL-CIO together with other interested groups and individuals. Its purpose would be to bring young Latin American labor leaders to the United States, provide educational courses for them and send them back to their native lands to train their own people in democratic unionism.

The death of Dictator Rafael Trujillo has opened the way to possible establishment of a democracy in the Dominican Republic. Should that come about trained union leaders will be needed and the AFL-CIO has begun a program directed toward that end. A training program for Dominican trade unionists has been set up and already eight have been selected to attend classes at the Labor Relations Institute of the University of Puerto Rico.

Exiles, they are former workers in such industries as sugar, transportation, communications and stevedoring. The purpose of the program is "to plan in advance for building a genuine, democratic labor movement in the Dominican Republic as soon as circumstances permit."

The AFL-CIO has shown keen interest also in helping to develop free and democratic labor movements in the new nations of Africa. These are considered of the highest importance since the new African nations which have entered the United Nations may some day hold the balance of power. When that day comes, the AFL-CIO believes it essential that they be friendly to the United States and well-trained in western freedom and tradition.

To this end, the AFL-CIO and the Israel Federation of Labor, Histadrut, are generously supporting a joint educational effort in Tel Aviv. This is providing for the education, especially in labor affairs, of young Africans who are expected to become the backbone of future labor leadership in their countries. The AFL-CIO and Histadrut believe that the school can serve as liaison between Africa and the western world.

The AFL-CIO also is helping to support other labor educational activities in Africa. Only recently the ICFTU African Labor College was opened in Kampala, Uganda, the first permanent trade union college on the African continent. The school is supported by the voluntary contributions of trade unionists everywhere in the free world.

As part of the African program six African needle workers have been brought to the United States by the AFL-CIO for six months of intensive training in their own trades and in trade unionism. Five weeks were spent at the Ladies' Garment Workers Training Institute in New York. On-the-job training is part of the curriculum which was drawn up in cooperation with the AFL-CIO Dept. of Intl. Affairs. The workers came from Nigeria, Lagos, Northern Rhodesia, Nairobi, Southern Rhodesia and Tanganyika—once far away, mysterious African countries, but now part and parcel of the modern world and of the modern labor movement.

Another aspect of organized labor's determination to help in every practical way has been the employment of African students in the United States by labor unions in order to help them with their studies. One example is that of the Clothing Workers who hired four African workers for the summer. They came from Kenya, East Africa, and are students in American universities preparing to return to Africa to work with the labor movement there. (PAI)

Labor Day 1961

TWO EVENTS that will be celebrated in connection with Labor Day this year provide important insight into the holiday and its meaning to the nation.

The annual holiday dedicated to the American worker will mark the effective date for an immediate wage increase for over 2.5 million workers who will be brought under coverage of the Wage-Hour Act for the first time or will receive for the first time the new hourly minimum of $1.15.

The holiday weekend will mark also the issuance of a special stamp at a White House ceremony to commemorate the 50th anniversary of the signing of the first state workmen's compensation law.

The social concepts of minimum wages and financial and medical care for a worker injured on the job are now so widely accepted that the initial fight for their passage and the continuing struggle to improve them are all but forgotten.

The struggle for minimum wages and hours and a wide-ranging social insurance program was initiated by the American trade union movement. It has been the only major force in American society continuously concerned with this type of legislation at the state and federal level—legislation that increases living standards and provides protection for millions of workers, many of whom are not trade union members.

The labor movement's continuing campaigns for legislation in the national interest grows out of the worker's natural desire for security on the job, a decent standard of living, education and equal opportunity, dignity and the chance to participate in society as a respected citizen.

LABOR DAY IS a day on which working people look back over the past with the injustices, failures and successes that marked the building of the trade union movement. It is a day of rededication to the basic concepts of justice, brotherhood and equality. It is a day to take a brief pause before renewing the struggle, for there is no stopping or resting.

Nearly half a century ago Samuel Gompers said the working people "will never stop in their efforts to obtain a better life for themselves, for their wives, for their children and for all humanity. The object is to obtain complete social justice."

On Labor Day 1961 it is appropriate to restate the philosophy that holds that whenever there is a conflict between human rights and property rights labor unqualifiedly supports human rights.

This philosophy holds also that so long as our government is controlled by the people—and labor knows that free trade unions cannot exist except under a democratic form of government—to fear the participation of government in establishing programs to serve all America is to fear the people.

Labor does not accept the proposition that the welfare of the owners of property is inevitably equivalent to the welfare of the nation. Business prosperity is essential to our economy but the soundest basis for business prosperity is the prosperity of the people as a whole.

IN THE CURRENT PERIOD of world tension organized labor has renewed its pledge to keep the nation strong and free; for the fight for freedom cannot be isolated, it is the fight of free men everywhere.

To this battle for world peace and freedom the American trade union movement will bring the same dedication that it has brought to previous world crises that threatened peace and freedom, the same dedication that it has brought to the job of making America free and strong.

Committee Chairman:

Obscure South Dakota Senator Father of First Labor Day Law

CARPENTER PETER McGUIRE was the "Father of Labor Day" but to an obscure South Dakota senator goes the credit for making it a legal national holiday.

The year was 1894. The senator was James Henderson Kyle. He was a Congregational minister by avocation. And in a few short weeks, without any prior political activity to his credit, he was, between November and March, elevated from his ministry into the Senate.

He went to South Dakota in 1885 as minister to the people of Iroquois and Aberdeen. He went from his home in South Dakota to the Senate in Washington in 1891 as neither Democrat nor Republican, but as an Independent, although he is credited—or charged—with aligning himself with the Democratic Party on most of the issues of the day.

During his first term he became chairman of the Senate Committee on Education & Labor where he was able to further the very things which he had advocated in a Fourth of July speech in 1890 in Aberdeen—the speech which actually launched his political career.

Kyle was a man of few speeches, but when he did speak, he had something to say. And it was this senator from a new and small agrarian state who proposed legislation making Labor Day a national holiday.

The idea that a day be set apart for the laboring people was first made public by a resolution at a meeting of the New York City Central Labor Union on May 8, 1882, when Peter J. McGuire, then general secretary of the Brotherhood of Carpenters & Joiners and later vice president of the American Federation of Labor, suggested the first Monday in September be made the day to pay tribute to American industry.

McGuire's reasoning behind the timing was: "It would come at the most pleasant season of the year, nearly midway between the Fourth of July and Thanksgiving, and would fill a wide gap in the chronology of legal holidays."

The first Labor Day observance was not held on the first Monday in September; instead, it was on Tuesday, Sept. 5, 1882, when about 10,000 union members marched up Broadway in New York City and then spent the remainder of the day in Elm Park at all sorts of amusements.

The next Labor Day was on a Wednesday, Sept. 5, 1883, and the parade was reported as an "imposing demonstration of the Central Labor Union."

In 1884, Central Labor Union decided to hold the celebration on the first Monday in September and central labor bodies in other cities were urged to celebrate that day as a universal holiday for workingmen.

The AFL unanimously adopted a resolution on Oct. 7, 1884, that the first Monday in September of each year be set apart as a laborers' national holiday, and recommended its observance by all wage workers,

IN THE FOLLOWING YEARS, municipal ordinances officially recognized Labor Day. State legislative recognition was developed only as a result of a campaign conducted by organized labor, and 23 states had enacted Labor Day laws by the end of 1893.

Oregon was first, by passage of an original law on Feb. 21, 1887, designating Labor Day as the first Saturday of June. This was changed to the first Monday in September in February 1893 so as to conform with the general accepted scheme.

Back in 1886, the AFL convention recommended that Labor Day on the first Monday in September should be observed "until it shall be as uncommon for a man to work on that day as on Independence Day.

Interest in setting aside a day for honoring the workers of America, and AFL efforts for national recognition of the day, resulted in Kyle's introduction of a bill in the Senate on Aug. 28, 1893.

The bill was introduced during a special session of the 53d Congress which Pres. Grover Cleveland had called so that the serious financial question confronting the country might be considered.

On June 27, the bill was enrolled in both houses and duly signed by the Speaker, Charles F. Crisp, of Georgia, and the Vice President. Next and finally, on June 29, 1894, it was announced by O. L. Prudent, one of Cleveland's secretaries, that "the President on the 28th instant approved and signed the act—S. 730—making Labor Day a legal holiday." By 1900, Labor Day was officially recognized by most states. Not until 1923 did the last state, Wyoming, fall into line.

Samuel Gompers, when reporting to the 1894 AFL convention, stated:

"National Labor Day—It affords me pleasure to be able to report that the demand made by the American Federation of Labor for making the first Monday in September of each year a legal holiday passed Congress and was made a law on June 28, 1894!" (PAI)

Morgan Says:

Simple Serenity of U. S. West Commended to World Leaders

By Edward P. Morgan

(This column is excerpted from the nightly broadcasts of Edward P. Morgan, ABC commentator sponsored by the AFL-CIO. Listen to Morgan over the ABC network Monday through Friday at 7 p. m., EDT.)

I THINK I HAVE DISCOVERED the place where the next summit meeting should be held. It is a spacious, flat piece of high ground in western Wyoming best known to old-timers as the Jackson Hole country. It may be better known to tourists and other refugees from the frenetic tempo of urban living as Grand Teton National Park, which takes its name from a range of mountains of almost matchless grandeur on its sunset rim. My hunch—or perhaps it is no more than a wistful hope—is that the majesty of the towering Tetons will instill, at least a trickle of awe in the summit conferees, causing both sides of the table to realize that there is something greater in the solar system than the puny but often poisonously pushy ambitions of men.

Morgan

There is another parallel reason for my choice. If, despite the exhilarating locale, the summitteers should freeze their minuet in customary deadlock and resume their threats and counter threats of mutual nuclear annihilation, nature has another prop in the neighborhood that might well sober them. If they would cross the Snake River and scale the Teton Pass over into Idaho they would soon arrive at an area of utter devastation called the Craters of the Moon. By a stroke of irony, one of the federal government's peaceful atomic projects is located on the edge of this vast lava desert.

There is a symbolism here which it would be difficult for the summit participants not to catch. These thousands of acres of ashes and clinkers have been made into a national monument, preserving a demonstration of the earth's own destructive force dating back some 15 million years. The lesson of this spooky wasteland is, surely, that it is rather pointless to compete with the destructiveness of natural forces, however lethal and extensive the havoc that man can now contrive.

There are skeptics who will say that trying to get world leaders back to nature is a worthless exercise, that nothing really can bring them to a more contemplative attitude because man-made circumstances have pushed them beyond the island of reflectiveness and contemplation into a treacherous stream of reflex actions—of force and the threat of force in the name of sovereignty, national pride or—bitterest of paradoxes—survival. This argument may be all too valid but it is interesting to note that ordinary people, apparently, have not yet accepted it, or at least are trying—in a way that may be both instructive and inspiring—to reject it.

BY THE MILLIONS, Americans are seeking the simple serenity of what wild open spaces there are left. For one of the most rewarding of these national parks, Grand Teton, the country, interestingly enough, has the Rockefeller family largely to thank. Thirty-five years ago, John D. Rockefeller, Jr., began buying up land in the broad and lovely valley above Jackson Hole as a conservation measure and in 1950 more than 33,000 acres of this choice alpine expanse—more than a tenth of the area of the park itself—was presented to the government for the public's enjoyment. The public has accepted with almost overwhelming pleasure. For each of the past four seasons, Grand Teton National Park has had 1.5 million visitors and this year may well break the record.

In his office in Moose, Wyo., Chief Park Ranger Russell E. Dickenson tried to put his finger on the reasons for the extraordinary popularity of the playground in his charge. The charm of it, he told me, must have something to do with the arrangement of the mountains, rearing above people in the valley with no foothills in between. He would not try to prove that the migraine turbulence of world conditions had spurred tourists to reach out in such persistent volume for the solace of streams and trees and the trout and field mice, the elk and bald eagles that live among them. The asphalt jungles that most cities have become, monotonously punctuated by winking signs and glaring stoplights, can make fugitives of harassed urbanites almost as well as the threat of war. Yet there seems to be a deep motivation here. People try to get closer to the mountains, Ranger Dickenson said. Then he revealed what was, to me, a stunning phenomenon: In the last three years camping has almost literally exploded on Grand Teton.

Campers—not trailer or motel itinerants but campers-out—have virtually quadrupled. Whether driving Cadillacs or Volkswagens, people are heading for the high timber with bed rolls and sleeping blankets, more intent on bivouacing under the stars than in an air-conditioned hillside Hilton. Shades of Lewis and Clark, whose expeditions passed this way more than a century ago!

There may just be a moral here concealed somewhere between the pine needles and the Indian paintbrush although I'm not quite sure I know what it is. With super highways slicing across the land, motorists are fleeing them for the rugged quiet of forest trails. With civilization becoming bewilderingly efficient and the world of governments quivering with tension, people are seeking their private relief from strain nearer the earth and sky.

Senators Restate U.S. Opposition To Admitting Red China to UN

THE UNITED STATES should not accept the admission of Red China to the United Nations as inevitable but should make every effort to persuade other nations to vote against it.

Sen. Paul Douglas (D-Ill.) and Sen. Leverett Saltonstall (R-Mass.) took this stand in an interview on Washington Reports to the People, AFL-CIO public service educational program, heard on 450 radio stations.

"Certainly we are not going to go down with our tail between our legs," Saltonstall said.

In answer to the question, "Can we ignore the existence of Red China?" Douglas said:

"Of course, Red China exists. It has maintained itself in power now for 12 years as a nation of 600 million people. But that's not the issue. The issue is whether we shall support the admission of Red China to the United Nations and whether the U.S. should recognize Red China. I am opposed to both steps."

The issue is expected to arise in the current session of the UN. The last vote was 42-34, against, Douglas said, with 22 abstentions, as compared with 42-8 against previously, both on consideration of the question. He said it has been expected that most of the 22 will vote for admission the next time.

QUERIED ON THE POINT that recognition of a regime has not in the past meant approval, Saltonstall said that the situation is different in the case of Communist China because it has been "trying to shoot itself into the UN."

Attempts to get agreements on Formosa, the return of prisoners and other such matters as non-aggression in neighboring states as a part of a UN admission agreement would be futile, both said. Red China does not keep its agreements, Douglas asserted.

Asked if the admission of Communist China would mean the end of Formosa, Saltonstall said:

"As long as Chiang Kai-Shek is alive, as long as the regime in Formosa (or Taiwan) exists as it is now, certainly there will not be an end to Nationalist China."

Sept. 4 to 10:

Special Events Mark Union Label Week

The nationwide celebration of Union Label Week Sept. 4 to 10 will be marked by an unprecedented number of special events and activities at state and community levels.

Sec.-Treas. Joseph Lewis of the AFL-CIO Union Label & Service Trades Dept. reports the department has filled a record volume of requests for promotional materials honoring the hallmarks of organized labor—the union label, shop card and service button. The department is sponsoring Union Label Week, as officially designated by its 1959 convention and that of the AFL-CIO.

Governors and mayors across the country have set aside the week by proclamation enlisting the support of the public in its observance, which opens with the Labor Day holiday, Lewis noted.

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany called on all union members, their families and friends to take part in the celebration.

"From its very inception," he said, "the American labor movement has known that in order to secure and protect the benefits gained through union membership it was necessary for union members to patronize those companies which produce union products and union services."

Recalling the efforts of the Union Label & Service Trades Dept. over more than a half-century to rally consumer buying power as an added union benefit, Meany declared:

"Here is the real purpose of Union Label Week: to remind our union people and to tell the rest of America and the free world that buying and spending 'the union label way' means greater job security, more lasting benefits and an opportunity for real prosperity for all."

Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler, joining the appeal for wide participation in the week's events, described union labels, shop cards and service buttons as symbolic of "the good relations which exist between the unions of the AFL-CIO and their fair employers."

"These traditional symbols of union distinction have, throughout decades, served as a bulwark against the onslaughts of depression, layoffs and breadlines," Schnitzler asserted.

Goldberg on Labor Day:

'Promote the Common Defense, Safeguard the General Welfare'

A GRATEFUL NATION pauses today to pay tribute to the American worker: to his enormous contribution to the national welfare, to his dedicated service to the principles of democracy and human dignity, and to his unflinching support of freedom in times of crisis.

As we greet him on this Labor Day, we take satisfaction in the fact that:

More than 68.5 million men and women are at work.

Average factory earnings are at an all-time high of $94 a week.

Average per capita income after taxes—which at $1,974 is the highest in the world—and total personal income—over $420 billion—are both at record highs.

The gross national product totaled $515 billion in the second quarter of this year, also a record.

In the face of our growing abundance, consumer prices have remained remarkably steady throughout the year.

At the same time, the nation is enjoying its greatest period of industrial peace since the end of World War II. From January through June only one-tenth of 1 percent of the estimated working time of all non-agricultural workers was lost due to strikes.

And we are continuing to build for a brighter future. More than 49.5 million students are expected to enroll in school this fall, nearly 4 million of them in the nation's colleges and universities.

These are tangible achievements of our free society. Their effect in terms of higher living standards can be seen in the quality of American homes throughout the length and breadth of the land.

But while America's great abundance is widely shared by ordinary American citizens, the peoples of the Soviet Union must content themselves with their government's distant promises of future prosperity. For the present, Soviet achievements in space cast a euphoric shadow over the country's acknowledged shortages of food, clothing and housing, and the astonishing growth of Soviet industry provides little satisfaction for the demands of every-day Soviet consumers.

With or without material wealth, the hallmark of American society—and the proudest heritage of its people—is its free institutions.

To the American worker freedom has come to mean the right to organize, the right of collective bargaining with an employer, the right to engage in concerted action for better wages and working conditions, and the right of grievance procedures. On the other hand, it assumes that he will exercise his rights responsibly in the best interests of the whole society.

The goals of the American worker in the years ahead will be the improvement of his high standard of living and the preservation of his free institutions. He knows that these can best be accomplished in a world at peace.

As we justifiably applaud our achievements, so we must confront our shortcomings. On this Labor Day, more than 5 million men and women are out of work. Well over half the major industrial areas in the country are experiencing substantial unemployment. Many industries are operating at below capacity levels. Steel output is only about 67 percent of capacity.

With these insufficient levels of production, a high rate of unemployment is inexcusable. The story of unemployment is not one of "labor surplus," as the jobless have often been called. Rather, it is a story of wasted human and material resources.

This Administration is not satisfied with the present unemployment situation. We believe that the unemployed can be returned to work in a vigorous and expanding economy. As Pres. Kennedy said recently, "I have no intention of 'learning to live with' prolonged and severe unemployment, with all that it means in human misery and economic waste."

In these critical times, American labor faces new challenges on the economic front. The need for new high levels of production will entail continuing technological progress.

I am confident that both free labor and free management will respond with renewed purpose to their responsibilities.

They will need to develop more enlightened relations with one another on a continuing basis.

They will need to accommodate their own interests to the overriding interest of the public welfare.

They must continue to demonstrate their ability to reconcile separate viewpoints into common goals and common actions, thus giving living testimony to our proud claim that we come nearest of any nation to being a classless society.

Without relinquishing its right to strike, labor, in cooperation with management, must build new mechanisms to insure the peaceful solutions of their differences.

When each side accepts the rights of the other, and when both sides accept the rights of the general public, then industrial peace will prevail.

As we take stock of ourselves on this Labor Day, let all working Americans—whether in industry or trade, in large firms or small shops, on the assembly line or in an office, in government or in education—rededicate themselves to their constitutional commitments to promote the common defense and safeguard the general welfare.

IUD Labor Day Statement:

Industrial Workers Give Pledge Of Unity with Free Berlin Labor

THE INDUSTRIAL UNION DEPT., AFL-CIO, extends warm fraternal greetings to free organized labor the world over on this traditional holiday of America's working people. We offer our good will to free men and women the world over. To those held captive in totalitarian bondage in so much of today's world, we pledge our continued efforts in the struggle to extend freedom and human rights.

Industrial labor especially pledges its solidarity to those free workers of Berlin and the West who today stand on the most critical battlefronts against tyranny.

Peace without freedom is intolerable. In the battle for peace, we stand foursquare with all who hold life dear. But we stand united and firm on the side of freedom, and we warn all who would extend tyranny that we have fought our way up from wage slavery and we will not retreat.

We urge that the problems now before the world shall be settled through open negotiation. But negotiation cannot and must not mean surrender. Nor can it mean the abandonment of any now free to those who would enslave them or hold them captive in a system to which they are opposed.

While applauding the Housing Act passed this year, we call also for a further attack upon the decay now so apparent in our cities. The Soviet challenge will not be met until, as the words of "America, the Beautiful" recite, ours are truly gleaming "alabaster" cities.

Throughout the current period of economic upturn, joblessness has hovered near the 7 percent mark, despite even new highs of industrial production. Automation is bringing to U.S. industry ever greater manhour output.

The serious continuing slack in the U.S. economy is a clear answer to those who would curtail essential domestic civilian programs in the name of defense.

While progress has been made in the area of civil rights, the Negro and other minority groups continue to be denied equal citizenship.

On this Labor Day, we pledge to workers in newly developing nations that we shall do our utmost to aid them in their struggle for adequate livelihoods and effective unions.

Haggerty on Labor Day:

Building Trades Set To Meet Challenge

SEVENTY-NINE YEARS have passed since Labor Day was first celebrated in New York City. Sixty-seven years have passed since Congress declared Labor Day a national holiday. The Building & Construction Trades Dept. will celebrate its 53d Labor Day on Sept. 4, 1961. We are proud not only of our progress, but also of the part we have played in the growth of the American labor movement.

Today the 18 affiliates of the department embrace over 3.25 million skilled craftsmen. This growth has been possible because building tradesmen down through the years not only built their organizations on solid foundations, but continually accepted the challenges of an ever-expanding and changing industry—an industry that today ranks first in size in total dollar volume and accounts for over 14 percent of the gross national product.

One vast program undertaken by the building trades has been the construction of our missile sites. The magnitude and complexity of the program are astounding and will, when completed, produce the greatest amount of construction ever to be concealed from view. The estimated cost of construction underway is over $953 million on 19 locations in 15 states.

We realize that all labor faces a great challenge this year and for many years to come. We must of necessity take part in proposing and shaping policies and decisions which will work to keep our country secure and our economy continually expanding. We must take an even more active part in the legislative processes of our government at all levels, city, state and federal. We must continue to present and press for enactment of measures to relieve the impact of automation and to curtail its accompanying scourge of unemployment which unless corrected could lead to national disaster.

So on this Labor Day we face a real challenge—a challenge which we in the building trades are ready to meet, willing to meet and confident that, although the challenge is great, being mindful of the fine tradition of our past, will be met. We will join with all labor on this day in dedicating ourselves to building the future for our country.

Jodoin on Labor Day:

Imagination Urged To Meet Job Crisis

LABOR DAY IS TRADITIONALLY a time of stocktaking for the labor movement. While it is natural that we should look back on the months since we last observed this holiday, it is even more important that we look to the future.

Organized labor has, through the years, established itself in our society; today the role we have to play is more important than ever. We are, indeed, living in challenging time.

The waste and suffering that have resulted from unemployment in the past year has been stark evidence of our failure to meet the economic needs of our people. This imposed idleness of workers who would and who could contribute so much to our national production has resulted from several causes. Some of these are conditions which we have experienced in the past; others come from great changes which are taking place in our economy. Regardless of the cause the price is the same.

We are now nearing the time of year when jobs become increasingly scarce. There should be no hesitation in applying courage and imagination to this, the most important of the problems we face in our domestic economy. We have attained knowledge and ability which can provide a better and a fuller life for all. We must not allow abundance to become a social hazard.

The challenges we face are not to be found only within our own borders. We become increasingly and inescapably involved in world affairs; and, indeed, it would be an evasion of our national responsibilities if we were to try to avoid such involvement.

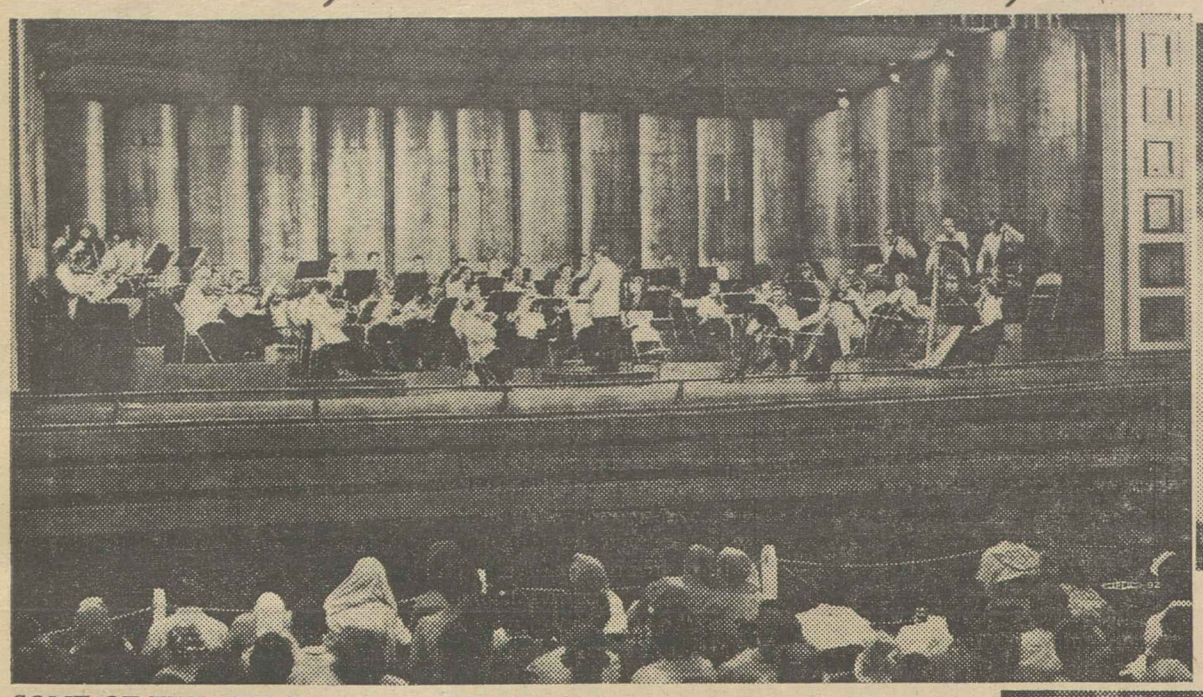
There is need now, as never before, for understanding of the critical international situation we face. The stakes are high—the future of mankind itself is involved. The Canadian Labor Congress has taken a very firm position opposing the continuation of nuclear tests and advocating universal disarmament. We are opposed to Canada extending the membership of the nuclear club by accepting nuclear weapons.

We think we are also being realistic when we say that this is no time for Canada to abandon her friends. Neutralism is an illusion. We must work together with those who by tradition and association have been our friends; so that, through the United Nations, we can contribute to a world in which peace and understanding can prevail.

Both as a nation, and as a member of a group of nations, we must make real contributions toward such a world. It is not enough for us to be against slavery; we must be for freedom. It is not enough to decry poverty and starvation; we must contribute to a better life for those less fortunate.

These, in the broadest terms, are some of the great challenges we now face, and they must be met without delay. We will only succeed if we work together in these common causes which so far outweigh the particular interests of one group or another. Organized labor in Canada, on this our national holiday, must dedicate itself to this purpose.

Music, Union-Made, On the Waterfront



SOME OF THE CURSE is taken off Washington's hot and humidity-ridden summers by free outdoor concerts given through the Music Performance Trust Fund of the Recording Industry and played by members of Musicians Local 161, as above.

INSTRUMENTALISTS ARE trained professionals, many of them graduates of the nation's leading music schools with experience playing under the batons of world-famous conductors.

CO-SPONSORING the concerts, which are given at the Watergate on the Potomac River front, are the D. C. Recreation Dept. and National Capital Parks. Many visitors listen from boats. The summer program includes both light and classical music.

WASHINGTONIANS AND TOURISTS by the thousands have enjoyed the concerts on summer evenings, but perhaps no one enjoys them more than the union performers themselves. For music, to musicians, is more than a livelihood—it's actually a way of life.

ORCHESTRA CONDUCTOR for the series is Dr. Frederick Fall, shown here leading some of his string section. Born in Austria and trained in Europe, he once directed the Vienna Volksoper and for 11 years has led Washington's Dept. of Agriculture Symphony Orchestra.

ORIT Asks Action On Latin Social Ills

Rio de Janeiro—A demand that action be taken now to relieve the plight of the great mass of Latin Americans who "are tired of repeated but never fulfilled promises" was voiced in a statement on economic development and social progress adopted at the fifth congress of the Inter-American Regional Organization of Workers (ORIT) here.

The statement was recommended to the Western Hemisphere arm of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions by an Inter-American Trade Union Economic Conference held a few days previously in Sao Paulo, Brazil.

Citing the "unprecedented social and political ferment" in South America, the statement declared the "basis of progress" in the underdeveloped parts of the Americas must be land reform. This it defined as "the return of the land to those who till it, and a recognition of their rights to receive in full the fruits of their labor."

With this as a foundation, ORIT proposed a program that included financial and technical assistance for agriculture; stabilized basic commodity markets; increased buying power for rural residents; industrialization with development of the required skills in each country; public as well as private financing of developments and "radical" revisions of tax systems.

"To ensure the most efficient economic and social advancement of the underdeveloped parts of America," the statement added, "it is imperative that together with raising the standard of living of the peoples illiteracy be eradicated, the right of every child to free public education be recognized, the standards of education be raised; scientific research be promoted and adequately financed, and the working classes be properly trained so as to enable them to participate efficiently in the framing and execution of development planning. . . .

"Every development plan should give preference at least to the most urgent social problems: eradicate illiteracy, eliminate the housing shortage and the inadequacy of living quarters; improve and extend social security systems and social services . . . (and) stop endemics and epidemics."

The need for economic and social reform was also recognized in a resolution on the political situation which sharply condemned Cuba's Castro and his government.

"Political democracy cannot survive if it does not give to the people full economic security and a higher measure of social justice," it said.

"We must constantly repeat the basic truth that where there is economic exploitation of the workers, political tyranny over the people, widespread ignorance and ill health, there cannot be true freedom and democracy. On the contrary, such conditions create a favorable climate for the spread of communism."

Other resolutions reaffirmed ORIT's opposition to the dictatorships in Paraguay, the Dominican Republic, Haiti and Nicaragua; expressed solidarity with West Berlin workers in the current crisis; moved to make the hemisphere aware of the "deplorable conditions to which political refugees are condemned in Cuba," and supported the ICFTU position that Franco Spain be excluded from the community of free peoples of the West.

Alfonso Sanchez Madariaga of Mexico declined to run for another term as general secretary and was elected president. He was succeeded by Arturo Jauregui of Peru, who has been ORIT director of organization.

The new executive board includes AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany and Victor G. Reuther of the Auto Workers, with AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schniztler and Vice Pres. O. A. Knight as first substitutes; Pres. Claude Jodoin of the Canadian Labor Congress and Pres. Hipolito Marcano of the Puerto Rico AFL-CIO.

Latin America Unions Seen Backing Alliance

Latin American trade unions will give "genuine cooperation and support" to the Alliance for Progress program adopted at the Inter-American Economic & Social Conference held recently in Uruguay, AFL-CIO Vice Pres. William C. Doherty has predicted.

Doherty, president of the Letter Carriers, headed the AFL-CIO's three-man delegation which participated in the conference as official observers. The other members were Serafino Romualdi, AFL-CIO inter-American representative, and Dir. Stanley Ruttenberg of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Research.

Interviewed on Labor News Conference, carried by the Mutual Broadcasting System, Doherty spoke of addressing a convention of the Uruguay trade union federation and reported that "all of the delegates in that huge convention were not only interested in the Alliance for Progress . . . they were actively engaged in attempting to espouse the cause of liberty, democracy and freedom."

Doherty said the old image of the United States as an exploiter of Latin American labor and materials is changing under the Kennedy Administration.

"Pres. Kennedy keeps talking about doing things for the man on the street, and that has a very wholesome impact on all our friends in South America," Doherty noted.

He said he thought the U.S. delegation, headed by Treasury Sec. S. Douglas Dillon, did "everything humanly possible" to see that U.S. aid would reach down to the people and not "stay at the top."

Richter Says Reds 'Trample' Human Rights

Berlin—Willi Richter, president of the German Federation of Trade Unions, has accused East German authorities of "trampling" human rights guaranteed by the charters of the United Nations and the Intl. Labor Organization in their efforts to stem the tide of refugees to the West.

In a message carried by all West German wireless stations, Richter declared the refugees had been driven from their homes by "acts of terror" committeed by East German Communist chief Walter Ulbricht "and his henchmen."

"The Communists are trying now by this brutal force to stop people from escaping," Richter said. "Tanks, machine guns, barbed wire fences and tear gas are the means whereby dictators dominate the people. It is the intention of the Communists to brutally tear apart Berlin."

The West German labor leader said the Communist action sealing the border between East and West Berlin was "a flagrant violation" of the city's four-power status. He called on Great Britain, France and the U.S. to take immediate steps to ensure re-establishment of normal conditions.

Richter also voiced German aspirations for reunification of the country and called for a free plebiscite "in East and West Berlin and the whole of Germany," concluding:

"The right of self-determination is indispensable and indisputable for the German people."

NLRB Names N. Y. Papers in 'Unfair' Charge

New York—The Publishers' Association of New York City and 10 member-newspapers have been named in a National Labor Relations Board complaint that they have joined in a mutual assistance pact to halt operations whenever a member of the association is involved in a strike or work stoppage.

The complaint was issued by the NLRB regional office here on charges filed by Typographical Union Local 6, and the unaffiliated Newspaper & Mail Deliverers' Union. A trial examiner has scheduled a hearing for Sept. 11.

The association and officials of the Times, Mirror and Herald Tribune were accused in the complaint of warning employes over the past year against assistance or support of walkouts by other unions. Also the Herald Tribune, News and Mirror were charged with shutting down their operations briefly due to work stoppages at the Times.

USO Fund Raise Backed By AFL-CIO

New York—The AFL-CIO is supporting the USO's appeal for a 12.5 percent increase in its allocations from united funds and community chests, Community Services Dir. Leo Perlis declared.

He said there are "at least 12 major training and mobilization centers where expected increases in military strength will demand commensurate expansion of USO facilities and services." Other military installations that were due to be closed later this year are remaining open, he said, and the USO will have to continue its services in these areas.

Since 1956 USO's income from united funds and community chests has "dropped 16 percent while the increase in federated giving has risen 40 percent," Perlis pointed out. He appealed to all community service committees and state and local central labor bodies to support the USO's request for the increase, stating that the American labor movement "actively supported the initial organization of USO and later was among those requesting its reactivation."

He said organized labor last year gave $10,000 to send a USO entertainment unit, "The AFL-CIO Salute to the Armed Forces," on a "hardship circuit of U.S. bases not reached by USO because of limited finances."

He also noted that "earlier this year, AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany again extended the official endorsement of AFL-CIO to USO."

Labor Backs House Crisis Amendment

The AFL-CIO has given its support to a proposed constitutional amendment to permit the quick filling of vacancies in the U.S. House of Representatives in event of a national crisis—such as an atomic attack on Washington.

Legislative Rep. George D. Riley declared in a statement to a House Judiciary subcommittee that continuity in civilian government is "essential" to the democratic process.

Most of the bills before the subcommittee would empower governors to appoint representatives to vacancies from their states if the House membership falls below a certain level. Riley said the level should be as low as possible, "perhaps as low as 10 percent."

"With the standby mechanism available," he said, "we will see government continuing to function in orderly fashion."

Goldberg to Arbitrate Musicians-Met Dispute

New York—Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg's agreement to arbitrate a contract dispute between the Metropolitan Opera Association and its union musicians has ended a stalemate that threatened the Met's 1961-62 season.

By agreement of Met management and Musicians Local 802, Goldberg will issue a final and binding decision after the hearings have ended.

Goldberg said he agreed to serve as arbitrator at the request of Pres. John F. Kennedy but that his decision was "unique" and will not "establish a precedent of general economic application." Kennedy sent letters congratulating the disputing parties on the agreement, and Goldberg expressed his appreciation to the union, the management, Commissioner Jacob Mandelbaum of the U.S. Mediation & Conciliation Service and City Labor Commissioner Harold Felix, representing Mayor Robert F. Wagner.

The union first accepted the labor secretary's offer to arbitrate, and the Met management followed suit after breaking off negotiations twice and announcing cancellation of the season.

Pres. Alfred Manuti of Local 802 said he was "very pleased" with the proposal to arbitrate. Met Gen. Manager Rudolf Bing sent telegrams to singers urging them to sign contracts for the new season and saying he "hoped" to open Oct. 23 as scheduled with Puccini's "Girl of the Golden West."

Opera musicians are paid $170 a week during the season and asked for a raise to $220.13 a week, six weekly performances instead of seven, and other contract improvements. The union said wages of $7,200 a year are inadequate for top-flight musicians.

Missile Site Pay Policy Issued

The President's Missile Sites Labor Commission has issued a policy statement covering the employment of industrial workers at missile and space sites, and has made two recommendations on wage rates for construction workers.

The commission advised the Secretary of Defense that an agreement by Topeka, Kans., contractors to pay laborers, mason tenders, nozzlemen and powdermen at Topeka Air Force Base wages higher than the area rates was "unreasonable" and discriminatory. The agreement provided that workers in Hod Carriers Local 142 should get the Topeka metropolitan rate instead of the lower suburban rate. The commission also advised that certain "hazard pay" for electrical workers at the Vandenberg, Calif., AFB is reasonable.

Its policy statement on industrial labor at missile sites advised that rates be in line with wages for similar workers doing non-governmental work. Previously it had issued a similar statement for construction workers at missile and space sites.

Jammed Classrooms, Half-Day Sessions, Teacher Shortage Back as Schools Open

The nation's children return in record numbers next week to a school system beset by overcrowded classrooms, half-day sessions and a critical shortage of teachers.

The U.S. Office of Education estimates total enrollment in public and private schools will reach a new high of 49.3 million in the 1961-62 school year, an increase of 1.4 million over the total for last year.

Anticipated enrollments from kindergarten through Grade 8 are estimated at 34.2 million, an increase of 400,000, and in Grades 9 through 12 at 10.8 million, a rise of 700,000.

In institutions of higher education, enrollments are expected to reach 4.3 million, up from 4 million last year.

To meet the instructional needs of the swarm of new pupils, elementary and secondary schools will require some 48,000 more classroom teachers this year than the 1,636,000 they employed in 1960-61, the Office of Education estimates. Last fall, the states already employed 91,500 full-time public school teachers with substandard certificates.

The 102,000 new college graduates expected to join elementary and secondary public school facilities this fall will not replace those leaving the profession, school experts estimate, let alone serve increasing enrollments, relieve overcrowding, eliminate part-time sessions, add needed instruction not now provided, and replace unprepared teachers.

In all, it has been estimated public schools this year will be about 138,000 teachers shy of their real needs. The shortage of some 142,000 classrooms reported in the fall of 1960 is not expected to show any substantial improvement as the new school year opens.

About 69,600 additional instruction rooms were scheduled for completion during the 1960-61 school year. But most of these were needed to provide for population shifts, increased enrollments and replacement of abandoned facilities, leaving few if any to reduce the backlog.

The combined effect of the shortages, the Office of Education has noted in previous years, is to impair the schooling of an estimated 10 million pupils through overcrowding, half-day sessions, the use of improvised facilities and obsolete or otherwise inadequate structures.

The number of pupils on curtailed sessions last year in 36 states and the District of Columbia was 685,000, three-fourths of them in elementary schools.

While the shortages continue, the cost of operating the existing public school system is on the rise. At $15.6 billion in 1959-60, it was up $2 billion over expenditures the previous year despite a decline of 7 percent in capital outlay for land, buildings and equipment, the Office of Education reports. Biggest share of the cost—54.1 percent—was borne by local sources. States contributed 39.4 percent; the federal government 4.4 percent, and county and other intermediate sources the remaining 2.1 percent.

one company on the East Coast—Alcoa Steamship Co.—and to one employers' group on the West Coast—Pacific Maritime Association. All others have agreed to contract terms, SIU said.

Negotiations between SIU and Alcoa were broken off last week and have not been resumed though the union said it is "willing to meet any time." West Coast talks with PMI shippers were resumed after MEBA had reached agreement with shippers represented by the American Merchant Marine Institute.

Agreements by all five maritime unions to date have followed two forms—either outright recognition of the right of unions to board American-owned vessels registered under foreign flags, or an agreement to refer the dispute to labor-management committees, with the right to strike if no agreement is reached in a specified time.

The "runaway flag" issue was a major cause of the strike which idled more than 75,000 men June 15 to July 30. The walkout ended when the President got a court order under provisions of T-H and named a commission of inquiry to report back.

Commission Chairman David L. Cole said he is optimistic that most parties to the dispute will have reached agreement by the Sept. 21 expiration date of the injunction.

The Maritime Union previously had settled its contract negotiations. The American Radio Association settled with most employers in June, and MMP also reached early agreement with many shippers.

The latest MMP settlement—with the tanker companies—called for wage increases of 4 percent the first year and 2.25 percent in each of the following three years, plus an increase of $1.15 a day in company contributions to pension and welfare funds.

MEBA and the tanker companies agreed to set up a committee to seek a settlement of the foreign flag issue. The union is free to strike if no settlement is reached within 18 months.

All unions have asked the right to board ships owned by American companies to seek bargaining rights. An increasing number of U.S. ships has been registered under foreign flags in recent years.

Steel Warned By Senators On Price Rise

A group of liberal Democratic senators has served notice on the steel industry that it is in for trouble if it raises prices after installing a wage increase due on Oct. 1.

The pay hike, under the contracts between the Steelworkers and the industry ending the 1959 strike, will average an estimated 7.8 cents an hour. The price hike Sen. Albert Gore (D-Tenn.) said industry leaders are beginning to talk about—in the same way they prepared for the July 1958 increase—is $5 a ton.

The senators, marshalling their arguments with the aid of charts and graphs, said the industry cannot justify a price boost.

Gore informed the Senate that the President's Council of Economic Advisers told him fourth quarter profits, after the wage raise becomes effective and without a price increase, could equal the 14-year average of 10.5 percent after taxes.

Sen. Estes Kefauver (D-Tenn.) said a price increase would raise a question of possible violation of a 1951 consent order forbidding industry agreements to "adopt, establish or maintain prices."

Social Security Benefit Applications Show Rise

Nearly 750,000 applications for benefits have been received since Pres. Kennedy signed into law on June 30 the 1961 amendments to the Social Security Act, Sec. of Health, Education & Welfare Abraham Ribicoff told a press conference in Washington.

They poured in at the rate of more than 90,000 a week in July and August, he said, compared with 50,000 to 60,000 a week previously.

Approximately 187,500 of them came from men in the 62 to 64 age group—and their dependents—who are retiring early because of unemployment or poor health under a new provision of the law which permits

Ribicoff listed three categories of people who, he said, should inquire at their nearest social security office about their rights under the latest amendments. These were:

- Older people who have been told they had not worked long enough to be eligible for benefits; the amendments reduce the amount of work necessary for eligibility. Older workers and the survivors of workers who died after June 1954 may now be eligible.
- People qualified for benefits who have not applied because they are still working. One of the amendments increases the amount that older workers, widows and others eligible for benefits can earn and still collect part of their benefits.
- Widows now getting benefits on the basis of their own work, who may qualify for higher amounts based on their husbands' earnings.

Ribicoff said neither widows now getting benefits based on the work of their dead husbands nor persons eligible for the increase in the minimum payment need make formal application for the higher benefits authorized in the amendments. The boosts will be automatically included in checks delivered after the Labor Day weekend, he said.

Steel Should Absorb Pay Hike—Kennedy

Pres. Kennedy has expressed confidence that major steel companies will "concern themselves with the public interest" and absorb the negotiated October wage hike without increasing prices.

Kennedy, asked at his press conference what the government can or should do to head off a reported intention to hike prices, replied his economic advisors informed him the steel companies could absorb the wage raise and still make "a good profit."

Kennedy said be believed the inflation prior to 1958 was "tied very closely" to steel price hikes.

Douglas Asks Labor Effort On Area Aid

The Industrial Union Dept. is holding a series of conferences in Washington, bringing union members from depressed areas, to inform them on the steps necessary to take advantage of the Area Redevelopment Act.

At the first session were some 34 union members from Illinois, Indiana, Michigan and Minnesota. At the one-day parley they met with representatives of the IUD plus a number of top government officials. They returned home fortified with information to help their local communities.

Sen. Paul H. Douglas (D-Ill.), one of the Senate leaders who worked tirelessly for the depressed areas bill for six years before it finally became law, declared that "if it had not been for the labor movement this law would not have been passed."

He said the purpose of the bill was threefold: bring jobs to localities with high and persistent unemployment; train and transfer workers to jobs elsewhere; create jobs in depressed areas through public works.

"Local chambers of commerce have not taken hold of the individual sections of this bill as much as they should," he declared, "and we need the help of the labor movement."

Douglas urged that labor join with the more progressive leaders in the civic and industrial groups to work out requests for assistance under the new law.

"Don't let it be a chamber of commerce body," he said, "but a joint operation. Develop your plans thoroughly. Remember, we don't want to attract runaway plants but to channel growth into areas of high chronic unemployment."

Jacob Clayman, IUD administrative director, summed up the conference in this way:

"We are working to help the Administration get the act working to a maximum degree. We have full confidence in the leadership and staff of the Area Redevelopment Administration. Since action must be initiated from the communities, themselves, we want to strive to help them do a good job."

Rehabilitation Plans Aid 92,500 Disabled

For the sixth consecutive year, the number of disabled men and women prepared for and placed in jobs they are able to fill through the federal-state rehabilitation program set a new record in fiscal 1961—92,500 persons.

In addition, jobs are being hunted for 23,875 other handicapped people who have been rehabilitated to the point where they are ready for employment, according to Mary E. Switzer, director of the Office of Vocational Rehabilitation in the Dept. of Health, Education & Welfare.

The rehabilitations showed a 5 percent gain over the previous year's 88,300, while the group ready for work at the end of the fiscal year was 17 percent larger than in 1961, when it included 20,452 men and women.

New York led all the states with 6,733 rehabilitations; Pennsylvania was in second place with 6,456 and Georgia in third with 6,014.

Substantial gains were made, Miss Switzer reported, in the rehabilitation of persons with severe handicaps. Particularly large increases were scored among persons who are mentally retarded or who suffered mental illnesses.

Handicapped people who went back to work in fiscal 1961 will have earnings of about $180 million during their first year on the job, compared with $70 million previously. They will work some 137 million man-hours.

Some 18,500 of those returned to useful employment had been receiving welfare benefits at the rate of about $18 million a year. The rehabilitation cost was a year's relief payments.

Roche Appointed Assistant to Batt

Redmond H. Roche, Jr., of Detroit, formerly assistant general counsel for the Auto Workers, has been appointed special assistant to Area Redevelopment Administrator William L. Batt, Jr.

He has been serving since June as a consultant to ARA, the new federal program to aid areas of chronic unemployment, improve their economic conditions, and stimulate job opportunities.

Before joining the UAW legal staff in 1953, Roche had been with the anti-trust division of the Justice Dept., stationed in Detroit, and in the patent law section of General Motors Corp.

Auto Workers Extend Pacts, Set Sept. 6 for Deadline at GM

24-member executive board recessed its meeting subject to recall after receiving recommendations from its Ford, Chrysler and GM councils against approval of the employers' last contract offers.

At a press conference, Reuther and AMC Pres. George Romney said the agreement on national terms, reached tentatively last week, was followed by local union agreements on non-economic matters like seniority and work rules. Final language will be drafted with a view to meeting legal requirements and then the agreements will be submitted to meetings of 23,000 UAW members employed by AMC, they said.

With Reuther and Romney and their negotiating assistants answering questions, these key elements of the proposed new agreements emerged:

- A "progress sharing plan" that puts into a trust fund on behalf of AMC workers 10 percent of profits before taxes after deduction of 10 percent for stockholders, plus an additional 5 percent in AMC stock whose dividends will go into the trust fund for two years. After that, individual employes can take title to the stock.
- Continuation of the annual improvement factor wage increase of 6 cents an hour or 2.5 percent of base wages, whichever is higher, for each year of the three-year contract.
- Continuation of the present cost of living formula, with 12 cents of the existing 17 cents added to permanent wage rates.
- Transfer of $3 million in surplus funds from the joint insurance fund to the new "progress sharing" fund, with payments going to provide short workweek benefits, fully-paid hospital medical insurance and improved pensions.
- Improved SUB benefits, with the duration extended from 26 to 52 weeks and eligibility rules liberalized.

Under the short workweek section of the new contract, if an employe has less than 40 hours work in one week, he will receive half his regular hourly wage rate for each hour below 40 hours.

Union and management economists estimated that if the profit sharing plan had been in effect in fiscal 1960 it would have put $8.3 million of company profits into the fund and $4.1 million in stock into another fund. AMC employes would have been owners of nine shares of stock apiece.

It was agreed that pension benefits will be computed on the basis of $2.80 multiplied by years of service. Benefits for early retirement and permanent disability have been improved, and employes may choose a reduced pension to permit a surviving spouse to receive benefits.

The AMC agreement makes these changes in supplemental unemployment benefits: the weekly rate is raised to 62 percent of gross pay, instead of net pay as at present, plus $1.50 per dependent, with a $40 weekly maximum. A 65 percent benefit will be paid for short workweeks scheduled as such. Duration of SUB payments is increased to a maximum 52 weeks.

Other changes were made, Reuther and Romney said, to increase the life insurance maximum from $5,000 to $9,000 and to add moving allowances for employes.

Romney told reporters that his company had been able to reach a non-inflationary settlement because high cost items in the local agreements had been transferred to the jurisdiction of the new trust funds. Reuther explained it this way: "The worker gets the benefit of the contract improvements, the company gets the benefit of flexibility." Rigid seniority provisions in the present contract, for example, have been made more flexible, he told questioners.

While UAW continued to negotiate with GM and the other car makers, it submitted a memorandum to the National Labor Relations Board supporting its charge that GM has broken the labor law and is guilty of unfair labor practices by these actions:

- Raising the issue of inability to meet the union's contract requests but refusing to provide information to back up that assertion.
- Spending "vast sums of money" continuously to persuade its employes and the public that the UAW demands were inflationary but refusing to substantiate its publicity handouts.

Each offer GM makes at the bargaining table is based on its estimate of how the offer will affect profits and prices, and therefore it cannot refuse to give profit and price information to the union, the UAW maintained.

After the UAW executive board meeting, the union released a statement reviewing its bargaining position and making these assertions:

"Problems of union members grow largely out of the central problem of job security—of unemployment on a large scale, frequent and extended layoffs, short workweeks, job loss through plant changes or subcontracting, inadequate purchasing power."

The 1961 contracts, the board said, must produce answers for these problems. It said: "The most serious contradiction in our society today is that the companion to increasing productivity and . . . automation is increasing unemployment and job insecurity."

The Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, with about 20,000 employes at GM parts plants, also agreed to extend its contract until Sept. 6.

OBVIOUSLY PLEASED with a new profit-sharing plan for American Motors workers are Auto Workers' Pres. Walter P. Reuther, right, and company Vice Pres. Edward L. Cushman. They posed together at a press conference where they announced an "agreement in principle" on contract changes, subject to settlement of local plant working agreements.

Ex-Teamsters Locals Take Case to Public

Cincinnati—The struggle of 4,000 Teamsters in four local unions here to free themselves from the domination of the Intl. Brotherhood of Teamsters and its president, James R. Hoffa, moved nearer the ballot box this week.

The National Labor Relations Board has scheduled hearings on Sept. 5 and 7 to determine election dates for about 2,000 members who have disaffiliated from the union; dates for the other members will be set later. It is probable that all elections will be held within six weeks.

The high dramatic moment of an action-packed week was a 30-minute face-to-face press conference between Hoffa and James Luken, president of the Dairy Workers' Union and leader of the revolt against the international.

In addition, Luken appeared on TV to explain "the invasion by outside professionals" and a lackluster Hoffa disappointed a half-filled Music Hall crowd.

The national interest aroused by the battle of the four local unions was evidenced by the 40 reporters who questioned Luken and Hoffa at the press conference.

Luken said disaffiliation "has been totally effective" and the move had come because members did not believe in the "one-man" rule of Hoffa, a rule strengthened by changes rammed through the recent Teamsters' convention which place almost unlimited power in the president's hands, he said.

"The general president can remove local officials if he has the slightest doubt about them," Luken said. "That's the gun-at-the-head theory. We've operated that way for the last seven years. We've had to fight repeated attempts by the international to force people upon us against our will."

Hoffa threatened to "spend an unlimited amount of money" to balk the disaffiliation move, criticized Atty. Gen. Robert Kennedy and upheld William Presser, Ohio Teamsters leader who has appeared before many Senate investigating committees.

On the TV program, which was moderated by William Kircher, assistant regional director of the AFL-CIO, and attended by two Cincinnati councilmen, Luken warned that the disaffiliating Teamsters are about "to be blitzed in an unprecedented propaganda barrage."

The Teamsters union has a staff of some 30 people here and Hoffa has promised that his men will contact all 4,000 members who have voted to get out of the union.

The two councilmen, Charles P. Taft, nationally known church and welfare figure, and John J. Gilligan, told the TV audience that they had been longtime backers of Luken in his fight to get rid of the Hoffa faction in Cincinnati. Taft declared "this town is going to support a union which has demonstrated it is a good union and democratically run."

Gilligan declared that the meeting which voted to disaffiliate from the Teamsters "was one of the most impressive demonstrations of democracy that I have ever seen."

Reviewing the decision to leave the union, Luken said:

"We could not believe that any one man, through money, connivery, and press agent magic could capture an entire national union and convert it to his own private instrument for personal wealth and power. We could not believe that the efforts of underworld characters to dominate large segments of the union should go unchecked."

The meeting in historic old Music Hall, which had been ballyhooed all week in full-page newspaper advertisements as the place to come to get the answers in an address by Hoffa, started off by Hoffa getting into a hassle with Cincinnati TV and radio commentator George Palmer over the removal of radio microphones. When Palmer stood up to demand why, he was told by Hoffa, "You weren't invited here." This despite the full-page ads which invited not only Teamsters, but the general public as well.

Education Aid Killed By House Coalition

the school children who need this assistance."

The showdown vote in the House found 163 Democrats and 6 Republicans voting to take up the measure and 160 Republicans and 82 Democrats opposed.

Heading for final congressional approval, meanwhile, was a conference report on foreign aid which dropped the long-term financing sought by the Administration. The Senate had passed an aid bill after beating back attempts to delete authority for the President to borrow for long-term loans from the Treasury and setting up the program over a five-year period.

Compromise 'Satisfactory'

The White House termed the conference compromise satisfactory on the basis that it put the foreign aid program on a long-term basis and allowed the President to make commitments for economic assistance.

The House approved only a one-year development loan program. The conferees agreed on a five-year, $7.2 billion program but made the loans subject to annual appropriations. The conference measure would allow the President to make long-term commitments to meet the needs of underdeveloped nations, but Congress would have to vote the funds in annual money bills.

With decisions reached on the two major issues, the Senate turned to civil rights and after several days of debate voted 72 to 21 to suspend its rules so that a rider extending the life of the Civil Rights Commission for two years could be added to a departmental appropriations bill. The extension was approved by a similar margin. The extension of the commission's life was bitterly opposed by southern senators. The key vote to suspend the rules required a two-thirds margin and the Administration forces chalked up more than needed.

In other actions:

- The Senate approved a bill giving permanent status to the Peace Corps and sent it to the House. Final approval came on a voice vote after an attempt to cut back the $40 million appropriation for the first year of operations. Kennedy created the Peace Corps Mar. 1 by Executive Order.
- The House aproved 196 to 172 a bill to subsidize small producers of lead and zinc for a four-year period as part of a new federal assistance program for the depressed industry. The bill provides for payments to producers of up to 75 percent of the difference between current prices of lead and zinc and a 14.5-cent level.
- The Senate Labor Committee approved a measure to provide enforcement machinery for the 1958 Welfare & Pension Plan Disclosure Act. A similar measure has been approved by the House Labor Committee and is awaiting clearance from the Rules Committee.
- The Senate Labor Committee approved an Administration measure to expand federal assistance to community health services including nursing homes, research grants to improve out-hospital services, and extension of Hill-Burton hospital loan provisions.
- The Senate Labor Committee approved a bill to offer beneficiaries of the Railroad Retirement System the same optional decreased-benefit retirement at age 62 recently approved by Congress for the social security system.

The education bill which the House refused to consider contained appropriations for $615 million for new construction, aid to federally impacted areas and extension of the National Defense Education Act loans program. This was a sharp reduction from provisions in the three bills killed off by the Rules Committee. Not included in the House action was a separate measure—a five-year loan and grant program for college construction. The impacted aid and student loan measures may be offered separately before the session ends.

The Senate had previously passed a three-year $2.5 billion federal aid to education bill containing school construction funds and aid for teachers salaries.

In the foreign aid area, strong opposition developed after the House refused to accept the long-term financing through the Treasury, with New York Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller and former Vice Pres. Richard M. Nixon both publicly opposing the Treasury borrowing plan while the conference sought a solution.

Job Security Pattern Set In UAW-GM Negotiations

House Cuts $600 Million:

Foreign Aid Funds Left Up to Senate

By David L. Perlman

The Kennedy Administration looked to the Senate to salvage the nation's foreign aid program after the House voted to appropriate nearly $600 million less than the amount it had authorized—just a few days before—for economic and military assistance.

Only a rebellion against House Appropriations Committee slashes in military aid funds kept the setback to Pres. Kennedy's program from being even more severe. A hastily-formed bipartisan coalition, including liberal Democrats but led by Republicans, successfully restored $300 million of the $400 million the committee cut from military aid.

The House refused by indecisive margins to restore heavy cuts made in authorized programs of loans and grants to underdeveloped countries and in economic aid programs to enable friendly nations to devote a larger part of their national budgets to military strength.

Administration supporters, pointing their hopes on the Senate, expected the upper house to vote close to the $4.25 billion in foreign aid authorized by Congress. It would then be up to a conference committee to seek a compromise.

The House, which earlier had rejected by a decisive 242 to 169 margin an effort by the Kennedy Administration to salvage segments of its once-broad aid to education program, passed with little opposition extensions of two existing school programs.

Extended for two years were the impacted areas program, which provided federal funds for schools crowded by military or federal ci-

Swift Pact Raises Pay In 15 Plants

Chicago—A new contract between the Meat Cutters and Swift & Co. provides pay increases of as much as 19 cents an hour over three years plus added protections and benefits for workers displaced by plant or department shutdowns.

Wage provisions of the agreement call for hourly increases at 10 of the company's 15 plants of 7 cents an hour in the first year and 6 cents an hour in the second and third years.

Additional raises for skilled workers bring the average first year increase to 10 cents, the union said.

The contract gives displaced employes the right to transfer to other plants, company payment of moving costs when transfers are accepted, increased separation pay, early retirement rights, and extended hospital and surgical protection in the event of layoffs.

An unaffiliated union, the National Brotherhood of Packinghouse Workers, also reached agreement with Swift on terms compar-

'. . . We Have Really Begun to Move'

Labor Day Speeches Stress Job Problem

AFL-CIO leaders underscored the persistence of high-level unemployment and other social ills while warning the nation, in a series of Labor Day radio addresses, not to be lulled into apathy by the legislative advances of the past year or the current upturn in the economy.

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, in a speech carried by the National Broadcasting Co., contrasted this Labor Day with that of 1960 and found that "the great difference . . . when we look at our domestic affairs, is that at last we have really begun to move again."

But, he added: "No American can be complacent when more than five million others are idle; when employment in many industries is shrinking under the impact of automation and technological change; when our school system is being strangled for lack of funds; when many of our aged are pauperized by medical bills; when full citizenship and full opportunity are denied to millions of Americans because of their race or creed."

Tentative Agreement Reached

By Eugene A. Kelly

Detroit—A new pattern of job security emerged for the Auto Workers for the next three years as the union and General Motors reached a tentative agreement on economic issues patterned after the benefits contained in the American Motors contract.

The UAW indicated it would move promptly to seek the same principles in new agreements with Ford and Chrysler as the union and GM negotiators continued discussions on non-economic issues involving overtime, production standards and other conditions.

Stalemate Averted

The agreement, the climax of night-and-day bargaining, followed an appeal by Pres. Kennedy for a "just settlement" without a strike after an apparent stalemate. GM substantially increased its offer of Aug. 22 to conform more closely to the pace-setting agreement between the UAW and American Motors, smallest of the four major automakers.

Emerging from the negotiating room for a pre-dawn press conference after hours of tense bargaining, UAW Pres. Walter P. Reuther and GM Vice Pres. Louis G. Seaton said the union had postponed its strike deadline to 10 a. m. Sept. 11 and that both parties had extended their collective bargaining agreements to the same hour.

"We have reached substantial agreement in principle on national economic issues," Reuther said. He reminded reporters that many non-economic issues remain to be ne-

ABC Wins Another NBC Biscuit Plant

Fair Lawn, N. J.—The AFL-CIO American Bakery & Confectionery Workers won a major victory when workers at the National Biscuit Company here gave the ABC 719 votes against 572 votes for Local 405 of the ousted Bakery & Confectionery Workers in a National Labor Relations Board election.

Rejection of the expelled union by the majority in the voting unit was interpreted by ABC spokesmen as a repudiation of Aurelio L. Irizarry, president of the long-established Local 405 and an international vice president of the B&C.

Two weeks before the election,

Non-Operating Rail Unions Ask Pay Hike, 6-Month Layoff Notice

Eleven rail unions representing 600,000 maintenance, clerical and service workers, have submitted contract demands for a 25-cent hourly increase effective Nov. 1, when the existing wage agreement expires.

The "non-operating" unions also asked for a new work rule requiring railroad management to give six months advance notice of layoffs. Chairman G. E. Leighty of the Railway Labor Executives' Association, spokesman for the co-operating "non-ops," said the layoff notice would be "a first step toward meeting the problem of railroad unemployment."

The unions based their wage demand on the need "to correct the present wage inequity" for railroad workers which he said had resulted from a three-year moratorium on wage increases between 1956 and 1959 and the "disappointing" settlement which the unions concluded with the railroads in 1960. At that time the unions took a 5 cent wage increase coupled with improvements in several areas of fringe benefits.

Leighty said the 1960 settlement, based on recommendations by a Presidential Emergency Board, had been accepted "reluctantly." He added:

"With due regard for the public and our desire to avoid a transportation tie-up, the non-operating workers sacrificed their just demands and went along. This year, however, we intend to get a fair wage settlement."

Joining in the contract proposals were the Machinists, Railway Clerks, Boilermakers, Sheet Metal question confronting the nation and the key to many other problems.

"The American economy is freedom's greatest material asset," Reuther said, "and if we can fully mobilize the productive potential that full employment and full production will make possible we can meet our needs at home and we can carry out our responsibilities in the world."

● Vice Pres. George M. Harrison, speaking over the Columbia Broadcasting System, said the unemployment problem would be serious enough in a peaceful world but is doubly serious "when our whole concept of a free society is challenged by an arrogant and aggressive tyranny."

● Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler, on the Mutual Broadcasting Co., listed a host of material possessions the American standard of living, spurred by the labor movement, has brought to most workers and their families. But in many non-material areas, such as education, progress is urgently needed, Schnitzler asserted.

"Right now, the whole school system in America is being strangled by lack of money," he said.

On television, the AFL-CIO produced film, "Land of Promise," first shown on Labor Day 1960, was presented again this year in an updated version broadcast by the National Educational Television network.

Meany, addressing his radio audience, congratulated the Kennedy Administration and Congress for taking steps to solve a number of problems he had called attention to a year ago.

He cited specifically area redevelopment legislation, the assault on slums through "the strongest federal housing law in 12 years," extended benefits and protection in a "much-improved" minimum wage law, and the Administration's executive efforts to wipe out discrimination in government and on government contracts.

More Action Urged

In combatting unemployment, however, Meany declared the Administration—while not indifferent—"has not done enough."

The AFL-CIO President appealed for "more vigorous action" and urged immediate support for: (1) a program of federal aid to short-term public works programs, embodied in a bill proposed by Sen. Joseph S. Clark (D-Pa.), the principles of which Pres. Kennedy already has endorsed: and (2) temporary forgiveness of $100 in the withholding taxes on wages.

Reuther, president of the Auto Workers, equated the goals of organized labor with those of the country and said there is "much unfinished work" to be done in achieving them.

"Take the field of education," he said. "The American labor movement has shared the view for many years that every child in America, regardless of race or creed or color, is entitled to the kind of adequate education opportunity so that each child can grow to its maximum stature intellectually, culturally and spiritually.

"On the other end of society it's what we do with our retired citizens. We believe we need to make more meaningful progress in providing our older citizens with a greater measure of economic security and human dignity. And in this respect we believe that passage of legislation to provide hospital and medical care as a part of the social security structure is an essential step in this direction."

Expansion Stressed

Harrison, president of the Railway Clerks, said the continuing increase in population and the rapid rate of technological progress will mean more unemployment in the future unless the economy expands enough to "fully use our industrial resources and provide jobs for all."

Economic growth at such a rate, he said, is "our number one need to refute the propaganda of the Communists."

Schnitzler, addressing himself to the American housewife, recounted the advantages unions have brought in behalf of all workers.

"If there weren't any unions, you and your husband, and all the other Americans who work for wages and salaries—who really are the great majority in this country—wouldn't have any central voice to speak for you at all," he declared.

He expressed pride that the gains of unions have been national gains and noted that labor "almost single-handedly" had fought to win the improvements in the federal minimum-wage law, due to become effective Labor Day.

"Union membership by your breadwinner is not a tax upon your budget," he told the housewives. "His participation in this great labor movement is an essential part of your well-being as a homemaker and as a citizen."

AFM, Met Agree Arts Need Help

New York—Spokesmen for Metropolitan Opera musicians and management, testifying on proposals for a new contract, share the opinion that some form of government subsidy would help the famed opera society solve its money troubles over the long pull.

Pres. Herman Kenin of the Musicians testified at an arbitration hearing conducted by Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg that union and management must help secure "governmental assistance" for the performing arts. Met Pres. Anthony A. Bliss listed four ways to get more income for the opera—subsidy, television broadcasts, a longer season or the resumption of music recordings.

Goldberg stepped into the dispute at the request of Pres. Kennedy after the Metropolitan management had cancelled the 1961-62 season. After hearing opening arguments here, he gave the parties until Sept. 15 to submit written statements and until Sept. 29 to file rebuttals. By agreement of the two groups, Goldberg will then make a final and binding decision on terms of a new contract.

Kenin said he appeared to voice the long-range needs of musicians. Pointing out that the Met's difficulties were clearly discernible 10 to 20 years ago, the AFM president said the union's warnings have been treated as a "voice crying in the wilderness of official and public indifference."

The negotiators, Kenin, said, must not only "insure another brief span of life" for the Met but also must lay the groundwork for "sorely needed legislation" to bring "the kind of governmental assistance that almost every other nation of the world" has afforded the performing arts.

Bliss told Goldberg that Met management is supporting efforts by civic and government leaders to obtain government assistance to the opera.

Pres. Alfred J. Manuti of AFM Local 802 said the union believes its original proposals were justified but has, in a desire to save the season, scaled down its wage proposal to $220 a week.

The Met has a minimum scale of $170.13 a week but offered to raise it to $175 a week for the first year of a three-year contract, $180 for the second and third years. The union said bluntly that these pay schedules were inadequate for highly trained musicians.

206,000 March:

N.Y.C. Stages Record Labor Day Parade

New York—The AFL-CIO in this city told the world of free labor's dedication to democratic ideals in a Labor Day parade that was bigger than anything of its kind in the nation's history.

There were 206,000 trade unionists in the line of march in spite of heat that reached a steaming 94 degrees. Nearly a million New Yorkers and visitors to the city were on the sidelines in the course of the 12-hour march, according to the official estimates.

But even more than the numbers, it was the spirit of the marchers that gave the parade its impact. All through the blistering day and into the night they sang, shouted and displayed their banners. They proclaimed pride in their skills and in the achievements of their organizations. They demanded action on jobs that still had to be done. They expressed their determination to help in the great tasks facing America at home and in the world.

The international crisis was much in the minds of the marchers. With such signs as "Kennedy spoke for us on Berlin," "We want a world without fear" and "Build UN", they let the world know that free labor stands united in defense of freedom and a secure peace.

In the stands were 75 trade unionists and students from Asia, Africa, Europe and Latin America who are touring the country under government and AFL-CIO auspices. They attended the parade as guests of the City Central Labor Council, the sponsors.

Messages in Parade

Other messages in the parade were directed at city, state and national lawmakers, urging action on unemployment and exploitation, on civil rights and medical care.

Another major note was aimed at fellow-citizens, urging them to register and vote. Partisan banners were barred from the parade in spite of the heated mayoralty race then under way in the city.

Mayor Robert F. Wagner, running for re-election with the backing of the labor council, was grand marshal. Other major candidates were guests in the reviewing stand and were greeted impartially by Council Pres. Harry Van Arsdale.

Sec. of Labor Arthur J. Goldberg also reviewed the parade as did former Pres. Harry S. Truman and New York's Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller.

The final and largest delegation was the 25,000-member contingent of Local 3, Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical workers, which formed a spectacular torch and electric light procession accompanied by a dozen illuminated floats including a towering replica of the Empire State Building.

Long after they passed the reviewing stand the waves of torches and flashlights could be seen moving up the avenue while floodlights dappled the skyscrapers on either side.

Many union members came in the garb of their native or ancestral lands, the costumes representing almost every part of the globe.

One of the more sensational demonstrations was a Chinese dragon dance performed over the whole 40-block line of march by members of the Ladies Garment Workers.

Portraits Line Fifth Ave.

Portraits of AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany and of all former presidents of AFL and of CIO were placed on light poles along the entire route on Fifth Ave. between 26th and 63rd Streets. In addition to Meany, they were Samuel Gompers, William Green, John L. Lewis, Philip Murray and Walter P. Reuther.

Thousands of retired union members marched or rode with their unions. The service of unions to younger people was marked by the participation of scholarship winners, apprentices, Boy Scout troops, baseball and football teams and civil defense patrols.

The chairman of the council parade committee was Gerald J. Ryan, president of Local 94 of the Uniformed Firemen's Association. Edward M. Menagh, business representative of IBEW Local 3 was parade director.

Hatters' Union Label Key to New Contract

Corsicana, Tex.—The Hatters' union label again has been the key to a new contract and expanded unionization of a major hat firm in this "right-to-work" state.

Texas Miller Products, a division of Miller Bros. Hat Co. and the third largest producer of men's hats in the industry, has agreed to a two-year contract providing hourly pay increases of 7 cents this year and 5 cents next.

A feature of the agreement, comparable to that concluded last spring with Byer-Rolnick Hat Corp. in Longview, Tex., grants the company the right to use the Hatters' label when 97 percent of its 850 employes here are members of the union.

The firm, which manufactures Adam hats and other brands, until now has not been eligible to use the label, but an intensive organizing drive has brought large numbers of workers into the union, Hatters Pres. Alex Rose said.

Texas Miller some time ago challenged the union's bargaining rights by seeking a new National Labor Relations Board election. Under the pressure of an extensive "buy union" campaign by the Hatters, however, it withdrew the NLRB petition and accepted the contract terms.

Negotiations for the union were led by Rose, Vice Pres. Carmen Lucia, Vice Pres. John Kuliesh and Label Dir. Al Smoke.

Canadian Bishops Urge Joining Unions

Ottawa, Ont.—The Canadian Catholic Conference, a voluntary association of Catholic bishops, in its annual Labor Day message urged all workers — both urban and rural—to join unions.

"Too many workers still do not belong to organizations of their own," the bishops declared in calling on the government to encourage union membership, so workers would "be associated in the working out and executing of those economic and social policies that are necessary to their welfare."

UAW and GM Set Job Security Pattern

American Motors Formula Basis For Tentative Contract Agreement

gotiated, along with local agreements on working conditions, and that a strike still was possible.

The dramatic announcement was followed by these developments:

- GM offered similar contract terms to the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers for 23,000 employes in six parts and appliance plants. IUE negotiators E. J. Kraft and Joe Swire also warned of many unresolved issues but said the economic offer "seems satisfactory." IUE's strike deadline was extended to Sept. 11.
- At Ford, union and management extended the contract to midnight Sept. 13. Chrysler was asked to set a new date also, and union negotiators will ask both companies to follow GM's lead on contract terms.
- Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg congratulated the UAW and GM on their "industrial statesmanship" in reaching a settlement which "appears fair and reasonable" and is based on "preserving price stability."

Quizzed by reporters, Reuther said GM's economic offer was "comparable to that of a sister company" but that "if we cannot work out the non-economic issues and the local issues" there will be no agreement.

The "sister company" was identified by another union spokesman as American Motors, which reached an accord with the UAW late in August. The accord included profit-sharing and a stock-sharing plan which other companies rejected, but it also included provisions the Wall Street Journal described as "probably the closest thing to a guaranteed annual wage for production workers" that U.S. industry ever has seen.

Three key job security provisions of the accord were these:

- A guarantee that a union member who works less than 40 hours a week will receive half-pay or more for the hours he doesn't work.
- An increase in supplemental unemployment benefits (SUB) which, when added to unemployment compensation, will give a worker 75 percent of his normal take home pay as against the present 65 percent.
- An increase in the duration of SUB payments from 26 weeks to 52 weeks a year.

GM rejected the profit-sharing provisions of the American Motors contract, but Reuther indicated that the union had secured economic concessions providing job security and other provisions approximating these in the AMC contract:

- Continuation of the annual wage improvement factor of 2.5 percent or six cents an hour, whichever is greater.
- Continuation of the cost-of-living escalator clause with quarterly adjustments based on the Consumer Price Index without any ceiling on the amount that a worker may receive.
- Transfer of 12 cents of the current 17-cents cost-of-living "float" into the base wage so that no decline in the index can affect the new base wage.
- Full corporation payment of hospital and medical care for GM workers and their families.
- Increase in basic pension provisions from $2.40 a month per year of past service and $2.50 for each year of future service to a flat $2.80 per month for both types of service.
- Vesting of pension credits after 10 years of service, and improved disability retirement benefits.
- Pay for short workweeks at the rate of 65 percent of the regular hourly pay for every hour less than 40 per week except during model changeovers, when the rate shall be 50 percent for every hour less than 40.
- Improvement in SUB from the present 65 percent of take home pay to 75 percent in supplemental benefits; an increase in maximum SUB from $30 to $40; and relaxing of eligibility rules.

AMC Contract Signed

At meetings here in August, union conference boards representing workers of GM, Ford and Chrysler rejected management offers as inadequate and warned that a strike would be called if necessary. Soon afterward the union reached its agreement with American Motors.

On Aug. 29 the UAW executive board authorized the extension of the GM agreement from midnight Aug. 31, to 10 a.m. Sept. 6. Four days later the union offered GM the profit-sharing plan contained in the AMC accord which GM turned down.

Later the UAW proposed that GM provide its workers with benefits comparable to those offered by AMC, and when that was rejected, it proposed final and binding arbitration, which also was spurned.

GM locals voted for strike authorization by a margin of about 93 percent. All had prepared signs and picket assignments. When the "zero hour" was reached, Chevrolet and Fisher Body locals with 10,000 members walked out in Pittsburgh, St. Louis and Norwood, Ohio, but Reuther indicated all would be back at work promptly.

LIGHTS BURN BRIGHTLY in General Motors building in Detroit as Auto Workers and company negotiators work until 3:20 a. m. on Sept. 6 hammering out agreement in principle on contract terms assuring workers improved job security and other economic benefits.

Job Injury Law Hailed On 50th Anniversary

Enactment of the first state workmen's compensation law by Wisconsin was "one of the great landmarks in social legislation," Pres. Kennedy observed at the unveiling of a stamp commemorating the 50th anniversary of the law.

Although the Wisconsin measure set the pattern for similar laws in all states and led to other social legislation, "there is still a good deal of unfinished business," the President declared at ceremonies on the south lawn of the White House.

The ceremonies were attended by Vice Pres. Johnson, Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg, Postmaster Gen. J. Edward Day and other Cabinet members, Gov. Gaylord A. Nelson of Wisconsin, members of the Wisconsin congressional delegation, and members of the AFL-CIO Executive Council.

AFL-CIO Vice Pres. Peter T. Schoemann, representing the federation, pledged labor's support to Kennedy in his efforts to arouse the country to the need for improvements in workmen's compensation laws.

Said Schoemann, president of the Plumbers & Pipe Fitters:

"What the AFL-CIO seeks today is a program that would restore each occupationally injured worker to his maximum physical and mental capacity, with whatever retraining is necessary to return him to useful service to society. These goals are not idle dreams. They are practical and attainable."

Day, speaking at Labor Day ceremonies in Milwaukee's War Memorial Center—where the workmen's compensation stamp was placed on sale—described the Wisconsin law as the first of a series recognizing "those humanitarian principles which attribute to the worker the dignity his vital place in a free society demands."

Pres. J. F. Friedrick of the Milwaukee County Labor Council presided at the first-day ceremonies. Council Sec. Fred Erchul headed the local sponsoring committee.

Introduced to the audience that filled the War Memorial Center were Jacob Hahn and Michael Katzban, Milwaukee assemblymen and members of the Building Service Employes who were in the 1911 state legislature that passed the compensation measure.

FIRST ISSUES of the new stamp commemorating the 50th anniversary of Wisconsin's workmen's compensation law were in an album presented to AFL-CIO Vice Pres. Peter T. Schoemann, left, by Postmaster Gen. J. Edward Day. Schoemann, a leader of Wisconsin labor before he became head of the Plumbers & Pipe Fitters, represented the AFL-CIO at White House ceremonies.

Job Protection, Wages Won in New Swift Pact

able to those in the Meat Cutters' settlement.

Meanwhile, negotiations between AFL-CIO Packinghouse Workers and Swift, suspended on Sept. 1, were scheduled for resumption Sept. 11 under an extension of the old agreement. Talks also are continuing with Wilson and Armour.

The 19-cent, three-year wage formula contained in the Meat Cutters' agreement applies to workers at Swift plants in Boise, Ida.; Baltimore, Md.; Columbus, O.; Broderick, Calif.; East St. Louis, Ill.; Portland, Ore.; Ogden, Ut.; Scottsbluff, Nebr.; South San Francisco, Calif., and Watertown, S. D.

At Nashville, Tenn., the increase will be 7 cents effective Sept. 4, 1961, plus 3 cents next Sept. 3 and 3 cents more on Sept. 2, 1963.

The first step will be paid Sept. 3, 1962, with a reopener on wages a year later at plants in Ocala, Fla.; Montgomery, Ala.; Moultrie, Ga.; and Jackson, Miss.

Delegates from locals representing employes at the Swift plants have approved the agreement unanimously. Local members were scheduled to vote on ratification this week.

Among the details are:

- Continuation of the cost of living adjustment of 1 cent an hour for each half-point movement in the Consumer Price Index (Five cents an hour from recent COL increases is incorporated into basic wage rates. An additional 1 cent which the latest CPI figure would justify next January is part of the first year increase.)
- Increases for skilled employes by spreading the pay between wage brackets an additional half-cent an hour for a total difference of 4.5 cents.
- Liberalization of separation pay to a maximum of two weeks for each year of service.
- Provision for transfer of employes to new jobs in other Swift plants or departments if their own is shut down.
- Payment of moving expenses for transferred employes to a maximum of $500.
- Ninety-day advance notice of plant or department shutdowns.
- Optional retirement at full pension for employes between 55 and 60 in case of plant or department shutdowns and layoffs for more than two years. Mandatory retirement at full pension in such circumstances for employes 60 or older.

Freeman Acts To Wring Out Watered Ham

Agriculture Sec. Orville L. Freeman has acted to squeeze the water out of hams processed in federally inspected plants—reversing an action taken in 1960 by his Eisenhower Administration predecessor, Ezra Taft Benson.

Benson allowed producers to inject 10 percent water into hams—without labeling the contents—after processors complained that federally inspected plants were having trouble competing with local watered-ham processors.

Consumers protested loudly and one of Freeman's first acts was to schedule a public hearing on the controversial regulation. The AFL-CIO at the time urged that all hams be labeled with the amount of water added.

Irizarry secured a letter of endorsement from Pres. James Hoffa, of the expelled Teamsters, copies of which were mailed to all NBC employes. The Hoffa letter apparently had little, if any effect on the outcome.

Two years ago, the ABC challenged the B&C at the same plant and lost by 198 votes. The results this year showed that the ABC had registered a net gain of 335 votes since the 1959 election.

Negotiations for a national NBC agreement are currently underway. Arrangements have been made for integrating the demands of the Fair Lawn workers into the ABC proposals and provision has been made for the election of representatives from the newly won plant to be included in the ABC negotiating committee.

ABC now represents the workers in all NBC biscuit plants except a comparatively small operation in St. Louis, Mo., where approximately 250 workers are employed. The 9,000 employes represented by the ABC are employed in Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Atlanta, Chicago, Denver, Oakland, Houston, Buffalo, York, Pa., and Portland, Ore.

Why Not Medical Care?

THE SEPTEMBER social security checks delivered to millions of older citizens in the week beginning Labor Day reflect for the first time the increases in various benefits voted at the current session of Congress.

The changes in eligibility and other provisions have also resulted in nearly three-quarters of a million new applications for benefits by persons previously outside the scope of the law or drawing very limited benefits.

The millions drawing higher benefits and those drawing benefits for the first time must be somewhat mystified by the logic of lawmakers who are willing without so much as a murmer to provide broader benefits and badly needed increases but express grave doubts about simple legislative proposals to help these same social security beneficiaries, on sharply limited budgets, meet the increasing cost of medical care.

There is little doubt that the extra dollars in the new benefit checks will be used in many cases to help pay medical care bills. Perhaps that's why the American Medical Association did not launch a violent campaign of opposition to the social security increases.

But increasing benefits a few dollars every few years does not meet the major medical care problem confronting our older citizens. If anything, it accentuates the problem and the need, a need that can only be fulfilled by providing medical care for the aged under the social security system.

Handicapped People

THE LABOR MOVEMENT looks upon handicapped workers as it looks upon any other group that suffers from prejudice, discrimination and inadequate opportunity; it is committed to helping them win full status as productive members of the community.

The Office of Vocational Rehabilitation reports there are about 2 million physically disabled men and women who require vocational rehabilitation, but its present programs are serving only about a quarter-million persons. Many of the disabled do not know that rehabilitation services are available; many states do not provide the matching funds to implement the federal program; and in many areas the neceessary medical and vocational facilities are not available.

The foundation for a nationwide program of comprehensive rehabilitation already exists and organized labor is striving to extend it to all persons in need of assistance.

20 Years of Savings Bonds

THE U.S. TREASURY DEPT. this month is saluting the American labor movement for its 20 years of dedicated service to the cause of promoting the purchase of U.S. savings bonds by American workers.

Organized labor is proud to have supported this program effectively through the years of war, peace and cold war. It is important that millions of wage earners systematically build up their personal savings and become shareholders in their government.

But of greater importance, perhaps, is labor's realization that no group in America has a greater stake in the preservation of democracy than free trade unions, and that the savings bond program is critical in building and maintaining the nation's strength and security.

On behalf of its millions of members, the AFL-CIO accepts with pride the recognition of its role in the savings bond program over the past two decades and pledges its continued support.

'We're STILL in the Red'

'Blame Labor!'

The Mudslingers Never Tire Of Using the Unions as Targets

BLAME LABOR! It's rather startling how easily this cry falls from the tongues of congressmen and many commentators, or how bold and black it appears in print when even the leanest bit of alleged information turns up to put the trade union movement in a bad light.

Then, when all the facts are produced and the full picture is there for honest judgment to be made, there is a haunting silence. Labor's side of the story just cannot reach all the people who reacted to the sensational headlines of the half-truths and the partial picture.

Take the case of the missile program. A probe by the Senate Operations Committee under Sen. John McClellan (D-Ark.) heard testimony which disclosed jurisdictional problems, instances of rather high pay and some strikes.

Immediately the charge was made that labor was scuttling the missile program, undermining the national defense. Some even contended that the U.S. would now be leading the Soviet Union in space if it had not been for the unions.

Efforts by Pres. C. J. (Neil) Haggerty of the AFL-CIO Building & Construction Trades Dept. to tell labor's story were largely nullified. McClellan cut off the hearing before the union leader could testify. Haggerty was permitted to put his testimony in the record—where it appeared in small print—and it received little space in the press.

Sen. Wayne Morse (D-Ore.) made a detailed study of labor-management relations in the missile program and concluded that labor was unfairly blamed for many of the problems at the sites. Although he announced these conclusions from the Senate floor, they merited few headlines.

Finally, Sec. of Labor Arthur J. Goldberg made a trip to missile bases to obtain first-hand information. He returned to announce that during the month of July there were less man-days lost in the missile program than at any time in history.

"Of over 1 million man-days worked in the month of July in missile and space programs," he told a press conference and later Pres. Kennedy, "only 209 man-days were lost."

Goldberg called the loss "infinitesimal."

Nevertheless, while Goldberg's trip received some play and his press conference was fairly reported, much was buried in inside columns.

Many Americans have heard only the original sensational charges against the unions. The full and truthful story is unknown to them.

Another significant case in point has recently risen. Most Americans picked up their newspapers one day to learn that the union was "killing" the Metropolitan Opera. The Metropolitan Opera Association announced that it had canceled its season because of the "exorbitant demands of its orchestra"—member of Musicians Local 802. What are the facts?

RESPONSIBLE PUBLICATIONS, such as Business Week, Wall Street Journal, New York Herald Tribune and others, investigated the dispute. They learned that the nation's most talented musicians—members of orchestras—are almost criminally underpaid.

Business Week reported a survey of the Musicians which showed that some 500 musicians in the "big five" orchestra cities—New York, Boston, Philadelphia, Chicago and Cleveland—averaged $167 a week in the 1960-61 season. The other 1,800 musicians in the major orchestra group averaged $98.20. The overall average of the 2,300 members was only $117.

Only nine of the 26 orchestras have seasons lasting longer than 30 weeks. The New York Philharmonic paid for the longest season: 38 weeks. In the final analysis, then, the AFM found that the 2,300 musicians in the 26 top orchestras averaged less than $4,000 from their regular employment during the year including "a generous approximation for summer employment and post-season tours."

This situation was so tragic that it moved Richard Starnes, a columnist for the Scripps-Howard newspapers—who normally has little sympathy for unions—to tell the story of what is happening to classical musicians in this country.

He told the story of a Metropolitan Opera orchestra member—a position, in the musical world equivalent to being a star of the New York Yankees. The musician, Seymour Berman, told Starnes that last year he made less than $7,500.

Probably only in America does a member of an orchestra of such stature get treated so shabbily. In most countries the governments subsidize the orchestras. In the U.S. the musician is forced to do the subsidizing himself. He is the last one to want to kill off his job, but at the same time he has every right to expect his job to provide him with a decent income. (PAI).

Morgan Says:

Atlanta Desegregation Success The Result of Citywide Effort

By Edward P. Morgan

SOMETHING RATHER WONDERFUL happened in the city of Atlanta, Ga.

The token desegregation of four high schools was successfully and quietly achieved without the ugly rumble of violence. For the first time ever, white and Negro students attended the same classes and one of the proudest and certainly the most civilized city in the Deep South is still standing and its bearing could be prouder still because it proved just how civilized it is. The shrill voices of racial hatred and fear had warned that Atlanta's compliance with the equal rights provisions of the federal constitution would bring disaster, a kind of schoolroom equivalent of Gen. Sherman's march to the sea, with "southern standards" laid waste in its wake.

Morgan

But what happened was that the city recognized the fact that the Civil War is over and that to endure as a country, the United States cannot maintain double standards of citizenship anywhere.

In a sense, the story of how this recognition came about is more important than the shining, symbolic fact of the desegregation itself because without the city's awareness and collective will, events might have repeated the wanton, needless tragedies of Little Rock and New Orleans where law and order were allowed to be flouted by the mob.

Atlanta's success story is written in the responsibility of her public officials and the responsiveness of her citizens, with credit shared by the calm vigilance of the city's newspapers and broadcasting stations which not only kept the channels of communication open but clear for the transmission of factual information and intelligent opinion.

The American tendency to discover heroes would probably hoist into special prominence the personalities of Atlanta's retiring Mayor William B. Hartsfield and Editor Ralph McGill of the Atlanta Constitution, but they would be the first to protest that their efforts on the side of sanity were only part of a much larger pattern.

The Kudos and Accolades belong to the city as a whole. The great force has been a collection of groups under the banner of OASIS—the initials standing for Organizations Assisting Schools in September. This includes all the leading civic groups, service organizations, church and women's clubs, youth groups and others. The groundwork had been prepared by still another organization called HOPE, its initials meaning Help Our Public Education. The underlying theme which leading Atlantans embraced from the beginning was that "we must keep our schools open. We may not like or believe in desegregation but the world is changing and we cannot go back to the old ways."

OASIS set up a speakers' bureau in early summer. Some of the 150 volunteers—all prominent in the community—spoke as many as 20 times on the school problem. Many of the gatherings were held in private homes, group discussions following. The nine Negro students involved were brought together with white students weeks in advance.

NEARLY EVERY DAY for a month there had been frequent one-minute spots on local TV with Hartsfield, School Superintendent John Letson and Police Chief Herbert Jenkins, all in their own way urging peaceful acceptance of desegregation. Even Gov. Vandiver, a segregationist, in a broadcast warned he would not tolerate disorder in Atlanta. Eight hundred and forty sermons were preached in Atlanta churches on the need for order.

The picture has not been perfect. Hate groups have distributed scurrilous literature. One candidate for mayor is campaigning against the Supreme Court. Half a dozen potential troublemakers were arrested as a precaution. The difference between Atlanta and New Orleans and Little Rock is that demagogues and mobs were kept in hand by the forces of law and order with public support. There was leadership and followership. Serious incidents can still happen. But Atlanta's cool-headed preparations have already paid off.

One of Georgia's and the South's most distinguished citizens, Author Lillian Smith, herself an indefatigable volunteer in the cause, said that "the most beautiful thing about this beautiful story is that it taught Atlanta how to work together in a way that has never happened before. It has brought together, over many months, the old and the young, the boss and the worker, the white and the black, the rich and the poor. Nothing like it has ever happened in Atlanta before."

As for the nine young Atlanta Negroes, whose ambitions include medicine, teaching, engineering, archeology and the U.S. Navy, they can begin to reach for their careers with a confidence they couldn't have had before.

Washington Reports:

Public Works Bill Seen Getting First Priority in Next Congress

PUBLIC WORKS to reduce drastically high unemployment will be the No. 1 priority measure in the next session of the 87th Congress if its author, Sen. Joseph S. Clark (D-Pa.), has his way.

"I will use whatever influence I have, both with the Democratic leadership in the Senate and at the White House, to see that this is done," Clark declared on Washington Reports to the People, AFL-CIO public service program heard on 450 radio stations.

Sen. Clifford P. Case (R-N. J.) said on the same program that "it seems to me that having useful projects which could be turned on in the event of a down-turn in the economy is a very desirable thing." Tax reduction, building of schools and hospitals, transportation rehabilitation and urban renewal might have priority, he said.

The Clark Bill would provide for an emergency public works program of $500 million, and another $500 million to be used at the option of the President, with the money to be used in federal matching grants to state and local governments for public works which have already been planned and can begin in 18 months or less. The program would be in effect as long as the rate of unemployment was above 4 percent.

The unemployment rate is now near 7 percent, and neither Clark nor Case foresaw any appreciable reduction before the second session of Congress begins in January.

"Unemployment has been at a standstill for eight months," Case said. "And long-term unemployment is tending to lag even more. The total number of people without jobs for more than six months actually rose by more than 100,000 people to a peak for the year of a million."

CASE EXPECTS the manpower and development bill to be of great assistance in helping train unemployed workers in new skills and to get jobs. He has asked Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg to give special consideration under the bill to the central New Jersey area, and has been promised such consideration. Unemployment in New Jersey has been a point or so higher than the national average.

Clark discounted Pres. Kennedy's fear that the public works bill might seriously affect the budget.

"There are an awful lot of penny-pinchers up there in the Bureau of the Budget," he asserted, "and we have to be careful. I want to raise the additional revenue (needed to balance the budget) by getting the economy back on the road, increasing the gross national product.

"This in itself would bring in nearly $10 billion of additional revenue and in addition we have tax loopholes which if closed would bring in several billions more."

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

SPOKESMEN FOR THE Kennedy Administration indicated that the "compromise" on the foreign aid authorization bill, under which the executive can make long-term economic development loans but the Appropriations Committee must clear the money year by year, was "acceptable." This is using bland language to save face and mask a serious defeat.

The record of the Appropriations Committees of House and Senate shows that annually they make deep slashes in the amount of money technically authorized for foreign aid. Sometimes the proposed reductions are compromised upward, but Congress never votes all the money the authorization bills make legitimate.

This is what the Cuban economic czar, Ernesto (Che) Guavara, referred to when he told Latin delegates to the recent Punta del Este social and economic conference not to trust Kennedy Administration pledges of billions in U.S. economic aid. Congress, he said, doesn't like to back up such pledges—and he showed an intimate knowledge of a fact of American political life.

The Kennedy leaders also are well aware of the fact, which is why they fought hard to obtain authority for long-term Treasury financing of five-year economic development loans.

Yearly action by the Appropriations Committees means that small groups within the House and Senate have something close to a veto power over foreign aid projects. It is another fact of political life that in the American Congress, the majority is extremely reluctant to disregard and override recommendations from committees made up of veteran and very conservative seniors.

The House-Senate conferees who drafted the final foreign aid authorization bill reached the so-called "acceptable" plan because they were forced to recognize that the House simply would not vote to approve Treasury financing of long-term foreign economic aid. The Administration swallowed the defeat and made the best compromise it could get.

THE NATURE OF Appropriations Committee action was promptly revealed when for the current fiscal year the House committee slashed nearly $900 million from a $4.25 billion measure previously authorized.

One-third of the cut was restored on the floor when Rep. Otto Passman (D-La.), whose subcommittee made the original slashes, offered to put back $175 million and Rep. Gerald R. Ford, Jr. (R-Mich.), also an Appropriations Committee member, insisted on boosting this to $300 million.

But the money bill as passed by the House lagged $100 million short in military aid appropriations and more than $400 million short in economic aid. What would eventually happen depended on the usually more liberal Senate and what kind of final compromise the House would be willing to accept.

Treasury financing for long-term economic loans—financing not dependent on year-by-year Appropriations Committee action—was sought by the Administration precisely because of this kind of experience. When the effort failed, it was a setback not to treated as insignificant.

ANOTHER SETBACK, this one perhaps temporary, came when the Rules Committee refused to clear for House floor action the Administration worker-training and retraining bill, already passed by the Senate.

The Rules Committee has been the graveyard of two major bills—education and worker retraining, the latter a key element in any government program to counteract the effects of automation, changing technological methods and economic shifts.

The school aid bills died when a liberal Democrat, Rep. James J. Delaney (N. Y.), felt so strongly that the measures were discriminatory toward parochial schools that he voted on the Rules Committee with seven conservatives to kill all of them.

The worker-retraining bill was denied clearance on a 7-to-7 vote when a death in the family of Rep. Ray Madden (D-Ind.) required Madden to be absent from a Rules unit meeting.

UNEMPLOYMENT NEAR 7 percent continuing for eight months requires congressional action, including public works, training of the unemployed, tax reduction, closing of tax loopholes and other means, according to Sen. Joseph S. Clark (D-Pa.), left, and Sen. Clifford P. Case (R-N. J.), who discussed the situation on Washington Reports to the People, AFL-CIO public service radio program.

Non-Ops Ask Wage Raise, Layoff Notice

Workers, Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, Maintenance of Way Employes, Firemen & Oilers, Railway Carmen, Railroad Telegraphers, Railroad Signalmen and Hotel & Restaurant Employes.

Each union has presented its demands to each railroad. Under the framework of the Railway Labor Act, negotiations move up from the local to regional to national levels if agreements are not reached.

Arbitration May Be Offered

If there is no agreement at the national level the National Mediation Board seeks to bring about a settlement and offers arbitration. If arbitration is declined by either party, the mediation board may request the President to appoint a special emergency board to investigate the dispute and recommend a settlement. Unions are prohibited from striking for 60 days after a presidential board is convened.

Urging greater job security in addition to higher wages, Leighty said the non-op unions are agreed that "some action must be taken to deal with the problem of mass unemployment in the railroad industry, which today has fewer employes than at any time since 1890." He said "over 400,000 jobs have disappeared in the industry since 1955."

The proposed six-month notice of layoffs, Leighty declared, "may induce railroad management to begin giving needed attention to better long-range planning and scheduling of work so as to avoid the severe cutbacks which result from their present failure to plan on a sensible basis."

The union proposal would provide exceptions to the notice requirement for emergency conditions such as floods, fires or strikes halting rail operations.

Other Developments

In other developments in the railroad field:

- The Presidential Railroad Commission resumed its hearings on the work rules dispute between management and the five operating unions. During a two-week recess, public members of the tripartite commission rode in freight and passenger trains to get a first-hand look at railroad working conditions.

Before the recess, rail management had presented demands for drastic work rules changes, including abolition of the jobs of most locomotive firemen, and the unions had presented testimony refuting carrier claims. The hearings reopened with presentation by the unions of their case for improved working conditions including a night differential, holiday pay, shorter hours and job security.

- In a separate development, an arbitrator ruled against the Transport Workers in a dispute arising out of interpretation of a work rules agreement which ended a 12-day strike on the Pennsylvania Railroad last September. The long delay in handing down the arbitration decision—the case had been argued last April—almost resulted in a strike by nearly 15,000 TWU members.

The union had called a strike for Sept. 1 if the arbitration decision had not been handed down by that date but a federal district judge on Aug. 30 granted the railroad's request for an injunction barring a walkout. On Sept. 1, Arbitrator Francis J. Robertson ruled against the union on two issues involving assignment of work.

- A scheduled strike by the unaffiliated Railway Conductors on the Pullman system was postponed after the National Mediation Board recommended establishment of a presidential emergency board.

Plasterers Set Up Promotion Program

Denver—Delegates to the 39th convention of the Plasterers & Cement Masons here endorsed a vigorous program to promote use of the crafts and skills of the union's members.

The program, which will stress the fire safety, utility and beauty of plaster, was proposed by union Pres. Edward J. Leonard, and the delegates voted to increase the per capita tax from $1.50 to $2 a month to finance its support.

The union is building in its headquarters in Washington a "show case" for plaster and cement masonry which contractors, architects and specifications writers can visit to gain fruitful ideas for use in their design and construction projects.

In order successfully to meet the increase anticipated for the trades in the years ahead, the convention also endorsed a beefing-up of apprenticeship programs.

Union leaders addressing the convention included AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler; Pres. C. J. Haggerty of the Building & Construction Trades Dept.; Pres. L. M. Raftery of the Painters; Pres. Lloyd A. Mashburn of the Lathers; Pres. John J. Murphy and Sec. Thomas F. Murphy of the Bricklayers and Sec.-Treas. Joseph Lewis of the Union Label & Service Trades Dept.

Schnitzler Chides 'Neutrals'

Speaking of the European meeting of the non-aligned nations, Schnitzler bluntly observed that "they don't realize that if it wasn't for us they wouldn't be neutral." Of the international situation as a whole, he said:

"Retreat anywhere in the world would mean retreat all over the world. It gets to be that simple."

Ridiculing industry claims that wage increases negotiated by unions have an "inflationary" effect on the economy, Schnitzler in a press conference said that the average direct wage cost of a $3,000 automobile was only $164.

The major inflationary force in the economy is generated, the AFL-CIO official said, when industries such as the steel industry "raise workers' wages $1 and then turn around and boost prices $3."

He emphasized the plight of American migrant farm laborers in calling for an end to the importation of Mexican contract workers under the bracero program and for major improvements in the wages and living standards of U.S. migrant farm employes. Bills to extend greater protection to these workers and their families are now pending in Congress.

The labor movement as a whole, he declared, is achieving "greater acceptance" on the part of unorganized groups.

"The workers are signing up," he asserted.

Chairman Richard J. Mitchell of the National Joint Board for the Settlement of Jurisdictional Disputes, in outlining the board's procedures, said that "conflicting personalities should never be permitted to influence any action in a jurisdictional dispute."

Message from Kennedy

In a telegram to the convention, Pres. Kennedy said in part:

"As we approach the end of this session of Congress, I am pleased to be able to report to your membership a distinct record of progress in the passage and development of legislation designed to accelerate our economic growth and improve the economic posture of all our citizens: A new minimum wage law, a program of temporary extended unemployment compensation, area redevelopment legislation, expansion of the United States Employment Service, and—of particular interest to your union—a broad new housing program."

"All these and others have already been enacted. Additional measures will follow. These governmental efforts are designed to help answer our single most important domestic challenge—the fulfillment of our declared national policy of full employment."

A floor collection for COPE netted $1,321. COPE Dir. James L. McDevitt, a vice president of the union, served as chairman of the constitution committee.

Harrison Tells TUC:

Nuclear Arms Race Blamed on Russians

Portsmouth, Eng.—The Soviet Union is responsible for resumption of the nuclear arms race, AFL-CIO Vice Pres. George M. Harrison bluntly told the 93d annual meeting of the British Trades Union Congress in this historic maritime city.

"Your country and mine," he told the approximately 1,000 delegates representing some 8 million workers, "tried for more than 32 months to work out a method to stop these tests, but we were unsuccessful because the Russians have refused to have international inspection and international control."

Harrison, an AFL-CIO fraternal delegate to the TUC congress and president of the Railway Clerks, accused the USSR of using its economic assistance program to promote its military aims.

Subversion Cited

"If Khrushchev were content to fight on the economic front," he said, "we would gladly accept that challenge. But Russia is engaged in worldwide subversive activities, infiltrating and penetrating the newer developing countries under the guise of giving economic aid."

He charged Khrushchev with arming and inciting a regime in Cuba "hostile to the U.S.," fostering the "so-called war of liberation" in Laos, and "making open military threats in ultimatum after ultimatum about Berlin."

"This is not the way to reduce world tension and promote world peace," Harrison continued. "Perhaps it is naive to believe that we can have total disarmament in the world, but certainly we can make a start in that direction by working toward the elimination of the frightful spectre of nuclear warfare."

He frankly told the delegates that while things had improved in the U.S. under the Kennedy Administration, there was still an unemployment pool of 7 percent of the labor force which might well be swelled because of automation, mergers and the mounting number of new workers entering the labor force as "war babies" come of age.

In closing, he pointed out that Great Britain and the U.S. are the "showplace of democracy," where it must be demonstrated that "our way of doing things, our political and economic systems, can provide a better life for all and an opportunity for everyone to advance."

AFL-CIO Vice Pres. Karl Feller, president of the Brewery Workers and also a fraternal delegate from the U.S. labor federation, gave the delegates what he called "a message of cheer."

'Not only have the progressive forces won an election in the United States," he said in a summation; "we feel we now have a government that under the influence of the President will consistently be on the side of a better life for men everywhere.

"Undoubtedly we will suffer defeats. Our wonderful people, who elected Pres. Kennedy, also elected many men to sit in Congress who will oppose him—and us—at every turn.

"Yet we are moving ahead again. We are going to keep moving—I'm sure of that—until we can be, beyond question, the exemplar as well as the titular leader of freedom's cause everywhere."

Feller predicted a change for the better for labor in the U.S.

"We believe the new Administration in Washington shares our conviction that collective bargaining is a natural and proper state of affairs between employer and employes," he said.

"And therefore we hope that when we have the privilege of visiting you again, we will be able to report not some 13.5 million members, but several million more."

The United States, he also said, is prepared to meet the challenge of world leadership carried so long by Great Britain.

36 Area Aid Plans Win ARA Approval

The Area Redevelopment Administration has approved 36 long-range plans for economic growth aimed at providing new jobs and industries in 180 of the nation's economically depressed counties.

ARA Administrator William L. Batt, Jr., said approval of the plans makes it possible for the areas involved to submit requests for federal assistance on specific projects designed to provide permanent employment opportunities.

The Area Redevelopment Act, signed by Pres. Kennedy on May 1, authorizes federal loans to help establish new industries or expand existing industries. It provides for loans or grants for community facilities needed to create permanent new job opportunities, technical assistance to communities, retraining programs for unemployed workers and subsistance allowances for workers acquiring new skills.

The blueprints for economic rehabilitation, many of them developed through labor, industry and civic cooperation, range from single county plans to broad regional groupings such as a proposal submitted jointly by 33 southern Illinois counties.

Economic development plans have been approved for areas in 22 states: Arkansas, Colorado, Florida, Georgia, Illinois, Indiana, Maryland, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, Mississippi, Missouri, Montana, New Mexico, New York, North Carolina, Oklahoma, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, Tennessee, Texas and West Virginia.

Plans approved to date cover approximately 20 percent of the 863 counties eligible for redevelopment aid on the basis of continued heavy, long-term unemployment.

A number of other economic development plans are still under consideration, the agency announced.

Text of Becu's Message To U.S., Canadian Labor

On the occasion of Labor Day 1961 I send the warmest greetings of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions to all workers in the United States and Canada and to our North American affiliated organizations.

At this moment international cooperation is needed more than ever, confronted as we are with the Communist threat to peace which may well disturb peaceful economic and social progress and increase the danger to democratic freedom. We can only be successful if we achieve the developing and strengthening of the trade union movements in the emergent countries and improve the standard of living of the masses. We must eradicate exploitation of the few.

On this Labor Day we particularly welcome Pres. John Kennedy's program of Alliance for Progress and firmly expect that the words will be put into deeds. Workers of North America, together with those of the whole world, will continue their onward march under the banner of bread, peace, freedom and social justice.

Kowalski Goads Defense Dept.:

U.S. Weighs Move to Kill Subsidies for Strikebreaking

The Defense Dept. is considering adding a clause to future procurement contracts to avoid subsidizing strikebreaking activities by suppliers, it has informed Rep. Frank Kowalski (D-Conn.).

The congressman had urged such action following disclosures by U.S. Comptroller Gen. Joseph Campbell that the Navy has underwritten at least $1.5 million in the strike costs of the Hamilton Standard Division of the United Aircraft Corp.

"This is further shocking evidence of how U.S. taxpayers are being saddled with costs that are due largely to strikebreaking and union-busting efforts," Kowalski declared.

He added that as a result of the disclosures, the General Accounting Office is launching a general investigation "of what appears to be a flagrant violation of the Armed Services Procurement Regulation" by Hamilton Standard.

Kowalski also reported he had forwarded Campbell's report to Chairman Carl Vinson (D-Ga.) of the House Armed Services Committee, and that Vinson had ordered a subcommittee to give the matter its attention.

The comptroller general's report revealed that a strike last year by members of Machinists District 91 at the Windsor Lock and Bound Brook, Conn., plants of Hamilton Standard had cost the company $3.7 million and that the Navy in subsequent negotiations had agreed to accept $1.5 million in excess costs attributable to the strike. In addition, the report said:

"An unidentified portion of the additional costs incurred because of the strike may be charged to the government under certain cost-plus-fixed-fee and price-redeterminable contracts for which final prices have not been established."

In an earlier report, the comptroller general said United Aircraft had asked the Navy to pay $7.5 million of some $10 million in strike costs incurred at its Pratt & Whitney Division in East Hartford. Kowalski was asked for similar data regarding costs during a strike at United's Sikorsky Division plants. All three divisions were struck at the same time, between June 8 and Aug. 9, 1960.

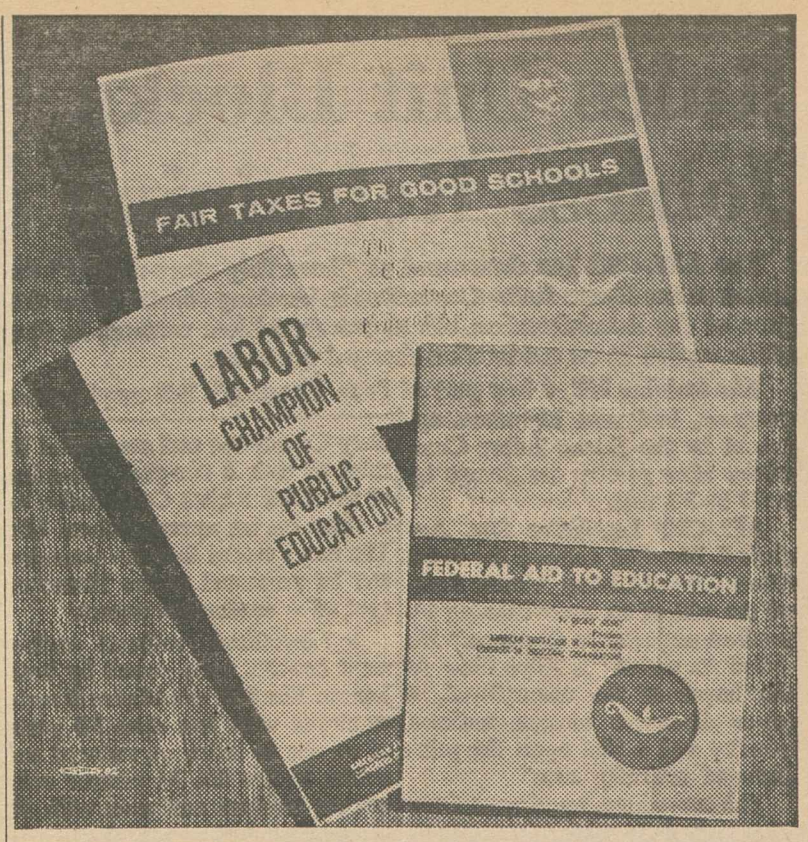
The record of added strike expenses incurred by Hamilton Standard, as listed by Campbell, was in the same pattern revealed in the report on Pratt & Whitney. Some of the details:

- Over the three-month strike period, Hamilton Standard's monthly costs for help-wanted advertising went up 80 percent; its training costs rose 260 percent, and its overtime expenditures increased 62 percent per hour worked. Labor cost on spoiled work alone amounted to 11.8 cents an hour for every hour of labor worked.
- In the four months after the strike, monthly costs for help-wanted advertising were 175 percent above normal; training costs were 264 percent above normal, and overtime costs were 25 percent above pre-strike levels. Labor cost on spoiled work jumped 47 percent above pre-strike levels.
- Although several hundred union members were seeking reemployment in the four months following the strike, Hamilton Standard's production force during the period was about 20 percent (881 employes) below the pre-strike level.
- During the four months after the strike, when hiring preference was given former strikers not taken back at the end of the dispute, the company hired only 231 employes (an average of less than 58 a month). But in January 1961—the first month after termination of preferential rehiring there was a net increase of 168 hourly-rated employes. And in January and February, training costs ran seven times higher than the average for the five months prior to the walkout.

Commenting on the report, Kowalski said:

"I believe the taxpayers are vitally concerned that our federal government maintain a fair and impartial role in lawful disputes between labor and management.

"The use of Treasury funds to subsidize the employer in strikes involving defense work has never been sanctioned by Congress. The knowledge that federal funds are used for that purpose disturbs every fair-minded citizen."



THESE PAMPHLETS will be available to high school debaters across the nation as they discuss the role of the federal government in education. The debate kit, prepared by the AFL-CIO, is available from the Pamphlet Division, AFL-CIO Dept. of Publications.

High School Debaters Given AFL-CIO Kits

The AFL-CIO has distributed to thousands of high school debaters across the country a kit of materials to assist them in discussing the role of the federal government in education.

The 1961-62 high school debate topics will involve such issues as federal aid for schools, teacher salaries and various levels of education.

The National University Extension Association, which administers the debates, announced the general topic and invited the AFL-CIO and other organizations to provide materials for its debate kits.

Pamphlets Listed

The AFL-CIO has contributed three pamphlets to explain the position of the American labor movement:

- "A Step Toward Real Partnership—Federal Aid to Education," by AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany.
- "Labor—Champion of Public Education," a historical account of labor's efforts to achieve a compulsory, free and democratic school system.
- "Fair Taxes for Good Schools—The Case for Federal Aid," an anaylsis of methods of financing schools and the case for modernizing these methods.

"Only the adequately informed can adequately govern themselves," wrote Meany in opening his statement. "Education is the indispensable basis for human progress, not merely in the physical sciences but in our way of life."

And yet, Meany noted, it would be obvious that true equality of education would not exist today if the high school debaters could be gathered together. Such a group would include students from well-equipped schools, with small classes and able, unhurried teachers. It likewise would include students from crowded, shabby, ill-equipped schools with teachers overworked and undertrained. This range, he added, represents differences "too great to be tolerable."

Organized labor, Meany continued, has recognized the crucial importance of education in a democracy since the early 1800s. Unions then, he noted, ranked free public schools with higher wages and shorter hours as primary objectives.

Worker Party's Role Cited

"Labor—Champion of Public Education" discusses labor's support of a better public school system from the early 19th century. The Workingmen's Party, organized in New York City in 1829, had as a major plank a demand for a school system "that shall unite under the same roof the children of the poor man and the rich, the widow's charge and the orphan, where the road to distinction shall be superior industry, virtue and acquirement without reference to descent."

"Fair Taxes for Good Schools" argues that the past and present systems of financing school systems represent regressive taxation and weigh unfairly on those least able to carry the burden. It pledges labor's support for whatever modernizing changes are necessary to achieve adequate education for all.

Copies of the AFL-CIO high school debate kit are available from the Pamphlet Division, AFL-CIO Dept. of Publications, 815 16th Street N. W., Washington 6, D. C.

Migrant Farm Labor Aids Passed by Senate

The Senate has passed five bills to protect migrant farm workers against exploitation, curb child labor on farms and help educate the children of migrants.

Still ahead, as the AFL-CIO News went to press, was an expected Senate battle over extension of the Mexican contract farm labor program. Both labor and the Administration have contended that the importation of large numbers of contract workers has lowered wages and reduced job opportunities for domestic farm workers.

One of the migrant worker bills, requiring federal registration of crew leaders, is pending in the House. The other companion bills are still in committee.

The crew leader registration bill would regulate the activities of middlemen who contract with growers to provide farm workers and who arrange for pay, transportation and living facilities. Crew leaders would be required to carry public liability insurance on vehicles and would be held responsible for deducting and transmitting social security taxes.

The other bills, introduced in the Senate by Sen. Harrison A. Williams, Jr. (D-N. J.) and in the House by Rep. Herbert Zelenko (D-N. Y.), provide:

- A five-year program of federal aid to states to improve educational opportunities for migrant workers and their families. The program, which would be administered by the U.S. Commissioner of Education, would reimburse states for the expense of educating migrant children, establish summer programs with the federal government paying the full cost the first two years and thereafter 50 percent of the cost, set up pilot programs of adult education.
- Up to $3 million a year for improvement of health services for migrant workers.
- A ban on after-school employment of children under 14, except that children between 12 and 14 could work within 25 miles of their permanent residence.
- Establishment of a National Advisory Council on Migratory Labor to advise the President and Congress on migratory problems and programs..

A two-year extension of the Mexican contract program—opposed by the Administration unless substantial reforms are made—has been voted by the House and approved by the Senate Agriculture Committee.

Sen. Eugene J. McCarthy (D-Minn.) has served notice that he will introduce an amendment to set a minimum wage for imported workers at 90 percent of the state or federal average wage for farm workers, whichever is lower, and that growers be required to offer the same terms to domestic workers before being allowed to hire aliens.

AFL-CIO Sets National Parley On Social Insurance Legislation

A two-part National Conference on Social Insurance Legislation will be held this fall under the sponsorship of the AFL-CIO, Pres. George Meany has announced in letters to the presidents and secretaries of all state central bodies.

In a follow-up letter, Dir. Nelson H. Cruikshank of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Social Security announced that one session will be held in Washington Oct. 30 through Nov. 2 for representatives of states east of the Mississippi River, and that the second, for states west of the Mississippi, will be held Nov. 6-9 in Denver.

"The purpose of this conference," Meany wrote, "will be to review developments and policies in the fields of workmen's compensation, unemployment insurance and temporary disability insurance. It is important, therefore, that your state delegation be composed of elected officers who have policy responsibility in these areas . . .

"State legislative developments this year in a period of high unemployment are cause of serious concern. I want to urge your full cooperation and participation in this conference in order that all those with legislative responsibilities can make the AFL-CIO an even more effective guardian of the purposes of social insurance."

Cruikshank said the agenda will include intensive study and analysis of developments in the three legislative areas listed by Meany and also a session on state legislation affecting health insurance plans and the regulation of rates. The emphasis throughout the conference, he added, will be on policy problems encountered in these areas.

"The conference will be planned to permit discussion of AFL-CIO policy and the problems encountered in its implementation," he added.

"By combining the resources of the national office with your state experience and by comparing experiences among the states, there should be opportunity for everyone to profit from the exchange. We will compare notes on employer strategy and draw the implications for our own legislative programs."

Cruikshank stressed that the conference will be a labor meeting, although "some national authorities outside of labor may be invited as resources." The press will not be invited to the working sessions, he said.

Each state body has been asked to send two or three delegates.

USWA Economist 'Loaned' to New CCL

Toronto—Clive Kidd, Steelworkers' Canadian research director, has been "loaned" to the new Caribbean Congress of Labor as the result of its appeal for aid in establishing itself.

Kidd, whose headquarters will be in Trinidad, will spend up to two years co-ordinating activities and services for unions scattered over about 20 islands and territories. He has a record of service to Caribbean unions dating back to assistance in 1953 in helping Jamaican bauxite workers negotiate a contract.

AFL-CIO Assails 'Incredible' Action:

Rules Unit Blocks Jobless Retraining

The AFL-CIO has denounced as "incredibly short-sighted" the action of the House Rules Committee in blocking consideration this year of the Administration bill to retrain jobless workers in new skills needed in an automation-changed economy.

The training bill, a key part of Pres. Kennedy's full employment program, had won bipartisan approval in the House Labor Committee after passing the Senate by a 60 to 30 vote.

AFL-CIO Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller accused the Rules Committee of having "clearly flouted the will of an overwhelming bipartisan majority in Congress." He called its action "a bitter blow to the hopes of the unemployed, a grave disservice to our national security and a blot upon the principle of majority rule."

The committee, meeting as Congress raced toward adjournment, kept the bill from the House floor by a 7 to 7 tie vote. One liberal Democratic member was absent, leaving the power to block action in the hands of the conservative coalition which has dominated the committee in past years.

Another major Administration bill—tightening provisions of the Welfare & Pension Plan Disclosure Act—failed of passage in the House even though it received a majority of votes.

Its sponsors, encouraged by apparent bipartisan support for the measure, sought to bypass the Rules Committee by seeking to bring it up under a suspension of the rules. This parliamentary approach requires a two-thirds vote. The 245 to 161 vote in favor of consideration fell shy of the needed margin.

Other Bills Move Forward

Other labor and Administration measures met with greater success. Among bills passed by one or both houses were these:

- Community health facilities bill, a labor-backed measure stepping up federal grants for health services, nursing home construction, out-patient care and research, passed the Senate unanimously. It had previously passed the House, but a conference will be necessary to compromise differences.
- Airport aid bill, making $375 million available to state and local governments over the next five years for airport construction and improved safety facilities, passed the Senate and was sent to conference with a House bill which provides a different method of financing.
- Sea water conversion program to expand the government's drive to develop less-costly methods of converting salt and brackish water into pure, usable water was given a big boost when the Senate approved a 10-year $100 million program. The House has passed a five-year $50 million bill.
- The Senate bypassed its Judiciary Committee and suspended its rules to tack a two-year extension of the Civil Rights Commission as a rider on an appropriations bill. The move means that the extension can be presented to the House as part of a conference report.
- Liberalized railroad retirement benefits were passed by both houses. The bills would permit male employes with less than 30 years of service to retire on reduced annuities at age 62. At present only women workers and men with 30 years of seniority may elect early retirement. Bills bring benefits generally in line with the social security law.

Hanford Compromise Pending

Still ahead for the House is a battle over a conference committee compromise on use of steam produced by the Atomic Energy Commission's plutonium plant at Hanford, Wash. The Senate approved the Administration's proposal to utilize the steam by-product to generate electricity. The House turned it down and instructed its conferees to hold firm on the issue.

A conference committee report approving construction of a small-sized generating unit, producing only enough electricity to serve the needs of the Hanford project itself, has been cleared by the Senate. If the House turns down the compromise, it would throw the entire Atomic Energy Commission appropriations bill back into conference.

House Rules Committee action blocking consideration of the manpower retraining bill came in the face of Labor Committee action trimming the bill back from a four-year to a two-year program in an effort to pick up Republican votes.

In the Senate, Republicans led an unsuccessful attempt to limit the program to a two-year "experimental" period. Even though House Administration supporters made this concession, all five GOP members of the Rules Committee voted against clearance.

Warning Sounded

The AFL-CIO statement pointed out that "millions of workers, victims of technological change . . . have no hope of returning to their old jobs."

Pointing to the need for mobilizing America's full resources to meet Soviet challenges, Biemiller charged that "through the incredibly short-sighted action of a few obstinate reactionaries, a proposal that would have done much to meet these problems has been callously set aside."

Despite the stepped-up pace of congressional activity, hope for adjournment by mid-September was waning.

There remained a possibility that the Senate would stay in session after adjournment of the House for prolonged debate on an effort to amend Rule 22, which sets conditions for cutting off debate and ending filibusters. A leadership pledge that supporters of anti-filibuster proposals would have the opportunity to make their move before adjournment averted a battle over the issue at the start of the session.

Missing from the House in the tail end of the session was the familiar figure of Speaker Sam Rayburn (D-Tex.) who was recuperating at his home from a back ailment. Majority Leader John W. McCormack (Mass.) was filling in.

Terry Endorses Health Care for Aged

Montgomery, Ala.—Surgeon General Luther L. Terry gave a strong endorsement to use of the social security system to provide health care for the aged in a speech to a joint session of the Alabama legislature here.

Terry, who heads the U.S. Public Health Service, said social security provides "the most logical, the most satisfying approach" to meeting health needs. The nation's experience with "other approaches," he said, "indicates that for many older people, action is too little and too late."

September 'Labor Month' In Bond Anniversary

The Treasury Dept. has designated September as "Labor Month" in its observance of the 20th anniversary of the payroll saving plan for U.S. Savings Bonds.

The program was hailed in a public service newspaper advertisement by AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, Chairman George E. Leighty of the Railway Labor Executives' Association and Pres. Thomas Kennedy of the Mine Workers.

"In these critical times," said Meany, "the safest investment for any American, and especially American workers, is U.S. Savings Bonds. At the same time bond purchases help keep America strong and free."

Leighty said "the most efficient and best respected workers are those who have formed the habit of saving regularly."

"There is no better way to do this," he added, "than by buying U.S. Savings Bonds through the payroll savings plan."

The Treasury reported that some eight million workers are enrolled in the payroll savings plan, that they save an average of $20 a month or a rate of $1 million a working hour, and that they account for about half of the total annual sales of E bonds. They work for 45,000 firms, many of which have offered the plan continuously since it was started in 1941.

Aid Cut $600 Million In Final House Vote

vilian families, and the National Defense Education Act, which authorizes loans to college students and is intended to bolster training in science, mathematics and other space-age skills. Passage was by a 378-to-32 vote.

During the debate, Chairman Adam Clayton Powell of the House Education & Labor Committee chastized congressmen who had opposed Administration proposals for aid to school construction and teachers' salaries, pointing out that they have been willing for the past 11 years to support federal funds for impacted areas—part of which goes to help pay teachers as well as construct and maintain buildings.

Powell said, however, that it had been a mistake for the Administration to try to push even a stripped-down general school aid bill through a "tired and tense House" the previous week. He saw little hope for a general school bill next year, he said, and declared his committee would concentrate on legislation to aid colleges, including a pending classroom construction measure.

The House Appropriations Committee's unprecedented $896 million slash in foreign aid appropriations came in the face of a joint appeal from Defense Sec. Robert S. McNamara and Sec. of State Dean Rusk.

Support from Eisenhower

They warned the committee that "this nation finds itself in an atmosphere of mounting crisis in which the forces of international communism stand poised to seize upon every opportunity to exploit any sign of weakness in the free world." They added:

"Your action is being watched by peoples everywhere."

From Rep. Otto E. Passman (D-La.), chairman of the subcommittee which imposed the slashes, came the comment: "This is a great day for the taxpayers."

Republican support for a drive to restore the cuts was rallied by former Pres. Eisenhower, who called the committee slashes "incomprehensible" and said:

"I am sure that the large majority of thinking American citizens, Democrats and Republicans alike, would join me in urging vigorous support of efforts to remedy the damage that would result from these reported committee recommendations."

Administration forces in the House, hit by defeats at the hands of the conservative coalition on long-term Treasury financing of foreign aid and emergency aid for school construction, were first offered a compromise $175 million restoration of military funds agreed to by Passman. That would have left it up to the Senate—which has consistently gone along with major Administration foreign aid requests—to salvage the whole program.

Passman told the House he had decided during the Labor Day weekend, "after praying over the matter and thinking over the crises in the world," that the committee recommendations for military aid could be increased by $175 million.

Rep. Gerald R. Ford, Jr. (R-Mich.) said bluntly, a few minutes later: "I do not think $175 million additional is adequate."

Ford pointed out that less than a week previous the House had authorized $400 million above the committee recommendation for military aid and demanded to know what had happened since then to justify a cutback. Answering his own question, he declared:

Red Nuclear Tests Cited

"Well, I'll tell what has happened. The Soviets have made three nuclear tests."

On a teller vote, Ford's amendment to restore $300 million of the committee cut carried 164 to 125. The victory was hammered in by a later rollcall vote of 242 to 151.

Two amendments sponsored by liberal Democrats, which would have restored part of the cuts in development and economic aid funds, won some Republican votes but were defeated by non-rollcall votes of 144 to 131 and 152 to 127. Since more than 150 House members were not present for these votes, the setbacks were not considered as tieing the hands of House conferees.

Final House passage of the $3.66 billion appropriations bill was by a 270 to 123 vote. This compares with a 260 to 132 vote for passage of the $4.25 billion authorization bill the previous week.

Fake Labor Paper Warning Given in N. J.

Newark—State AFL Pres. Vincent J. Murphy has warned New Jersey businessmen to be on guard against "phony advertising solicitors" for non-existent AFL-CIO publications. He said the solicitors have been fleecing companies out of thousands of dollars.

He cited particularly the activities of a man selling space in "The Newark Labor Lyceum Directory" with the claim that funds he collects are used to maintain a building that houses offices of AFL-CIO unions. Murphy urged businessmen to stall such solicitors, to record their statements—including any threats of labor trouble—and to alert police for return visits.

Health Care Priority Set By Kennedy

Pres. Kennedy will ask the second session of Congress in January to give "the highest priority" to legislation providing health care for the elderly as part of the social security system.

The President described the health care bill as "one of the most important measures I have advocated." He said he is "convinced that only the social security system can furnish satisfactory protection" against the financial burden of illness in old age.

Kennedy's pledge of an all-out fight for the Administration-sponsored, labor-backed King-Anderson bill was made in a letter to Sen. Pat McNamara (D-Mich.), chairman of the Senate's Special Committee on Aging. McNamara had written the President expressing concern that "little more than a start has been made upon this necessary legislation during the current session of Congress."

While Kennedy had included the proposal in his recommendations to Congress this year, congressional action has been limited to hearings before the House Ways & Means Committee.

The committee has put off action and Administration hopes for bringing out a bill in the second session are based on the belief that the popularity of the proposal—especially in an election year—will overcome the opposition led by the politically potent American Medical Association.

Kennedy replied that House testimony "incontrovertibly establishes the need for the legislation" and that our national responsibilities require prompt and effective action." Medical costs, he said, are "the greatest of all threats to economic security in old age." He added:

"The financial burden of illness and incapacity in later years constitutes an ever-present specter to almost every family. Inability to meet the costs of hospitalization or home care can destroy self-respect and deny the right to dignity and comfort after retirement."

"I intend to recommend that this legislation be given the highest priority at the next session of Congress."

Ex-ILGWU Aide Named Professor

Morris Weisz, assistant commissioner of the Bureau of Labor-Management Reports, has been named visiting professor in international labor relations at the School of Intl. Service of American University in Washington, D. C. His post as acting assistant commissioner of BLMR will be filled by Kenneth Douty.

Weisz, a member of the Teachers, is a former local organizer and editor for the Ladies' Garment Workers. Douty was Georgia state director for the Textile Workers Union of America.

The regular professor and director of the American University program is Philip M. Kaiser. He is on leave while serving as ambassador to Senegal and Mauritania.

Auto Workers, GM Drive for Contract

50 Locals Clear Up Plant Rules

By Eugene A. Kelly

Detroit—Top leadership of the Auto Workers and the General Motors Corp. concentrated on settlement of thousands of local plant disputes as more than 250,000 workers walked off the job in all but a few GM plants when the final contract extension ended Sept. 11.

Union and management recessed bargaining at the national level here to help local plant committees reach agreement on local contract issues, including seniority rules, relief time and a multiplicity of grievance procedures and rules on working conditions.

As the AFL-CIO News went to press, major progress was reported with almost 50 locals having settled after a telegram from UAW Pres. Walter P. Reuther urging shop committees to "intensify their efforts" and to "spend as many hours at the bargaining table as management is willing to meet."

A scheduled meeting of the union's National General Motors Conference, delayed one day to allow more time for local negotiations, was postponed indefinitely when the union discovered that bargaining progress on local issues was "disappointingly slow" because of the complexity of problems affecting 131 plants employing more than 300,000 workers in 31 states.

Strikes Authorized

The union had authorized local plant committees to take strike action if no agreement was reached by 10 a. m. Sept. 11. Earlier the UAW had bluntly warned GM that strikes would develop in spite of an agreement on economic terms at the national level.

Meanwhile there were these other developments:

- The U.S. Mediation & Conciliation Service appealed to the negotiators for a quick settlement of the issues so that production of 1962 auto models can be resumed.
- Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg, on a nationwide television program, appealed to labor and management to settle the local issues quickly and "get on with the job." He said Pres. Kennedy hoped the dispute would be ended "so the entire GM chain can go back into operation" promptly.
- The Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, representing 22,000 GM workers in six plants, settled local supplemental agreements at three plants and continued efforts

Full Union Rights Pushed For 2 Million U.S. Workers

MEMBERS OF AUTO WORKERS pour out of Fisher Body's Fleetwood plant in Detroit, when last extension of union's contract with General Motors expired on Sept. 11. UAW Pres. Walter P. Reuther has urged swift settlement of issues at local plant levels.

Executive Step Asked Of Kennedy

By David L. Perlman

The Kennedy Administration should act decisively to extend to the government's 2.4 million civilian workers collective bargaining rights "which have long been guaranteed by law to employes in private industry," the AFL-CIO has declared.

AFL-CIO Legislative Director Andrew J. Biemiller urged a presidential task force, headed by Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg, to recommend an executive order which would:

- Protect the right of federal workers to organize "without fear of reprisal."
- Provide exclusive bargaining rights and negotiation of written agreements with unions which establish majority representation in appropriate bargaining units.
- Permit voluntary checkoff of union dues.
- Provide mediation and arbitration procedures in both negotiations and individual grievances.

Biemiller, leadoff witness at hearings before the President's Task Force on Employe-Management Relations in the Federal Service, urged the government, as the nation's largest employer, to become "a leader, not a follower" in the labor-management field.

The cabinet-level committee, set up by Pres. Kennedy with instructions to develop recommendations for modernizing the government's labor relations policies by a Nov. 30 deadline, also heard:

- James A. Brownlow, president

Senate Unit Backs Kennedy:

Fight on to Restore House Aid Slashes

The Administration won a last-ditch chance for a major victory on the foreign aid money bill as the Senate Appropriations Committee voted to put back practically all the $600 million cut in the House.

The Senate was scheduled to take up the committee bill Sept. 15, with hopes high it would clear the measure in approxmately the form reported by committee. The final bill would then be written in a joint Senate-House conference committee, with the Administration seeking something very close to the $4.25 billion authorized two weeks ago.

With strong bipartisan support, the Senate committee restored $533 million of the $596 million hacked away by the House. The House cuts, if permitted to stand, would have blocked any new development programs for African nations which have emerged from colonialism and would have severely reduced economic aid to America's allies.

The AFL-CIO had appealed to the Senate committee to restore foreign aid appropriations to the full amount authorized by Congress.

Armour Pact Yields Layoff, Closing Pay

Chicago—"Technological adjustment pay" to cushion layoffs caused by plant and department closings is a major feature of a three-year agreement with Armour & Co. negotiated jointly by the Packinghouse Workers and the Meat Cutters.

The unions and the company said they believed the newly-named TAP to be "unique in American industry."

They said it was written into the agreement along with a number of other concepts developed by a special committee set up to seek solutions to problems posed by automation. The committee, appointed two years ago with Dr. Clark Kerr as its impartial chairman, continues to function.

The contract also provides wage increases of 7 cents an hour effective September 4, plus 6 cents in September 1962 and 6 cents more in September 1963.

The Meat Cutters recently concluded a new agreement with Swift & Co. The Packinghouse Workers have resumed negotiations with both Swift and Wilson after a week's recess. Contracts with a number of smaller packers also remain to be settled.

Under the Armour agreement, technological adjustment pay (TAP) works this way:

- The company will give three months notice of plant or department closings, with employes guar-

Labor Aids Areas Hit By Carla

Houston, Tex.—Organized labor marshalled its forces in cooperation with the Red Cross for a massive relief effort to aid stricken families and rebuild vast coastal areas of Texas and Louisiana left in shambles by Hurricane Carla.

Carla, its winds raging at up to 173 m.p.h, cut a 500-mile-wide swath across the Gulf Coasts of the two states, driving upwards of 400,000 persons from their homes in what the Red Cross described as a "modern-day exodus."

Damage from the hurricane, called the fiercest of the century, and from the tornadoes and floods it generated, is expected to soar into hundreds of millions of dollars.

Survey teams are now at work in the storm-ravaged area from Corpus Christi, Tex., to Cameron, La., to determine the exact extent of damage and what assistance labor can offer.

Labor Editor Hits Kennedy Jackpot

Tulsa—Editor Jack Howard of the Tulsa Labor News got a quick answer to a question that editors often ask themselves: Who reads our paper?

In his July issue, Howard said he hoped Pres. Kennedy does not get his information about organized labor from Business Week or the Wall Street Journal, and offered to put him on the free list. Soon afterward he got a letter from the President saying:

"Your offer to send me the Tulsa Labor News has come to my attention. I would be most delighted to receive it and thank you for your kindness. . . . Sincerely, John F. Kennedy."

Unemployed Still Near 7%:

Hope for Jobs Rise Voiced by Wolfbein

By John M. Barry

Record employment totals for August "point to continued recovery" from the current economic recession, a government manpower expert has declared, although the rate of joblessness remained at nearly 7 percent for the ninth straight month.

The number of workers on payrolls reached a new high for the month of 53.4 million, up 300,000 from July, while unemployment rolls were declining by 600,000 to a level of 4.5 million, the Labor Dept. reported.

Both changes were described as seasonal. Nevertheless, there is a "good chance" for better-than-seasonal improvements in the next few months if auto production "really gets rolling," said Dr. Seymour L. Wolfbein, head of the department's Office of Automation & Manpower. He added, however, that the high level of unemployment still poses a pretty ornery problem."

In releasing the preliminary summary of the August report on the labor force two weeks ago, Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg predicted the 6.9 percent jobless rate would decline to a level of 5.5 to 6 percent by the end of the year. He stressed, however, that such a rate would still be "too high."

Auto Jobs Drop

Wolfbein noted that the only decline in manufacturing employment during August was a drop of 100,000 workers in the auto industry as major firms retooled for 1962 models.

Jobs in the primary metals and electrical equipment industries rose beyond seasonal expectations, he said, and the machinery industry recorded a small rise instead of a normal decline.

The detailed report issued by Wolfbein showed little change in the factory workweek at 40.1 hours or in average weekly earnings of production workers at $93.83.

Jobless Adults Down

Both total employment, at 68.5 million, and total non-farm employment, at 62.2 million, were at all-time highs for the month. But the number of agricultural jobs—6.3 million—was at its lowest August level on record. This, Wolfbein said, was in line with a long-term drop in levels of farm employment.

The number of jobless adult men edged down seasonally by 100,000. Included in the total of 2.3 million were 1.5 million married men, two-fifths of whom were classified as long-term unemployed—out of work 15 weeks or longer.

The number of persons out of work half a year or longer dropped to 900,000 from the July figure.

A companion report issued by the department's Bureau of Employment Security revealed a modest decline in the number of major geographical centers with substantial unemployment—6 percent or more.

Three cities previously in the substantial unemployment category moved during the month into the moderate unemployment group, where the range is 3 to 5.9 percent jobless. They are San Jose, Calif.; Wichita, Kan.; and Milwaukee, Wis.

Eighty-five major job areas remained with unemployment rates of 6 percent or more, according to the report. The high for recent years, reached last March and April, was 101 areas so classified among the 150 listed.

One other major area—Huntington, W. Va., and Ashland, Ky.—moved from the group with unemployment of 12 percent or more to the 9 to 11.9 percent jobless level.

Special Surveys Made

The number of smaller areas of substantial unemployment was set at 231 in August, up from 230 in July and 116 in July 1960. The Labor Dept. cautioned, however, that these changes "do not necessarily reflect a recent worsening of the local employment situation" since additions to this list are based in part on special surveys requested by the communities.

Two smaller areas—Sharon-Farrell, Pa., and Henderson-Oxford, N. C.—were added to the "substantial and persistent unemployment" listing. Despite these additions, the number of smaller areas in this group dropped from 105 in July to 102 in August because some areas were redefined. Major areas in this classification remained at 21.

AP Automation Ends 55 Jobs, Creates 4

New York—Approximately 55 positions will be eliminated when the Associated Press installs an IBM computer to tabulate and prepare stock market tables in about 16 months.

AP General Mgr. Frank J. Starzel said present staff members can take the "standard IBM aptitude tests" for four computer jobs on the new automated equipment.

The Commercial Telegraphers' Union said it expects none of its 18 operator-members will be out of a job. Some will retire or be transferred. CTU offered to cooperate with the New York Newspaper Guild in minimizing harm to NYNG members—24 tabulators, 6 gummers, 7 part-time clerks.

Steel Leader Rejects Kennedy Price Plea

Pres. Kennedy's urgent appeal to the steel industry to forego a price increase in October has drawn a reply from two major steel producers that the squeeze on profit margins is so intense the companies must be free to handle prices as they see fit.

The President's letter to 12 major companies pointing out that "the steel industry . . . can look forward to good profits without an increase in prices" brought replies from Roger M. Blough, board chairman of U.S. Steel, and Arthur B. Homer, chairman of the board of Bethlehem Steel Co., the nation's two largest producers, that in effect asserted the companies' freedom to raise prices this year if they feel the increase necessary.

Kennedy's letter was prompted by the second of two automatic increases in steel worker wage rates slated to go into effect Oct. 1, under a contract negotiated in 1959 ending a five-month steel strike.

The President's letter stressed that the wage increase is "almost certain to be outweighed by the advance in productivity resulting from a combination of two factors — the steady long-term growth of output per manhour and the increasing rate of operations foreseen for the steel industry in the months ahead."

The President wrote that the Council of Economic Advisers had provided him with estimates of steel industry profits calculated on the assumption that prices are not increased after Oct. 1. These estimates, he said, indicate that "the steel industry will be earning 7 to 9 percent on net worth after taxes if the rate of operations is around 70 percent; 10 to 12 percent if the operating rate is 80 percent; and 13 to 15 percent if the operating rate is 90 percent."

The steel owners have "fared well in recent years," Kennedy wrote, with common stock prices rising 393 percent since 1947 and dividends up 176 percent over the same period.

Blough's six and one-half page letter said steel profits are too low and that U.S. Steel had only averaged 3 percent return on its investment over the past 10 years. He assailed the President's economists for taking on the role of "informal price-setters for steel" and argued also that increased output per worker had been too low to offset the wage increase due Oct. 1.

Homer said that "the present squeeze on profit margins has weakened our steel industry's ability to remain sound."

If the industry foregoes a price hike, Kennedy said in his letter, it would enter bargaining negotiations next year "with a record of three and one-half years of price stability. It would clearly then be the turn of labor representatives to limit wage demands to a level consistent with price stability."

Steelworkers, Kaiser Share Coogan Honors

Los Angeles—The Steelworkers and the Kaiser Steel Corp. shared the annual Father Coogan Award of the Catholic Labor Institute at a Labor Day ceremony here.

The joint winners were cited for an "outstanding contribution to industrial peace and social justice" through establishment of a tripartite committee to develop a long-range program to end industrial strife.

USWA Pres. David J. McDonald and Edgar F. Kaiser, head of the steel firm, accepted the award at a ceremony attended by more than 1,000 guests following a special Labor Day Mass presided over by Cardinal McIntyre.

McDonald said the committee of public, labor and management representatives was an effort "to improve collective bargaining, not to replace it."

He pledged that "our union will exhaust every potential and demonstrate the absolute in good faith in an effort to prevent a recurrence of the great steel strike of 1959."

Kaiser expressed the belief that "the approach we are pioneering with the Steelworkers union is having a wholesome influence around the country." He added:

"Different businesses require different plans, but certainly new plans are required because the old ones aren't working."

State Mental Patients Get WAD Help

Indianapolis—Indiana's union women are reaching out a helping hand to patients in the state's mental institutions.

An "adopt-a-patient" program has been launched by the same group which has donated many hours of volunteer work to labor's registration and vote campaign—the Women's Activities Division of the state COPE organization.

Eve Purvis, state WAD director, outlined the new program at a dinner honoring 10 members of the St. Joseph County AFL-CIO's WAD committee who put in 100 hours or more of their own time in last year's registration drive. The same volunteers are working on the "adoption" program to aid the patients in the often-overcrowded state mental hospitals.

She pointed out that the program aimed at establishing bonds of friendship with men and women in need of help and understanding will in some cases represent "the first contact that these people have had with the outside world in 10, 20 or even 30 years."

Incentive Pay Formula Test Ends Strike

Passaic, N. J.—A dispute over incentive pay that caused a two-week strike of 2,000 U.S. Rubber Co. workers has been settled on a 150-day trial basis.

Officers of URW Local 217 have agreed with management on the interpretation of language involving idle time and time worked on "off-standard" operations. For a trial period, this formula will be tested:

A worker assigned to a non-standard operation will get 92 percent of his average earnings for 30 days, and then 100 percent of average earnings if management fails to set a standard. After 150 days of trial, either side may cancel the arrangement.

The walkout began Aug. 16 at the plant of this city's largest employer. The strikers returned when an agreement in principle was reached that left the question of language to be worked out by union officers and management.

A national agreement at U.S. Rubber plants was reached in June.

Rate of Job Injuries Equals Record Low

The rate of injury for workers in manufacturing industries remained low for the second quarter of 1961, the U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics has reported—10.5 disabling injuries per million manhours worked, matching the previous low achieved in 1958.

BLS said the first six months of 1961 produced a rate of 10.4—the best six-month average recorded, and 6 percent lower than 1960. The best records, it said, were in the electric lamp, synthetic rubber and scientific instruments industries.

New York Times Promotes Raskin

New York—A. H. Raskin, veteran labor reporter for the New York Times, has been appointed to that newspaper's editorial board.

An active Newspaper Guild member, he joined the Times' staff in 1934 and since has covered conventions and many other activities of the AFL-CIO, its predecessor organizations and its constituent unions and their locals. His work has been considered distinguished by deep understanding of the problems of workers and their unions, painstaking accuracy and a high degree of objectivity. His promotion was described by City Editor Frank S. Adams, as a "terrible loss" to the reportorial staff.

Auto Workers, GM Seek Local Pacts

to settle the others without calling a strike.

● General Counsel Stuart Rothman of the National Labor Relations Board said his office is taking a "most serious view" of charges filed by the UAW against GM before the strike and will investigate to see if the labor law has been broken by GM's refusal to provide information on its price-profit structure.

The UAW's agreement with the world's largest corporation on economic issues, reached here last week, will mean an additional 12.04 cents an hour the first year in wages and benefits for GM workers, according to a union estimate.

In the second and third years of the three-year contract, workers will receive cost-of-living increases if prices rise, plus an annual improvement factor of 6 cents or 2.5 percent of wages per hour, whichever is higher.

"This strike is 99 percent about working conditions," Reuther said as the walkouts developed.

Recalling that the UAW had twice extended its contracts after their Aug. 31 expiration date, Reuther said the negotiators had worked out a "very attractive and very liberal economic package" but that other issues had not been resolved in time to head off the walkout.

'Serious Problems' Listed

He cited "very serious problems" at the plant level and national issues relating to working conditions. The national problems included these:

● Production standards.

● Overtime forced on some workers while thousands of other UAW members remained jobless.

● Foremen doing production work.

● More time for union stewards to handle grievances.

GM has a "theoretical" policy of allowing 24 minutes relief time for production workers every eight hours, but in some plants—listed by Reuther as mostly Fisher Body and other assembly plants — workers have been "chained to the line" for up to four hours without being able to get relief.

For that reason, Reuther said, GM has earned the reputation of being a "kind of glorified, gold-plated sweatshop." He said:

"Somehow the corporation felt that, since we had settled on the national economic matters, that that ought to be enough—that we ought to say to GM workers from our position of leadership at the local level: let your local problems get lost."

Legal and Moral Right

Reuther said union officers refused to "wipe out the legal and moral right" of UAW members to bargain collectively on local issues with local managements.

Before the walkout started Sept. 11, union and management committees had worked for more than 24 hours to settle national non-economic matters while plant committees met on local problems. Reuther had been hopeful, he said, that a strike could be avoided because local agreements had been concluded at more than 30 plants.

"But at 2 o'clock in the morning," the UAW head said, "something happened. We stopped making progress.

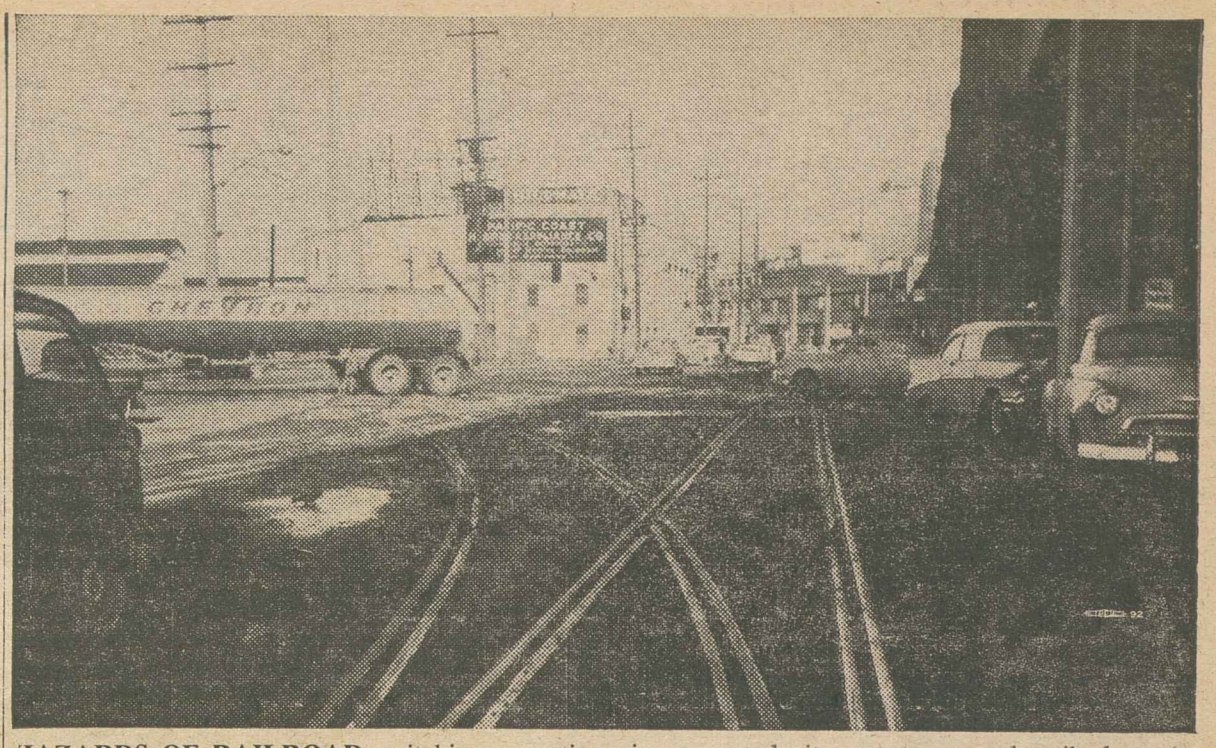
"In a large Chevrolet plant in Flint where we had settled the seniority agreement and the shift preference agreement, the management walked in at 2 a. m. [Sept. 11] and said, 'Well, this is our position—take it or leave it. If you don't take it, we'll see you after Wednesday [Sept. 13].'"

The union was "disappointed" but does not intend, Reuther said, to "nurse" its disappointment.

"We are going to do everything in our power," he said, "to work out at the earliest possible moment a sensible and sound and satisfactory solution" of the remaining issues "so that we can get these plants back to work."

Sound labor-management relations and the good will of workers, he continued, are possible only on a "foundation of justice" measured not only in money but also in terms of justice.

"That is an element that's missing in what we're trying to do at General Motors," the UAW leader said.



HAZARDS OF RAILROAD switching operations in congested city streets were described to the Presidential Railroad Commission by veteran locomotive engineers and firemen—and documented by pictures such as this scene of railroad tracks in downtown Seattle. The union witnesses emphasized the need for a safety lookout, as well as an engineer, in the cab of a locomotive.

'Technological Adjustment Pay' Highlights New Armour Pact

anteed full pay over the notice period.

● Affected employes may apply during the notice period for transfer to other Armour plants or departments.

● Employes with at least five years of service who seek transfers will be eligible for TAP.

● If no transfer is available, TAP will provide $65 a week to displaced workers for a limited period less unemployment insurance benefits and any wages earned on other jobs.

● TAP will begin when the employe is no longer on the Armour payroll and will continue for 26 to 39 weeks depending on his length of service.

● Employes on TAP will continue to be covered by hospital, medical and surgical insurance, with premiums paid by the company.

● If an employe on TAP changes his mind and declines a proposed transfer, TAP payments and insurance premiums will be deducted from his severance pay.

Employes whose jobs are abolished as a result of technological change or plant or department closings and who do not elect TAP will receive separation pay at these improved accrual rates: one week of pay for each year of service for those with 1 through 10 years of service, 1.75 weeks per year for those with 11 through 20 years of seniority; and two weeks a year for those on the payroll 21 years or more.

Employes 55 or older with at least 20 years of service who are eligible for severance pay may elect instead to take a pension equal to 1.5 times their normal pension until age 62, when the amount drops to the normal retirement level.

Other highlights of the contract:

The cost-of-living factor is maintained at 1 cent an hour for each half-point change in the Consumer Price Index. Five cents of previous raises are incorporated into the basic wage structure, and an additional cent due next January is included in the September 1961 wage increase.

● The skilled worker differential is increased by adding one half-cent to the spread between job classifications for a total of 4.5 cents.

● Vacation improvements give three weeks to employes with 10 years of service and four weeks to those with 20 years.

● Pension credits are increased effective Jan. 1 from the present $2 a month for each year of service to $2.50.

Funeral leave with pay to a maximum of three days is granted in the event of the death of a close relative.

Hospital, medical and surgical insurance benefits are improved and will be continued for six months after layoff for employes with more than a year of service.

AFM and Guild Group Close 3-Year Breach

New York—A three-year split in the ranks of professional musicians has been healed, according to a joint announcement by Pres. Herman Kenin of the AFL-CIO Musicians and Pres. Cecil F. Read of the unaffiliated Musicians Guild of America.

The MGA is made up of recording musicians on the Pacific Coast and is centered in Los Angeles. The peace pact has already been approved by the AFM executive board, and Read predicted prompt action by the MGA.

The agreement, which had been under negotiation for several months, provides that:

● The MGA dissolve "as soon as possible."

● The AFM seek to negotiate changes in record contracts so that half the money now payable to Music Performance Trust Funds goes instead to the musicians who make the records.

● The AFM reaffirm its policy of seeking residual or re-use rights for recording musicians in all other fields.

● The AFM grant full uninterrupted membership rights to those expelled or otherwise disciplined because of Guild membership or activities, with all fines nullified.

● The AFM reaffirm its policy of ratification of contracts by those employed under the agreements it negotiates.

● The AFM cause to be established in Los Angeles not later than Apr. 1, 1962, a committee of recording musicians to advise it on bargaining proposals, negotiations and all other matters affecting them.

In a letter to the Guild board, Kenin said the overriding theme of the negotiations leading to the agreement was that "the interests of professional musicians could best be promoted by the consolidation of their total economic and political power into a single union."

Read noted that the original major objections of MGA members against the AFM had been resolved by the changes effected and pledged by the AFM. Like Kenin, he voiced the conviction that reunification would better serve the interests of all musicians.

Federal Laws Held Ruling in Labor Field

State laws in Florida and Massachusetts involving certain aspects of labor relations have been found non-applicable on the ground that federal labor legislation preempts the field.

In one case, a U.S. Court of Appeals found that a Massachusetts law permitting a State Board of Conciliation & Arbitration to place the blame for a labor dispute and advise on ways of settlement is in conflict with the "national policy of free and unfettered collective bargaining."

The case involved the Technical Engineers, who invoked the law in a strike last year against the General Electric Co. The court ruled that the National Labor Relations Act has preempted the field for companies in interstate commerce and that participation in the state board hearings is an attempt to "coerce agreement by invoking official action to mold public opinion . . .

The other case involved a Florida anti-trust law and its application to a complaint filed by a non-union belt-making company against the Ladies' Garment Workers and the Florida Apparel Manufacturer's Association. The non-union firm charged the ILGWU was enforcing an agreement to forbid association members from doing business with it.

The Florida District Court of Appeals ruled that state courts must defer to the National Labor Relations Board in handling a complaint alleging this type of agreement even though the nature of the complaint might indicate a violation of the state anti-trust law.

Observe Bible Week Meany Asks Unionis

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany has urged all union members to join in the observance of National Bible Week Oct. 16-22, and "during this week and all the weeks of the year to read and study" the Scriptures.

"In these dangerous hours all of us can find comfort and strength in Holy Scripture," he said. "As always the Holy Bible contains not only inspiration but sustenance as well to man in his hour of trial."

Strike Idleness At Postwar Low

Idleness due to strikes in the first seven months of 1961 dropped to its lowest point since the end of World War II—less than one-seventh of 1 percent, the U.S. Dept. of Labor has reported.

The department's Bureau of Labor Statistics gave these figures: from January through July 1961, a total of 2,140 work stoppages idled 716,000 workers for 8.4 million days or .13 percent of total potential working time.

'Runaway' Moves Back To Detroit

Detroit—The C. M. Hall Lamp Co., which moved most of its operations to a low-wage southern community two years ago, has returned to Detroit poorer but wiser.

The firm, which makes headlights, rear-view mirrors and other automobile accessories, has rehired several hundred members of the Auto Workers who had been laid off when the company moved its die-casting and plating operations to Clinton, N. C.

Harry D. Hirsch, president of the company, credited a long-time UAW representative, Detroit City Councilman Ed Carey, with having influenced his decision to return to unionized Michigan.

Hirsch told newsmen that the North Carolina community had given his firm a modern plant on favorable lease terms, coupled with tax advantages.

He said, however, that "when all of the cost factors in our manufacturing were weighed, we found Michigan has the advantage." Shipping costs, time delays and personnel problems were among the handicaps which led to the return, Hirsch indicated.

Surplus Food Plan Curbed At State Level

New York—Restrictive eligibility requirements at the state level have "seriously hampered" Pres. Kennedy's expanded surplus food program, Leo Perlis, director of AFL-CIO Community Services Activities, has charged.

A survey by CSA, Perlis said in a statement, shows that "in many states, people receiving unemployment compensation—the most logical candidates for surplus foods—are ineligible" because of unrealistic income ceilings established by the states.

He urged union officials to push state welfare departments toward less restrictive requirements under the program, created by Kennedy with his first executive order.

The CSA survey, distributed to all AFL-CIO state and local central bodies, shows that 40 states have set the maximum allowable income so low that about half the unmarried persons receiving unemployment compensation are ineligible for surplus foods, Perlis said. He said the same is true for two-person families in 18 states, for three-person families in seven states, and for four-person families in six states.

Moreover, Perlis noted, in 47 states many retired persons are barred from surplus food eligibility because their social security benefits exceed the income ceiling.

The survey found that maximum allowable monthly income set by the states ranges from $45 in one state to $135 in another for unmarried persons, from $55 to $185 for two-person families, from $65 to $225 for three-person families, and from $75 to $265 for four-person families.

TRIPS TO WASHINGTON for best letters to congressmen were won by these members of the Papermakers & Paperworkers in contest conducted by United Paper, the union's official publication. Left to right they are Mrs. Grace Tumiati, Taylorville, Ill.; Elmer Mulligan, Monroe, Mich., and Marjorie Blank, Milwaukee.

UPP Letter Writers Win Washington Trip

From the heavy wood-paneled chambers of Sen. Paul H. Douglas in the old Senate Office Building to the red silk-damask lined walls of the White House—these and many more—were among the thrills experienced in the nation's capital by three members of the Papermakers & Paperworkers.

The three made a three-day tour of Washington as a result of winning the 1961 congressional letter writing contest sponsored by the union through the international's official organ, the United Paper.

Their award-winning letters, addressed to their individual congressmen and senators, were selected from hundreds of entries.

The winners were: Marjorie Blank, Local 365, Milwaukee, Wis.; Mrs. Grace Tumiati, Local 637, Taylorville, Ill.; Elmer Mulligan, Local 1004, Monroe, Mich.

The winning letters were selected by a panel of judges headed by AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler and including James L. McDevitt, national COPE director, and Jack Livingston, AFL-CIO director of organization.

UPP Pres. Paul L. Phillips observed that the event was used to emphasize the importance of individual opinion.

"Having met and talked with many representatives and senators over the years, we know they appreciate receiving 'real' letters from their constituents," Phillips said.

"If a citizen is willing to vote for a man for public office then he surely should desire to let his personally elected representative know how he (the voter) feels on important topics," he added.

Both Phillips and Executive Vice Pres. Harry D. Sayre went to Washington for one day of the tour.

Douglas, meeting the trio for discussion of current Senate activities, informed them that 1961 has been a banner year for correspondence.

A special White House tour was arranged, and the prize winners also had the opportunity to meet Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg and were guests of Schnitzler at a luncheon.

Maritime Committee Ruled Unofficial Body

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany has ruled that the AFL-CIO Maritime Committee is not an "official constitutional committee" of the federation.

Meany's ruling was contained in a letter to Pres. Paul Hall and Executive Sec.-Treas. Peter M. McGavin, of the AFL-CIO Maritime Trades Dept., who had requested clarification of the committee's status.

At the 1959 AFL-CIO Convention in San Francisco a merger of the Maritime Trades Dept. and the Maritime Committee was announced. In April 1961, the Maritime Union withdrew from the department and the committee was reactivated. MDT officers protested to Meany and asked for a ruling.

Labor's Safety Drive Cuts Holiday Death Toll

The 1961 Labor Day holiday was the safest in history in view of the number of cars and the number of miles driven, Executive Vice Pres. G. C. Stewart of the National Safety Council has advised AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany.

Stewart thanked Meany for his leadership in the Labor Day Safety Campaign co-sponsored by the AFL-CIO Standing Committee on Safety & Occupational Health, of which Vice Pres. Richard F. Walsh is chairman and the Labor Conference of the National Safety Council, of which Vice Pres. Elwood D. Swisher of the Oil, Chemical & Atomic Workers is chairman.

The special Labor Day campaign was headed by Pres. C. J. Haggerty of the Building & Construction Trades Dept. and the assistance of John D. Connors, executive secretary of the standing committee.

A total of 386 persons were killed and 16,000 injured in traffic accidents over the weekend, Stewart said.

"While the loss of life is deeply regretable," he added, "this year's toll has been exceeded numerically in each of the past 11 years with the exception of the 1950 and 1954 weekends.

"The good Labor Day record is especially gratifying in view of the fact that deaths reached a new high during the Memorial Day and Fourth of July holidays.

"I particularly want to commend organized labor for the position which unions have taken toward safety on their national holiday."

In a letter thanking Haggerty for his aid, Stewart noted that deaths this year were fewer than in 1960, and the toll then was lower than in 1959.

The safety drive had widespread support among local and international unions and state and local central bodies. More than 15,000 kits of materials for use in promoting safety over the holiday period were distributed to unions by the campaign committee through the NSC.

Union Gifts to Sharecroppers Total $9,158

Somerville, Tenn.—Cash gifts from organized labor totaling $9,158.85 so far have been channeled through the Tennessee State AFL-CIO to Negro families denied crop credit facilities after they registered to vote.

Included in the total is $2,000 from the AFL-CIO itself, which last spring began assistance to 53 families in Fayette and Haywood counties to enable them to meet day-to-day living expenses.

Additional gifts in cash, food and clothing have gone directly to the families from national and international unions, locals and central bodies.

In a letter to Sec. Matthew Lynch of the State Labor Council acknowledging the contributions, Pres. John McFerrin of the Original Fayette County Civic & Welfare League said the funds "have done much to alleviate the depressing conditions that were existent in this country among those brave persons who dared to use their rights to exercise the elective franchise."

U.S. Goods Still Competitive:

Go Abroad and Sell, Businessmen Urged

A sharp rise in U.S. exports during the past 18 months has undermined the "loosely-flung charge that high wages are pricing the U.S. out of the world market."

Labor's Economic Review, a feature of the AFL-CIO magazine, the American Federationist, backs up this analysis with an array of statistics demonstrating that:

- Prices for American-made products have remained competitive in world trade.
- Wages and fringe benefits of production workers have not added to the cost of products. In fact, the pace of U.S. wage gains has generally trailed the rise in wage rates in other industrial nations in recent years.

The AFL-CIO analysis, produced by the federation's Dept. of Research, warns that "in the face of increasingly tough competition in world markets," American business should be doing a better job of trying to sell its products abroad.

One solution is for more firms to seek markets for more products in other countries. Only 4 percent of U.S. manufacturers—some 12,000 out of more than 300,000 firms—are actively exporting.

The Dept. of Research analysis also quotes both business and government sources as emphasizing the need for making a greater sales effort.

"This means U.S. products cannot be made for just the U.S. market and leftovers sold abroad," the article shows. "A nation that prides itself on market research has not proved its knowledge of world market needs, nor its effort to sell abroad, when it fails to produce goods that meet foreign tastes and to engage in sales promotions specially geared for foreign markets."

A British economist, Sir Donald MacDougall, is quoted as saying if the U.S. "has been making products too elaborate, and therefore too expensive, for foreign needs, she has in a rather different sense being pricing herself out of world markets."

Ability of the U.S. to sell its goods abroad at competitive prices despite higher hourly wage rates means that productive efficiency nevertheless has kept down the unit cost of production, the analysis continues.

Ironically, the AFL-CIO notes, sharply-increased non-production costs have resulted in some increased manufacturing expenses. While factory workers are laid off during recessions or slow seasons, salaried managerial, technical and professional staffs have increased.

"Yet no one," the AFL-CIO points out, "charges salaries are pricing us out of world markets."

The Dept. of Research article adds:

"American unions cannot be expected to give up necessary wage increases for production and maintenance workers because management policies have increased the costs of executives, supervisors and other salaried employes."

Changing economic conditions, the development of regional trade alliances and consequent tariff barriers to non-member nations point to the importance of widening America's markets.

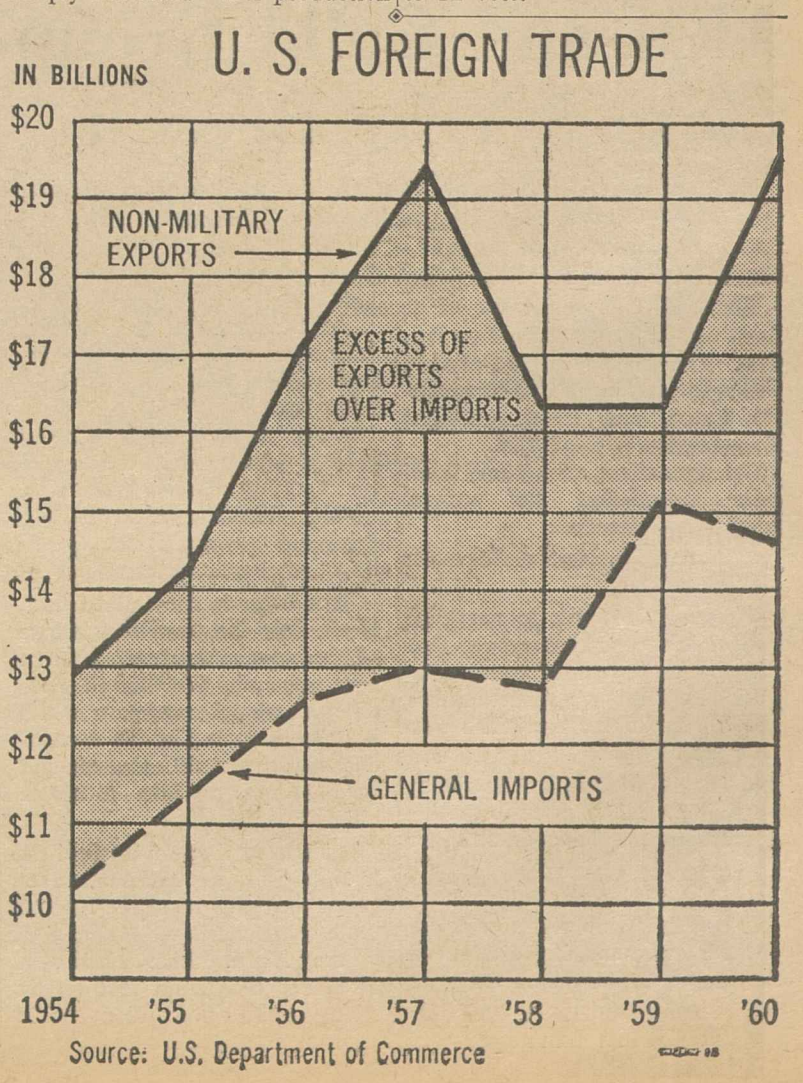
In many of the less developed nations, the AFL-CIO analysis points out, "foreign competitors have been more active sellers than American businessmen."

Emphasizing that "putting the blame on American labor will not help create the kind of effort needed in a world of changing trade patterns and complex relationships," the article asserts that "such lazy charges ignore the hard questions of the new race for world markets."

Teamsters Lose In Raid Attempts

Portland, Ore.—Employes of two Portland area bus lines have voted by decisive margins to retain the Street, Electric Railway Employes as bargaining representatives, beating back an effort by the Teamsters to win bargaining rights.

The National Labor Relations Board vote among employes of Inter-City Buses was 21 to 2 in favor of the AFL-CIO affiliate. Employes of Tualatin Valley Buses rejected the Teamsters bid by a 58 to 12 vote.



The Greatest Labor Day Demonstration

For 12 hours in unbroken ranks 206,000 of New York City's union men and women marched up Fifth Ave., in the sweltering heat of the mid-day sun and in the sultry twilight. In the nation's greatest Labor Day demonstration they paraded, not their might but their dedication to democratic ideals and a better life for working people everywhere, and nearly a million New Yorkers crowded the sidewalks to applaud them.

There were imaginative floats, scores of bands and high-stepping majorettes—because this was a parade. There were retired workers, proud veterans of the hard struggle which made New York "a union town." And there were thousands upon thousands of men, women and youngsters on foot—chanting slogans and carrying banners demanding action on social legislation, proclaiming free labor's devotion to liberty and a secure peace.

Dancing, singing, colorfully garbed contingents pointed up the diversity of nationalities which have made America unique—and great.

The city's mayor, the state's governor, the Secretary of Labor and former Pres. Truman were among the scores of dignitaries who took their turn in the reviewing stand, greeting and being greeted by the marchers.

This was Labor Day 1961—and a great day it was for the workers.

VISITING TRADE UNIONISTS from Africa, Asia, Latin America and Europe watched the Labor Day parade as guests of the New York City Central Labor Council. Some of them are shown on the reviewing stand with Irving Brown, AFL-CIO European representative, Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg, Pres. Harry Van Arsdale of the Central Labor Council and of Local 3, Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, which had a 25,000-member contingent in the parade, and Central Labor Council Sec. Morris Iushewitz.

Government Should Lead

THE TIME IS LONG PAST for discussion of whether or not federal workers should have the right to organize and bargain collectively; the immediate question is how best to put such a program into operation.

Pres. Kennedy has taken the first important step in implementing these rights in setting up a task force to formulate recommendations.

The AFL-CIO has called for an executive order to establish these rights, and if necessary legislation. What is needed is action which will have a binding effect at all levels throughout the government.

Such an order or legislation should incorporate machinery for arbitration to settle unresolved disputes to give substance to the right to organize and bargain collectively in view of the denial to federal employes of the right to strike.

It is indeed the moment for the government—the nation's largest employer—to become a leader, not a follower, in the labor-management field.

Slickers at Work

THE HOUSE APPROPRIATIONS Committee has come up with a new gimmick for thwarting the deliberate decisions of the entire Congress.

Setting up the phony strawman of "backdoor spending"—a highly misleading term for strengthening long-term government programs through Treasury financing—the committee is attempting to undo legislation approved by both houses and signed by the President.

Treasury financing of government programs was initiated by former Pres. Herbert Hoover when the Reconstruction Finance Corp. was established. It has been used since as the only sensible method of supporting long-term programs.

A majority of the House and Senate voted for this type of financing for the housing and distressed area programs. But the diehards on the Appropriations Committee have refused to buy the decision, and violating its own normal attitudes on handling legislation, have tied a substantive legislative rider on to the final appropriations bill.

There is a considerable body of opinion holding that the Appropriations Committee is attempting a direct violation of the rules of the House in its tactics. The violation in spirit is clear.

The attempt to reverse the majority's wishes reveals once again the high-riding conservative coalition at work, a coalition that relentlessly returns to the attack to stymie and defeat all forward-looking legislation.

The House must not allow its historic work in the depressed area and housing fields to be undone by a small group that has proved its interest in seeking new powers is to mutilate or kill the programs.

Labor Day's Safety Record

A NUMBER OF FACTORS accounted for the drop in the highway death toll this past Labor Day weekend, particularly the cumulative impact of an insistent traffic safety campaign.

The AFL-CIO played an important role in the 1961 drive to reduce slaughter on the highways, carrying the message to all of its membership throughout the late summer months, devoting valuable space in its many publications.

If labor's contribution was in any way responsible for saving one additional life it is thanks enough, although we take pride in the National Safety Council's commendation for the "fine contribution which all levels of union organization made to the improved record for the 1961 holiday."

'Island of Democracy:'

Meany Hails West Berliners as 'Courageous... Calm... Confident'

Our stake in Berlin is discussed in the following editorial by AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, "Berlin—Test for Free Men," appearing in the September 1961 issue of the AFL-CIO American Federationist.

ON A SMALL ISLAND of democracy, surrounded by a sea of Communist armed might, 2.5 million people are living bravely, separated by only a few strands of barbed wire from the worst slave society the world has ever known.

They are the West Berliners, the men, women and little children on the very front line of the war between freedom and despotism.

They are protected, of course, by a few thousand armed soldiers, but their real defense is the solemn pledge of the United States of America.

The West Berliners are courageous and calm. They are confident, too. They know the day of craven surrender to dictators is over. At the price of millions of lives and suffering too horrible to capture in words, the democratic nations have learned that peace can't be bought by surrendering even a little piece of freedom to a power-hungry totalitarian.

That is the real story of Berlin—the story of free men who have made up their minds to never again be pushed around by a dictator.

It is ironic that Berlin should today be freedom's front line. Only a few short years ago another evil dictator reigned there and brought chaos to an entire generation.

But the free world has learned a lot since the days of Hitler. The most important lesson it learned is that no man is free unless all men are free; that free men cannot barter away any man's freedom to insure liberty for themselves.

BERLIN IS TODAY more than just a symbol of democracy—important as it is in the midst of Communist discontent and failure. It has rightly been called democracy's showcase—the one spot where East Berliners can see the material benefits of democratic freedom in stark contrast to their drab, dismal, desolate life as slaves of communism.

It is more than the hatchway to freedom through which millions have crawled out of the Communist trap. They are the millions who are the most confirmed anti-Communists in the world—for the man who hates communism most is the man who knows it best, the man who escaped.

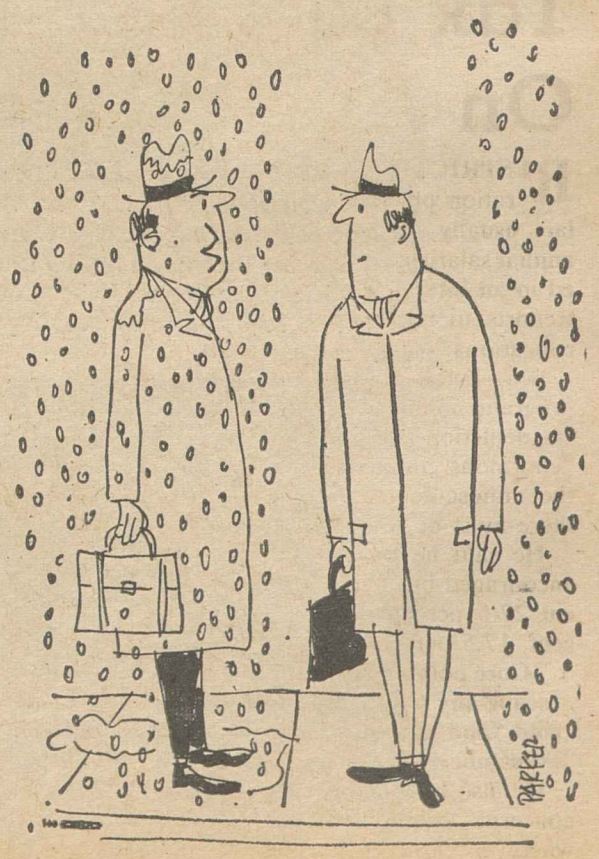
In a real sense, the free world has already won the battle of Berlin. We won it on Aug. 13, 1961—the day the Communists sealed that escape hatch with barbed wire, proving only their guns will keep those who have known communism's "blessings" inside this "workers' paradise." There will be hours of tension, weeks of nerve-wracking maneuvers and months of danger ahead. The possibility of a fighting war will exist for every moment.

But the first and most important test has been met. The Kremlin knows now it has but two choices—to fight or back down.

And the world knows that behind the new concrete walls men yearn for freedom so desperately that the Kremlin has had to resort to the most extreme measures to keep them in bondage.

The President of the United States has pledged America's resources to the defense of the West Berliners.

It is our destiny to lead the free world in this hour of crisis. And the President knows that in this hour of test he leads a united, determined people—a people who know what human freedom really means.



Grisby, I'm beginning to suspect you didn't get that promotion on the basis of ability alone!

Morgan Says:

Record of Kennedy Analyzed As New Frontier Still Lags

By Edward P. Morgan

A DISTINGUISHED DEMOCRAT in an important government post observed privately the other day that in net results so far, the Kennedy Administration shows a surprisingly conservative record. Over an editorial page review of the President's accomplishments with Congress, the Wall Street Journal's headline reads: "On Balance the New Frontier is Still Far From Opened." This analysis totes up on the negative side the failure of a federal education program; the half-a-loaf in foreign aid with a key feature, Treasury borrowing, killed; the defeat or sharp alteration of farm, tax reform and highway bills and White House plans to reorganize the regulatory agencies.

Morgan

On the plus side are listed a whopping housing bill, increase in the minimum wage, emergency anti-recession measures and a few lesser programs. These are not trifling accomplishments and it is also true that modified as they were, some of the other pieces of legislation, notably foreign aid—if the financial heart isn't cut out of it—represent progressive achievement.

However, those who had hoped a lot of new ground would be broken and a number of crusades mounted by this young regime are bound to be disappointed. Undoubtedly they would have been less disappointed if Pres. Kennedy had not been forced to spend most of his time and energies dealing with a rash of foreign crises.

Another thing which has handicapped the Administration on Capitol Hill much more than is generally understood is the net loss to Republicans of 21 Democratic seats in the House, largely held by liberals. This has given the southern Democrat-conservative GOP coalition new, inhibiting strength. The White House performance in the face of these hard realities has, nevertheless, been a strange mixture of conservatism and expediency.

IT IS TOO EARLY to tell whether the latest controversial development at the White House fits into this mixture or emerges as a brilliant and courageously unorthodox move. At the moment, observers are puzzled and some labor and liberal circles are screaming with anguish over the preliminary selection of one George D. Woods to administer foreign aid. Woods is not only a Wall St. Republican, he is chairman of the First Boston Corp., an investment house prominently involved in a major scandal of the Eisenhower Administration, remembered as the Dixon-Yates affair.

It is reliably reported that at his White House conference with legislative leaders the President made it clear he thought Woods best qualified to take over the foreign aid program from Director Henry Labouisse, himself a Kennedy appointee. The President cited Woods' experience involving a hydroelectric project in Ghana, a municipal power system in Oslo and a steel plant in India, among other things.

Some of the first congressional reaction was less hostile to Woods than it was sympathetic to Labouisse for getting allegedly shabby treatment and the gate before he had time to prove what he could do with the agency. He has been up to his ears so far in helping push the foreign aid bill through Congress. White House sources flinch a little at this accusation but indicate privately that Labouisse seemed incapable of mounting as drastic a reorganization and personnel shakeup as the President wanted, and further that Woods would fill the bill with toughness, efficiency and fairness.

One report has it that he has already agreed to the appointment of ex-Congressman Frank Coffin of Maine, a liberal Democrat, as deputy administrator and of Mitchell Sviridoff, brilliant young president of the Connecticut State Labor Council, as a key assistant. It is also speculated that the President feels the selection of Woods, a Republican, would help reduce the sniping at the foreign aid program by conservative quarters in Congress.

Pres. Kennedy got a strong assist from an unexpected liberal quarter—an editorial in the current issue of the New Republic warmly endorsing Woods as a man of "vision and competence" for the job.

It said "no evidence has been offered that Mr. Woods was guilty of shady behavior" in his firm's involvement in the Dixon-Yates affair and it chided certain senators for getting over-emotional about that issue. The editorial praised Woods as one of a handful of business leaders who recognized the problem of underdeveloped countries more than a decade ago and particularly stressed his open-mindedness in dealing with the mixed public-and-private economy of India.

If Wall Streeter Woods is all this good he may be just the man to make the foreign aid program hum—a noise it vitally needs to make. His choice is not yet final, however, and the awkward handling of it has produced a rising noise of opposition on Capitol Hill.

Washington Reports:

Tax Loophole Plugging Urged On AFL-CIO Radio Program

RESTRICTIVE STOCK options provide corporation officials with untaxed millions of dollars usually far in excess of their large regular annual salaries, Sen. Albert Gore (D-Tenn.) asserted in an interview on tax reforms on Washington Reports to the People, AFL-CIO public service educational program heard on 450 radio stations.

Sen. Jacob K. Javits (R-N. Y.), on the same program, commented in regard to the oil industry's tax depletion allowance that he thought that when "enormous companies reduce their taxes down to the minuscule point year after year for decades there must be something wrong with the system."

He said he thought oil exploration should be encouraged but that he favored reducing the present 27.5 percent depletion allowance to 20 percent, 17.5 percent "or even 15 percent."

Gore pointed out that restrictive stock options escape any payment of taxes until the stocks are sold "and can be passed on to estates without even inheritance taxes."

He also said he believes American citizens and concerns should pay taxes on their income wherever earned. At present, both escape U.S. taxes on income from services performed abroad or factories operating overseas.

"Unless we change this," Gore declared, "we subsidize movement of factories and jobs abroad. . . . Because of this situation, we now have more American movie stars living in Switzerland than in Hollywood."

JAVITS SAID that restrictions on income abroad should not affect reinvestment of corporation income in underdeveloped areas, joint ownership of companies abroad by U.S. and national interests and exclusion of U.S. operations in countries, like France, where "our tax laws prejudice them."

In considering various advisable tax reforms, Javits said that he believed the subject of taxation of pensions and annuities should be reviewed.

"We are trying to encourage our senior citizens—especially those in the lower levels—to be self-supporting so far as they can," he asserted. "We have to encourage them to depend on these pensions and annuities rather than taxing them away."

Gore said he was disappointed that the House Ways & Means Committee, which must initiate tax measures in Congress, had not reported a tax reform bill this session.

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

WITH A GENEROUS-SPIRITED DESIRE to "give Kennedy a Republican Congress" for the last two years of his first term, top GOP political managers are moving energetically to repair the blemishes and flaws in the party image that leave it lacking sex appeal among city voters.

Rep. Bob Wilson (Calif.) told New England and Middle Atlantic party leaders that a shift of 44 votes would give the GOP control of the House and then his party could "preserve the fate of the nation and perhaps the world."

Republican National Chairman William E. Miller, who represents the 40th New York Dist. in the House, specified the need for city gains. He said that if the GOP picked up just 15 or 16 additional seats in the heavily populated East, victories elsewhere would be sufficient to allow a take-over.

He warned that the necessary eastern gains could never be made, however, unless the GOP could "do something" about the area's big cities, where Pres. Kennedy and the Democrats ran more than a million votes ahead of former Vice Pres. Nixon and the GOP last November.

WEAKNESSES IN REPUBLICAN PARTY organization in the cities may well be overcome by a national chairman such as Miller, who appears to be the strongest political leader the GOP has had in perhaps 20 years.

Just after the election last year, a wild cry of "we wuz robbed" went up from national committee and congressional spokesmen, with broad allegations—but little evidence—that the Democratic city organizations had "stolen" the election from Nixon.

It was never explained how the same organizations, if so efficient in shenanigans, were not able to "steal" victory from former Pres. Eisenhower when he twice ran. The theme petered out somewhat when with great fanfare Republican national leaders went into St. Louis last spring to set up poll watchers in every precinct to keep the GOP from being counted out at the ballot boxes. The poll watchers watched like blazes—and the Democrats swept the city by the usual two-to-one margin.

One suspects that it may be issues that cause the Republicans trouble in the cities—not just lack of organization.

Such issues as those in which urban voters desperately need federal help—slum clearance and urban renewal, school aid, traffic improvement and mass transportation, water pollution.

The Wall Street Journal recently reported that municipal debt has risen 376 percent since World War II, from $13.6 billion in 1946 to $51.2 billion in fiscal 1960, and that the pressure for further municipal improvements is forcing the cities to desperate expedients.

In Denver, alleys are paved, street lights are put up, sidewalks are laid by schemes of special districts issuing revenue bonds to evade the state ceiling on municipal indebtedness. Even smaller-sized cities are "renting" school buildings rather than building them because they lack funds for financing.

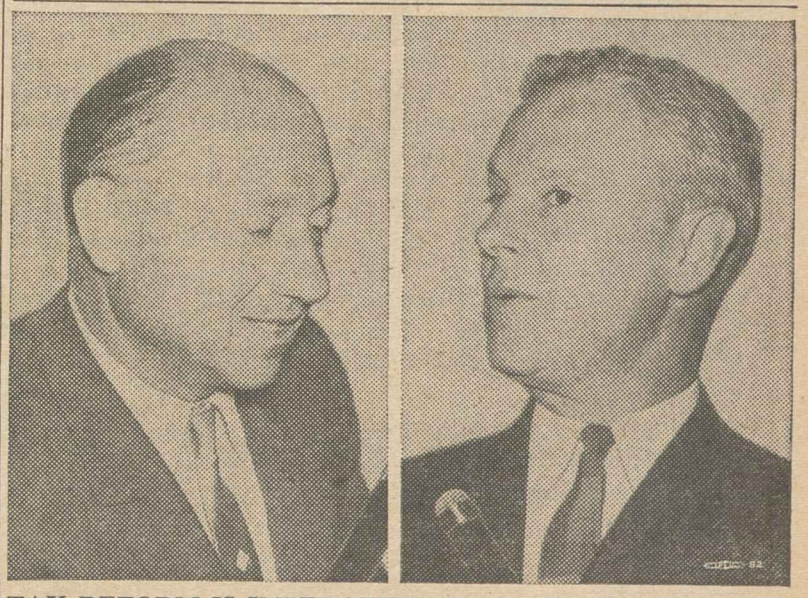
THE GOP RECORD IN CONGRESS—of opposing almost every plan for federal aid to services the cities need—is the source of much Republican pain in the metropolitan areas.

The original omnibus housing bill this year cleared the House on a 235-to-178 rollcall. Republicans voted 140 against it and 25 for it.

On the final effort to pass a pared-down school construction bill last month, the House rollcall showed that 160 Republicans voted against it and only 6 for it. The Democrats split 164 in favor of the bill and 82 against, almost all the latter from the southern states.

A GOP slogan is that federal school construction grants are socialistic and inflationary. But when it came to a vote on continuing the long-existing "impacted area" school program, including federal grants to districts for both construction and teachers' salaries, the GOP switched with bland disregard of previously proclaimed principle. House Republicans voted 157 for the program, only 9 against. That's Chairman Miller's problem.



TAX REFORM IS IMPERATIVE to close loopholes in tax laws but is not likely until the 1962 session of Congress and may be delayed until 1963, according to Sen. Albert Gore (D-Tenn.), right, and Sen. Jacob K. Javits (R-N. Y.) on Washington Reports to the People, AFL-CIO public service radio program.

How to Buy:

Warning Signals Are Flying: Food Prices Are Going Up

By Sidney Margolius

STORM SIGNALS are warning that working families are in for a spell of high food prices. The Dun & Bradstreet wholesale index recently hit a four-months' peak. The BLS wholesale food index has bounced up almost 2 percent in one month.

Rising meat prices are the special problem. Meat takes 25 percent of your food money. But milk and eggs have gone up too, and now the bread manufacturers say they may boost their prices again.

How much should it cost you to feed your family? Based on BLS estimates updated for current prices, a family of four, with a boy of 13 and a girl of 8, can have nourishing meals for about $34 a week or $147 a month. These won't be the most luxurious meals, but not the lowest-cost possible either.

In general, you can figure that if you can feed a family of these ages for about $1.20 a day per person you're doing reasonably well. However, costs vary sharply with children's ages. "Food and Home Notes," distributed by the U.S. Agriculture Dept., estimates these moderate food costs for children: 1-3 years, $4.60; 4-6, $5.70; 7-9, $6.80; 10-12, $8.20; teen-age girls, $8.70; boys, 13-15, $9.60; and 16-19, $11.20.

If you've got teen-agers, especially boys, you've got a special food bill problem. Even a 14-year-old boy eats as much as his dad.

If you estimate a food budget for your family on this basis, you also should adjust it for the number of people in a family. For a family of only three people, add 5 percent per person. For a family of five, subtract 5 percent per person, and for six, subtract 10 percent.

HERE ARE SEVERAL POINTS for keeping down your food bills:

Use the school lunch program: Parents who have compared costs say they can't prepare comparable lunches for the price—typically 30-35 cents—charged for lunches served by many schools.

The school lunch program has grown to the point where nearly one-third of all school children now use it. It's been especially popular in the South and Midwest, but has been used less in the Northeast and Far West. It's used heavily in distressed areas where children must save on food, like West Virginia.

A typical lunch is usually a complete meal consisting of a half-pint of milk plus meat or other protein food, fruits and vegetables, bread or rolls and butter or margarine.

Use these low-cost high-value foods often: Several reasonably-priced foods are especially high in nourishment.

One is non-fat milk powder. In baking and cooking, add extra dry milk to improve nutrition. Cakes and cookies supplemented this way also have better flavor and texture. You can also add extra milk powder to make high-protein soups, chowders, stews, patties, omelets, custards and other desserts.

Another cost cutter is evaporated milk for cooking.

Other low-cost, high-value foods include canned corn beef and corned beef hash; variety meats; dried fruits (rich in iron, too); peas, lentils and beans. Oatmeal is not only a high-nourishment, low-cost cereal but also a money-saving meat extender. Vegetables generally inexpensive for their high food value includes carrots, kale, collards, spinach, green cabbage.

Broilers have become quite a food bargain because of heavy supply, and also because they have become the supermarkets' favorite price leader.

Buy larger meat cuts: This department recently pointed out that you can save an average of 14 percent by buying stores' own brands, and another 17 percent, on the average, by buying larger sizes of packaged foods.

Sen. Humphrey Says:

Group Responsibility Tested in Newburgh

The following is excerpted from a speech by Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey (D-Minn.) in the Senate on Aug. 29.

AS THE DIN AND CLAMOR surrounding the proposed changes in the administration of public welfare in Newburgh, N. Y., continue, an examination of the more basic questions that Newburg raises seems worth while.

Four months ago, Newburgh, a small-sized and rather typical American city, was little known. Now it has emerged as the confused and often perplexing symbol around which differing concepts of what is decent and humane are debated and fought over. Newburgh has become—in a sense like Berlin—a symbolic testing ground of the measure of responsibility that man is willing to take for his fellow man.

What is taking place in Newburgh needs little further review here. It is well known, and is presently being considered by the courts.

What Americans must now explore and ponder are the questions of precisely what the obligations are of a society which is ostensibly affluent toward individuals whose own effort and means have failed to provide them with what we generally consider a minimum decent standard of life, and of just how our society can best fulfill such obligations as we may have.

The Newburgh philosophy of punishment for poverty seems to assume that poverty is a matter of personal guilt. And yet, surely, it must be clear that in our complicated industrial society no man's destiny is entirely in his own hands.

Neither is anything accomplished by cutting off assistance to a woman who has borne a second child out of wedlock. And there is no way to reconcile this attempt to visit upon a child the sins of the parents with democracy's special obligation to provide to children equality of opportunity for healthy growth and development.

Social workers and welfare officials throughout the country know—the evidence is clear—that hardly anyone with other alternatives available to him chooses to live as a public charge. How else could you explain that when, last month, the city of New York announced 50 job openings for cleaning women at pay which ranged to a maximum of $53 a week, the line for those 50 jobs began to form three days before the announced day of filing, and the applicants numbered 1,742 on the first day?

No, the vast majority of Americans, in Newburgh as elsewhere, would prefer to work rather than be on relief.

FOR THOSE NOT IN a position to provide for themselves, punishment and harassment are no solutions. Neither a monthly muster of welfare recipients, including the blind, the lame, and the halt, at police stations, nor mug shots, nor denial of relief after moral transgression, will help to bring those who have slipped to the bottom of the heap out of their morass. Instead, we must find and correct the defects in our social organization that have contributed to the misery of many, as we must provide to individuals the services that will enable them to become self-sufficient wherever that is possible.

If we as a nation are sincere in our belief in the sanctity and dignity of each individual human being, and if—as is most assuredly the case—we have the means whereby we can make certain that all can be free of the bondage of needless fear and deprivation, then surely nothing less will do.

Let us remember that never has it been more true than it is in the complex industrial society in which we live today that no man is an island unto himself. Let us not lose sight of our democratic conviction that the individual is the source of community strength. And let us not forget that the citizen and the state have mutual obligations:

"The citizen to make his highest contribution to his own and the community welfare; the state to assist him in that effort and sustain him in time of need"—from American Public Welfare Association, "Essentials of Public Welfare."

From Soup to Nonsense:

It's Like This, Lady: The World Never Runs Out of Screwballs

By Jane Goodsell

I MARRIED A FISHERMAN. Of course, he wasn't a fisherman when I married him. For some reason, very few unmarried men are.

The fishing fever rarely hits a male until he acquires a wife and children and a house and a plot of ground. Of course, I'm not implying that men go fishing simply to get away from home and family, but I can't help noticing a connection between household chores that need masculine attention and a man's yearning, burning desire to go fishing. It just seems like the sight of a garden rake or a paint brush sets a man to thinking about sparkling streams and speckled trout.

Actually, I'd have married my husband even if I'd known he was a fisherman because (1) I was crazy about him and (2) I didn't understand about fishing.

In my innocence, I thought it was just something a man might do in his spare time—like collecting stamps or playing golf.

When my husband first mentioned that he thought he'd take up fishing. I didn't pay much attention. I just murmured absently, "That's nice."

Up to that time he was perfectly normal, and I had no reason to think that fishing would turn him into an obsessed creature who rushes out to the yard to snatch worms away from robins.

The way I figured it, he'd buy himself a fishing rod and every once in a while he'd go off to a stream or lake and stay there for a few hours and maybe—or maybe not—return with fish. I was not prepared for fishing to dominate his life and transform his personality.

BUT IT DID. When he isn't fishing, he's reading about fishing or talking about fishing or practicing casting in the yard or tying flies in the living room. (That fly-tying puzzles me. My husband is an impatient man who's all thumbs when he tries to maneuver a hook into an eye on the back of my dress. Yet he spends hours patiently tying little itsy-bitsy hairs into exquisitely intricate flies. At least he thinks they're exquisite.)

Before my husband became a fisherman, I didn't realize that all roads lead to sporting goods stores. Wherever he goes—to the office, to the bank, to the dentist—he just happens to pass by a sporting goods store. Which would be all right if he'd pass by it, but he doesn't. He goes in. And, as luck would have it, the store just happens to have exactly the spinner (or lure or rod or tackle box or something) that he's been looking for all his life.

I won't say that fishing is the most expensive hobby in the world, but I'll say this: two can live as cheaply as one can fish.

In all fairness, I must admit that he sometimes catches fish. Actually, I don't care whether he catches fish or not.

But I feel better about my husband when he catches fish. When he doesn't catch fish, and falls in the river and comes home bitten up by mosquitos (that's one creature you can count on to bite) and still maintains that he's had a simply wonderful day—well, I wonder how I could have married a man as crazy as that.

If She Wants to Be, That Is:

Women Agree Their Place Is at Home—IF

Los Angeles—A woman's place is in the home—but only if that is where she wants to be.

This was the key point of agreement at a pilot conference here on the problems of working women, sponsored by the Dept. of Labor in cooperation with the AFL-CIO Los Angeles County Labor Federation and women's organizations in California, Nevada and Arizona.

Mrs. Esther Peterson, assistant secretary of labor and director of the department's Women's Bureau, said similar conferences are planned in other parts of the nation so that "we in Washington don't lose touch with the real needs of people."

Don't Blame Women

Mrs. Peterson said it is incorrect to blame some of the nation's ills on women who work instead of stay at home.

Unemployment, juvenile delinquency, and broken homes are not going to diminish if women were somehow forced to give up their jobs, she declared.

A woman's place is where she is happy—and this can be "in the home, outside on a job or both," Mrs. Peterson said.

She noted that some of those who complain about the growing number of women working seldom criticize women who leave their homes almost daily to spend their time at bridge tables or some similar pastime.

It is wrong, she said, to urge young girls to continue their education and then try to keep them from jobs by saying or implying they should be satisfied to stay home all the time.

If a woman organizes her time efficiently, said Mrs. Peterson, a mother of four herself, she can have both a full, happy home life and still have time to fulfill herself as a worker in an outside job.

Decision Up to Individual

But in a free society, this decision is—or should be—up to the individual woman and her family to decide, said Mrs. Peterson.

Any attempt to remove the 24 million working women from their jobs would obviously leave many industries and services crippled beyond repair, she pointed out, adding:

"Homemaking, for most, is no longer a full time job. Women, like men, should be trained for the skilled jobs of the future."

Also, she said, "we must find ways to give dignity to those jobs and services relating to the home," and one way is to pay higher wages.

Some possibilities for helping working women were offered, including:

- Tax law changes to make wages paid to housekeepers a tax-deductable business expense for all working mothers.
- Government aid to communities in establishing a homemakers' service through which experienced women will be recruited to help in a home where the mother is ill or unable to care for the children.
- Passage of a federal law requiring equal pay to men and women doing comparable jobs of comparable quality.

Justice Mildred L. Lillie of California's District Court of Appeal, told the conference that the public must be convinced of "woman's inalienable right to work."

Women must "erase the misconception that their presence in the work force is a luxury, not a necessity," she said.

"Too many women out of apathy, timidity, fatigue or ignorance do not take advantage of rights and privileges it took decades—even centuries—to win."

Other points agreed on were:

- Guidance and counseling personnel in education and industry should look toward new and expanding fields not traditionally staffed by women.
- Young women should be urged to complete their education and take a long view toward employment, not as a stopgap between school and marriage, but as a continuing affair, especially after their child-bearing days are ended.

National CSA Dir. Leo Perlis announced in New York that other CSA representatives would be assigned as needed.

Even before Carla struck, Smith had moved into Galveston—directly in the path of the storm—to represent CSA in mobilizing labor's assistance in the evacuation effort.

He met with Pres. Hank Brown and Sec.-Treas. Roy Evans of the State AFL-CIO and Exec. Sec. Lester Burnett of the State Building Trades Council. The group sent telegrams to all local central bodies calling for volunteers to man defenses against the hurricane, for the opening of union facilities as shelters and for women's auxiliaries to staff the shelters.

All told, 540 shelters were set up in Texas alone through the joint efforts of state labor and the Red Cross. They provided haven for some 180,000 persons.

15,000 Union Members Attend Worker Schools

Labor education has gained such wide acceptance that 15,000 union members attended worker training schools this summer and 20 state universities are now cooperating with the labor movement on worker education programs, Dir. Lawrence Rogin of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Education said on a nationwide radio broadcast.

Rogin's statement came in response to questions on the Mutual Broadcasting network program, Labor News Conference. He was interviewed by Harry Conn of Press Associates, Inc., and Joseph Gambatese, associate editor of the U.S. Chamber of Commerce publication, Nation's Business.

These advances in the field of labor education were cited by Rogin:

- Greater acceptance of education as a tool of union training.
- More union interest in training for staff representatives and local union bargainers and committeemen.
- Wider recognition by universities and educational authorities, of public responsibility for assistance to labor education programs.

Rogin said labor educators are primarily concerned with two things: helping trade unionists, through training and education, to do better jobs as union leaders, and making them better citizens by helping them face the problems confronting the nation.

In cooperation with the 10 percent of union members who carry responsibility for union activities, Rogin said the educational job is done in the following ways:

"Some of it is done by unions themselves, operating on their own, running conferences, running classes at night, running one-week schools. Some of it is done by unions working through universities or other public educational institutions, in adult education classes. And to a very large extent in specialized one-week summer training schools."

Questioned by Gambatese about whether such programs will lead toward improved relations and fewer strikes, Rogin said they are intended to make union action "less emotional" and based more on understanding of issues.

Facts for Bargaining

Education doesn't always remove unrest, but "what we hope for is the union negotiator. . . will have his facts more readily available, will understand how to deal with the employer, will go into negotiation" to reach an understanding and to continue the "normal, peaceful relations which should exist between management and labor."

Labor education is needed more than ever, Rogin said, with such problems as foreign trade and automation more common on the national and shop levels in bargaining.

In answer to whether unions try to "indoctrinate" members in labor education classes, Rogin replied that education is a process of discussion and understanding, carried on in programs similar to programs staged by churches, Boy Scout troops and Chambers of Commerce.

"But if it's to be effective education," he said, "it has to expose students to different points of view," with opportunities in class for them to raise questions and get answers. He added:

"So in the sense that it's a presentation of a line and then a rapping of the knuckles if anyone raises questions about this line, I would say that this is not the method of labor education. If you say it is concerned with the growth and well-being of the labor movement, you are correct."

When Conn asked about union experiences with civil rights, Rogin cited a recent school for union members in Mississippi, Alabama, Georgia and Tennessee. The delegates met at Scarritt College, in Nashville, Tenn., a Methodist institution—one of the few places which would open its facilities so all members could attend without discrimination, he pointed out.

Rogin said whites and Negroes, men and women, went to class together. The men stayed in dormitories together, ate together, discussed the "problems of the South" together.

Other Agencies Active

Other agencies active in the educational field are the international unions, such as the steelworkers, who consider plays, dramas and philosophy as a part of worker education; the AFL-CIO Community Services Activities, and other organizations, Rogin told listeners.

He cited his experiences at the University of Michigan, where he was formerly program administrator, in offering 30 different evening classes for periods of 8 to 10 weeks. The classes, he said, were open to any union member who wanted to attend.

AFL-CIO Makes Kit Available To 1961 Intercollegiate Debaters

A kit of materials presenting organized labor's views on the applicability of antitrust laws to trade unions has been prepared by the AFL-CIO for students taking part in the 1961 intercollegiate debate.

The college debaters this year are discussing the question, "Resolved, That Labor Organizations Should Be Under the Jurisdiction of Antitrust Legislation."

The kit includes AFL-CIO and other pamphlets and a bibliography prepared by the AFL-CIO Dept. of Education. The AFL-CIO publications are:

- "Power—for What?" in which Pres. George Meany asks "Too powerful for whom?" and "Too powerful for what?" He points out that those who have enjoyed monopolistic power in business and politics want to keep unions weak so they cannot challenge that power. The labor movement, he points out, uses its power for the good of all Americans and not for private gain. Business, he asserts, has just as much right to enter politics as labor has, and he invited business to exercise it.
- "Facts vs. Propaganda," which gives the truth about so-called "right-to-work" laws and explains that their real aim is to undermine trade unions for the economic benefits of those who promote them.
- "An Analysis of Antitrust Laws and Union Activity," a statement by Andrew J. Biemiller, a member of the AFL National Legislative Committee at the time of its presentation to the House Antitrust subcommittee in 1955 and now AFL-CIO director of legislation.

Biemiller shows how the demand for application of antitrust laws to labor disregards history; spells out the difference between unions and business and demonstrates how they cannot be treated alike for purposes of antitrust legislation, and shows that labor cannot be considered "monopolistic" despite its traducers.

Also included are:

- "Collective Bargaining or Monopoly," a 90-page booklet in which the Steelworkers rebut a wide range of arguments aimed to weaken collective bargaining.
- "Labor and Antitrust," a reprint of an article in the Industrial Union Dept.'s quarterly, "IUD Digest," by Arthur J. Goldberg, then IUD general counsel and now secretary of labor, showing that the labor monopoly charge is "false from every viewpoint" and that application of antitrust laws to unions would be a return to the 19th Century.
- "Don't 'Pulverize' Labor," a Congressional Record reprint of extension of remarks made in 1953 by former Rep. Franklin D. Roosevelt, Jr. (D-N.Y.), refuting a bill which would have destroyed multi-employer bargaining and national trade unions.

In a covering letter, AFL-CIO Education Dir. Lawrence Rogin said the labor movement feels strongly that antitrust laws "are not an appropriate means of dealing with the problems of unionism and collective bargaining."

"Over the years," he wrote, "those who have tried to kep unions weak and ineffective have attempted to use the courts and the antitrust laws for this purpose. It is for this reason most students of industrial relations in the United States do not look upon the antitrust laws as a constructive way to deal with collective bargaining problems.

Copies of the intercollegiate debate kit may be obtained without charge from the Pamphlet Division, AFL-CIO Dept. of Publications, 815 Sixteenth Street, N. W., Washington 6, D. C.

Union Leaders Widen Service in Communities

New York—More and more union officials are taking leadership roles in the health and welfare activities of their communities, Leo Perlis, director of AFL-CIO Community Service Activities, said in a statement issued here.

The 1961 AFL-CIO National Conference on Community Services earlier this year was devoted exclusively to community leadership, as were the seven regional training sessions, Perlis said, and community leadership is a top CSA priority.

He cited "outstanding examples of AFL-CIO leaders taking important roles in community affairs" reported by local CSA representatives.

In Chester, Pa., Staff Rep. Frank E. Ritter, of the Steelworkers was named "Man of the Year" by the Chester Businessmen's Association. Ritter was general chairman of the 1961 United Fund drive in Chester and has served as a commissioner in adjoining Ridley township.

Wallace O. Nelson, AFL-CIO community services representative in Omaha, set up a project to build a new home for a policeman who was permanently disabled in a gun battle and served as building trades coordinator for the project.

Wisconsin Gov. Gaylord Nelson appointed Wilbert L. Walter, director of community services for the Wisconsin State AFL-CIO, to the state Board of Public Welfare. A former president of Steelworkers Local 1173, Walter took courses in community health and welfare services at several universities. He is a member of the Wisconsin Welfare Council and the finance committee of United Community Services.

The work of Indiana unions was cited by the Indianapolis Times, which reported "Indiana's labor unions, like unions throughout the country, are moving into the field of community services." The article highlighted projects of the State AFL-CIO Community Service Committee and its director, Raymond H. Berndt.

In Fort Wayne, Ind., Helen M. Wise, secretary of the Central Labor Council's CSC, led a citizen's "Committee on Environmental Health Evaluation," a pilot project guided by the federal government. Its report includes sections on water, sewerage, refuse, air pollution, housing, planning, and general health.

Chairman John L. DeArman of the Tulsa Labor Council's Community Service Committee has done an outstanding job in pushing the CSA priority of blood banking, Perlis reported. In addition to recruiting donors from his Textile Workers Union of America, Local 790, DeArman persuaded the Community Services Committee to sponsor quarterly visits to Tulsa locals of a Red Cross Bloodmobile unit.

"These are typical, yet shining, examples of community leadership in action," Perlis concluded. "In the final analysis, the future of the American labor movement lies in its complete identification with the total community. It is partly through such activities that the influence of the labor movement's point of view will be exerted in our communities."

Health Bill Backers Lined Up by Forand

Former Rep. Aime J. Forand (D-R. I.) has announced the formation of a National Council of Senior Citizens for Health Care through Social Security. Forand was the chief sponsor of social security health care legislation until his retirement from Congress last year.

The council, which will seek both group and individual affiliations, said its goal is to "become a meaningful spokesman for the millions of voiceless senior citizens who want and need such legislation."

The group has established headquarters at 200 C Street, S.E., Washington 3, D. C.

Mrs. Ryder, Typo 50 Years, Dies at 84

St. Louis—Mrs. Mary E. Ryder, a member of the Typographical Union for 50 years, founder of the Ryder Homes for elderly women and former Missouri commissioner for the blind, died at 84 after suffering a stroke.

Mrs. Ryder learned the printer's trade as a girl and returned to it upon being widowed at the age of 35. She was a vice president of the former Central Trades & Labor Union of Missouri for eight years and founded the Lighthouse for the Blind.

BES Study Reveals:

Jobless Benefits Far Short Of Minimum Family Needs

Unemployment insurance benefits for the head of a family of four persons fail to cover even such absolute necessities as food, shelter, clothing, utilities and medical care.

This was among the major conclusions of a study of benefit adequacy recently issued by the Labor Dept.'s Bureau of Employment Security.

Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg, in forwarding a copy of the study to Rep. Wilbur D. Mills (D-Ark.), chairman of the House Ways & Means committee, urged that it be included in the record of any hearings on benefit improvements.

Pres. Kennedy last June urged Congress to give the unemployment insurance system a major overhaul that would establish federal standards and increase the maximum benefit level eventually to two-thirds of the average weekly wage in each state. So far, no hearings have been scheduled on bills incorporating his proposals.

Although the BES study is based on surveys in six states between 1954 and 1958, "subsequent experience generally indicates that unemployment insurance payments are still woefully inadequate," Goldberg wrote.

The findings, Goldberg said, are particularly significant because of the geographical distribution of the surveys and the fact that some were conducted during times of prosperity and others during recessions.

"In none of the surveys made did the average weekly benefit cover as much as half of the average weekly outlay for all expenses on the part of such families," the secretary observed.

Started in Pittsburgh

The BES study, developed under recommendations of the Federal Advisory Council on Employment Security, was initiated with a pilot survey in Pittsburgh, in the fall of 1954. Surveys subsequently were conducted in Tampa-St. Petersburg, in fall 1956; Anderson-Greenville-Spartanburg, S. C., in spring 1957; Albany-Schenectady, N. Y., spring 1957; Portland, Ore., spring 1958, and St. Louis, spring 1958.

Highlights of the report:

- Benefits received by single claimants—those living alone without family obligations—were high enough to meet nondeferrable living costs in five of the six areas surveyed, but not high enough to cover all cash expenses while unemployed.
- Benefits for secondary family wage earners also fell far short of household living costs. But continued employment of the chief wage earner enabled these families to withstand the loss of income "with less difficulty."
- The average weekly benefit for heads of four-person households amounted to no more than 78 percent and as little as 56 percent of the average weekly amount spent for costs that could not be deferred, such as food, housing, medical expenses and clothing.
- Where there was little or no other family income, the failure of unemployment benefits to provide for nondeferrable living costs "resulted in severe financial hardship and deprivation for many jobless workers."
- Two-thirds or more of the family breadwinners—as many as 85 or 86 percent in two areas—received weekly benefits that were less than half their former gross weekly earnings. For more than half the head-of-household claimants in each of the six studies, benefits were less than 50 percent of their former take-home pay.
- Because average weekly benefits failed to cover even half their average weekly expenses, most families were compelled to make other financial adjustments besides cutting their cash outlays, "giving further evidence of the degree of hardship imposed on them by unemployment."
- "Where claimants exhausted savings, dropped life insurance policies, received cash relief or relief in the form of free goods and services, or made other severe adjustments, there is a fair presumption that unemployment insurance benefits were not high enough to meet the objectives of the unemployment insurance program."
- State-imposed ceilings on unemployment benefits "were especially restrictive" for heads of households. Because they tend to earn higher wages than other types of claimants, between 40 and 90 percent of the family heads drew the maximum benefit. But these benefits represented a smaller proportion of previous earnings than those received by other beneficiaries. From 20 to 60 percent of the single claimants and from 10 to 33 percent of secondary family wage earners also received the maximum weekly amount.

The BES noted that a fundamental objective of unemployment insurance is "to provide an unemployed worker with sufficient current cash to permit him to cover his basic living costs or 'nondeferrable' expenses while looking for work."

It also stated that "it is generally held that for the great majority of workers the weekly benefit should equal at least half the former weekly wage." (The last AFL-CIO convention said this should be the absolute floor and that benefits generally should replace not less than 65 percent of wages lost.)

Neither of these objectives was met in the six areas surveyed, the findings show.

To make ends meet, jobless workers resorted to a variety of devices to supplement their income from benefits. Where the head of the household was out of work, for example, the number of families that dipped into savings ranged from 14 percent in one area to 75 percent in another.

Other Income Sources

From 5 to 14 percent of the families completely exhausted their savings, 2 to 33 percent cashed bonds and other securities, 45 to 54 percent increased debts to stores, 11 to 46 percent borrowed money, 5 to 19 percent received free medical or dental help, 24 to 48 percent postponed medical or dental care, 2 to 27 percent obtained relief goods and services, 2 to 5 percent received cash relief, and 6 to 33 percent dropped their life insurance.

There is no common agreement on the extent to which unemployment insurance should make such adjustments unnecessary, BES noted.

"It seems reasonable," the report added, "to expect that an eligible unemployed worker should receive a high enough benefit to enable him to continue to be an independent, useful citizen during his temporary joblessness. For a claimant to have to seek public relief, or other similar types of aid usually provided for the indigent, hardly seems to be consonant with the concept of social insurance."

The bureau cautioned that its study was concerned with but one aspect of the unemployment insurance structure—the adequacy of the weekly benefit amount—and did not examine such other factors as eligibility requirements or the duration of benefits.

Since the surveys, the report noted, five of the six states involved have increased their benefit ceilings: Pennsylvania from $30 to $40, Florida from $26 to $33, New York from $36 to $50, Missouri from $33 to $40, and South Carolina from $26 to a $33 flexible maximum dependent on the statewide average wage. The maximum benefit in Oregon has remained unchanged at $40.

$3.5 Million Subsidy Seen To Struck Line

Atlanta — Government subsidies of more than $3.5 million have helped Southern Airways to operate during the 14-month strike of its 140-plane captains and copilots, the Air Line Pilots have charged.

ALPA Pres. C. N. Sayen said management has received more than $24 million in public funds with no investigation to determine whether the expenditures are proper. More than $3 million of this was paid during the Pilots' "peaceful and lawful strike" and in face of the fact, Sayen said, that a number of strikebreaking pilots it hired "are of doubtful moral character" and have been fired by other airlines for not meeting professional standards.

Government subsidies provide more than 45 percent of Southern's annual income, said Sayen, who reported that the ALPA executive committee has adopted a program to mobilize pilots behind Southern's regular pilots.

Convention to Act:

Bus Union Seeking Rise in Per Capita

Toronto, Ont.—A proposed revision and modernizing of its constitution, including a 25 percent increase in the per capita tax, dominated the opening sessions of the convention of the Street Electric Railway & Motor Coach Employes here.

The constitutional changes were designed to streamline and clarify the provisions but the proposed per capita increase signified a new approach to the 165,000-member union's defense fund program.

Pres. John M. Elliott, in his report, noted that the $1.60 per capita did not permit the union to fight two serious threats to the security of transit workers—a trend toward public ownership and lack of planning for rapid transit.

The trend to public ownership has brought the threat of lost bargaining rights in two cities—metropolitan Miami and Fresno, Calif., now bitterly resisting recognition of the union. Delegates were informed transit workers in San Antonio, Tex., lost their union when the system went under municipal ownership.

"A vital part of employes' protection in the area of transition to public operation is the maintenance of and development of the political strength needed to obtain protective legislation," said Elliott.

"This can only be done where sufficient funds are available to the international union."

He said unplanned and haphazardous municipal development gives undue importance to the automobile and provides for no orderly development of mass transit facilities for the future.

The 40-cent increase in per capita would go to the union defense fund, which would cover not only strikes and lockouts but political action and transit planning to protect future job opportunities.

The convention, first to be opened to the press in the 69-year history of the union started with Pres. Edward W. McDermott, of Division 113 (Toronto), stressing that 14,000 Canadian members are aware of their stake in the union.

"With less than 10 percent of the membership we know that 100 percent of the union resources are at our command whenever the need arises," he said.

Pres. David Archer of the Ontario Federation of Labor thanked the union for switching its convention dinner from the strike-bound Royal York Hotel here.

The 36th biennial convention sessions were scheduled for the King Edward Hotel but the dinner at the Royal York, attracting 1,700 persons, was changed because of the strike. Mayor Nathan Phillips of Toronto was not invited because he has repeatedly crossed Royal York picket lines of the Hotel & Restaurant Employes.

The convention received a letter from Pres. Kennedy praising the union's enlightened leadership. During post-convention hours most delegates took a busman's holiday, riding the Toronto Transit Commission subways, Toronto Transit streetcars and busses on passes issued by the company.

4 Canadian IWA Locals Win Strike

Toronto—Some 600 members of four Canadian locals of the Longshoremen have won wage increases of 24 cents an hour over two years in a new contract that ended a 42-day strike.

In addition the agreement gives increased welfare benefits to members of Dockworkers Local 1842 and Checkers Local 1869 in Toronto and Dockworkers Local 1654 and Checkers Local 1879 in Hamilton, Ont.

The wage increases were split 15 cents an hour during the first year of the contract, which is retroactive to July 10, and nine cents effective the second year. The rate under the old contract, which expired July 9, was $1.95 an hour.

The Shipping Federation of Canada, the employer group, agreed to pay 11 cents per man-hour worked into the welfare fund in Toronto, compared with the previous seven cents. In Hamilton, it will pay four cents the first year and seven cents the second year.

The 600 ILA members walked out July 10 after rejecting an employer offer of 12 cents the first year and six cents the second year of a two-year agreement.

Arms Control Agency Bill Backed in House

Labor-backed Administration proposals for an agency to coordinate American disarmament and arms control planning have passed the Senate and won unanimous support from the House Foreign Affairs Committee.

The House committee acted after hearings at which the AFL-CIO strongly endorsed the bill and declared that "present tensions, even though they should persist for months or years, should not obscure the need for a thorough and continuing study of disarmament."

AFL-CIO Legislative Director Andrew J. Biemiller declared that "it is obvious to all Americans . . . that disarmament on a unilateral basis, or without effective controls, would amount to national suicide."

At some future time—be it one year or 50—an opportunity for genuine reduction in armaments will again arise," he predicted. "When this opportunity arises, we must be ready for it—just as ready as we now stand to defend ourselves and our principles with the most terrible weapons of modern war."

The agency would be an independent body under the Administration proposal and the House committee bill. It will be part of the State Dept. in the Senate version. In either case it would have responsibility for developing reduction of armaments plans and for conducting studies and conferences on problems of disarmament, including the effects on the economy.

The Senate passed the bill 73 to 14 after defeating an attempt by Republican Leader Everett McKinley Dirksen (Ill.) to sidetrack it for this session and an amendment by Sen. Barry M. Goldwater (R-Ariz.) to strip the agency of authority to conduct research and development programs.

Both the Senate and the House committee changed the name of the proposed agency. The Senate called it the Arms Control & Disarmament Agency for World Peace & Security, adding the words "arms control." The House committee dropped the disarmament designation entirely and named it the United States Arms Control Agency.

Basis for the name changes was the argument that arms control must necessarily precede disarmament.

The AFL-CIO testimony emphasized that continuing study is needed "not only to the ultimate negotiations of disarmament agreements, but to coping with their effects on our economy . . . We must be prepared in advance to make sure that a step toward peace does not become a stride toward human hardship."

Brown Sees Neutrals Shift In UN to Reds

The neutral or "non-aligned" nations can be expected to support the Soviet proposals to reorganize the United Nations secretariat when the UN General Assembly opens Sept. 12, AFL-CIO European Rep. Irving Brown declared.

Brown made his forecast on the Mutual Broadcasting System's Labor News Conference program, on which he was questioned by Howard Norton, Washington correspondent of the Baltimore Sun and author of the recently-published "Only in Russia," and Alex Uhl, editor of Press Associates, Inc.

Khrushchev's "strategy of terror" in announcing resumption of nuclear bomb tests on the eve of the neutrals' Belgrade conference has had an effect on the non-aligned nations, he said. On the German question, he maintained, "they have all expressed basically what comes down to the Soviet position" and "have accepted the Soviet position on Berlin."

The U.S. lost a chance for a psycholol gical blow at the Kremlin, Brown said, by failing to encourage East Berliners to knock down the wall the Reds built.

"But I don't think the issue is merely in terms of knocking down a wall or building a wall," he added. "It is a more basic issue we are facing in that for years we have said that we will not permit Western Germany to be overrun.

"I am afraid that unless we carry out what has become an implied guarantee to the German people we will face, in the coming months, a sort of war of attrition by the Russians by which they will push us back first psychologically, then in terms of political discussion. I'm afraid that this wall symbolizes what has been to a certain extent rethreat on the Berlin question."

Brown called for a reappraisal of "basic American foreign policy and how America acts and reacts to problems throughout the world."

"One thing I think we ought to get into our heads" he declared, "is that foreign policy should not be devoted to the objective of being loved by other people."

In answer to questions about Russian military and economic strength, Brown said the Soviet has convinced leaders in many parts of the world that "they have a superior military position." But military strength, he asserted, rests on a strong economy, and "the Soviet economy is one of the greatest overrated economies that the world has ever seen."

Kennedy Wages Last-Ditch Fight for Foreign Aid Funds

committee members, urged the restoration "in view of the critical world situation and in the interest of the national security."

As Congress moved into its final days, the Administration took a last buffeting on school aid and on construction of a power generating unit at an Atomic Energy Commission plutonium production plant.

Vote on School Issue

The Senate school action came on the narrow issue of whether the National Defense Education Act and federal aid to schools crowded by children of military or civilian government workers should be extended for one or two years.

The real issue—recognized by both sides—was whether supporters of a broad school aid bill, bottled up this year by the House Rules Committee, would be assured an opportunity to get a vote on their proposals next year.

Pres. Kennedy gave an 11th hour endorsement to supporters of the move to limit the extension of the two popular bills to one year. In one of the rare rebuffs he has been handed by the Senate, the one-year limitation was defeated 40 to 45. The House had previously passed a two-year extension after defeating an Administration move to add a stripped-down emergency school bill.

Thirty-five Democrats and five Republicans supported the President's position while 21 Democrats and 24 Republicans backed the two-year extension proposal sponsored by Sen. A. S. Mike Monroney (D-Okla.).

Atomic Compromise Beaten

A conference committee compromise on the Atomic Energy Commission's appropriations bill was decisively rejected by the House which twice before had taken a stand against construction of a generating unit that would utilize steam from plutonium production at Hanford, Wash.

The conference committee sought to overcome House objections that the government would be getting into the power business by limiting the electric generating capacity to the amount needed to supply the needs of the Hanford project itself. Thus the steam produced by the manufacturing operation would provide the electricity needed for the manufacturing process. But 95 Democrats joined with 156 Republicans to defeat the proposal, while only 11 Republicans voted with 144 Democrats for the conference report.

Public power supporters emerged with one victory when the House approved funds to finance a government power transmission system on the Upper Colorado River storage project. This was opposed by private utilities which wanted to build the lines themselves. The project was part of a $3.66 billion river, harbor and public works bill which was sent to the Senate by a 227 to 182 vote.

In other action, as Congress cleared the decks for early adjournment:

- A two-year extension of the Civil Rights Committee, tacked to an appropriation bill by the Senate to free it from an unfriendly Judiciary Committee, was approved by the House and sent to the President.
- The Senate, by a scant 42 to 40 margin, approved a labor and Administration supported amendment to the Mexican farm labor program designed to give imported Mexican workers a higher wage and thus indirectly raise wages for American migrant workers. The amendment faced an uphill battle in conference with the House which had voted for a straight two-year extension of the present program.
- A bill providing $30 million in federal funds over three years to aid communities set up projects to combat juvenile delinquency has been passed by Congress. The AFL-CIO had testified in favor of the measure.
- The Senate leadership scheduled, beginning Sept. 16, debate on a proposal to make it easier to cut off debate and block filibusters.

The move to permit debate to be cut off by a three-fifths vote was to be debated under the present rules which require a two-thirds vote to cut off debate. Senate Majority Leader Mike Mansfield (Mont.) said he will move to cut off debate if the Senate's southern bloc should attempt to filibuster the proposal.

A prolonged battle over the rules change could keep the Senate in session after the House adjourns.

- Three bills aimed at giving law enforcement agencies stronger weapons against organized crime were signed by Kennedy. They were key parts of Atty. Gen. Robert F. Kennedy's legislative program.
- A bill establishing the Peace Corps on a permanent basis passed the Senate and appeared headed for House approval. The Senate Appropriations Committee also added to the foreign aid spending bill the full $40 million which had been requested for the program.

Union Rights Urged For U.S. Employes

of the AFL-CIO Metal Trades Dept., who cited collective bargaining agreements covering employes of the Tennessee Valley Authority, the Interior Dept.'s Bonneville Power Administration and the Government Printing Office as evidence that "effective collective bargaining, based upon genuine union recognition, can be a working reality for all federal employes."

He pointed out also that many "advanced and democratic nations of the free world" encourage and bargain with organizations of government workers.

● E. C. Hallbeck, chairman of the AFL-CIO Government Employes' Council and president of the Postal Clerks, who called on the federal government to "practice what it preaches." He said that "if modern labor-management practices are good for private industry and the employes of private industry, they are good for the federal government and its employes as well."

Hallbeck told the task force that government employe unions accept the principle "that the public interest must come first" and that they have a responsibility "not only to their members but to the general welfare."

● Jerome J. Keating, vice president of the Letter Carriers, who said that some government employes "are subjected to penalties because of their union activity" despite policy statements prohibiting discrimination. He voiced the opinion that harassment of active union members "is a major factor in the failure of many employes to belong to a union."

Keating praised the employe relations policies of the present Post Office administration but said management attitudes vary widely at local post offices. "A strong proclamation in the form of an executive order or a law appears necessary to reach all officials at all levels," he declared.

● James A. Campbell, president of the Government Employes, who who said that "formal directives" will not by themselves prevent interference with the right of government workers to organize and discrimination against union members. He urged the Administration to "take the initiative to stamp out discrimination against federal employes who participate in union affairs."

While strongly supporting exclusive bargaining rights when a union obtains a majority, Campbell said government agencies should deal with and consult unions as representatives of their members until such time as the union is able to establish a majority.

Biemiller praised Kennedy's June 22 memorandum setting up the task force and calling on "management officials at all levels" to recognize "the right of all employes of the federal government to join and participate" in unions. He said the policy statement should be promptly backed up by "legislation or an executive order of the President, or both."

He said AFL-CIO unions are not seeking the right to strike against the federal government but "if collective bargaining is to be at all effective in the federal service, an alternative will have to be found for the right to strike."

Conciliations Favored

The AFL-CIO proposed that when unions and government agencies are unable to reach an agreement, the Federal Mediation & Conciliation Service should assist in the negotiations.

If this failed to bring about a settlement, the dispute should be submitted to a seven-member Government Labor-Management Relations Panel empowered to hold hearings and issue a binding decision, he said. The President, however, in such a procedure would be empowered to set aside the decision if he deemed such action in the public interest.

The AFL-CIO also proposed that each department and agency negotiate with its employe organizations grievance procedures which would include arbitration as a final step. The cost of arbitration would be shared by the government and the union representing the employe.

As subjects for union-management negotiations, Biemiller listed pay (except where set by congressional action), work procedures, shift differentials, automation, safety, transfers, job classifications, promotions, hours of work, disciplinary actions, individual and group grievances.

Recognition, the AFL-CIO declared, should be limited to national organizations set up to represent employes in dealings with management and not extended to social or fraternal groups or organizations sponsored by government agencies or departments.

Would Penalize Discrimination

Biemiller strongly supported the President's policy directive prohibiting recognition of organizations which practice racial discrimination or segregation.

In addition to Goldberg, members of the task force are Defense Sec. Robert S. McNamara, Postmaster Gen. J. Edward Day, Budget Director David E. Bell, Civil Service Commission Chairman John W. Macy, Jr., and Theodore C. Sorensen, special counsel to the President.

Field hearings to be chaired by alternate members of the commission have been scheduled for later this month in New York, Dallas, Chicago, Denver, Atlanta and San Francisco.

COLLECTIVE BARGAINING RIGHTS for government workers, with arbitration of disputes and grievances, is urged by AFL-CIO Legislative Director Andrew J. Biemiller in testimony before presidential task force headed by Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg. With Biemiller at the witness table is Legislative Rep. Kenneth A. Meiklejohn.

TUC in Policy Shift Rejects Nuclear Arms Ban for Britain

Portsmouth, Eng.—The British Trades Union Congress, in a sharp policy shift, has reversed its support of unilateral nuclear disarmament for Great Britain.

At its 93rd annual meeting, the TUC voted down by a majority of 3.5 million a call for removal of nuclear weapons from the British defense arsenal and abolition of their manufacture and testing here.

The proposal, introduced again this year by Gen. Sec. Frank Cousins of the Transport & General Workers Union, had carried by more than a million votes at the 1960 congress despite widespread opposition in a number of affiliated unions. It subsequently was approved by the Labor Party over the opposition of Hugh Gaitskell and other party leaders.

The congress also rejected—4.6 million to 3 million—a proposal by Cousins that it seek the closing of U.S. Polaris missile bases in the British Isles.

The TUC, however, deplored the resumption of nuclear bomb tests by both the Soviet Union and the U.S. and protested the training of German troops on British soil.

Declines ICFTU Pledge

In action on international labor affairs, the TUC refused to approve a request from the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions for a voluntary contribution to the organization's Intl. Solidarity Fund, which is designed to help build free unions in newly developed countries.

The TUC gave approximately $1.4 million to help finance the first three years of the Solidarity Fund, but Gen. Sec. George Woodcock said the British unions preferred some other method of financing.

The AFL-CIO has pledged to contribute $3.25 million toward the total goal of $10 million for the fund in the current three-year period.

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, who attended the TUC for the first time since 1945, said in an interview with British reporters that he was disappointed by British labor's decision to withhold a pledge of funds but said that he would not criticize it. He said he understood that the TUC had special financial problems.

Scandinavian and other free world union groups have made substantial pledges of money, in addition to that pledged by the AFL-CIO, Omer Becu, general secretary of the ICFTU declared. Becu, who attended the congress, said he believed the total goal would be reached despite the decision by the British unions.

Meany met with Woodcock and the TUC Intl. Committee. His visit here was in return of a Woodcock visit to the United States last June.

In other actions, the TUC:

● Ousted the Communist-dominated Electrical Trades Union, which has persistently evaded TUC inquiries into charges of an election fraud conspiracy.

● Rejected an appeal from the conservative government to hold the line on wages.

● Reasserted, by a narrow vote, its policy against maintaining formal cultural contacts with trade unions in Communist countries.

● Elected Miss Anne Godwin, secretary of the Clerical & Administrative Workers Union, as chairman of the general council.

● Refused to re-elect Willy Painter, only Communist member of the last general council.

U. S. Workers' Organizing Right Upheld

The right to organize is a "natural right" which "extends to government workers as well as to the employes of private industry," Msgr. George G. Higgins emphasized in a Labor Day sermon in Washington.

Msgr. Higgins, director of the Social Action Dept. of the National Catholic Welfare Conference, preached at a Labor Day mass attended by top-ranking government, labor and management officials.

He urged the development of methods "by which government workers can effectively appeal their economic grievances without the necessity of resorting to strike."

"If government workers have some duties to the public, they also have some rights," he added. "It is to be hoped that the government will take whatever steps are necessary to enable them to implement these rights more effectively than they have been able to do in the past."

Automation Seen Eliminating Poverty

Galesburg, Ill.—Automation and technological improvements can be used to eliminate poverty and unemployment around the world if labor, management and other groups would help distribute surplus products among the needy, Tilford E. Dudley of the AFL-CIO staff said in a Labor Day speech here.

AFL-CIO Thanked For 'Wonderful Gift'

A note of thanks for the "wonderful gifts" of a typewriter and duplicating machine, with accessories, has been received by AFL-CIO Vice Pres. Lee W. Minton from Sec.-Gen. John Davidson Cole of the Gambia (West Africa) Workers' Union.

The equipment was sent through CARE, on the board of which Minton is AFL-CIO representative. Gifts of similar equipment may be sent to struggling young unions in underdeveloped countries through contributions to CARE.

"We are very grateful for these little but very necessary technical aids that the AFL-CIO is offering to us," Cole wrote, "and what is most important . . . is the spirit of fraternity and friendship with which they were given. I would like to ask you to convey our gratitude to the millions of free workers who have so willingly given us these gifts."

Trade, Legal Problems Face Lathers' Parley

Trade and legal problems loomed large on the agenda of the Lathers as delegates from the United States and Canada met in the nation's capital for the union's 24th convention.

Pres. Lloyd A. Mashburn, in his opening address, said the delegates would consider such problems as a national apprentice-training program, proper financing of trade material promotion, organizing, and disputes with other unions over work jurisdiction.

Mashburn and Gen. Counsel Louis Wilderman cited court rulings against a joint union-industry fund for the promotion of building materials. Various amendments were proposed to union bylaws and constitution to conform with the Landrum-Griffin Act.

Convention speakers included Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg, who brought greetings from Pres. John F. Kennedy; Stuart Rothman, general counsel of the National Labor Relations Board; Pres. C. J. Haggerty of the AFL-CIO Bldg. & Construction Trades Dept.; Director James L. McDevitt of the AFL-CIO Committee on Political Education; Pres. Edward J. Leonard of the Plasterers; Pres. John J. Murphy and Sec. Thomas F. Murphy of the Bricklayers.

Business before the delegates included proposals to set up a convention expense fund, establish pensions for union employes, raise Mashburn's salary to $20,000 and that of Sec.-Treas. Harold Mills to $15,000.

In his annual report Mashburn said the number of indentured apprentices is 1,758, or less than the intended ratio of one to every five journeymen. Jurisdictional disputes pending in 1961 before the National Joint Board totaled 130, all with one union, he said.

Goldberg praised the union, and all the building trades, for their "fine record of achievement" in preserving the peace at missile construction sites,

Haggerty, who is the Lathers' first vice president and chairman of its convention resolutions committee, criticized the "unfair" and "half-told" story of missile base strikes, and named Sen. John L. McClellan (D-Ark.) as one who failed to allow labor to submit a defense. Haggerty said he prepared testimony after McClellan promised to call him as a witness, waited 12 days to testify and then never was called.

McDevitt presented Mashburn with a COPE award for the union's five-year record of 100 percent-of-quota contributions.

Meany Calls on Assembly To 'Defend' United Nations

Meany Raps Soviet Bomb Tests, Backs Kennedy Proposal for Ban

The AFL-CIO has voiced its strong support of Pres. Kennedy's appeal for unconditional banning of all nuclear tests in the atmosphere and condemned the Soviet Union for its new test series and the renewed threat of radioactive fallout.

The federation's position was set forth by Pres. George Meany in a cable to the General Council of Trade Unions of Japan—Sohyo—which had urged the AFL-CIO to protest the American government's position on nuclear testing.

Meany replied to Sohyo in a cable declaring:

"Long-standing AFL-CIO policy has been for stopping all nuclear tests conditional upon international verification. We now support Pres. Kennedy's appeal to the Soviet Union for unconditional banning of all tests in atmosphere which lead to nuclear fallout. AFL-CIO strongly condemns Soviet Union for having initiated recommencement of nuclear testing. We call upon Japanese trade unions to condemn unreservedly Soviet announced intention to continue tests."

The Sohyo cable to Meany, signed by Pres. Kaoru Ota, dealt with the U.S. announcement on resumption of tests and did not mention the Soviet Union's unilateral ending of an informal three-year moratorium of nuclear testing to resume an intensive series of atmospheric tests that is sharply increasing worldwide radioactive fallout.

Warns of Threats By 'Sinister Forces'

The AFL-CIO has called on the United Nations General Assembly to defend the world organization from the "sinister forces" threatening its destruction as the "greatest monument" it can build to the memory of Dag Hammarskjold.

Federation Pres. George Meany declared that the 16th session of the assembly which opened Sept. 19 can build this monument "by pursuing with unwavering loyalty and redoubled vigor" the late secretary-general's policies for making the UN "an even more effective instrument for protecting the smaller and weaker nations and preserving world peace."

"The AFL-CIO sincerely hopes," he said, "that inspired by and loyal to the ideals which animated Dag Hammarskjold, the 16th General Assembly will rally fully and firmly to the support and defense of the charter and organization of the UN which he served so devotedly and supported so brilliantly in the face of even the fiercest and most unwarranted attacks."

Meany's plea, directed especially to the smaller and newer nations which would suffer most severely if the UN were weakened, came in the face of the Soviet Union's renewed determination to replace one-man leadership of the UN with its "troika" concept—three secretaries-general, each with the power of veto, representing the free world, the Communist world and the unaligned nations.

Hammarskjold was on a mission to help a small, new nation—to arrange a truce in strife-torn Congo—when he died in a plane crash in Rhodesia. With the death of "the indomitable and tireless leader" of

Congress Acts On Final Bills

The Capitol Hill spotlight shifted to a handful of conference committees as the first session of Congress under the Kennedy Administration headed into its final hours.

Foreign aid appropriations, establishment of an arms control agency and a showdown battle over extension of the Mexican contract farm labor program were among the major items awaiting final resolution as the AFL-CIO News went to press.

Cleared and sent to the White House was a labor-backed Administration bill expanding federal grants for community health facilities, providing added funds for construction of non-profit nursing homes, and launching a new program of federal aid for non-hospital health services for the aged and the chronically ill.

A conference report establishing the Peace Corps as a permanent agency passed the House

Treasurer Heads Campaign:

CofC Opens Drive To Ban Union Shop

By David L. Perlman

The U.S. Chamber of Commerce has launched an open drive to outlaw the union shop "wherever and in whatever form it may exist."

Spearheading the business group's campaign for so-called "right-to-work" laws will be a new, blue-ribbon Special Committee for Voluntary Unionism, headed by CofC Treas. Wofford B. Camp, head of a big California corporation farm enterprise.

A number of committee members have previously been identified with the National Right-to-Work Committee, which up to now, in public at least, has been the major agency for the big business drive to obtain state laws to prohibit the union shop.

The chamber said its special committee will offer help to "individuals and groups who desire 'right-to-work' laws in their states." It announced that the unit will also combat efforts to repeal the Taft-Hartley Act's Sec. 14B, the provision which allows states to bar unions and management from negotiating union shop agreements.

The National Council for Industrial Peace, citizens' group opposing "work" laws, labeled the move "an attempt to bolster the faltering attack by the National Right-to-Work Committee on the labor-management policies of the United States."

John M. Redding, director of the industrial peace council, charged that establishment of the CofC committee represented "an effort to channel increased funds into this anti-collective bargaining drive" and was "evidence of mounting dissatisfaction of ultra-rightists" with the failure of state "right-to-work" drives in recent years.

New Front for CofC

Redding said the chamber "has long used the National Right-to-Work Committee as its front" in the anti-union shop campaign. In recent years, he pointed out, this

Sea Strike Ban Ends, 2 Unions Seek Pacts

New contracts with higher wages and improved working conditions for members of sea unions, with employer recognition of the unions' right to organize the crews of "runaway flag" vessels, had been signed by most maritime trades as this issue of the AFL-CIO News went to press.

The Sept. 21 expiration of an 80-day Taft-Hartley injunction found two organizations still seeking to reach agreement—the Masters Mates & Pilots for 2,300 members on the Pacific Coast, and the Seafarers for crews of 13 Alcoa Steamship Co. vessels.

Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg announced the appointment of a review board to conduct hearings on the foreign flags issue: Under Sec. of Labor W. Willard Wirtz, Under Sec. of Commerce Edward Gudeman, and Donald Strauss, New York City labor arbitrator.

NLRB Club Studied for 'Bad' Firms

By Willard Shelton

The National Labor Relations Board is giving "serious study" to proposals for stringent court action to halt "illegal techniques" used by employers to destroy the majority status of a union during an organization drive.

This was revealed by NLRB Chairman Frank W. McCulloch in a speech before the Federal Bar Association convention in Washington, D. C.

Discussing the need for prompt and effective board action in handling unfair-practice charges, McCulloch said the NLRB was specifically considering a plan to seek federal court injunctions to force bad-faith employers to recognize a union for 12 months, to guarantee existing conditions for this period by written contract, and to "make reasonable counter-proposals to reasonable union demands."

Such injunctive relief, the chairman indicated, would be sought under existing NLRB authority embodied in the Wagner Act as modified by the Taft-Hartley Act but never applied.

Less drastic techniques are appropriate, McCulloch said, when a union or an employer violates the labor law "innocently, in good faith or in ignorance." The number of unfair-practice cases settled by voluntary agreement in such circumstances, he said, has "more than doubled" in the past four years.

In the case of "some employers" and "some unions" that "repeatedly violate the terms of our statute with knowledge that they are doing so," the labor board "needs a bigger stick," McCulloch told his audience.

Two Organizers Beaten In Georgia Mill Town

By John M. Barry

Chattanooga, Tenn.—Second Vice Pres. Ted Benton of the Hosiery Workers was in Erlanger Hospital here following a beating by a gang of hoodlums at Ellijay, Ga.

After a week of treatment for his wounds, Benton had been released from the hospital at his own insistence. He was rushed back the same day, however, bleeding from a ruptured blood vessel in his head.

He had gone to Ellijay, a small mill town about 60 miles southeast of Chattanooga, with Organizer William W. Rainey, who was also beaten by the mob, but was less seriously injured.

(In Washington, the Civil Rights Division of the Justice Dept. said it was still investigating the incident on the basis of reports from the Federal Bureau of Investigation, which had been asked by Asst. Attn. Gen. Burke Marshall to look into the case.)

The two union officials were responding to an appeal from workers at the Chadbourn-Gotham Hosiery Mill in Ellijay for help in organizing.

They were attacked by a group of five toughs as they left a restaurant in the center of town, less than a mile from the mill. The gang quickly swelled to about 35 men, some of whom were wielding long-bladed knives, Rainey told union officials here.

He said he and Benton were pursued by the gang as they ran for the police station to seek shelter.

UPWA Gains Wage Raises In Swift Pact

Chicago—The Packinghouse Workers have reached a new agreement with Swift & Co. providing pay increases of 19 cents an hour over three years, following the pattern of earlier settlements with the company.

The contract, covering some 12 000 employes at 18 plants, adds protections for workers laid off as the result of plant or department shutdowns, guaranteeing 90 days notice of such closings and the opportunity to apply for transfers to other Swift installations.

Seven cents an hour of the pay increase is retroactive to Sept. 4.

5-Week Vacations Won at Cudahy

Chicago—Five weeks of vacation a year—a condition unique in the industry—has been negotiated by the Packinghouse Workers for employes of Cudahy Packing Co. with at least 25 years of service.

The new contract, which covers some 3,500 workers at five Cudahy plants, provides the pattern wage increase of 19 cents an hour spread over three years. Other terms are in line with the union's settlement with Swift & Co. except that no provision is made for transfers to other plants in the event of shutdowns.

The second and third steps of 6 cents each will be applied in September 1962 and 1963. At the Atlanta, Ga., plant, the second and third raises will be 3 cents.

Additional increases as high as 15 cents an hour will stem from a half-cent increase in the spread between job classifications, making it 4.5 cents. A number of the classifications were upgraded.

The contract also continues the cost of living adjustment of 1 cent an hour for each half-point change in the Consumer Price Index. The current 5-cent "float" is made a part of the basic wage, and an additional 1 cent due in January is part of the first-year raise.

Among other provisions are:

- Payment of up to $500 in moving expenses for each employe transferred after a plant closing.
- Improved health insurance benefits and extension of coverage for six months to employes laid off following a plant or department closing.
- Improvement in the separation pay accrual rate to a maximum of two weeks pay for each year of service.
- Reduction in service requirements for vacation to provide three weeks off after 10 years and four weeks after 20 years.
- Paid leave for up to three work days following the death of a close relative.

Negotiations are continuing with Wilson, Morrell and a number of small packers.

UAW Asks 'Pattern' Contract at Harvester

Chicago—Benefits worked out with American Motors and General Motors provide a "sound basis for working out an agreement prior to Sept. 22" with the Intl. Harvester Co., the Auto Workers have told management here.

UAW locals at Harvester are authorized to take a strike vote on that date. The union seeks improvements in pensions, insurance, hospital-medical care, and protection against loss during layoffs as well as wage increases.

Kennedy Given Pledge On Steel Wage Goals

The 1962 steel industry negotiations will give "full weight and recognition" to the public interest, Steelworkers Pres. David J. McDonald has assured Pres. Kennedy.

McDonald wrote the President commenting on the White House letter to 12 major steel producers appealing to them to forego a price increase in October when an automatic wage increase negotiated two years ago takes effect.

Kennedy's letter stressed that the industry can look forward to "good profits without an increase in prices." Four of the top producers have replied complaining of a squeeze on profit margins and declaring in effect that they will handle prices as they see fit.

McDonald, in his letter, said that the Steelworkers are in complete agreement and wholeheartedly accept the proposition that next year's contract "should give full weight and recognition not only to the needs of workers and stockholders but also to the public interest." He stressed that "This has always been the policy of the union."

His letter brought a reply from Kennedy expressing appreciation for the pledged cooperation and adding that the public interest would best be served by settlement "within the limits of advances in productivity and price stability."

First reaction to Kennedy's plea to the steelmakers came from U.S. Steel and Bethlehem Steel Co. Similar replies have been made public by Jones & Laughlin and Republic Steel, while four other companies have replied to the President but have not made public their replies.

There was increasing speculation in industry circles, meanwhile, that the steel companies may not attempt an across-the-board increase in prices this year but that sometimes before the end of 1961 selective price increases on specific types of steel may be put into effect.

Roosevelt U. Debtless, Awards Five Degrees

Chicago—Roosevelt University marked its 16th anniversary with a Founders' Day banquet celebrating the fact that it is completely out of debt and has a property valuation of $10.6 million.

Honorary degrees were awarded to five benefactors including Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg, who donated the first scholarship in 1945. Goldberg, former special counsel for the AFL-CIO, was awarded a doctor of laws degree.

Benton, however, was knocked down in the street and beaten and kicked by his assailants, Rainey reported. Others in the gang caught up with Rainey inside the police station, dragged him from the small enclosure, knocked him down and continued beating him, he said.

After the beatings, Benton and Rainey were arrested and locked up in the Gilmer County jail on charges of fighting, disorderly conduct, inciting a riot and soliciting membership without a license in violation of a city ordinance.

For more than 24 hours they were denied permission to telephone their district headquarters in Chattanooga, Rainey said, and it was not until word was passed through a relative of another prisoner that they were able to obtain legal assistance.

Meanwhile, Rainey said, Benton had been taken to the Ellijay clinic where he was x-rayed, but he was returned to his cell immediately without any medication. Rainey himself, suffering from deep cuts and severe bruises, was not taken to the clinic until the following afternoon, he said.

Only after William P. Holley, Jr., Marietta, Ga., attorney, was called into the case by union Vice Pres. Adolph Benet was Rainey permitted to telephone his district office here.

The two men were released in cash bond of $500 each and about four hours later were admitted to the hospital in Chattanooga.

Dr. F. E. Marsh of this city, who treated them, said Benton was suffering from shock, a broken rib, and severe bruises and lacerations on his face, right eyelid and arms and legs.

Rainey was kept overnight in the hospital and treated for cuts and bruises on his arms, legs and abdomen and a mild concussion. Dr. Marsh said slashes in Rainey's trousers evidently came from a knife.

Benet said it was "outrageous that such mob violence could occur without police officials lifting a finger to prevent it."

"This is the sort of thing you might expect in East Germany or Russia," he declared, "but not in the United States. I trust that federal authorities will take immediate steps to apprehend those responsible for the assault so that union organizers can exercise their rights without fear of attack by mobs and hoodlums."

At a preliminary hearing Sept. 18 in Recorder's Court in Ellijay, the charges against Benton and Rainey were reduced to the single count of "fighting," and trial was continued to Oct. 3.

(Ellijay town officials could not be reached by the AFL-CIO News to confirm a report that four of the assailants also had been charged with "fighting.")

Benet said the appeal from workers at the Chadbourn-Gotham mills, which employs nearly 400 persons, had come to the union after new federal minimum wage levels became effective on Labor Day.

He said the workers charged that the company, instead of increasing piece rates, had informed them they would be expected to step up their hourly production at unchanged rates.

Benet declared that dispite the attack on the union's representatives, "the Hosiery Workers are in Ellijay to stay."

"We won't rest until we've been able to help these mill workers obtain decent wages and working conditions," he declared.

Braniff Line Air Attendants Win Increase

Chicago—A new contract providing substantial pay increases and improved working rules has been negotiated by the Air Line Pilots for 300 Braniff Airways flight attendants.

The new scales are based on length of service and newly added equipment differentials. They are calculated on a formula of base pay plus hourly pay for more than 70 hours flight time.

For 85 flying hours a month, senior flight attendants will receive $486.25 on piston engine aircraft, $501.25 on prop-jets, and $516.25 on pure jets. The figures represent increases of $111.25 to $141.25 over the old rates.

The agreement is effective Oct. 1 and runs to June 1, 1963. Rate increases, however, are retroactive to Sept. 1, 1959, and will mean back pay averaging more than $1,050 per attendant. Among the 21 changes in rules and working conditions are a number relating to maximum time on duty, including an option to fly no more than 80 hours a month on jets.

U.S. Bans Dealing With Segregated Dual Locals

The federal government will no longer deal with "dual locals" of government employe unions in cases where this has resulted in a segregation pattern, Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg has announced.

Goldberg, chairman of the President's Task Force on Employe-Management Relations in the Federal Service, said the decision was made by the task force. He said it was in line with Pres. Kennedy's June 22 memorandum instructing federal agencies to "maintain relationships only with those employe organizations which are free of restrictions or practices denying memberships because of race, color, religion or national origin."

The task force said the ban on dual locals would apply where two locals of the same employe organization are chartered in the same government unit or installation, with the result that each is in effect made up of white or Negro members.

"The weight of past experience," the task force declared, "indicates that dual locals create a situation of de facto segregation, and therefore of discrimination."

Government officials will be permitted to continue to deal with dual locals which have expressed "a firm commitment of intent to discontinue such practices with reasonable speed."

The task force stipulated that the commitment must be accompanied by immediate steps on the part of the locals. It said their progress would be subject to "continuous review."

The six-member task force, currently holding field hearings on proposals to give collective bargaining rights and full recognition to government employe unions, praised national unions which have made successful efforts to help bring about mergers of dual locals.

UAW Turns to Ford, Chrysler:

National Contract Ratified, Local Pacts Sought at GM

By Eugene A. Kelly

Detroit—The Auto Workers moved to step up negotiations with the Ford and Chrysler companies as the UAW General Motors Council ratified a new three-year agreement with GM on economic and non-economic issues and devised a formula to work out all the remaining local issues resulting in an 11-day strike.

The 24 locals whose unsettled grievances had not been satisfied through prolonged negotiations with plant managers were authorized to remain on strike pending settlement of the local issues.

The formula for settling these issues, however, gave UAW leaders the hope that all would be resolved in time for a full return to work by Sept. 25.

The union and GM management agreed that shop committee representatives would meet here Sept. 22 in the GM building with plant managers and heads of corporation divisions to work out final settlements.

These head-to-head negotiations by responsible union and company officials were expected to produce final settlement of hundreds of disputes over contract language and local plant rules that have accumulated since the last settlement in 1958.

All UAW locals except the 24 with unsettled local issues were instructed to return to work. More than 100 local settlements had been reached before the national contract was approved by the 280-member GM Council, representing 130 UAW locals in GM plants.

The national agreement was ratified by an overwhelming vote after the UAW negotiators presented the economic and non-economic agreement to the GM Council. The national non-economic agreement covered these points:

- A new contract clause guarantees that all provisions will be applied without regard to race, creed, color or national origin; and a letter specifying that GM policy will be to give employment opportunities to all qualified applicants on a non-discriminatory basis.
- Union committeemen and shop chairmen are granted time as a matter of right, and not company convenience, to work on grievance problems.
- The right of foremen to do production work is limited to certain emergency situations.
- The union has the right to take disputes on production standards to a special step in the grievance procedure.
- GM agreed to notify all employes of overtime work on the preceding shift except in emergencies.
- Workers were recognized as entitled to 24 minutes a day in relief time.

The major economic improvements, announced previously, included continuation of the annual wage improvement factor calling for a wage increase of 2.5 percent or 6 cents an hour, whichever is greater; continuation of the cost-of-living escalator clause without any ceiling on the increase; full corporation payment of hospital and medical care for workers and their families; a guarantee of pay during short work weeks, and an increase in SUB (supplemental unemployment benefits) along wtih other improvements.

A committee headed by UAW Pres. Walter P. Reuther and Vice Pres. Leonard Woodcock bargained with GM over a new contract since June 28. Two weeks ago they reached agreement on national economic issues, and on Sept. 20 on non-economic issues.

Reuther and Woodcock warned management in advance that no final settlement could be reached until local issues also were resolved. Members walked out Sept. 11 when a twice-extended union deadline passed without settlement of local issues.

When contracts expired Aug. 31, the UAW extended them twice at GM and on a 24-hour notice basis at Ford and Chrysler. After the GM settlement, the union intensified its bargaining with the other automakers.

Other Developments

Meanwhile there were these other developments:

- The UAW charged Ford with "tieing the hands" of plant managers on local issues and warned that further delays might lead to a walkout.
- The UAW and American Motors signed a new contract giving 23,000 AMC workers higher wages, improved working conditions, and a profit and stock-sharing plan.
- The Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, representing more than 20,000 GM workers in six plants, announced settlement of four local agreements. IUE members have been on strike at the Packard Electric plant in Warren, O., and local issues delayed a settlement at the Delco-Remy plant in Rochester, N. Y.

In negotiations with Ford, the union pressed for improvement including insurance for retirees, and insurance benefits equal to those offered earlier by GM. Workers at GM enjoyed a $1,000 differential in life insurance benefits and $6 a week higher accident and sickness benefits than at Ford, the UAW told management.

ABC Gets 19.5 Cents At National Biscuit

New York—The American Bakery & Confectionery Workers have won a 19.5 cent wage increase, added health benefits and other fringe gains in a new two-year contract with the National Biscuit Co.

The contract covers 9,000 workers in 10 cities including Fair Lawn, N. J., where employes recently voted for ABC representation.

Agreement came after a 26-hour bargaining session. A strike deadline was extended six hours when negotiators reported progress.

Major contract gains include:

- A 10-cent raise the first year, retroactive to Sept. 1, and an additional 9.5 cents on Sept. 1, 1962.
- Additional company payments of $3.57 a month into the ABC Union-Industry National Health & Welfare Fund.
- An increase of 2.5 cents per hour in premium pay for night work.
- A fourth week of vacation after 20 years, down from the previous 25-year service requirement.

It was agreed also that within 60 days negotiations will be held at NBC plants to settle local issues not covered in the national agreement.

Union Backing Aids Canadian Stewardesses

Toronto, Ont.—Airline labor solidarity recently forced TransCanada Airlines to abandon plans to recruit strikebreakers and to sign a new contract with 750 stewards and stewardesses.

TCA had recruited strikebreakers from its sales staff but was faced with a shutdown when the Canadian Air Line Pilots Association voted overwhelmingly not to cross the Flight Attendants picket lines.

The Canadian Air Line Flight Attendants Association gathered more labor support when Claude Jodoin, president of the Canadian Labor Congress, warned that Canadian unions would not stand idly by while TCA began a nation-wide strikebreaking campaign.

Circuit Court Weighs UAW, Kohler Appeal

The U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Washington has taken under consideration appeals by the Auto Workers and the Kohler Co. to upset the National Labor Relations Board decision in the long and bitter dispute between the union and the Wisconsin plumbing wares firm.

The NLRB—after seven years of multiple proceedings—found the company guilty of unfair labor practices and failure to bargain in good faith beginning June 1, 1954, two months after UAW Local 833 had gone on strike when the company rejected its contract demands.

800 Jobs Restored

Also it ordered reinstatement of about 800 strikers, refusing to order jobs restored in cases where there allegedly was evidence of involvement in picket line disorders.

Joseph L. Rauh, union attorney, charging the NLRB tried to "split the difference" in deciding the dispute, asked the court to order the board to weigh the relative misconduct of the strikers against the relative misconduct of the company, and charged that the firm was guilty of bad faith from the time the negotiations began.

Rauh contended the NLRB decision disregarded the fact of the UAW's "desire to live up to the law, bargain and recognize our errors," and the additional fact of Kohler's "27 years of flouting labor laws."

The firm appealed from the NLRB order that it resume negotiations and asked for rejection of petitions for enforcement although according to Vice Pres. Lyman C. Conger about 400 of the 800 offered reinstatement are back at work.

The NLRB decision, he said, flouted the evidence. He denied the company was guilty of unfair labor practices and maintained it has "always obeyed the law" and NLRB directives.

Prudential Agents Win Pay Raises

Pay increases averaging more than $5.50 a week have been negotiated by the Insurance Workers on behalf of more than 17,000 district agents of the Prudential Insurance Co.

The Prudential agents, spread across 34 states and the District of Columbia, will receive new and improved commission rates totaling some $6 million annually. Largest item in the package is a new type of conservation commission payment related to both sales of new business and retention of existing insurance.

Among other gains in the two-year contract, the most significant was improved grievance procedure, the union said.

The agreement is subject to ratification by the union membership. IWIU Pres. George L. Russ predicted it would be "favorably received" at special membership meetings scheduled in more than 200 locals. Russ said the negotiations were among the "most successful" in the union's 20 years of bargaining.

The IWIU negotiating team was composed of 17 agents representing areas throughout the country. Vice Pres. Charles G. Heisel of Pittsburgh and Vice Pres. Joseph Pollack of New York served as co-chairmen with Pres. Russ. Prudential Executive Vice Pres. Pearce Shepherd headed the company's committee.

Guarantees on Wages Sought By Rail Unions

Five rail unions representing 200,000 operating employes have asked the Presidential Railroad Commission to recommend guaranteed wages and night differential pay for train crews.

The unions also asked the commission to reject management demands for elimination of premium pay for duty over mountain and desert terrain and for fire fighting and snow removal assignments.

Joining in the presentation to the commission, which is attempting to settle work rules disputes on the railroads, were four AFL-CIO affiliates, the Trainmen, Locomotive Engineers, Switchmen and Locomotive Firemen & Enginemen, and the unaffiliated Conductors & Brakemen.

Vice Pres. V. W. Satterwhite of the Trainmen proposed a guarantee of 26 days of pay a month for train crews in through freight and passenger service and five days of pay a week for workers in yard service. He said railroad workers frequently lose pay because their runs are cancelled on short notice.

Satterwhite said the pay guarantee proposal is "in keeping with the trend" in other industries.

The pattern of industrial employment was also cited by Lloyd A. Combs, a deputy vice president of the Switchmen, who asked night differential pay for work between 6 p.m. and 6 a.m.

He pointed out that train crews at night must "exert extra effort and care." Dangers and discomfort, Combs said, "increase many times over when the darkness of night is combined with rain, sleet, snow, fog, sub-zero temperatures and high winds."

Three railroad general chairmen —J. R. Birrell of the Locomotive Engineers, C. L. Birdsill of the Locomotive Firemen & Enginemen, and George P. Lechner, Conductors & Brakemen—cited low speed, more frequent breakdowns and extra effort required on mountainous and desert terrain to support continued pay differentials.

ICA to Build Union Halls In Ecuador

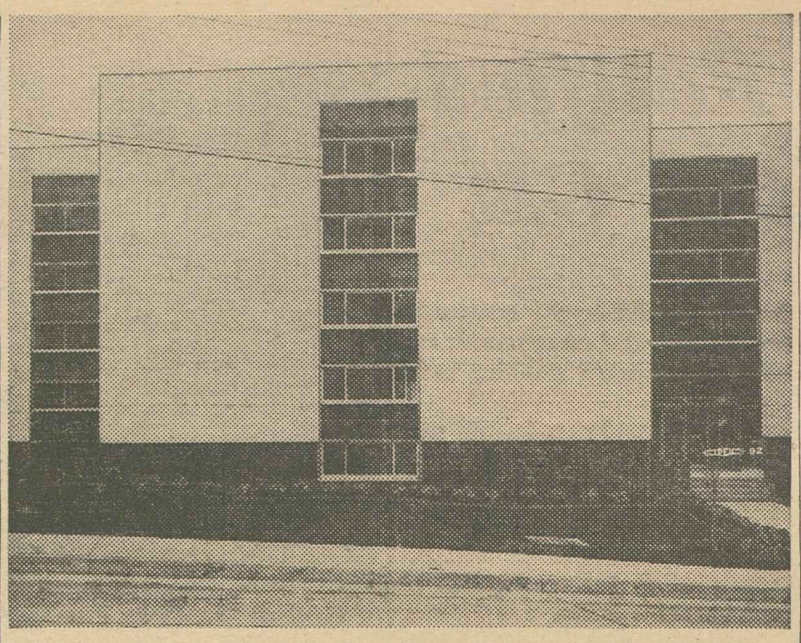
The United States will contribute $350,000 toward the construction of two labor headquarters buildings in Ecuador and to their operation for the first few years, according to Irwin Rubinstein, labor advisor for the Intl. Cooperation Administration in Guayaquil.

The project is the first in the program of support for free labor under the Alliance for Progress recently established by the United States and Latin American nations.

It will include buildings in Guayaquil and Quito which it is estimated will cost $560,000 over a six-year period. The U.S. will pay $350,000 and the government of Ecuador $210,000.

The U.S. commitment, under an agreement being negotiated between the ICA mission and Minister of Labor & Social Welfare Jose Antonio Baquero de la Calle, is to pay all of the first-year expenses, including the cost of furnishings and equipment. Each year thereafter the U.S. payment will drop 20 percent and the Ecuadorean government will take over a corresponding increased proportion of the operating cost.

The centers are intended to provide vocational training and worker education facilities as well as headquarters for unions, meeting rooms, library and film facilities, employment services and other activities that will be worked out as the program develops.



FULLEST USE of the lather's skills and the materials of his trade went into this gleaming white stucco and black marble-trimmed new headquarters of the Lathers in Takoma Park, Md. The first building of its kind in the Washington, D. C., area, the $500,000 structure was paid for by a $2 monthly assessment on members for 12 months.

Stereotypers Order Defense Fund Vote

Montreal—The Stereotypers, concerned over the effects of automation on employment in both branches of their industry—stereotype and electrotype—have voted to send to referendum a proposal to establish a $1 million defense fund.

Delegates from more than 100 local unions in Canada and the United States, meeting here in the 58th annual convention, authorized a vote among members on that question and several others.

The issues include a proposal to add one vice presidency; to give the Canadian vice president additional duties equivalent to those of other vice presidents; and to make a number of constitutional changes.

A proposal to set up by assessment a fund to encourage the education of members in technical and academic subjects was referred to the executive board for further study and a later report.

Convention speakers included Pres. Wilfrid T. Connell of the Photo Engravers, who called for a closer working relationship between all unions in the printing trades.

Delegates adopted a resolution honoring Sec.-Treas. Joseph L. O'Neil, Boston, and James J. Kelley, Cleveland, editor of the union Journal, for 25 years of devoted union service. They voted also to hold the 1963 convention in Cincinnati following the 1962 meeting scheduled for San Antonio.

Lathers Cut VicePresidents From 12 to 7

The Lathers, meeting in Washington, D. C., at their 24th convention, re-elected all top officers and authorized a gradual reduction in the number of vice presidents from 12 to 7.

A proposal to hold conventions every four years instead of every three was turned down on the recommendation of the resolutions committee headed by Pres. C. J. Haggerty, of the AFL-CIO Building & Construction Trades Dept., Lathers' first vice president.

The convention also:

- Returned Pres. Lloyd Mashburn to office for another term and raised his salary to $20,000. He has held the office since 1955.
- Elected Sec.-Treas. Harold Mills for his first full term—he had been serving by appointment—and raised his salary to $16,000 a year.
- Brought the union constitution into compliance with the Landrum-Griffin Act.
- Referred to the union's executive council for study a proposal to set up a pension fund for union members.
- Referred to the council, with authority to act, a plan to pay convention expenses by levying an assessment of 30 cents per month.

CompensationStamp Used for Promotion

Labor Sec. Arthur Goldberg used first-day covers bearing the new workmen's compensation commemorative stamp to promote improvements in state laws to protect workers injured on the job.

In letters to all state labor commissioners and state workmen's compensation administrators—mailed through the Milwaukee post office on Labor Day — Goldberg said the laws had accomplished much to aid injured workers over the past half century but now are badly in need of repair.

Schnitzler in Address:

Labor Urged to Tell Its Story to Public

Toronto, Ont.—Labor must take its message, story and accomplishments to the public if it is to maintain its influence as a social instrument for good, AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler declared here.

"One of our big problems is that we are not carrying the message to the people," Schnitzler told the 36th convention of the Street Electric Railway & Motor Coach Employes.

"In failing to tell somebody else, you are exposing somebody else to other kinds of propaganda that you haven't completely offset," he said.

Record Examined

Schnitzler took a look at the record—comparing the embezzlement statistics of American banks and union officers, although he cautioned that he did not want labor to look good because banking has a much worse record.

"In the fiscal year we are in, 135 bank presidents in America are going to jail for stealing money from the banks of which they are presidents," he said.

"If we apply the same percentage it would mean that 12 international union presidents would go to jail this year because they stole from their members."

Sen. Wayne Morse (D-Ore.) urged the convention to increase its most important war chest—a political action chest to elect representatives devoted to the interests of the nation.

Morse also commended the outstanding job of AFL-CIO unions in combatting the threatened inroads of communism in Latin America.

Labor Must Raise Sights

He agreed with Schnitzler that labor must raise its sights above bread and butter issues which become meaningless if the free world loses its fight for freedom around the world.

Saskatchewan Premier T. C. (Tommy) Douglas, leader of Canada's New Democratic Party, said the nation must produce a better life for people, a life in which there is more security, a life in which men can walk the earth with dignity.

"One-third of all Canada's income earners, 2 million of them, didn't get enough income to pay income tax," he said. "Two million individuals who didn't earn $1,000 if single or $2,000 if they were married with no children."

Union Pres. John Elliott praised the Douglas speech as the "most outstanding address I have ever heard."

Elliott was unanimously re-elected to his second two-year term and O. J. Mischo was again named secretary-treasurer. Nine executive board members and 12 international vice-presidents were also re-elected.

Per Capita Raised

A 40-cent per capita increase was passed, with the additional money going into a defense fund that will finance political action and transit planning as well as strikes or lockouts.

All but one of a series of proposed constitutional amendments were passed, most of them aimed at clarifying and streamlining the basic law of the 69-year-old union.

The union also marked its 69th anniversary by instituting the W. D. Mahon award, to commemorate the man who led the union as president for 52 years and eight months.

O. David Zimring, veteran legal and economic counsel, received the award, which is for distinguished service to the union.

Marvin Friedman In AFL-CIO Post

Marvin Friedman, director of legislative and political activity of the Chemical Workers for the past year, has joined the AFL-CIO Dept. of Research as an economist.

An alumnus of Rutgers University with a record of graduate work at the University of Wisconsin, Friedman was assistant director of research and education for the ICWU for nine years before assuming the legislative post.

Accounting Failures Seen Cutting Income of Fund-Raising Agencies

The failure of many independent health and welfare fund-raising agencies to give adequate accountings of their operations is costing them the confidence of the public, AFL-CIO Vice Pres. Joseph A. Beirne has warned.

Although total contributions have been rising, "the trend in the last five years of 'fair share' giving—the individual sort of gift—has been going down," said the Communications Workers' president, who is chairman of the AFL-CIO Community Services Committee.

Beirne, who was a member of the Rockefeller Foundation committee which recently completed a two-year study of the fund-raising agencies, was interviewed on the Mutual Broadcasting System's Labor News Conference by Joseph Loftus of the New York Times and Tom Ottenad of the St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

He noted that a number of independent agencies had objected to the committees' recommendations that Pres. Kennedy appoint a Citizens' Advisory Committee in the field of voluntary giving and that a uniform system of accounting be set up for all health and welfare agencies.

"I don't know why they are reluctant," Beirne said. "It certainly is evident to every sensible, reasonable person that when you want to collect dollars from the public, you are a public institution, and therefore your books should be kept in such a way that reports can be given that will be understood by the public."

He predicted that unless the agencies disclose to the public what they do with the $1.5 billion a year they collect, another consequence would be tighter qualifications for federal tax exemption. This, he said, would be a further deterrent to voluntary giving and might lead eventually to the loss of "a very priceless heritage, namely the voluntary aspect of our whole society."

Declaring that "the federated way is the way the American public really wants," Beirne observed that agencies taking part in united fund and community chest drives do expose their operations to public view.

On the other hand, some of the independent agencies that refuse to open their books to the public are spending as much as 100 percent of the funds they collect on salaries and offices. Others spend little or nothing on research into crippling diseases, he asserted.

Adoption of the Rockefeller Fund committee's recommendations would keep the good organizations from getting "tarred" with the bad, Beirne said, adding:

"I know my reason for supporting this approach is to protect the good organizations—and there are many thousands of good organizations that are spending all their money on finding the answers to particular diseases."

United Fund Drives Supported by Meany

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany has urged all members to give wholehearted support, "both personal and financial," to 1961 united community fund drives.

In a letter to Benson Ford, national chairman of the United Community Campaigns of America, Meany again endorsed the fund-raising efforts and the principle of united giving.

"We believe it is the best way to meet the health and welfare needs of our communities," he declared. "It is not only more economical, but more democratic in that it serves the entire community."

Texas Unions Seek Funds:

Labor Aids Victims Of Gulf Hurricane

Houston—A state-wide fund-raising drive has been launched by Texas labor to aid victims of Hurricane Carla.

Pres. Hank Brown urged all affiliates of the Texas State AFL-CIO to contribute to the Carla relief fund. "All money will be used exclusively for disaster victims, as certified by the Red Cross," he said.

Disaster aid committees are being set up by AFL-CIO Community Services Activities to work with local Red Cross headquarters in all affected communities, Brown reported. Coordinating the task, he said, are A. B. Smith of St. Louis and Frank Emig of Atlanta, CSA representatives with the Red Cross.

About 70 percent of the AFL-CIO members in Texas live in the heavily industrialized Gulf Coast area that took the brunt of Carla's force.

The Red Cross reported 891 houses and nine trailers were destroyed by the storm and the flood tides and tornadoes it produced. Major damage was inflicted on 3,064 houses and 53 trailers, and minor damage on 36,054 houses and 129 trailers, survey teams reported.

At the peak of the mass evacuation from the area in the path of Carla, the Red Cross lodged and fed 204,536 persons in 638 shelters. The Oil, Chemical & Atomic Workers local in Galveston was among the organizations that volunteered shelter facilities—its new union hall—and supplied manpower to feed and clothe the storm refugees.

Kramer reported the most widespread damage was caused by rising tides that sent from four to six feet of water into communities, flooding the one-story slab houses, ruining furniture and buckling floors.

Flood Damage Uninsured

"Most of that damage is not covered by insurance," he noted, "since practically all disaster insurance exempts damage from water."

Kramer said the big difference between Carla and other hurricanes that have hit the Gulf Coast is that there was no great loss of life and no area was knocked out completely, cutting off both electrical power and a safe water supply. He attributed the low fatality level to mass evacuation of the population.

Ken Kramer, CSA representative at Red Cross headquarters, who has returned to Washington after viewing the disaster area, said a big remaining problem is cleaning up and repairing industrial facilities so that some 15,000 idle workers can return to their jobs. As an example, he cited the Dow Chemical plant at Freeport, flooded by three feet of water. Many oil refineries along the coast are still out of commission, he said.

Teachers Seeking Vote On Bargaining Rights

New York—Nine new members of the city's Board of Education have been urged by the United Federation of Teachers to authorize the city Dept. of Labor to conduct a collective bargaining election among teaching employes before Oct. 15.

The request faced the board at its first meeting after the swearing-in ceremony. The union—AFT Local 2—said it is confident the board is aware of the long struggle by teachers for one authorized bargaining representative and will agree that the Labor Dept. has the means and experience to poll 40,000 teaching employes.

Referendum Held

Members of the UFT conducted a three-day strike last spring in protest against the former School Board's delay in calling for an election. The board then appointed a committee of inquiry, and held a June referendum in which teachers and others voted, 27,367 to 9,003, in favor of collective bargaining.

"Our goal," said UFT Pres. Charles Cogen, "is to get a representation election during October and to win bargaining rights for the UFT."

The New York legislature passed a law abolishing the former board and set up a panel which recommended 26 candidates for possible appointment to a new 9-member board. Mayor Wagner's choices, announced Sept. 18, included Morris Iushewitz of the Newspaper Guild, who is secretary of the AFL-CIO City Central Labor Council. Other new members are:

Brendan Byrne, former teacher, now executive director, American Heritage Foundation; James B. Donovan, attorney who took part in the trial of Nazi war criminals at Nuremberg; Lloyd K. Garrison, active in liberal causes, former University of Wisconsin Law School dean; John F. Hennessey, consulting engineer; Samuel R. Pierce, attorney and Phi Beta Kappa from Cornell, where he played halfback at football; Anna M. Rosenberg, former assistant defense secretary, former regional director, National Recovery Administration, former member Social Security Board and War Manpower Commission; Max J. Rubin, attorney, former chairman, State Citizens Committee for Public Schools; Clarence O. Senior, college educator, sociologist and economist, authority on Puerto Rican affairs.

Iushewitz is the first "labor man" in history to serve on the New York Board of Education, according to the UFT. The other members also are "people of stature," an officer said.

Two teacher groups which opposed collective bargaining in the June referendum—the Elementary School Teachers Association and the Secondary School Teachers Association—have formed the Teachers Bargaining Organization of New York with the aid of the National Education Association, non-union group, and will campaign for bargaining rights.

Wagner, noting that teachers had voted heavily in favor of collective bargaining, has called for a "genuine bargaining election" to choose a bargaining agent on or before Oct. 15.

This was prior to ouster of the former board by the state legislature.

AN AFL-CIO CONTRIBUTION to the Red Cross, this mobile disaster canteen dispensed hot food and drinks to emergency workers and storm victims cleaning up after Hurricane Carla's high winds and flood tides had struck Freeport, Tex. One of four donated to the Red Cross by the federation, the canteen was driven to the disaster area from its regular base at Atlanta.

Save the UN!

THE UNITED NATIONS, often called man's last best hope for creating a peaceful world, faces its gravest crisis at one of the most dangerous moments in world history. The UN's very existence is involved, and its effectiveness as an instrument for world peace and security and against aggression is being severely tested.

The crisis in the UN has been building since last year when Soviet Premier Khrushchev launched his campaign—complete with shoe-pounding—to paralyze the UN. His calculated aim is to prevent the UN from taking any action the Soviets oppose while trying to recast the world organization into an instrument of Soviet policy.

The tragic, untimely death of UN Sec.-Gen. Dag Hammarskjold has propelled this campaign into a crisis of overwhelming immediacy that, for the moment, takes precedence over the lengthy, difficult agenda that lies before the General Assembly session.

This session of the assembly must tackle the frightening issues involved in peace or war—Berlin, the Congo, nuclear testing and disarmament, and a host of others. The UN can play a major role in seeking solutions in these difficult areas, but only if it can function effectively.

The Soviet campaign to paralyze the UN was launched with an attack on Hammarskjold. The Communist bloc boycotted the secretary-general and called for abolition of his job—mostly because of the UN's effective intervention in the Congo crisis under Hammerskjold's leadership at a time when the Soviets were striving to exploit the crisis to create a Communist base among the new nations of Africa.

The Soviet campaign to rule or ruin the UN called for abolishing the office of secretary-general and replacing it with a three-man directorate, representing the Communist bloc, the free world and the "neutralists," each director furnished with a veto power.

The "troika" plan, warned Hammarskjold in his last annual report to the UN, would mean the collapse of the United Nations. The United States took the same viewpoint and threatened to use its first veto in the UN to kill it.

With Hammarskjold's death, the Soviet campaign has come to a point of immediacy. Under the UN charter the General Assembly appoints the secretary-general but only on recommendation of the Security Council. On the council the Soviets have a veto to prevent the election of anyone who doesn't fit in with their plans for obtaining UN control.

While the first step in filling the top UN post rests with the Security Council, the sentiment in the General Assembly can be of utmost importance in charting the future of the UN. The smaller nations, especially the new countries of Asia and Africa, can help save the UN from the futility and ineffectiveness that plagued the League of Nations.

The assembly, in the words of AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, "can build the greatest monument to the memory and splendid contribution of the deceased secretary-general by pursuing with unwavering loyalty and redoubled vigor his policies for building the United Nations into an even more effective instrument for protecting smaller and weaker nations and preserving peace."

Minority Group Trainees Needed:

Apprenticeship Programs Fail To Meet Demand for Skills

The following is excerpted from an address by Assistant Sec. of Labor Jerry R. Holleman to the Washington Building Congress. Holleman is a former president of the Texas AFL-CIO.

By Jerry R. Holleman

THE DESIRABLE skilled worker is the man who has been trained through apprentice programs. The old "saw and hammer" route just will not do because he won't have the higher training and education demanded today.

Apprenticeship is by far the best way to get the desirable worker for our technological age. And we have a real problem facing us in this respect.

By 1970 we will need about 11 million craftsmen in the United States. We had about 8.5 million last year, but statistics show that the labor force will lose 2.5 million in this decade from natural causes such as death and retirement. That leaves the United States with the job of actually training 5 million new highly-skilled men by 1970.

Bluntly speaking, the people responsible in management and labor for these programs—the people who should be most concerned about an adequate supply of skilled people—are woefully lacking in meeting their responsibility. I'm speaking generally, of course—there are a few who try. But the sum total of our apprenticeship efforts in the United States is producing less than 40,000 apprenticeship completions a year . . . which isn't even enough to cover the numbers we lose from the trades. We need at least 230,000 a year to meet our 11 million-man goal. We need them through apprenticeship programs because these programs provide the truly-skilled worker.

To management I say you must replace the fiscal year outlook with a five-year, 10-year outlook. You must keep looking ahead and take on more apprentices, though your fiscal outlook might not indicate the need for more workers next week or next month. Too many industrial organizations have no apprenticeship programs at all. Our surveys indicate that more than 80 percent of establishments that should have apprentice programs do not. It is high time they began training their own instead of pirating the trainees of other employers.

To labor organizations I say you must broaden your own concepts and eliminate the short-sighted policy of artificial shortages of skilled men. The productive potential of this country, growing by leaps and bounds, can absorb these men readily in the few short years ahead. I am of the opinion that many of the terms of apprenticeship are too long. In certain cases four-year, five-year apprenticeships seem to me a waste of time. In certain of the trades—some of you know them as well as I—a good man can achieve his skills in a year or at most two years.

Management and labor should face up immediately to the eradication of injustice in our society. We must give every American, regardless of race or creed, the opportunity to be trained. It is essential to the internal and international welfare of this nation that prejudice in employment opportunity be eliminated. The concepts of discrimination and demands of democracy are alien to one another.

I can assure you that Pres. Kennedy and his Administration are making an all-out assault on the waste that results from racial, religious and ethnic intolerance.

Prejudice has always been unhealthy for the workings of democracy within our country. The problems now, however, are magnified because the United States is on the stage before a curious and critical world. The world is very much aware of our problems of discrimination. As long as we have these problems, we can expect freedom-seeking nations to be dubious about a country which preaches democracy and practices prejudice.

IN ADDITION to the moral problem of maintaining our integrity as a democracy, there are certain very practical problems growing out of discrimination. One of these is the fact that we are not making full use of our manpower potential. Today, more than ever, we need to make use of all available skills and talents. Yet, because of old prejudices, we are often wasting valuable human resources.

The Negro, for instance, the largest minority group suffering discrimination, must help fill the ever-widening gap between the growing number of skilled jobs and decreasing number of skilled workers.

If this nation is to survive, it can do so only with a quality labor force. The United States is in competition with the gigantic population and potential work forces of Europe and Asia. We will never be able to match Russia's work force in numbers. But we can maintain our productivity lead with a work force trained to where everyone is capable of producing to the limit of his talent and ability.

It is high time, historically, morally and economically, to get Negroes into our apprenticeship programs. The present situation in apprenticeship in the nation as a whole and in the District of Columbia specifically is intolerable. We must strive to assure that every American be judged by his ability and worth, not by the tan of his skin or the symbol of his house of worship.

This Administration does not intend to permit our productive potential to be crippled or our national purpose to be defeated by artificial barriers.

These barriers also pertain to our older workers. We must train and retrain older workers—men and women over 45—to help fill our expected increase in the labor force. Chronological age should never be a bar to employment. Ability and desire to learn and work should be the only criteria today.

Morgan Says:

UN Crisis Demands Kennedy Assert Real Leadership of West

By Edward P. Morgan

(This column is excerpted from the nightly broadcasts of Edward P. Morgan, ABC commentator sponsored by the AFL-CIO. Listen to Morgan over the ABC network Monday through Friday at 7 p. m., EDT.)

EXACTLY ONE YEAR ago, Khrushchev fired his block-buster at Dag Hammarskjold and the United Nations on the trembling battleground of the General Assembly. Though aghast at the Soviet attempt to split his office into three pieces and angered by the vicious personal attack on him, the secretary-general refused to resign. It is not my future at stake, he said then, but that of the UN. "It is not a question of the man but of the institution."

Morgan

Today as the world stands stunned over the tragedy of his death in the African jungle, it realizes with agonizing clarity how much of the future of the UN was staked on this one man. No man is indispensable if for no other than the simple reason that every man is mortal. But now the UN and the forces of sanity trying to make it work are robbed of the organization's most vital figure at a time that he could least be spared.

Dag Hammarskjold, the quiet, civilized Swede, was not, of course, a paragon. Indeed, historians may conclude that however well motivated was the UN decision to disarm the Katanga separatists by force and however beneficial to Congolese unity the operation might have been if it had succeeded quickly, a misjudgment on the relative strength of forces may have been what cost him his life. Hammarskjold will be mourned, though, as the Number One citizen of the world, a distinction he earned with his utter dedication to the perilous job of trying to keep the peace.

It is probably no exaggeration to say that the loss of the secretary-general plunges the UN, already beset with gravely divisive problems, into the darkest crisis of its existence. After the shock of the blow has subsided the first thing to do is to recognize that awful reality and try to cope with it.

Now more weight than ever is placed upon Pres. Kennedy's personal appearance before the General Assembly. Before last January's inaugural, some members of the President's entourage were emboldened to predict that his inaugural speech would be ranked with the Gettysburg Address and other great utterances in the life of the republic. It is a little early to assign it its place in the archives of time but the world did welcome that terse, frost-bitten declaration of intent as courageous, eloquent and full of the hopeful, vigorous juices of youth.

So seemingly endless are the shadows of crisis, so starkly highlighted by the hideous flash of Hammarskjold's plane, that circumstances seem almost to demand a guaranteed quality of greatness in the President's message at the UN.

It would be fairer and more realistic to concede that what a lot of us really want is the proffer of some magic formula to dissolve all the ghastly situations that are leering at us as if the world had become one huge haunted house. Still it may not be amiss to make the obvious point that in the grave and sombre sadness of the hour, men of good will are looking for inspiration. The opportunity to move them is large. Rhetoric alone will not do it but sometimes the boldest of ideas are born in the quiet desperation of adversity.

Pres. Kennedy was expected to propose some new departures on the matter of world disarmament in New York. The more direct and sincere and plausible they are, the more they will be welcomed but that subject has been so hopelessly kicked out of shape as a propaganda football betwen East and West that it would be absurd to expect very much from even the most ingeniously planned solution just now.

THERE REMAINS the fact that the custody of freedom, that uniquely precious quality of open societies, has been thrust largely into American hands with vital support from Canada, Great Britain and the democratic countries of western Europe. But this western alliance, as it has become through NATO, still squeaks, wheezes and grinds its gears at cross-purposes too much.

True, NATO military defense goals have been quietly raised and commitments quietly made to meet them. True, Britain has made the first tentative step toward joining the Common Market. True, West Germany is becoming, at last, an integral part of western Europe instead of being left to her own dangerous devices. But these and other moves toward what some observers have referred to as a real concert of free nations must proceed with more urgency.

Within this alliance lies a core of intelligence and power which, when coordinated, is more than a match for the Communists. The bitter struggle between the Communist and non-Communist blocs over a successor to Dag Hammarskjold may keep the UN leaderless for months and could conceivably wreck it. That prospect will be less threatening and our ability to cope with other crises vastly strengthened if the President can manage to assert true leadership of the western alliance and mobilize its will as well as its hardware.

Washington Reports:

Letters to Members of Congress Called Key to Health Care Law

CONGRESS WILL TAKE UP bills on hospital insurance for the aged next year, but whether a social-security type of measure is passed depends upon mail received by members of Congress, Rep. Seymour Halpern (R-N. Y.) and Rep. Al Ullman (D-Ore.) declared on Washington Reports to the People, AFL-CIO public service educational program heard on 450 radio stations.

"A tremendous amount of public support has been forthcoming and I believe this year was a good investment for next year," Halpern said. "I believe the bill [the Anderson-King bill or something similar] will be reported, but I believe the fight will be a tough one."

"I believe that the majority of Americans want this program," Ullman said. "I think they should make their wishes known to their congressman. If they do, I feel sure we can get the program enacted into law."

Both back the social security approach embodied in the Anderson-King proposal.

"It is the only method, the only way this will work out," Halpern declared. He has a bill of his own similar to the House measure introduced by Rep. Cecil King (D-Calif.), but also including persons who are not covered by social security.

"The voluntary plan would entitle men under 65 and women under 62 to contribute into a federal health care fund at the same rate as social security—one quarter of 1 percent of income," he explained.

The King bill would provide hospital care up to 60 days, nursing home care up to 120 days, out-patient diagnostic and surgical treatment.

"Hospitalization is the high-cost, high-risk factor in the whole medical picture," Ullman said in explaining why medical care as well as hospitalization would not be provided.

"Medical costs are high, too, but hospital costs have risen 300 percent during the past 10 years, higher and faster than any other segment of our economy. I believe that if we are able to take this high-risk, high-cost factor out of the problem of medical care for our older citizens, private insurance companies can offer medical care with reasonable premiums."

Criticiing the Kerr-Mills Act approach, approved last year by Congress, Halpern said:

"The concept of medical care for the aged under social security would have no pauper oath or means test. Instead it would guarantee to our people an old age free from oppressive fears of sickness and financial catastrophe."

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

THE SENATE ARMED SERVICES COMMITTEE is going to look into charges that the civilian officials of the Defense Dept. have improperly interfered with "patriotic" indoctrination operations by a handful of the military.

This arises from Sen. Strom Thurmond's charge that there is a Defense Dept. "conspiracy" to muzzle the expression of "strong anti-Communist" views by officers to their troops. Thurmond is the South Carolina Democrat who in 1948 ran as the Dixiecrat candidate for President against Mr. Truman and Gov. Dewey and carried four southern states.

Thurmond's concern was aroused, in turn, by the executive decision to relieve Maj. Gen. Edwin A. Walker of 24th Division command in Germany. Walker has been ordered home by the Army and presumably will be available to testify before the Senate committee.

It seems a sad thing that after the passage of so many years since the McCarthy period, serious attention is given to the foul theory that this nation's whole defense establishment is under the control of conspirators determined to sell out the republic and advance the cause of communism, plotting and scheming with total zeal to serve the enemies of freedom.

There is something almost childishly naive in the assumption that a military man, who has spent his career in the armed services, is so well equipped to plan his own troop indoctrination courses that any interference by his civilian superiors must be attributed to a pro-Communist sabotage ring.

THE EVENTS FOR WHICH Walker was relieved have been reported by the civilian officials. After a 30-day investigation, in which Walker had counsel and testified in his own behalf, the Army found that his indoctrination course for troops included inflammatory attacks on previous public officials; that he attempted to influence military subordinates on how they should vote in congressional elections; that he used non-factual materials.

As it happened, Walker's political viewpoints were what in civilian life would be called right-wing. He was an acknowledged member of the John Birch Society although he said he did not attend any meetings; he took his political guidance from Americans for Constitutional Action, a group rating the records of congressmen by extremely conservative standards. Pres. Kennedy, for example, showed up as having a very low rating for his Senate votes.

There is nothing wrong with Walker's holding these beliefs, any more than there is with the holding of comparable beliefs by Sen. Goldwater or Sen. Tower of Texas or Thurmond himself. The evil is the intrusion of such controversial political issues to build what Walker considered a proper indoctrination course to educate American troops to "know the face" of "the enemy."

"The enemy" in this country is not former Pres. Truman or the voting record of former Sen. Kennedy, who now resides in the White House. Neither is Goldwater, Tower or Thurmond "the enemy."

THE SENATE, OF COURSE, knows how to chew up zealots while appearing to let them have their own way. It had some trouble with the zealotry of McCarthy but Thurmond is by no means a man like the late Wisconsin senator. He is not so unprincipled—although many of us believe his principles profoundly wrong and profoundly bad for the country.

The Armed Services Committee amended Thurmond's resolution before adopting it. It did not order an "investigation," which would imply there was something wrong in the Defense Dept.'s handling of the Walker case, but decided—longwindedly—to "study and appraise" the use of military facilities to "arouse the public to the menace of the cold war and to inform and educate Armed Services personnel on the nature and menace of the cold war."

Thurmond told reporters that the prime movers in changing the language were Senators Leverett Saltonstall (R-Mass.) and John C. Stennis (D-Miss.), both conservative, both able, both highly respected by their colleagues. The study will be no witchhunt.

CONGRESSIONAL APPROVAL of medical care for the aged under social security next year depends upon whether the people write their congressmen in sufficient numbers, Rep. Seymour Halpern (R-N. Y.), left, and Rep. Al Ullman (D-Ore.) asserted in interviews on Washington Reports to the People, AFL-CIO public service radio program.

How to Buy:

Average Wages Still Lagging Behind U.S. Budget for Family

By Sidney Margolius

AFTER HAVING LIVED through a cycle of boom-bust-and-recovery during the past two years, how is your family making out financially?

If you're typical, you're now making at least some small progress, according to a new comparison of wages and living costs in 20 cities made for this department by Kate Papert, consultant on living costs and industrial earnings.

Miss Papert brought up to date the family budget worked out in 1959 by the Bureau of Labor Statistics. The new figures should be considered only an estimate of current living costs in the various cities. But they are a pretty close approximation. The figures show that in the average city, living costs for a family of four with a boy of 13 and a girl of 8, have gone up $1.84 a week, while average industrial wages have gone up $4.56.

However, average wages still lag far behind even the government's modest budget. This budget is truly modest. It allows for a 5-room house, for buying a 3-year-old car every 3 years, a new coat every other year for the wife and one suit every 3 years for Papa. For medical care, the budget is not merely economical, but dangerously limited. For example, it allows only 1.5 dental exams and cleanings a year for all four persons.

But modest as the budget is, the average worker in these 20 cities still falls $18.86 a week short of earning enough to pay for it. In 1959, he lacked $21.34. The best you really can say is that working families are a little less worse off this year.

In fact, only in Houston and Detroit does the typical family earn enough to pay for the budget, or in the case of Houston where wages have boomed $9.28 a week since '59, more than enough.

In some of the biggest cities, the disparity between wages and living costs is startling. The average Boston worker falls short $32 a week of earning enough for the modest budget. In New York, which is actually a comparatively modest-cost city because of its still-continuing rent controls, wages are so far below average that the gap between earnings and costs is $30. In Chicago, the gap is $26. Scranton, long a depressed area, as usual has the biggest gap—$45.

THE NEW FIGURES SHOW that Seattle has wrested from Chicago the dubious distinction of being the highest-cost city in the country, although wages there do not lag as far behind earnings. But living costs recently have been rising at the fastest rate in Boston. In fact, Boston may really be the highest-cost city. The BLS chose not to allow for a car in Boston, Philadelphia and New York, arguing that families in those cities tend to rely more on public transportation.

What's most revealing about the figures is that high local wages actually are not the cause of high living costs as much as is sometimes claimed. The difference in wages in various cities is much greater than the difference in living costs. As was true in 1959, the disparity in wages is over twice as great as the difference in budget costs, Miss Papert points out.

For example, living costs are only $8.48 higher in Detroit than in Atlanta, but the average weekly wage is $36 higher. It costs the average family $21 more a week in Boston even though the Bostonian is likely to earn $18 a week less than the Houstonian.

Also revealing to people who blame high living costs on high wages is the fact that costs rose in Atlanta and Scranton even though wages went down in those cities the past two years.

Nor are living costs proportionately lower in the low-wage South, or lower in small cities than big ones, as is popularly supposed. It costs more to live in Portland, Ore., or Minneapolis both with under 500,000 population, than in Philadelphia or New York, and just about as much as in Los Angeles.

In Kennedy Proclamation:

Land Grant Colleges Hailed on Centennial

Pres. Kennedy has signed a document that is a living memorial of the great good the federal government has done in the field of education.

It was a "proclamation," formally entitled "Centennial of the Establishment of the National System of Land-Grant Universities and Colleges."

In it the President requested all government agencies to cooperate with the nation's 68 land-grant universities and colleges which for the past century have made immense contributions to the cultural and scientific progress of the country.

Since enactment of the Morrill Act and its approval by Abraham Lincoln in July 1862, these are some of the achievements of the land-grant system, the President said:

- "The land-grant system of higher education is the nation's largest single source of trained and educated manpower."
- It now contributes more than one-half of the nation's trained scientists and nearly one-half of all regular and reserve officers entering the armed forces.
- In addition, 40 percent of doctorate degrees earned in all subjects at institutions of higher learning in the United States come from land-grant institutions.

Extension of federal aid to the school system is being opposed on the grounds that such aid means "federal control." Yet the history of land-grant colleges is clear proof that federal aid does not and need not "control," in the sense of federal interference with the education of children. The whole history of national aid to education in the United States has been one that should be commended rather than denounced.

The history of land grants as a factor in American education is impressive. In 1621 Virginia made an appropriation of 1,000 acres for the support of the common schools. In 1635 Massachusetts began granting land to towns for educational purposes.

On the national level, by an Ordinance of 1787, the American Confederation granted to the states a section of land, or 640 acres, within each township, for school use. In 1848 two sections for each township were given the states for school purposes. Arizona, New Mexico and Utah got four sections per township because of the poor quality of the land involved.

Huge land grants were given to the western states, the proceeds of which were paid into their school funds. In all, about 130-million acres of public land were distributed among the states "for the purpose of fostering common school activities."

By 1862 the principle of national aid for education was so firmly embedded in American tradition that Congress, through the Morrill Act, granted 30,000 acres of public land for each senator and representative in Congress. Over the years the total amount of land disposed of amounted to 11,050,000 acres. The investment has been one of the most rewarding in American history.

In view of the record for the past 100 years, which has been far from one of federal interference or distraction in the operation of land-grant colleges and universities, it is difficult to understand why the "federal dictation" argument should be playing so important a role in present discussion on federal aid to education legislation.

The moment now seems ripe for another great step by the federal government in contributing similarly to the growth and strength of the entire American educational system at a time when technological progress is making insistent demands for more and more educated and skilled workers. (PAI).

'Protect People as Well as Hogs':

Drug-Claim Curbs Sought in Congress

The Administration has urged Congress to give the American people the same protection against useless drugs that "we have been giving hogs, sheep and cattle."

Health Education & Welfare Sec. Abraham A. Ribicoff told the Senate anti-trust subcommittee that under present law "worthless drugs may remain on the market for months or years until the government can get evidence to sustain a court action against them."

Ribicoff strongly endorsed a bill by Subcommittee Chairman Estes Kefauver (D-Tenn.) which would require drug manufacturers to produce evidence that new drugs live up to manufacturers' claims before they can be approved for general use. He said the Food & Drug Administration now can keep a drug off the market only if it is actually harmful.

Ribicoff said that since 1913 the government has prohibited the marketing of "worthless" medications for use on domestic animals. Thus, he declared, "we must say to the American people: a hog is protected against worthless drugs, but you are not."

Another provision of the bill, aimed at encouraging competition by requiring identical drugs to be marketed under a single common or generic name, was strongly endorsed by the head of the Justice Dept.'s anti-trust division, Assistant Atty. Gen. Lee Loevinger.

Proprietary Names 'Confuse'

Loevinger said the "proprietary names" which drug manufacturers give to their products "serve more to confuse the physician than to assist him."

He expressed support for the objectives of other provisions of the Kefauver bill aimed at eliminating "deals" on patent applications and restrictive licensing but said it would be hard to draw up workable legislation which would eliminate all possible loopholes.

Ribicoff told the subcommittee that the only weapon the government has against a worthless drug is to initiate proceedings to take the drug off the market as a misbranded product.

"At that point," Ribicoff said, "the burden of proof is on the FDA to estabish that the drug is not effective. And throughout the period of time it takes for the FDA to prepare its case and secure relief in the courts, the manufacturer will have foisted his product upon an unsuspecting public."

Ribicoff added:

"We believe this state of affairs is indefensible. We believe that where public health is involved, it is intolerable to permit the marketing of worthless products under the rules of a cat-and-mouse game where a manufacturer can fool the public until the FDA catches up with him.

Reversal of Situation Sought

"We think the situation should be reversed. The manufacturer should satisfy the FDA that his product is effective for the purposes claimed before it is marketed.

"The only issue is whether the claims of effectiveness are going to be reviewed before a worthless product is put on the market or sometime later, after the public's funds have been wasted and its hopes for relief or cure have been cruelly disappointed."

Ribicoff gave the committee a list of both prescription and over-the-counter drugs now being sold whose claims, he said, have not been adequately documented.

He pointed out that one of them, Clarin, had been advertised in the American Medical Association Journal as having "demonstrated value" in preventing recurrent heart attacks, even though the AMA's own Council on Drugs had declared that there is as yet "no convincing objective evidence" of its value and said its use "must be considered experimental."

Ribicoff declared that "physicians prescribing the drug in reliance on claims such as are made in the advertisement are unwittingly experimenting with their heart patients at the patients' expense."

He also endorsed provisions of the bill which would strengthen the government's inspection powers over the manufacture of drugs.

Federal food and drug inspectors presently are authorized to check the equipment, storage facilities, labeling and manufacturing operations of drug manufacturers, Ribicoff said.

This type of inspection, he declared "falls far short of allowing him to make a true evaluation of a manufacturer's operations."

Gorman Will Visit Israel in October

Chicago—Sec.-Treas. Patrick E. Gorman of the Meat Cutters will visit Israel in October and will be a guest of honor at receptions arranged by Israeli Pres. Ben Zvi, Prime Minister David Ben Gurion and Histadrut, the trade union organization.

During Gorman's visit a $100,000 addition to a $125,000 meat storage plant, previously sponsored by his union, will be started.

Denver Area Labor Fights 4% Sales Tax

Denver—The AFL-CIO Denver Area Labor Federation has launched an intensive campaign against a proposed 4 percent metropolitan sales tax to be voted on Sept. 26 in the four-county Denver area.

Pres. Cletus E. Ludden and Sec.-Treas. James R. Youngs urged more than 100 local union affiliated with the federation, and their auxiliaries, to get out the vote election day and to supply volunteers for a telephone drive against the sales tax.

STRIKING CHARWOMEN employed by a private firm which cleans a group of federal buildings in Washington, D. C., take their turn on the picket line in front of the government's General Accounting Office building. Building Service Employes Pres. David Sullivan has sharply protested assignment of government workers as "strikebreakers." BSEIU Local 82 Pres. Robert P. Bailey passes out the picket signs as the strike moves into the second week.

U. S. Agency Rapped on Role as Strikebreaker

Pres. David Sullivan of the Building Service Employes has accused the federal government's General Services Administration of "strikebreaking" by ordering government workers through picket lines to do the work of striking $1.15-an-hour employes of a private cleaning contractor.

The struck firm, Commercial Building Cleaners, Inc., was recently awarded a contract to clean a group of federal buildings in Washington, D. C. One hundred and thirty charwomen walked out when the company, after three months of negotiations, demanded that they give up either paid holidays or a one-week vacation granted by a previous contractor. Also involved was the company's refusal to offer a basic salary higher than the legal minimum of $1.15 an hour.

On the second night of the strike, GSA assigned a group of government custodial employes to one of the struck buildings, declaring it was "necessary" for reasons of fire protection and sanitation.

Sullivan, in a telegram to GSA Administrator John L. Moore, suggested that "it would be more beneficial to all concerned if GSA energies were channeled to trying to bring about an adjustment of these matters, for which GSA is responsible, instead of aiding chiseling contractors who are depressing wage rates and taking advantage of low-income workers."

A GSA spokesman said government civil service employes were used only one night and the agency "has not yet decided" whether the cost of their services should be deducted from the maintenance fee paid to the struck contractor.

The president of the striking BSEIU Local 82, Robert P. Bailey, said GSA's policy of annual contracts based strictly on low bidding, virtually guaranteed that the firm that paid its workers the lowest amount would get the job.

He said the Commercial Building Cleaners, which is headquartered in Irvington, N. J., was the fifth company in six years to be awarded the cleaning contract. Each firm underbid its predecessor, he said.

In sharp contrast, Bailey noted, was the fact that GSA's own custodial workers, who clean most federal buildings, are paid on the basis of prevailing wages for similar work in the area. The current government scale is $1.33 to $1.47 an hour, while the workers on strike are asking only that their $1.15 scale be raised to $1.25.

While the struck employer has offered the union a choice of one week of vacation or five holidays (the previous contractor granted eight holidays plus a vacation), the government gives 13 days of vacation the first year and up to 26 days for long-service workers, plus eight paid holidays.

Bailey and the local's secretary-treasurer, Mrs. Arline Neal, noted that GSA workers ordered through the picket lines were, in effect, being made to undercut their own standards. Low wages paid by the struck contractor, they pointed out, would drag down the area average on which the government pay scale is based.

The BSEIU also wired Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg protesting the GSA policies. An aide of the secretary told the AFL-CIO News that the department would make inquiries.

Aircraft Firm Records Subpoenaed by NLRB

East Hartford, Conn.—The National Labor Relations Board has subpoenaed the records of the United Aircraft Corp. here in its investigation of charges that the company discriminated against nearly 600 members of the Machinists following a strike more than a year ago.

The unfair practice charges filed by the IAM accuse United of violating strike settlement terms under which the company agreed to set up a rehiring list of strikers not immediately re-employed and to return them to work as soon as possible. When the preferential hiring provisions expired last Dec. 31, many union members still had not received recall notices, the IAM reported.

Issuance of the NLRB subpoenas followed closely revelations by U.S. Comptroller Gen. Joseph Campbell that the Navy had underwritten at least $1.5 million in United's strike cost at its Hamilton Standard division and that the company had asked the service to pay $7.5 million of the costs stemming from the walkout at Pratt & Whitney.

Campbell made the disclosures in a report to Rep. Frank Kowalski (D-Conn.), who had asked him to probe charges that the government was subsidizing United's strikebreaking activities.

The report showed that between the end of the strike, Aug. 9, 1960, and the expiration of the rehiring agreement United hired relatively few workers at the two divisions, although its work force was well below pre-strike levels and overtime costs were heavy. After Dec. 31 there was a sharp spurt in hiring, the report disclosed.

Bernard L. Alpert, NLRB regional director at Boston, said he resorted to seldom-used prehearing subpoenas because repeated requests for information from the company had proved fruitless.

The subpoenas, served on the personnel directors of United's Pratt & Whitney Aircraft and Hamilton Standard divisions, gave the officials until Sept. 21 to supply among other information the names and job titles of employes hired after the strike as well as those of strikers not rehired.

Unions Back U. S. Subsidies For 2 Vessels

The AFL-CIO Maritime Trades Dept. has called on the Secretary of Defense and congressional leaders to "use their good offices" to support the Bethlehem Steel Corp's application for construction subsidies on two 51,000-ton ore carriers.

In telegrams to Defense Sec. Robert McNamara, Chairman Warren Magnuson of the Senate Interstate & Foreign Commerce Committee and Chairman Herbert Bonner of the House Merchant Marine Committee, MTD Pres. Paul Hall called attention to the need for building American-flag bulk carriers to remedy "one of the critical weaknesses of our national defense system."

Bethlehem's application is being considered by Commerce Sec. Luther Hodges. Hall pointed out that no deep-water ore carriers have been built to sail the oceans under the American flag since 1945 and that the U.S. is dependent on foreign shipping "to carry virtually all the basic raw materials needed by our economy" across the oceans.

In another wire to Hodges, Hall noted that in addition to strengthening national security, construction of two big freighters would stimulate employment for workers engaged in building, manning and supplying U.S.-flag ships.

Labor Institute Post Awarded To Kornbluh

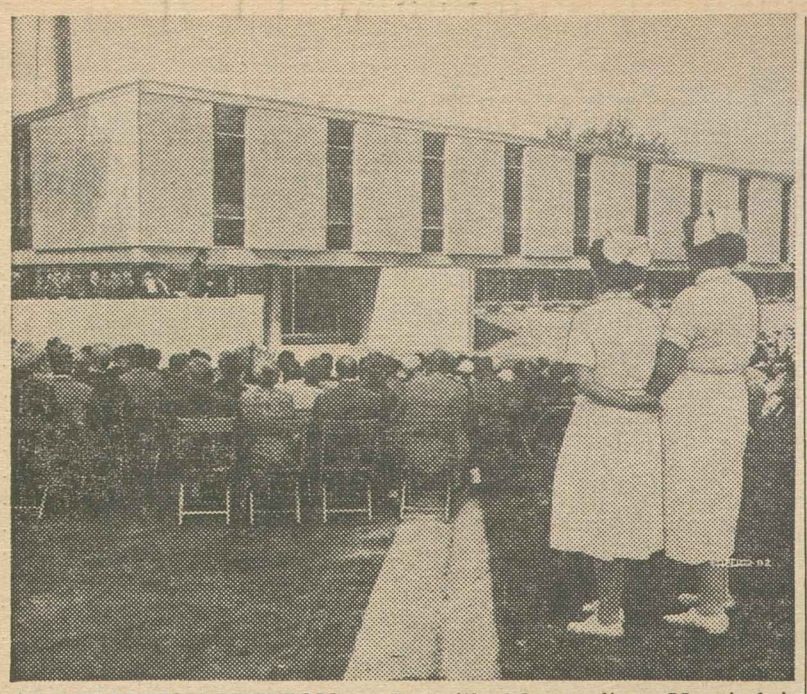
Ann Arbor, Mich.—Hy Kornbluh, a member of the AFL-CIO education staff until 1959, has been named director of labor education and services at the Institute of Labor & Industrial Relations here.

He had been acting director since April 1960 and before that coordinator of labor education at the Detroit office of the institute, an arm of both the University of Michigan and Wayne State University.

HY KORNBLUH
Heads labor education program At Michigan universities

As director of the labor education division, he succeeds Lawrence Rogin, who resigned early last year to head the AFL-CIO Dept. of Education.

Kornbluh is a graduate of the University of Wisconsin, where he taught in the Dept. of Economics and School for Workers during 1946-48. This was followed by service with international unions as business agent, organizer and education staff representative. He was associate director of education for the former CIO for two years prior to its merger with the AFL.



$3 MILLION ADDITION to Detroit's Metropolitan Hospital is hailed by Dr. John D. Porterfield, U.S. deputy surgeon general, at dedication ceremonies. The addition provides hospital and clinical facilities for Community Health Association, the new community health care pre-payment plan sponsored by the Auto Workers.

Financed by UAW Loan:

Detroit Health Plan Hospital Dedicates $3 Million Wing

Detroit—A $3 million addition to Metropolitan Hospital here was called "another milestone toward translating the fruits of medical science from the laboratory and medical journals to the corners where people live and seek service."

Dr. John D. Porterfield, United States deputy surgeon general, gave this view hailing the construction and renovation job which has added consultation offices for 30 physicians along with laboratory and X-ray facilities to handle 400 patients a day and raised the hospital's bed capacity to 181.

Financed by UAW Loan

The work was financed through a loan from the Auto Workers, which has a contract with the Community Health Association (CHA), a voluntary group health plan sponsored by the UAW and now being subscribed to by more than 7,000 members of various labor organizations and other groups, including federal government agencies.

UAW Sec.-Treas. Emil Mazey, member of the hospital board and chairman of its building committee, told of the union's efforts for six and half years to acquire this hospital and health center and help set up the companion prepayment health agency—CHA.

Tools for Health

"These new facilities will give the staff the tools needed to improve the health of all the citizens of the community," said Mazey. "We now have the means of putting into effect a comprehensive program."

Mazey said it would have been a great deal easier to have set up a UAW-operated health center to serve its members alone but, instead, the union chose the more complicated and difficult route of supporting a community agency governed by a representative board drawn from religion, education, public affairs, labor and industry.

He said the main value of this project is in its character as a partner with a modern health care prepayment plan, an integrated program that "recognizes the revolutionary character of modern scientific medicine and boldly adjusts the administrative organization of health services in an attempt to bring the full range of modern medical care systematically and efficiently to the families of the members of the prepayment plan."

One of the key principles of the plan was described by its executive director, Dr. Fred D. Mott, as "the practice of preventive medicine."

'Add Life to Years'

"The health talents of today," said Porterfield, "if applied to prevention as well as cure, to anticipation as well as to counter-defense, could achieve much more than is presently accomplished in adding life to the increasing years our predecessors gave us."

Through the conquest of communicable diseases, he said, doctors have made possible an average life expectancy of some 70 years.

"They added years to our lives," he went on. "Today our task is the corollary one of adding life to our years so that our now longer-continued existence can be anticipated with enjoyment, rather than with fear of disease, disability and desolation.

Modern Challenge

"To me the most important health challenge of our time is whether or not the health professions can confer the benison of good health on man's latter years.

"This challenge is so great because it is fundamentally intolerable to the human spirit that man, at any age, should be deeply in bondage to suffering and disability, should be kept alive by the talents of health workers, even though illness and disability have long ago destroyed life's savor and purpose.

"Therefore, this dedication is gratifying to us in the public health service, to see new methods of bringing together the consumer, the physicians and the hospital because only by such experiments and demonstrations can we make progress toward our health goals."

Among the needs of health care, Porterfield suggested increased hospital research as a means of coping wih the upward spiral of hospital costs. This should be "through the development of more efficient methods of patient care, better techniques of administration, improved design of physical plants and more effective coordination of community health resources," he said.

Other speakers included Mayor Louis C. Miriani and Gov. John B. Swainson of Michigan.

Last Bills of Session Get Action in Congress

and was expected to clear the Senate without a hitch.

A drive to amend the Senate rules to put new curbs on filibusters never got off the ground.

Cloture Defeated

The final squelch came when an adjournment-minded Senate rejected a cloture motion to cut off debate which had been presented by the Senate's Democratic and Republican leaders. The move to limit debate required a two-thirds vote under the Senate's rules. It failed to muster even a majority, losing 37 to 43. Senate Majority Leader Mike Mansfield (D-Mont.) then moved to lay aside his own motion to tighten debate rules, which the Senate did by a 46 to 35 vote.

Mansfield said if the cloture vote had been close he would have renewed the fight. Sen. Kenneth B. Keating (D-N. Y.) expressed hope that the rules change could be acted on next January but Mansfield said he didn't intend to bring the matter up again, declaring:

"I do not believe in sham battles."

The House upset the efforts of its leadership to steer through a sharply-compromised postal rate increase—which would have raised first class postage from 4 cents to 5 cents but would have made only token changes in commercial rates. After the House refused to consider the bill under a rule barring all amendments, the measure was withdrawn.

Congress did, however, act to raise the pay of long-service postal employes by shortening the period required to be eligible for longevity raises and increasing the amount. The Senate-passed bill breezed through the House unchanged, 358 to 4, and was sent to the President.

Congress also acted to raise the interest rate on government bonds held by the Civil Service Retirement Fund, a move which had been urged by both government employe unions and the Administration to cut down the actuarial deficit in the pension fund.

A conference report on extension of the Mexican farm labor program put the Administration on the spot as the conferees stripped from the measure a Senate-passed amendment which would have established a minimum wage for Mexican aliens brought in under contract—and indirectly for American farm laborers with whom they sometimes compete.

Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg had hailed the Senate version and expressed hope that the provision requiring that Mexican workers be paid at least 90 percent of the average farm wage in the state or nation, whichever is lower, would "reverse the downward trend in migratory labor earnings."

Earlier, Administration spokesmen had said that the program under which some 400,000 farm laborers are brought in from Mexico each year should be continued only if major reforms were made.

The conference bill made some improvements in the existing law, requiring that employers provide equal working conditions for American farm workers and limiting the type of jobs on which Mexicans can be used. The changes, however, fell far short of the Administration's original proposals.

The House Appropriations Committee made a flanking attack on what conservatives have dubbed "back door spending"—authorization for agencies to draw money directly from the Treasury for specified programs instead of going to Congress for annual appropriations. The committee's attempt to strike out this authority in an appropriations bill containing funds for housing and area redevelopment agencies apparently was rebuffed when a point of order struck the legislative rider from the appropriations bill.

This also struck out operating funds for the Housing & Home Finance Agency and Area Redevelopment Administration, but the Senate was expected to restore the operating funds.

Missile Site Strikes At New Record Low

Time lost at U.S. missile sites in August was only slightly above one ten-thousandth of 1 percent of man-days worked, Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg has reported to Pres. Kennedy.

Out of 1.5 million man-days of labor, only 206 man-days were lost because of work stoppages, Goldberg said in terming the loss "infinitesimal."

The mark was a new record low for the three-month period in which the President's Missile Sites Labor Commission has operated, Goldberg reported. The missile site ratio was even lower than that in U.S. industry generally, which ran at a new record low for the first half of 1961 —two-tenths of 1 percent.

'Woolworth Doctrine' Abandonment Sought

The National Labor Relations Board has been urged by the AFL-CIO to change the so-called "Woolworth rule" which for seven years, the federation said, has permitted employers to escape unfair labor practice charges after interfering in union election campaigns.

The "Woolworth doctrine" sets a cutoff date which the board uses in deciding if it will accept evidence of illegal interference.

That date has been the one on which the NLRB issues an order for an election to be held within 30 days.

The federation has urged the board to reduce the chance of interference by using the date on which an election petition is filed—an earlier date—as the cutoff time.

Under the Woolworth doctrine, unions have been foreclosed from protesting misconduct in about 25 to 30 percent of the cases where interference has occurred, the board was told by AFL-CIO Gen. Counsel J. Albert Woll and by Theodore J. St. Antoine, associate to Woll, in a brief and in oral argument.

The AFL-CIO legal representatives urged the NLRB to overrule a decision made in an F. W. Woolworth Co. case in 1954 and to reinstate the rule it previously followed—the A & P rule, involving misconduct during a longer period. The Woolworth rule, they said, has been proved "unsound in principle, harmful in operation," and illogical in setting a cutoff date only 30 days from an election.

Such a rule, they said, "insulates" the employer from penalty for misconduct in the period before the election date is set and gives him an opportunity to interfere with his employes' right to choose freely.

At the very least, they argued, the cutoff date in contested election cases should be moved back to the date on which a notice of hearing is issued by the NLRB.

"It ill becomes a party to come before this board and insist upon his 'right,' before a certain cutoff date, to engage with impunity in activities which are in fact unfair labor practices, and chargeable as such even under present rules," the attorneys argued.

The AFL-CIO was invited by the board to submit an "amicus curiae" brief detailing its opinion. So were the unaffiliated Teamsters, the U.S. Chamber of Commerce and the National Association of Manufacturers.

The board's decision to reconsider the Woolworth rule came after the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers objected to an election at the Ideal Electric & Mfg. Co. plant, Mansfield, O., which was won by the Independent Electrical Workers Union, unaffiliated. After the NLRB issued a notice of hearing the company and the incumbent union negotiated a wage increase which the IUE said interfered with the employes' free choice.

Under the Woolworth doctrine the board may not consider this action on its merits.

NLRB Studying Curbs On Firms in Violations

leaders is "no more than a 'license fee for union-busting,'" he acknowledged the "apparent ineffectiveness" of the board's usual orders to bad-faith employers.

"The employer willingly pays such fees if it assures him of an operation free from unionism," he said.

Effective Remedies Sought

"We at the labor board are now studying various ways of taking the profit out of unfair labor practices, whether committed by employers or unions."

The Norris-LaGuardia Act is a reminder that "government by injunction in labor relations has long been abhorred," McCulloch said. But there have been "urgent requests" for more effective NLRB action in unfair-practice cases, "and we are giving these proposals the most serious study despite their unpopular past."

Administrative enforcement of the federal law guaranteeing free organization and collective bargaining compels consideration of "more ingenious" remedies against violations, he said.

McCulloch told his audience that a recent NLRB order delegating to regional directors the power to set up employe-representation elections had slashed the time lapse in deciding cases from an average of 90 to 43 days.

He said there was a "compelling" need for NLRB authority to delegate to regional directors the handling of most unfair-practice cases, reserving to the board itself a discretionary power of review.

A proposed NLRB reorganization plan to authorize this delegation, submitted by Pres. Kennedy to Congress, was rejected by a narrow margin earlier in the session by the House.

72 May Get $80,000:

Back Pay Ordered After Ten Years

North Hollywood, Calif.—The National Labor Relations Board has directed the Knickerbocker Plastic Co., Inc., to pay $80,000 in back wages to 72 employes fired illegally for union activities more than 10 years ago.

The lengthy search for the protection of the labor law involved the Machinists. Last month the NLRB, in a parallel case, ordered Brown & Root, Inc., and eight other companies doing business as the Ozark Dam Constructors, to pay $55,000 to 54 building trades workers fired illegally more than 11 years ago at the Bull Shoals Dam near Mountain Home, Ark.

Three NLRB members signed the order directing the Knickerbocker Plastic Co. to pay—Philip Ray Rodgers, Boyd Leedom and John H. Fanning.

More than 10 years of legal battling have been marked by orders, decisions, hearings, briefs, arguments, answers, amended answers, and an amendment to an amended answer. The company meantime has been taken over by another owner and the IAM now enjoys the protection of a union shop contract for present employes.

These key dates in the dispute are taken from the record:

Apr. 1950—Knickerbocker employes apply for IAM membership.

June 1950—The company president sets up a bogus union, fires an IAM member, and the union files an unfair labor practice charge.

Sept. 1950—The company union wins an NLRB election.

Jan. 1951—The NLRB holds a hearing on the IAM's unfair labor practice charge.

June 1951—The company fires three employes who testified at the NLRB hearing.

June 9, 1951—The workers strike and are fired.

Mar. 24, 1952—The strike ends without a contract. The IAM asks the labor board for an order reinstating the fired workers.

Sept. 1952—An NLRB examiner sustains the IAM charge and recommends reinstatement with back pay.

Apr. 30, 1953—The NLRB finds management broke the law and orders it to make fired employes whole.

Jan. 15, 1955—The U.S. Court of Appeals, 9th Circuit, orders the NLRB order enforced.

Apr. 3, 1957—The NLRB regional director issues back pay specifications, and the board issues its findings and answer Oct. 15, 1957.

June 30, 1958—The trial examiner recommends that specific amounts of back pay be awarded to certain claimants and that other claims be denied.

Aug. 29, 1961—The board issues a supplemental decision and order for back pay, and gives the regional director one year to report the final disposition of disputed cases.

Back pay awards range from $20 to $4,682.

Brief Backs Principle Of Norris-LaGuardia

The AFL-CIO has asked the Supreme Court not to "jeopardize the cause of industrial peace" by "letting down the bars" of the Norris-LaGuardia Act limiting federal court injunctions in labor disputes.

A test case on the issue of whether a union can be enjoined for alleged breach of contract containing a no-strike clause is scheduled to be argued before the Supreme Court when it reconvenes in October.

The immediate case involves the unaffiliated Teamsters. The AFL-CIO in a brief offered to the court has asked reversal of an injunction against the Teamsters. The federation told the Supreme Court that "the basic issue posed by this case is of deepest concern to all laboring people."

Picket Line Set Up

The Yellow Transit Freight Lines, Inc., of Wichita, Kan., obtained the federal district court injunction barring an organizational picket line set up by the Teamsters at terminals where non-union clerical employes worked. The company's drivers, members of the same local, refused to cross the picket lines.

Although the union had a clause permitting its members to honor picket lines, the company charged that the effect of the picket line was to violate the no-strike contract provision. The 10th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals upheld the injunction on the ground that no labor dispute existed and therefore the Norris-LaGuardia Act did not apply.

The act, described in the AFL-CIO brief as "a cornerstone of our national labor policy," broadly restricted federal court injunctions in the area of peaceful strikes and peaceful picketing.

The brief pointed to the rapid growth of injunctions in labor disputes in the period prior to passage of the Norris-LaGuardia Act and urged that it "not be allowed to start anew."

Dissolution of an injunction on appeal two years after its issuance "does not restore the status quo" to the labor-management dispute, the AFL-CIO declared.

"In the meantime the strike has died," it noted.

Company Claim Assailed

Assailing the claim of company attorneys that the Taft-Hartley Act permits injunctions against peaceful picketing or work stoppages when a breach of contract is involved, the AFL-CIO emphasized that language which would have specifically permitted such injunctions was deleted in conference before the bill was passed. The federation brief added:

"The conclusion is inescapable. Congress expressly considered the suggestion that the anti-injunction ban of Norris-LaGuardia be lifted in the case of suits for violations of collective bargaining agreements. And Congress expressly rejected that suggestion."

The AFL-CIO held that until issuance of the injunction in the case before the court, "unions could agree to no-strike clauses without fear that they might thereby be surrendering time-honored protections under Norris-LaGuardia."

"Specifically, they did not have to fear that their movements along the often ill-defined, unmapped pathways of labor relations would suddenly be confronted by the blunt, undiscriminating roadblock of a labor injunction," it added.

"Should such injunctions be upheld, unions everywhere would necessarily become less receptive to no-strike clauses. The result could well be to jeopardise rather than advance the cause of industrial peace."

CofC Sets Campaign To Ban Union Shop

group has suffered repeated setbacks and defeats.

The 22-member Chamber of Commerce committee included businessmen and industrialists described by AFL-CIO officials in their states in terms such as "notoriously anti-union."

Camp, the committee chairman, is described by the California AFL-CIO as a multi-millionaire cotton and alfalfa grower with interests in agricultural processing operations. A contributor to the unsuccessful 1958 drive for a state "right-to-work" law, he is listed as having "a long history of anti-labor activities."

The Texas AFL-CIO described Howard Jensen, vice president and general counsel of the Lone Star Steel Corp., Dallas, as representing "probably the leading union-busting company in Texas."

John Ben Shepperd was described as having "a record of labor-liberal witch-hunting dating back to World War II." He once was attorney-general of Texas.

Another committee member, Robert H. Spahn, production manager of the Oklahoma Publishing Co., Oklahoma City, was listed by the State AFL-CIO as a charter member of the board of Oklahomans for Right-to-Work. His company which publishes the city's only two daily newspapers, was reported to have driven out the Typographical and other printing trades unions.

Frank Ault, described by the Florida State AFL-CIO as a non-union roofing contractor, has been chairman of his state's "right-to-work" organization and has sponsored legislation to toughen the existing Florida open-shop law by banning dues checkoffs and agency-shop agreements.

L. E. Haight is general counsel of the J. R. Simplot Co., Boise, Ida., whose president was so closely identified with an unsuccessful effort to enact a "work" bill in the last session of the legislature that the measure was dubbed the "Simplot bill."

Another committee member from Utah, R. V. Hansberger, is president of Boise Cascade Co. The state labor federation said that the company, which had union shop agreements for many years, this year has refused to agree to continuation of the provision.

Another Californian, Parker Holt, Stockton farm equipment distributor, was also active in the 1958 R-T-W campaign and has fought organization of his workers with "militant anti-labor policies."

William B. Prosser of Hagerstown, Ind., is president of the Perfect Circle Corp.

Still another committee member, Jonathan C. Gibson, general counsel of the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway, is the author of pamphlets which have been distributed by both the Chamber of Commerce and the R-T-W committee.

Earl C. Swanson is president of the Andersen Corp., Bayport, Minn., described by the State AFL-CIO as "notoriously anti-union."

Other state reports identify George T. Fox, president of the Reynolds Mfg. Co., Springfield, Mo., as "extremely conservative"; A. H. Borden, Elizabeth, N. J., as a non-union employer; C. Douglas Cairns, Burlington, Vt., as a member of the Vermont "right-to-work" organization. Fred C. Edwards, industrial relations official with Armstrong Cork Co., Lancaster, Pa., is described by the Rubber Workers local which deals with him as openly anti-union and "a perfect man for the CofC job."

The CofC committee also includes E. M. Brabant, an official of Applied Power Industries, Inc., Milwaukee; Cully A. Cobb, head of Ruralist Press, Atlanta; J. E. Holtzinger, Altoona, Pa., publisher; John R. Jury, Southwest Grease & Oil Co., Wichita, Kan.; Paul Stephanz, Burlington, N. C., banker; William B. Sweetland, Klamath Falls, Ore., publisher, and Lloyd W. Taggert, Cody, Wyo., contractor.

Wage-Hour Manual Undergoes Revision

The text of the new Fair Labor Standards (wage-hour) Act, and details of new rules of coverage and exemptions, are reported by the Bureau of National Affairs, Inc., in a revised edition of a manual.

"The New Wage and Hour Law" was prepared by the staff of Labor Relations Reporter. The 366-page book may be purchased for $9.50 from BNA Inc., 1231-24th Street, N.W., Washington 7, D. C.

Walsh-Healey Speed-up Set By Goldberg

Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg has announced a speed-up of Walsh-Healey Act procedures to determine industry prevailing minimum wages which must be paid by firms awarded government supply contracts.

Goldberg says the new procedures should reduce the time-lag between industry wage surveys and determination of new minimum pay rates "to less than one year." He said the lag has averaged between two and three years and has sometimes exceeded four years.

Two years ago AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany charged that the effectiveness of the act was being "nullified" by prolonged administrative procedures.

Meany complained to then Sec. of Labor James P. Mitchell that frequent reopened hearings amounted to a "reward" to employers for non-cooperation.

Goldberg also announced that he will appoint a labor-management advisory committee to help assure that the Walsh-Healey Act will be administered "properly and equitably."

He said the following actions will be taken to speed up the decision-making procedures:

- A shorter timetable for preparing and approving wage questionnaires and collecting and tabulating survey data.
- A 30-day limit for filing briefs after hearings and a 21-day limit for filing comments on a proposed determination.
- Final decisions to be effective seven days after publication in the Federal Register.
- Requests for postponements of conferences or hearings will be rejected except in "exceptional circumstances."

Goldberg added that "as a guarantee of fairness, comments on tentative decisions will be reviewed by persons other than those who participated in the hearings or in the drafting of the tentative decisions."

NLRB Rejects Challenge on Elections

The National Labor Relations Board has rejected an employer's claim that the board exceeded its authority when it delegated election powers to NLRB regional offices last May.

The five board members voted unanimously to direct an election by Oct. 11 among employes of the Wallace Shops, Inc., Memphis, Tenn., a retail ready-to-wear apparel shop owned by Darling Shops Corp.

The election was requested by Retail Clerks Local 1529. The employer moved to dismiss the election petition with these arguments:

- The company's gross volume of business does not meet NLRB jurisdictional standards (the board found that the company's 1961 business probably will exceed $500,000 and therefore will meet the standard).
- The NLRB exceeded the authority of the law when it delegated its powers in election cases to its regional directors (the board said the employer failed to specify in what way it exceeded its authority).
- The NLRB failed to follow the procedure set up in the Administrative Procedure Act (the board found no merit in this claim).

The board also held that the Memphis regional director, though given authority to act, did not do so but referred the dispute back to the board for a decision.

Hammarskjold Death Threat to UN Life

Assembly Gloomy on Soviet 'Troika' Drive

By Arnold Beichman

United Nations, N. Y.—Can the United Nations be saved?

This is the flaming question facing the world organization as it nears the 16th year of its tremulous existence. The mysterious death of Dag Hammarskjold has served to bring the UN crisis of existence to a dramatic head a little sooner than if he were still alive.

The war of aggression against the UN, formally initiated by shoe-pounding Premier Khrushchev a year ago, has been aided immeasurably by the sudden loss of the UN secretary-general whose annual report warned that the UN was on the brink of disaster.

If there is any optimism amidst the encircling gloom along the East River, it is that the now-questionable future of the UN can no longer be smothered in double-talk, in empty rhetoric.

The UN crisis is here and now. Its enemies are determined to render the UN so impotent that never again would it be able to move in anyway whatsoever against Soviet-inspired acts of subversion or conquest of free peoples.

In simple words, the Soviet Union is out to turn the UN into a Soviet satellite as rapidly as possible. If that attempt should lead to the destruction of the UN, there wouldn't be a Kremlin tear at its demise.

The question as to whether the UN can be saved is not directed to its possible transformation into an anti-Communist organization. That couldn't happen for many reasons—the paralyzing Soviet veto; Soviet power over many unaligned nations which shun involvement in what is called the "cold war"; the immunity for the Soviet Union when it violates the UN charter, as in the invasion of Hungary; and the unwillingness of UN member nations to do anything more about such violations than to pass noble resolutions.

Saving the UN from extinction is a reference to whether it will be able to function in the future on any level whatsoever on the Congo, on Berlin, on expansion and administration of technical and economic aid for the new countries of Asia and Africa, and through the continuance of what was once a well-trained secretariat to implement actions taken by UN bodies.

However weak and fumbling the UN has been over recent years, it had meaning, if only as a world forum where governments could debate issues and explore possible solutions. On a secretariat level, the UN was able to offer disadvantaged countries some kind of help.

Today even this kind of UN effectiveness is in the balance. Soviet and satellite citizens have moved into strategic secretariat posts and are thus thinning what was once the UN's proud boast—an international civil service loyal only to the UN.

The Soviet Union has demanded the end of the office of the secretary-general. In its place, Khrushchev has proposed the "troika"—a three-man directorate consisting of one Communist, one Westerner and one "neutral"—to manage the UN.

This obvious maneuver would mean the end of the UN as a significant force in world affairs and enough UN member states know it. So proposed compromises are being trotted out which in essence would accomplish Soviet objectives but with less visible crudity.

Publicly, delegates to the 16th General Assembly session which opened so somberly speak with brave reassurance for the future. Privately, these same delegates speak fearfully about the days and weeks ahead. One delegate, an Asian, said:

"For some years now, the UN has been without legs and arms. Today it is without a head. How can it live even if it still has a soul?"

Back UN Day, Labor Urged By Goldberg

It is a matter of great importance that American labor organizations "take an active and continuing interest in the activities of many United Nations agencies," Sec. of Labor Arthur J. Goldberg said in a statement stressing the significance of United Nations Day on Oct. 24.

Goldberg's message was released before the death of UN Sec.-Gen. Dag Hammarskjold in a plane crash in Africa.

He pointed out that the UN, since its inception, has been a vital force for peace and stability.

"No small part of its success is due to its constructive efforts to provide welfare and raise living standards for underprivileged peoples," he said.

"The American labor movement is also greatly concerned with the economic improvement of that two-thirds of the earth's population which is undernourished, ill-clothed and poorly housed. It finds common purpose with the UN in a common desire to make this a better world for all."

The U.S. Committee for the United Nations, in which the AFL-CIO, the Machinists and the Teachers hold membership, has urged local and international unions and central bodies to participate in UN Day.

A kit that includes display materials, suggestions for setting up programs, a copy of Pres. Kennedy's UN Day proclamation and a bibliography may be obtained by unions from the committee at 375 Park Avenue, New York 22, N. Y.

Meany Asks Assembly To Save UN Charter

the UN, Meany asserted, "the entire liberty-loving world and especially the peoples of Africa and Asia have lost an irreplaceable fighter for peace and human progress."

Hammarskjold in his final report predicted a three-headed directorate would mean the collapse of the UN. The feeling is shared by the western world and by many of the unaligned nations.

Soviet Foreign Minister Gromyko made it plain the Communist bloc would bend every effort to capitalize on the situation growing out of Hammarskjold's death to push for the "troika" plan. The UN charter would have to be amended to permit the shift. Gromyko has coupled this demand with renewal of the Reds' now traditional insistence that Red China be admitted. The U.S. has seconded New Zealand's motion that the admission question be put on the agenda, though it still opposes the admission itself.

Meany, in a wire to the Committee of One Million holding a rally in New York, restated the AFL-CIO's opposition to the admission of Red China to the UN.

Meany said that Red China is "completely disqualified" from membership because the regime has been imposed by a foreign power; that the government exercises control through denying its people fundamental human rights; that it has been found guilty of aggression against the UN.

Admission of Red China, he declared, would "gravely undermine the UN and greatly assist Moscow's sinister schemes to dominate this vital world organization and destroy its effectiveness . . ."

As the assembly moved into its opening days with apparent symptoms of paralysis stemming from Hammarskjold's death, there were these developments:

- Mongi Slim of Tunisia was elected assembly president by a 96-to-0 vote. He is the first representative from Africa to be elected president of the assembly.
- Pres. Kennedy prepared for a major speech to the UN.
- U.S. Sec. of State Dean Rusk and Gromyko held private talks on the Berlin and other critical issues.

Hammarskjold's death brought expressions of shock and regret from all parts of the world except those ruled by Communists. The Soviet delegate, Valerian A. Zorin, politely joined other members of the Security Council in offering "condolences" but bluntly pointed out that Russia for the past year had not recognized Hammarskjold as a UN official.

The free labor world's regret was made known by Sec.-Gen. Omer Becu of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions, who said the organization was "deeply shocked" at the deaths of Hammarskjold and his companions "in execution of duty in Congo."

"Fifty-six million workers in the free trade unions of the world," he said, "express their sincere and profound grief at the loss of an outstanding figure who always worked untiringly despite immense difficulties for the preservation of world peace and for upholding justice in international relations.

The AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept. cabled Arne Geiger, president of the ICFTU and of the Swedish Trade Union Federation, mourning Hammarskjold's death.

IUD Pres. Walter P. Reuther declared there could be no greater tribute to him "than a stronger UN and a greater determination to build a spirit of genuine internationalism as a sane basis for peace and survival."

West Virginia Labor Flood Fund $43,000

Charleston, W. Va.—AFL-CIO unions collected $43,330 during August to aid victims of the West Virginia flash flood which hit the Charleston area July 19, killing 22 persons and damaging 1,600 homes.

State AFL-CIO Sec-Treas. Benjamin W. Skeen said $34,149 of the amount had been contributed by the Glass Bottle Blowers, its local unions and their employers. The donations are being used for direct relief of GBBA members among the flood victims.

All other donations were turned over to the American Red Cross for flood relief based on need. This fund drive was sparked by the State AFL-CIO, the West Virginia Building & Construction Trades Council, the Kanawha Valley Labor Council and the Charleston Building Trades Council.

Skeen said that "every penny" of the amount collected for the Red Cross "has been turned over without administrative expense."

Funds raised by the Glass Bottle Blowers are being administered by a committee made up of four union representatives and the personnel director of the Owens-Illinois plant where many of the flood victims worked.

One GBBA member lost four children and his home in the disaster. Twenty-two others saw their homes swept away or heavily damaged.

More than $10,000 was contributed by GBBA members throughout the nation and the international union added a matching contribution. Union members at the Owens-Illinois plant chipped in $8,743 for their fellow workers and management added $5,000.

SAG to Curb Agents' Film Producing

The Screen Actors Guild has called a halt to waivers of its regulations barring talent agencies from engaging in film production while representing actors in the field.

In a series of proposals for a new agreement with the Artists' Managers Guild, SAG served notice that effective Jan. 1 it will not grant or renew any waivers of its longtime prohibition against an agent being a producer.

Involved, says SAG, is a "serious conflict of interests" between the functions of an employer (the producer) and of an agent representing the interests of an employe (the actor).

SAG's proposals noted that waivers of the regulation have been granted to a number of agents since 1952 to encourage and promote television film production at a time when the motion picture industry was depressed.

"The waivers have served their purpose; the reasons for their creation no longer exist," the statement said.

Foreign Aid Cut in Adjournment Rush

By David L. Perlman

A weary 87th Congress, prodded by Pres. Kennedy into its most productive session since the World War II era, adjourned for a three-month break with the prospect of second-session battles over a long list of hotly controversial issues.

The final hours of the session brought a setback to the President as the adjournment-impatient Congress agreed to a sharply-compromised foreign aid appropriation falling nearly $1 billion shy of the amount Kennedy had sought.

In the hectic race to adjournment, Administration supporters in the Senate found themselves outfoxed by House conservatives who wrote into another appropriations conference report a provision in effect repealing authorization previously granted to a number of agencies to finance programs without going to Congress for money each year.

In the process, cuts were made in funds authorized for mass transit grants and open spaces housing programs. The House adjourned after adopting the conference report, leaving the Senate with a take-it-or-leave-it omnibus bill that included more than $1 billion in appropriations for government operating expenses.

Put over until next year were such major issues as health care for the aged, retraining programs for jobless workers, expanded public works to bolster a still-sagging economy, federal standards for unemployment compensation, migrant worker protection and federal aid to schools.

On the plus side, the congressional record was highly rated by impartial observers. United Press-Intl. reported that the session had accomplished more this year than many a Congress has managed in two.

Segregated Conference Boycotted

The Labor Dept. and employment officials from about half the states are boycotting the Interstate Conference of Employment Security Agencies, set for Oct. 2-4 in Atlanta, Ga., because it will be held in a segregated hotel.

A spokesman for the department said that while Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg had issued no formal directive, he had nevertheless made clear his view that federal personnel should not attend the meeting, or any other meeting held in segregated facilities.

The department spokesman also said that at least half the state employment directors and possibly more have indicated they will not attend the Atlanta conference for the same reason.

The conference was organized in the 1930s to provide a forum for the exchange of information and views between state and federal personnel administering the then new unemployment compensation program. It is financed partly by the federal government. States tak-

BLS Lashes Digest Article as 'Distortion'

A top government career officer has accused Reader's Digest of publishing a grossly distorted and factually misleading article charging that the Labor Dept.'s Bureau of Labor Statistics has "juggled" joblessness figures to "magnify" them for the purpose of promoting federal "spending" programs.

In a Sept. 13 letter to Editor DeWitt Wallace, BLS Commissioner Ewan Clague charged that the article was "inaccurate," that its stated conclusions were "wholly unsupported by the facts" and "unpardonable," and that "the most casual inquiry" would have given the author the facts.

Clague, a BLS veteran originally appointed in the Truman Administration and twice reappointed to new four-year terms by former Pres. Eisenhower, bluntly told Wallace:

"I cannot recall ever having read a short article in which so many inaccurate statements were presented in support of such unwarranted conclusions.

"I am amazed that a reporter on the staff of the Reader's Digest

Mexican Bill Veto Urged by AFL-CIO

The AFL-CIO has urged Pres. Kennedy to veto the two-year extension of the Mexican farm labor importation program.

AFL-CIO Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller wired the President pointing out that the bill "does not include the basic reforms requested by your Administration and demanded by humane concern for the welfare of American workers." He urged a veto followed by a request for substitute legislation which would include proposals to protect farm workers.

3,000 Cheer New Jersey Labor Unity

By Saul Miller

Newark, N. J.—Over 450,000 union members have united to form the New Jersey State AFL-CIO, completing the merger of all state labor organizations in the nation.

Nearly 3,000 delegates cheered as AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany administered the oaths of office to the four top officers and the 37 vice presidents of the new state organization, declaring "you're now in business."

Meany chaired the merger convention in the Sussex Ave. Armory only a few hours after returning to the U.S. after an 8,000-mile journey that took him to the British Trades Union Congress convention, the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions in Brussels and a brief visit to Israel.

The American labor movement, he told the delegates in a brief address, has a special responsibility to demonstrate to workers in other nations that "we can make democracy work," that our actions demon-

WLW Bars Renewal Of Auto Union Program

The Federal Communications Commission is investigating the refusal of Station WLW in Cincinnati to renew the Auto Workers' radio program, Eye Opener, featuring the commentary of Guy Nunn.

The FCC moved into the case following a protest by the UAW that the station's decision to drop Nunn's program amounted to "rank censorship" and was cause for revocation of its license.

U.S. Sen. Philip A. Hart (D-Mich.), in a speech to the Senate, described the matter as one of "substantial urgency and significance" involving "a very dangerous threat to freedom of communications."

WLW, a 50,000 watt clear channel station owned by the Crosley Broadcasting Corp., had carried the Eye Opener program from 7 to 7:30 p.m., five nights a week, under a one-year contract that expired Sept. 11.

The program, recorded in De-

As Spur to Recovery:

Low Interest Policy Urged by AFL-CIO

The AFL-CIO has called on the Kennedy Administration to expand a low interest policy on home mortgages and banking as a spur to economic recovery.

Stanley H. Ruttenberg, director of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Research, said the federation welcomed the recent announcement by Neal Hardy, commissioner of the Federal Housing Administration, that the FHA has no present plans to raise the maximum interest rate — now 5.25 percent — on the loans it insures. (News stories previously had indicated that higher rates were being considered by the FHA.)

An increase in the rate, Ruttenberg said in a letter to Dr. Walter H. Heller, chairman of the President's Council on Economic Advisers, would have had a depressing effect on the already lagging pace of housing construction.

"Even worse," he said, "it might have set the stage psychologically for a general rise in interest rates," thus stifling recovery and killing prospects for reduced unemployment.

But to make the 5.25 percent rate stick in a market where long-term interest rates are rising requires "vigorous action now" by the Administration, Ruttenberg said. He recommended the following steps:

- "FHA should refuse to insure any mortgage on which discounting has taken place, either directly or indirectly." (Discounting gives the borrower less cash than the face amount of the loan, thus increasing mortgage costs while ostensibly maintaining the official interest rate ceiling.)
- Congress should act to permit direct loans from the FHA to homebuyers unable to obtain mortgages from private lenders at the FHA interest ceiling without any discount.
- Interest paid by savings and loan and mutual savings banks to shareholders and depositors should be reduced. This, said Ruttenberg, would not affect the overall availability of funds for mortgages, but would enable these institutions to reduce their mortgage rates.
- The Federal Reserve Board, Ruttenberg said, should:

First, reduce the rediscount rate —the amount it charges commercial banks—from 3 percent to 2.75 percent.

Second, conduct its open-market operations more vigorously through extensive purchases of long-term (10 years and over) securities, thus halting the upward trend in interest on long-term government securities.

"These two steps by the Federal Reserve would certainly set the stage psychologically for a continued easy money policy and thereby help to speed economic recovery," Ruttenberg concluded.

"Combined with the other measures we have recommended, they will provide a clear indication that the Administration means to pursue a relatively easy money policy as long as there is slackness in the economy."

Living Costs Drop Slightly in August

By Robert B. Cooney

The nation's cost of living declined slightly in August, the Labor Dept. has reported, adding that the country thus far in 1961 has experienced the greatest price stability since 1955.

The Bureau of Labor Statistics' Consumer Price Index dropped by one-tenth of 1 percent between July and August to 128. The 128.1 of July was an all-time high. The August CPI means the market basket which cost $10 in the 1947-49 base period now costs $12.80.

Because of earlier price rises, the August CPI will mean a 1-cent or 2-cent per hour increase in the wages of 120,000 workers, mainly in aircraft and missile production, whose negotiated cost-of-living allowances are reviewed on the basis of the August index. It also will mean the maximum 3-cent increase allowable under contracts covering some 580,000 steelworkers. The Steelworkers and steel employers will decide if all or part of the hike will be paid in wages beginning Oct. 1 or go to offset insurance cost increases.

A companion report issued by the Labor Dept. showed "no significant change" between July and August in the spendable earnings and buying power of factory workers.

Remaining close to the all-time highs of June and July, the August spendable earnings or take-home pay of a production worker with 3 dependents stood at $83.40; the level was $75.79 for a worker without dependents.

The buying power of factory workers' earnings was unchanged since prices remained steady; it was, however, at a high for the month.

The decline in the CPI for August was attributed chiefly to seasonally lower food prices, especially for fresh fruits and vegetables. Prices of fresh vegetables fell sharply by 13 percent as market supplies hit seasonal peaks.

Higher prices for used cars and gasoline exerted an upward pressure; otherwise the August decline would have been greater, noted Ewan Clague, BLS commissioner.

Used car prices jumped 2.7 percent, the largest rise since the series was introduced in 1953. The lower volume of new car sales resulted in a scarcity of trade-in cars, the report said.

On the topic of stability, the report said:

"In the first eight months of 1961, consumer prices have advanced by approximately 0.5 percent, less than during any comparable period since 1955."

The 1961 rise was due largely to steady increases for services and for used cars, the report explained, while food prices remained relatively stable.

Convention Call Sent to AFL-CIO Affiliates

The AFL-CIO has issued its official call for the federation's fourth constitutional convention declaring that in the face of "the mounting threat to freedom," labor must "fulfill without stint" its heavy responsibilities.

Signed by AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany and Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler in behalf of the Executive Council, the call emphasizes the threat of war and the persistence in this country of substantial unemployment and declares that a "strong free labor movement" is an "indispensable force" in meeting the problems.

"We cannot afford the luxury of divisive quarrels," it asserts; "the times demand the best that is in us all. We must be united in carrying forward our common purpose."

The convention will open Dec. 7 in the Americana Hotel, Miami Beach, Fla. The call declares:

This fourth constitutional convention of the American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations meets under somewhat happier domestic and even grimmer international circumstances than its predecessor. The Soviet Union's threat to world peace and the unsolved need to achieve full, productive use of America's human resources cast a shadow over the record of solid achievements of the two years since we last met.

For a whole year unemployment has persisted at the intolerable level of nearly 7 percent of the labor force. In the face of rising production and a general improvement in other economic areas, more than 5 million able and willing workers remain jobless. Many have been idle for months on end; to many, the future seems only a dreary extension of the present.

Meanwhile, the population explosion that began two decades ago is now propelling into the labor force each year an additional 1.3 million job-seekers. The potential blessing of automation has become a dread specter, devouring old jobs faster than new ones are created.

These are sobering facts. They make it clear beyond question that fundamental and sweeping changes must be made to cope with them; and that the time to start is now.

If these were normal times, even this staggering problem could be approached with cautious hope. The election of Pres. Kennedy, with energetic support from the labor movement, restored a liberal philosophy to the White House. Events have justified our efforts in the 1960 elections.

With strong Presidential leadership and united labor backing, a significant number of long-pending social and economic improvements became law. Among them were a broader and better wage-hour law, aid to depressed areas, a truly comprehensive housing act and a realistic temporary extension of unemployment compensation. In addition, promising administrative actions were undertaken to promote equal job opportunity and voting rights.

Yet there were other disappointments aside from employment.

Comprehensive federal aid to education, desperately needed for years, was again frustrated in Congress.

Medical care for the aged has still not been made part of the social security system, despite tragic evidence of its necessity.

Equality of opportunity remains a distant dream for too many Americans, victimized by racial, religious and other forms of discrimination.

Repressive restrictions on legitimate union activities, shockingly intensified by the 85th Congress, remain in force, and new assaults on labor's rights are an ever-present danger.

Even so, after eight years of inertia the federal government has begun to move again, and has moved the country with it. In normal times, that in itself would tip the balance toward optimism.

But these are not normal times. The unsolved problems and modest gains just cited pale in significance beside the mounting threat to human freedom throughout the world.

The Soviet Union has embarked upon a new campaign of aggression, with West Berlin the first target, and it broke the nuclear bomb test ban. At any moment the fraudulence of Soviet words may give way to naked force. Never in history has mankind been so close to self-destruction.

To meet this peril our country must be strong—strong militarily, strong economically and strong spiritually, with unconquerable faith in our democratic society as the best and only instrument for achieving well-being, social justice and liberty for all.

That strength cannot be evoked without a strong, free labor movement. The labor movement is the indispensable force for progress at home—progress that must be made to keep bright the democratic ideal. The labor movement is an unwavering ally of the nation's defense and foreign aid objectives. The labor movement is a stalwart guide and exemplar to free trade unions overseas, whose creation and growth is essential to the establishment of stable, free societies in new and developing nations.

Those who strike at the labor movement, therefore, strike at the very roots of American liberty and the hopes of democracy throughout the world.

For our part, we in the labor movement must fulfill without stint the heavy obligations we bear. We must be conscious as never before of our grave responsibilities to our members, our country and the cause of freedom. We cannot afford the luxury of divisive quarrels; the times demand the best that is in us all. We must be united in carrying forward our common purpose.

These, then, are the tasks that confront the fourth constitutional convention of the American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations:

To shape a program for the perfection of American society and the full utilization of its human and material resources; to evolve, with that end in view, a campaign to expand the labor movement and confound its enemies; to strengthen our country and the free world against the Communist peril, and as a basic prerequisite for all these goals, to reaffirm and enhance the solidarity of our movement.

These are challenging tasks, but with the full support, determination and good will of all our affiliated unions, they can be fulfilled.

Court Returns 'Runaway' Case to Board

The U.S. Court of Appeals for the 3rd Circuit has remanded a "runaway plant" case to the National Labor Relations Board with an order for more information.

The three-judge court directed the NLRB to determine if the M. Yoseph Bag Co., Bridgeton, N. J., went out of business the same day it laid off all employes—July 19, 1957—or whether it waited a month. Also, what importance the NLRB attaches specifically to the fact that the company sold its feed bag-reconditioning business to a rival firm which had one David Yoseph as an officer and stockholder.

The NLRB, which sought an enforcement order, had found the company guilty of refusing to bargain with Dist. 65, Retail, Wholesale & Department Store Union, of closing its plant and firing its 16 employes.

"It is obvious," the court said, "that an employer cannot absolve himself of unfair labor practices simply by going out of business some time after he has engaged in those practices."

It said the board was justified in finding that the company committed unfair practices when it threatened and questioned employes.

However, whether the company committed an unfair practice by closing the plant and discharging its employes is a question that cannot be answered until the NLRB pinpoints the exact date, the judges wrote.

Plumbers, Pipe Fitters Eligible:

NLRB Vote Set at Construction Sites

The National Labor Relations Board has ordered a representation election sought by the Plumbers & Pipe Fitters at a major non-union construction firm, shaping its order to direct single-unit voting by some 600 workers at 68 job sites scattered across six southeastern states.

In a four-member decision involving workers at the Daniel Construction Co. of Greenville, S. C., the board ruled unanimously that company labor policies and the "peculiarly intermittent" nature of the construction industry justified voting eligibility for these workers:

- All plumbers who in the year before the NLRB order on Sept. 21 had worked as much as 30 days for Daniel.
- All who had worked for Daniel at some time during that period and had a total of 45 days of employment across two years.

The company had asked the NLRB to limit voting eligibility to workers "employed on a constant and continual basis" for six months preceding an election order.

The union sought eligibility for any plumber or pipe fitter whose name was on the Daniel payroll at any time from Jan. 1, 1960.

The board gave heavy emphasis to frequent layoffs in the construction industry and the Daniel company's "centralized control of labor relations" in framing its decision on an appropriate bargaining unit.

The company has a "nucleus of pipe fitters and plumbers hired at all times" for industrial and commercial construction projects of varying size and duration, the board found.

Conditions are Similar

It hires plumbers at the sites and lays them off after completion of a project, but "preference" is given former employes and some may move from one project to another. Throughout the company's region, "working conditions, skills and nature of employment are very similar," and "overall personnel policies are set forth" by the firm's Greenville main office, the ruling said.

The "peculiarly intermittent" nature of construction work, the board said, was recognized by Congress in allowing a union-shop contract clause after seven days, instead of the 30 days applied in other industries, and in allowing prehire contracts.

The Daniel company had a "temporary restriction" in employment of plumbers early this year, the board said, but a worker's layoff "in no way detracts from continuing interest in working conditions."

The board ruled that short layoffs this year do not deprive workers of a "continuing interest in their working conditions which would warrant their participation" in an election on a bargaining agent. Workers with 45 days of work for Daniel in two years "have a sufficient continuing interest" to warrant election eligibility, it added.

The Daniel Construction Co. operates in Florida, Georgia, South Carolina, North Carolina, Alabama and Tennessee. Wage rates "may vary from one project to another," the board said.

ONE HUNDRED BOOKS of transportation tickets, worth $300 and good anywhere on Toronto's subway, trolley and bus system, were presented to striking members of the Hotel & Restaurant Employes as they picketed the Royal York Hotel by Financial Sec. Robertson, Rail Union Leader, Dies

Cleveland—David B. Robertson, president-emeritus of the Locomotive Firemen & Enginemen, died here Sept. 27 at the age of 85.

"Davy" Robertson served as president of the union from 1922 until his retirement in 1953 and steered the Locomotive Firemen through the major changeover from steam to diesel locomotives.

He headed the rail labor committee which led the successful campaign for enactment of the Railway Labor Act in 1926 and served as first chairman of the Railway Labor Executives' Association.

Robertson, who began as a steel worker in Youngstown, O., at the age of 14, went to work on the Pennsylvania Railroad in 1895, transferring to the Erie Railroad several years later. He joined the BLF&E in 1899 and was elected president of his local lodge a year later. In 1905 he was elected general chairman of the brotherhood's grievance committee on the Erie and in 1913 became a vice president of the union.

He is survived by his wife, Edna, a son and a daughter.

North Carolina Labor Votes Political Fund

Asheville, N. C.—The North Carolina State AFL-CIO is building a political action and education fund to back up its drive for state legislative goals.

Delegates to the annual convention here unanimously adopted a resolution calling on all affiliates to contribute $1 per member to the fund before next March. State Pres. W. M. Barbee said the organization hoped to obtain voluntary contributions from all of its 34,000 members.

He said the State AFL-CIO's legislative objectives include:

- An improved workmen's compensation law.
- Improved unemployment insurance, including erasure of detrimental amendments enacted this year.
- Repeal of the state "right-to-work" law.
- Repeal of recently enacted legislation outlawing unions among public employes.
- A more equitable tax structure.

The state federation which also endorsed the complete legislative program of the AFL-CIO, became the fourth in the South to set up a special fund to finance expanded political and legislative activities.

Louisiana created such a program several years ago, and the Alabama and Mississippi federations this year levied special assessments for that purpose. The Tennessee State AFL-CIO will consider a similar program at its convention in October.

Barbee was re-elected president of the state body over J. Floyd Henderson of Charlotte, by a vote of 248 to 119. Sec.-Treas. J. W. Holder was unopposed for a new term.

Among the visiting speakers were Stanton Smith, AFL-CIO coordinator of state and city central bodies; R. J. Thomas, assistant to AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, and Pres. Victor Bussie of the Louisiana State Labor Council.

Former Business Advisory Unit Confers with Kennedy, Hodges

Administration leaders and top-ranking members of the Commerce Dept.'s former Business Advisory Council have met for the first time since last July, when the former council broke its 27-year-old tie with the government.

At that time the council—once described as "America's most powerful private club"—dropped its government affiliation and gave up its offices in the Commerce Dept. rather than agree to major reforms demanded by Commerce Sec. Luther H. Hodges.

Hodges had insisted that the council, which had traditionally met behind closed doors, admit the press to any session addressed by a government official, make minutes of its proceedings available to the government and broaden its membership to give greater representation to small business.

Emergence of a new relationship of "arms-length cooperation" between the business community and the Kennedy Administration was revealed when Roger Blough, board chairman of U.S. Steel and head of the council, brought a delegation of some 50 council members to the White House for a meeting with Pres. Kennedy.

The visit followed a session of the BAC which was addressed by three government officials—Under Sec. of Labor W. Willard Wirtz; McGeorge Bundy, special assistant to the President for national security affairs, and Arthur Dean, U.S. chief negotiator at the nuclear test ban talks.

Although the sessions were closed to the press, the Labor Dept. furnished newsmen an advance text of the speech by Wirtz and a transcript of Bundy's address to a dinner session of the council was made available by the White House. Only Dean's remarks, described as "off-the-cuff," were not transcribed or made public.

Wirtz told the group that former rivalry between the Labor and Commerce Depts., with each representing "some special set of interests," has been replaced in the Kennedy Administration by "an almost complete harmony of working relationships." He said the nation's world responsibilities "demand the submergence of special interests and gives priority to the national purpose."

White House sources said the meeting with the President, also attended by Hodges, was "very cordial," with Kennedy emphasizing the interdependence of business and government.

The Commerce Dept. said it has not requested any advice from the Business Council since its disaffiliation, although the council has been asked to continue a study of maritime problems begun before the schism. The department has not set up a previously indicated new advisory council with official status—an action which had been anticipated after the July split.

CORRECTION

The American Bakery & Confectionery Workers' new contract with the National Biscuit Co. does not cover employes of the company's Fair Lawn, N. J., plant, as was erroneously reported in the Sept. 23 issue of the AFL-CIO News.

Although Fair Lawn workers voted 719 to 572 for ABC representation in a recent National Labor Relations Board election, the results have not yet been officially certified. Observers from Fair Lawn were present during negotiations, but the union was unable to bargain for the plant pending certification.

Lawyers Win Case on Union Welfare Adviser

St. Louis—An AFL-CIO union counselor who represented injured and unemployed union members without fee before state agencies has been held guilty of contempt by the Missouri Supreme Court.

Edward M. Tod, a vice president of the St. Louis Labor Council, was accused by the state bar association of unauthorized practice of law in helping members of several unions process claims before the state Employment Security & Unemployment Compensation divisions.

The Supreme Court, upholding the charge, went beyond the $50 penalty recommended by a hearing officer and ordered Tod to pay a $250 fine or spend 30 days in the county jail.

The Missouri State AFL-CIO earlier had called on all unions and central bodies to join in fighting the attack by lawyers on the type of claims work Tod had done.

Tod was president of the former St. Louis Industrial Union Council until 1957, when he became vice president of the AFL-CIO Labor Council. One of two labor liaison men with the United Fund of St. Louis, he has been serving also as a union counselor through a Union Referral Center whose expenses have been defrayed by a number of unions.

The Labor Council executive board promptly scheduled a meeting on the effects of the court ruling on union programs. The state AFL-CIO probably will consider the ruling at its next meeting, officials said.

All Missouri unions had been urged to help finance the cost of defending Tod, which State AFL-CIO Pres. John I. Rollings had put at $15,000 or more for legal fees. When the appeal went out in January, Rollings summed up the issue in this way:

"It is quite evident that the promise of a workmen's compensation system and the unemployment compensation law, intended to produce simple justice without litigation and without delays, is far from fulfillment; and that the bar association in this state, and perhaps others, is intent on compelling the unfortunate unemployed and injured workers to pay legal fees when legal talent is not necessary."

Canadian Non-Ops To Weigh Demands

Montreal, Que.—The conference committee representing 110,000 non-operating railroad workers in Canada will meet here Nov. 1 to consider demands to be sought in the forthcoming new contracts.

Frank Hall, chairman of the 15-man negotiating committee and Canadian vice president of the Railway Clerks, said the conference committee was called to meet "to see what the members are thinking." The current contract was signed last May but because of retroactivity will expire next Dec. 1.

Congress Adjourns After Busy Session

Retirees' Magazine Backs Health Plan for Elderly

A national magazine devoted to the problems of retirement has taken its first editorial stand on a national issue—an endorsement of health protection for the aged as part of the social security system.

Fifty-Plus, a monthly that describes itself as the Magazine for Successful Retirement, offered in its September issue pro and con articles on the Anderson-King bill by AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany and American Medical Association Pres. Leonard W. Larson.

The same issue carried a signed editorial by Ray Henry, editor of the magazine, asserting that the social security plan "not only . . . is necessary, it's inevitable."

It's necessary, Henry said, because "it will cover one of the important areas of insecurity in retirement life and it will guarantee at least a minimum of health care for most of today's older people."

It's inevitable, he added, because the United States is "the only major country in the world without a government medical care program for its retired. The trend is obvious, and it's obvious what free people favor throughout the world."

Federal Desegregation Law Urged for Schools

The U.S. Civil Rights Commission has unanimously recommended federal legislation to implement the Supreme Court's school desegregation decision.

Describing progress in integrating public schools as "slow indeed," the commission said Congress should require every segregated school district to file, within six months, a plan for at least gradual desegregation.

The commission said that only 775 of the South's 2,837 school districts had taken even token steps towards desegregation seven years after the Supreme Court decision. Some of these plans, the commission noted, have been devised to keep "at a minimum the number of Negroes in attendance at formerly white schools."

Although the commission chairman, Pres. John A. Hannah of the University of Michigan is a Republican, the recommendation parallels a plank in the 1960 Democratic Party platform.

The commission also proposed that federal grants-in-aid to states for public educational programs be reduced up to 50 percent for states whose schools are not integrated. This was the only one of 12 recommendations which was not unanimous. One member of the six-man commission, Duke University Prof. Robert S. Rankin, called the proposal "punitive." He added:

"I do not believe that school children should be made to suffer for the errors of their elders."

In its 185-page report—the second of a scheduled five-volume report to the President and Congress—the commission emphasized that school segregation is a national as well as a southern problem.

It charged that "gerrymandering" of school districts in northern states has resulted in schools attended by students of only one race.

The commission described a federal court order requiring the New Rochelle, N. Y., school board to eliminate segregation resulting from residence restrictions as "probably the most significant single event affecting equal protection of the law in public education since the Supreme Court's decision in the Little Rock case in 1958."

The commission also recommended legislation providing federal financial and technical assistance to school systems undertaking desegregation and a speedup of federal court procedure in school cases. It also asked establishment of desegregated schools on military bases where off-base schools are segregated.

Other proposals included direct federal protection against harassment of parents, children and school board members by persons opposed to desegregation and withholding of federal aid to public colleges which discriminate.

The commission asked a law authorizing loans for school districts whose state funds have been cut off as a result of desegregation and proposed that the Civil Rights Commission be authorized to set up an advisory and conciliation service for local communities facing desegregation problems.

Handicapped Worker Rule Change in View

Amendment of regulations governing the employment of handicapped workers by sheltered workshops under the Fair Labor Standards Act has been proposed by Wage-Hour Administrator Clarence T. Lundquist.

The revision, he said, was designed to obtain "more effective administration" of the regulations in view of the increasing number of sheltered workshops. Among the major changes proposed is the more effective determination of the proper special wage rates. Comments on the changes may be filed with Lundquist until Oct. 8.

Administration Prodding Seen As Key Factor in Legislative Record

A major factor cited was the strong affirmative leadership exerted by Kennedy, the White House staff and many Cabinet members. The contrast was particularly striking following a more passive period under former Pres. Eisenhower.

These are some of the major accomplishments of the longest session since 1951:

Minimum Wage: Coverage was extended to 3.6 million additional workers—the first expansion of jurisdiction in the 25-year history of the wage-hour law. The minimum wage was raised from $1 to $1.25 in automatic step-ups. Although short of labor's and the Administration's target, the bill was hailed by AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany as "a long step forward."

Depressed Areas Aid: Two months and 10 days after Kennedy took office, he signed an area redevelopment bill authorizing federal funds to help communities stricken by persistent, heavy unemployment and to finance retraining programs for jobless workers. Twice, in 1958 and 1960, almost identical bills had been vetoed by then-Pres. Eisenhower.

Temporary Jobless Compensation: Hundreds of thousands of jobless workers who had exhausted unemployment benefits had their payments extended up to 13 weeks through an Administration bill passed in March. Within two weeks every state had signed up for the program as compared with only 15 states which participated in the 1958 recession measure.

The big difference: In 1958, states were required to repay the cost of the added benefits to the federal government; the Kennedy TUC program was financed by a temporary federal payroll tax increase on all employers, regardless of whether their state participated in the program.

Aid to Dependent Children: Congress adopted an Administration proposal authorizing states to use federal matching grants for aid to children of unemployed parents.

Housing & Urban Renewal: In a major Administration victory and a powerful stimulant to the nation's economy, Congress authorized a $4.9 billion omnibus bill, including new programs to aid middle-income families through 35-year FHA mortgages, low-cost, long-term loans to non-profit organizations and public agencies, assistance to communities for mass transportation systems and encouragement of housing for the elderly. With southern moderates leading the fight for the Administration bill, the conservative coalition's efforts to make sharp cuts were beaten in both houses.

Social Security: Benefits were raised for some 4.4 million persons as Congress increased the minimum social security pension, raised payments to widows and permitted men to retire at age 62 on reduced benefits.

Water Pollution: Existing programs of federal aid for construction of sewage disposal plants were roughly doubled and federal jurisdiction was expanded to include all navigable as well as interstate waterways. Pres. Eisenhower had vetoed a similar bill last year and had described contamination of the nation's water supply as "a uniquely local blight."

Community Health Facilities: Existing programs of federal grants for community health facilities, including construction of non-profit nursing homes, were expanded and a new program of federal aid for non-hospital health services for the aged and chronically ill was authorized. Sec. of Health, Education & Welfare Abraham Ribicoff described passage of this labor-backed bill as "one of the most important advances in the history of federal health legislation."

Disarmament Agency: The U.S. Arms Control & Disarmament Agency was established at Kennedy's request to emphasize "the high priority" the Administration places on efforts to transform the arms race into what the President has called a "peace race."

Peace Corps: Translating a Kennedy campaign pledge into action, Congress established a Peace Corps as a permanent agency.

OECD Treaty: The Senate ratified U.S. participation with Canada and 18 European nations in the Organization for Economic Cooperation & Development. In a statement urging ratification, Meany had described the OECD as "an economic counterpart of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization."

Foreign Aid: With House conservatives holding the whip hand, the foreign aid appropriations bill carried only $3.88 billion in new funds, some $370 million less than Congress had previously authorized to be spent and nearly $1 billion short of the Administration's request.

The bill did, however, appropriate $1.1 billion for long-term loans to underdeveloped nations, nearly double the 1960 appropriation in this area. Earlier in the session, Congress gave a boost to Kennedy's "alliance for progress" program by appropriating $500 million for the Inter-American Social & Economic Cooperation Program and $100 million for Chilean relief and reconstruction.

Civil Rights Commission: The commission's life was extended two years.

NLRB Ban Outlaws All 'Hot Cargo' Pacts

The National Labor Relations Board has ruled that the signing of a contract containing a "hot cargo" clause violates the Taft-Hartley Act even if there is no attempt to enforce it.

It was the first such decision by the board since the Landrum-Griffin amendments were written into the act in 1959 to tighten secondary boycott bans and outlaw "hot cargo" clauses.

The five-member board unanimously reversed the recommendation of a trial examiner that the case be dismissed on the ground that because there had been no attempt to enforce the clause, no violation of law was involved.

The NLRB found:

"The Legislative history rather clearly shows that the Congress was intent upon banning the entry into such contracts, thereby freeing the employer from such pressures and coercion as a union might exert to obtain contractual assent to prospective secondary boycotts."

At issue was a provision of a contract between the unaffiliated Teamsters Local 210 in New York and the American Feed Co., that workers would not be required to handle goods coming from or going to a struck shop.

The NLRB decision sets aside the clause and directs the union and the company not to agree to any contract, express or implied, "whereby American Feed Co. agrees not to handle or perform services on goods, products or materials from or going to the premises of any other employer or person."

Next Session Faces Full Agenda in January

When Congress reconvenes on Jan. 10 it will face an agenda of unfinished business including these labor and Administration-supported major bills:

Health Care for the Aged under Social Security: The House Ways & Means Committee has held hearings on the Anderson-King bill but put off action until 1962. Pres. Kennedy has said the bill will carry the Administration's "highest priority."

Manpower Retraining: The House Rules Committee put off action on a Senate-passed bill setting up a four-year program for retraining jobless workers. Pending in both houses are committee-approved bills for a Youth Conservation Corps and training of jobless youngsters.

Aid to Education: A Senate-passed bill providing large-scale federal aid to schools is blocked by the House Rules Committee. Controversy over church-state relationships has allowed conservatives to use Rules Committee procedures to delay action. A renewed effort is expected to break the impasse.

Unemployment Compensation Standards: Administration proposals to set minimum standards of duration and amount for state jobless benefits are awaiting action in House Ways & Means Committee.

Public Works: A labor-backed bill sponsored by Sen. Joseph S. Clark (D-Pa.) to provide federal funds to step up local public works projects during recessions has been promised the President's backing if unemployment persists at the present nearly 7 percent rate.

Jobsite Picketing: A House Labor subcommittee held hearings on removal of restrictions on the right to picket construction sites but took no action except to report two bills without recommendations. The AFL-CIO and the Administration urged passage.

Migrant Workers: Five Senate-passed bills to protect migrant farm workers against exploitation, curb child labor on farms and help educate children of migrants are awaiting Senate action. Administration-supported efforts to make major reforms in Mexican farm labor program this year were blocked when Senate conferees agreed to delete a minimum wage provision from a bill extending the program for two years.

Welfare and Pension Disclosure: Committee-approved bills tightening reporting requirements for unions and employers and giving stronger enforcement powers to the Secretary of Labor are awaiting action in both houses. The AFL-CIO and the Administration supported even stronger measures.

Civil Rights: The Kennedy Administration which has used executive authority to expand equal rights may seek additional legislation carrying out recommendations on voting and school desegregation made by the Civil Rights Commission. The AFL-CIO has urged enactment of a fair employment practices law.

Tax Reform: The House Ways & Means Committee held hearings on the Administration tax plan but put off action until 1962. The Kennedy package includes labor-supported proposals to plug tax loopholes, along with new incentives for business which the AFL-CIO has opposed. The AFL-CIO has also asked for a flexible tax-reduction authority for the President as an anti-recession weapon.

Aid to Medical Education: The Senate has held hearings on an Administration-backed measure providing federal funds for construction of medical school facilities and scholarships for medical students.

Labor Score Card on 87th Congress

Herewith is a report of action by Congress and the Administration on major issues listed on Jan. 5, 1961 by the AFL-CIO Executive Council as making up an important 20-point program.

ISSUE	AFL-CIO POSITION	STATUS
MINIMUM WAGE: Millions of workers many of them heads of families, require better minimum wage and maximum hour protection through Fair Labor Standards Act.	Council called for action "in 1961 . . . in order to bring a measure of economic justice to workers and to add to the purchasing power on which economic recovery depends."	Congress and President approved law raising minimum, extending coverage to 3.6 million more workers.
HOUSING AND URBAN RENEWAL: Urban blight, slum housing, shortage of moderate and middle-income housing require massive federal program to plan and build for the future.	Council asked action "to meet one of America's sorest problems and to help put America back to work." Also called for a new Dept. of Urban Affairs in the government.	Congress passed housing bill dramatically expanding federal housing programs, providing new programs for moderate income families, open space, mass transportation. Urban Affairs Dept. proposal passed Senate.
AID TO DEPRESSED AREAS: Federal aid needed for many urban and rural areas throughout the country which suffer from persistent, high unemployment.	Executive Council called for a "bold program of loans and grants for vocational retraining, essential public works, plant construction and technical assistance to encourage establishment of new plants . . ."	President signed law establishing Area Redevelopment Administration, providing program to encourage industry, create jobs in depressed areas.
AID TO EDUCATION: Needs of children, increasing technology, and poverty of local school districts demand federal aid to overcome classroom shortage, hire and keep good teachers.	Council called for federal aid for school construction to "improve our educational plan and also help provide jobs for thousands." Also asked aid for teachers' salaries.	Efforts to provide aid for school construction, teachers' salaries, colleges, and education needed for national defense were blocked. Impacted areas, National Defense Education Act were extended.
HEALTH BENEFITS FOR AGED: Increased medical care costs, greater need of the aged for health care, make passage of Anderson-King bill proposed by Pres. Kennedy an urgent necessity. Through social security, hospitalization, nursing home and home nursing care would be provided.	Council said "Congress should proceed at once to pass this sound and humane system for meeting one of the prime needs of our senior citizens."	Hearings have been concluded by the House Ways & Means Committee; further action posponed until next year, with Administration seeking approval.
UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE: Hodgepodge of inadequate state laws requires federal standards to provide minimum benefits and duration of payments. Emergency action required to meet problems of recession-born unemployment.	Council asked "immediate action . . . to restore unemployment payments to those whose rights have been exhausted, to extend the duration of payments to those now receiving them and to set a realistic floor under their amount."	President's proposals, introduced by Sen. McCarthy and Rep. King, would set a floor of one-half of a worker's average weekly wage up to an eventual maximum of two-thirds of the state's average, and extend duration under certain conditions. Congress earlier passed emergency bill, has taken no action on permanent standards.
TAX REVISION FOR ECONOMIC GROWTH: Unfair advantage for special groups, reduced federal revenue caused by tax loopholes. Tax system too inflexible to be used efficiently as an economic tool.	"The federal tax system should be flexible enough to aid in spurring economic recovery and encouraging economic growth," said the council in urging Congress to give the President the power temporarily to reduce taxes. Council also asked for closing of tax loopholes.	House hearings concluded on President's request to close tax loopholes and on labor-opposed investment tax credit.
PUBLIC WORKS: Federal assistance for local public works which states and communities cannot afford would provide necessary facilities, provide employment.	Council said "federal programs for the construction of hospitals, roads and airports . . . should be expanded by more generous appropriations, both to provide more employment and to help reduce our chronic shortage of these facilities."	Senate concluded hearings on Clark bill, which President opposed, but which he has promised to look at again next year. President signed bills assuring continued highway, airport construction programs.
FEDERAL RESERVE POLICY: Federal Reserve Board, with vast powers to control and stimulate the economy, has failed to act to cut interest rates, promote economic recovery, create jobs.	"Our monetary policies should be designed to influence our industrial technological progress consistent with our economic growth." Board membership should "insure competent representation of all basic functional economic groups . . ."	No action on AFL-CIO proposal to insure representation of various economic groups on FRB. Board policies not basically a legislative problem.
MIGRANT WORKERS: Low wages, shanty housing, lack of education and medical care plague our migrant workers. Mexican farm labor program deprives them of jobs.	The problems of migratory labor "must be vigorously dealt with on all fronts—wages, housing, education, social security and public health." The importation of Mexican farm workers "should be discontinued as quickly as possible."	Five bills passed Senate to provide education, health, child labor, crew leader protections. Bill continuing Mexican farm labor program passed without major reforms.
COMPREHENSIVE LABOR LEGISLATION: Rights to organize, bargain collectively are severely restricted by Taft-Hartley, Landrum-Griffin Acts, thus depriving millions of unorganized workers of union benefits.	Council asserted that "both the Taft-Hartley and Landrum-Griffin Acts contain provisions which harshly and unfairly limite the freedom of workers to organize and bargain collectively."	No action in either House.
SITUS PICKETING: Basic right to strike is denied workers on multi-employer job sites.	"Simple justice demands early action on legislation to remove restrictions on right to picket construction sites," council said.	House Labor subcommittee held hearings, reported two bills without recommendation to the full committee. No further action taken.
ATOMIC ENERGY: Great Britain and the Soviet Union have made progress in turning atomic energy into electricity while the U.S. has lagged. Protection of workers from atomic hazards is inadequate.	Council asked expanded federal program to develop peaceful uses of atomic energy, and "an effective comprehensive federal program to control atomic radiation," provide federal workmen's compensation for atomic workers.	House rejected Senate proposal to provide facilities for generating electricity at Hanford, Wash., plutonium reactor.
NATURAL RESOURCES DEVELOPMENT: Great increases in population, waste of natural resources, require intelligent conservation and development of land, water, forests, minerals and recreational areas.	The council noted that "a bold program of land and water development on a river basin approach is urgent. An adequate program of water pollution control cannot wait any longer."	Saline water conversion and water pollution control bills passed by Congress. Senate held hearings on bill to encourage river basin development policy.
CIVIL RIGHTS: The rights of all Americans, which have not been realized under state law and law enforcement, require stronger federal powers and federal action.	Council called for increased federal powers to assure civil rights for all Americans, to guarantee equal employment opportunities and to eliminate voting restrictions.	Civil Rights Commission extended; President has utilized executive powers to extend civil rights protection.
IMMIGRATION AND REFUGE REFORM: Antiquated laws governing immigration discriminate against people of certain nations. The number of immigrants is kept unnecessarily low.	Council asked that the existing system be revamped to remove discriminatory features, to increase the quota to 250,000 annually, and provide for admission of refugees.	Modest bills passed authorizing aid for refugee resettlement. No action on major needs.
INTERNATIONAL SECURITY AND DEVELOPMENT: Needs of new nations and the defense of freedom, and competition for their support by the Soviet Union, require our increasing attention.	"In the newly emerging nations of the world, economic and technical assistance from democratic nations can make the difference between freedom and tyranny for the people," said the council.	Congress approved presidential request for long-term planning authority, but rejected long-term financing through treasury borrowing.
FEDERAL EMPLOYES: The formal right of collective bargaining does not exist for federal employes.	Council called for legislation giving "statutory certification to bona fide trade unions of federal employes."	Cabinet level committee established by Pres. Kennedy now working on recognition and collective bargaining proposals.
FARM LEGISLATION: Farm income has fallen, the family farmer has been driven off the farm by economic trends, government policy.	"We favor the enactment of legislation which will wherever possible base price support on production payments aimed at support of the family farm and lower prices to consumers."	Congress passed legislation designed to cut wheat and feed grain surpluses, develop new farm programs.
NATIONAL DEFENSE: International tension intensified by Berlin crisis requires greater defense effort.	We need "a defense establishment equipped to cope with small crises as well as large ones; with limited as well as total war."	Congress approved largest defense spending bill in nation's peacetime history.

87th Congress, First Session

DESPITE THE DEMEANING squabble of the last few weeks of the congressional session over foreign aid funds—a dispute that resulted in the cutting of almost $1 billion from Pres. Kennedy's request—the first session of the 87th Congress was one of the most productive since the mid-1930's.

The score card on Congress published in this issue of the AFL-CIO News indicates the number of long-pending social and economic measures that were enacted in the nine-month session. The score card reveals also the scope of unfinished business facing the second session in January.

With strong White House leadership, Congress moved quickly on programs and proposals that had been frustrated in the closing years of the Eisenhower Administrations and placed on the statute books laws aiding depressed areas and improving and extending the wage-hour law. It enacted a comprehensive housing law, temporary extension of unemployment compensation, improvements in social security benefits and a number of other measures designed to strengthen the nation economically and socially.

Funds to improve the nation's military posture and its space programs were voted and important elements of Pres. Kennedy's foreign program were approved—a permanent Peace Corps, a new disarmament agency and authority for the President to make long-range commitments for economic development loans, although the long-range financing to operate such programs was denied.

The Republican-Southern Democratic coalition in the House, negated to some extent in the early months of the session, displayed its full strength in the closing days. It frustrated attempts to pass federal aid to education legislation and delayed a worker retraining program. Consideration of medical care for the aged and tax reform programs was postponed until next year.

The key to the second session of the 87th Congress is the role of the coalition. With continuing strong presidential leadership and a rallying of public opinion on education, health care, retraining and other issues, the coalition can be overcome. This is the job for 1962.

Kennedy at the UN

PRES. KENNEDY's SPEECH at the United Nations turned the bright, uncompromising light of truth and candor on the murky areas of world crisis, penetrating the poisonous Soviet smog and the confusing equivocations of the so-called non-aligned nations.

In eloquent but simple language the President spelled out the United States' position on disarmament, the United Nations, underdeveloped nations, outer space, Berlin and a UN peace force.

His brilliant analysis of the Soviet policy of terror, which has been evident in the Communist decision to renew atmospheric nuclear testing and the walling off of East Berlin, provides a guide for all free men:

"Terror is not a new weapon. Throughout history it has been used by those who could not prevail either by persuasion or example. But inevitably they fail, either because men are not afraid to die for a life worth living, or because the terrorists themselves came to realize that free men cannot be frightened by threats and that aggression would meet its own response.

"And it is in the light of that history that every nation today should know, be he friend or foe, that the United States has both the will and the weapons to join free men in standing up to their responsibilities."

'Maybe Next Year for the Rest'

Chairman Says:

NLRB Seeking to Take Profit Out of Unfair Labor Practices

The following is excerpted from an address by Frank W. McCulloch, chairman of the National Labor Relations Board to the annual convention of the Federal Bar Association in Washington, D. C.

By Frank W. McCulloch

IT IS READILY APPARENT that National Labor Relations Board members have their hands full. The problem of case load grows yearly more intense, Unfair labor practice cases reaching the board in 1956 averaged 19 per month. This past year the number more than doubled, 51 per month. The board's production of decisions has also increased sharply. But the backlog of undecided complaint cases rose this year to an all-time high.

One way to resolve our delay problem, of course, is to cut our caseload. There are two alternative techniques by which this may be achieved, the carrot and the stick.

The carrot technique, pre-trial settlement and negotiation, is appropriate when the violator of the statute acts innocently, in good faith, or in ignorance. Our general counsel has emphasized efforts by our regional directors to sit down with employers, unions and individuals and work out a settlement of cases where an investigation evidences merit to charges of unfair labor practices.

In the last four years the number of unfair labor practice cases disposed of by voluntary agreement of the parties has more than doubled. In fiscal year 1958, there were 987 such cases—in fiscal year 1961, there were 2,569.

This voluntary settlement is an important part of the picture of relieving the administrative and judicial processes of unnecessary litigation and giving them more time to do better the remaining part of the job.

Now the stick technique. Unfortunately, the carrot approach will not work with all those that violate our statute. Some employers, and some unions, repeatedly violate the terms of our statute with knowledge that they are doing so. The number of unfair labor practices, despite widespread publicity, grows rather than diminishes.

ONE REASON for this lies in the apparent ineffectiveness of our remedies in many cases. For example, when an employer discharges the leading union adherents in his plant at the outset of an organizing campaign, the customary board remedy is at long last to order their reinstatement with back pay. This remedy, many union officials claim, is too little and too late, and it constitutes no more than a "license fee for union busting." The employer willingly pays such fees if it assures him of an operation free from unionism.

Obviously, we need a bigger stick in this kind of situation. Rep. James Roosevelt commented during recent hearings that the remedy for repeated and willful violation of the statute is "to make the penalties for such unfair labor practices so doggone stiff that anybody who did it would think twice about it."

We at the labor board are now studying various ways of taking the profit out of unfair labor practices, whether committed by employers or unions. One suggested remedy for use when an employer destroys the majority status of a union by illegal techniques during an organization drive is to restore the prior situation as fully as possible and to saddle the employer with the union for a 12-month period during which he must recognize and bargain with it. Should the employer refuse to bargain "in good faith," it has been suggested that the board seek injunctive relief in the courts and request that the employer be required to demonstrate good faith by embodying existing conditions in a written document and, and additionally, to make reasonable counter-proposals to reasonable union demands.

The names of Norris and LaGuardia remind us that government by injunction in labor relations has long been abhorred by many. Yet before congressional committees and in direct appeals to the labor board, urgent requests have recently been made for more extensive board use of discretionary injunction procedures. We are giving these proposals the most serious study, despite their unpopular past, to see if we can thereby better effectuate the purposes of the act.

What will come of these and other suggestions remains to be seen; but the fact remains that more ingenious "remedies" must be considered if the administrative process is to be expedited.

My comments on expediting the administrative process by utilizing the techniques of delegation of greater authority to hearing examiners, more liberal use of pre-hearing procedures to narrow the issues to be tried, more utilization of "settlement" procedures and utilization of remedial orders commensurate to the occasion, have special relevance to the situation at the labor board.

Morgan Says:

Kennedy Turns UN into Forum For Debate at Highest Level

By Edward P. Morgan

(This column is excerpted from the nightly broadcasts of Edward P. Morgan, ABC commentator sponsored by the AFL-CIO. Listen to Morgan over the ABC network Monday through Friday at 7 p. m., EDT.)

IF WORDS CAN BE penetrating missiles, then President Kennedy should have won a battle in the cold war. His speech before the world's largest forum, the General Assembly of the United Nations, was loaded with the ammunition of importance, carefully tamped down with the tones of reasonableness. This is no time, he aptly said, for immoderate talk.

Morgan

Even the opposing camp paid him a compliment. "You were in good form today," Soviet Foreign Minister Gromyko said afterwards. And so he was. His first appearance before this quite disunited and indeed leaderless body was impressive, his rhetoric polished though maybe a little too shiny at times, his meaning clearer than most formal utterances manage to convey, his emphasis well and realistically measured.

To this viewer on the receiving end of his television image, the President seemed to be trying to communicate with at least three separate audiences at the same time.

He was trying to get through to Khrushchev and company the message that we are willing to recognize certain realities in middle Europe including the existence, wise or unwise, of a forcibly divided Germany but that the Communists must recognize we cannot yield our interests in or fail our commitments to the freedom of the people of West Berlin. In between are problems to talk about and possibly points to negotiate. But there is no need for war.

Also it appeared that Pres. Kennedy was especilly addressing the so-called neutrals with an appeal to reason. The double standard of moral judgments at the Belgrade conference provoked him. But the fact is that the ranks of the uncommitted and the unattached are becoming the most numerous at the UN, each with an Assembly vote equal to that of any great power. And so he took pains to avoid the classic—and careless—division of the globe into three parts, Communist, anti-Communist and neutral. His implication was that the latter had really far more interests in common with us than with the other side and that they ought to recognize this.

"In this hall," the President said, "there are not three forces, but only two. One is composed of those who are trying to build the kind of world described in Articles I and II of the (UN) Charter (a world of peace and self-determination). The other, seeking a different world, would undermine this organization in the process."

Finally, the President seemed to be trying to signal his allies in the western alliance with an awareness of the responsibilites of U.S leadership in that alliance, with an attitude of coolness and courage and common sense that would justify that leadership which by force of circumstance we have but did not seek and which would in turn impel if not inspire those allies to close ranks behind it.

THAT IS A LARGE ORDER and it is far too early to judge how well the President filled it. One of the most maddening aspects of the situation is that since to us our position—as the President stated it—seems so reasonable and the Communist position so outrageously unreasonable, we cannot understand why there is such hesitancy in the minds of the uncommitted to choose between the two. But that, paradoxically, is the way it is and we are going to have to make the most of it.

How do we set about making the most of it? One way, surely, is to utilize the forum of the UN more than we have for such literate recitations of candid concern as the President delivered. The UN is pooh-poohed as nothing more than a debating society but even with the secretary-general's chair starkly vacant it is much more than that—which is why the Communists are so determined to change it. There was somehow an added impact to what the President said because he said it from that rostrum.

There is a difference, however intangibly subtle, between deploring the destructive Soviet troika principle at a news conference and making the indictment in the presence of the accused.

There is a difference between warning of the treachery of Communist guerrilla strategy at a political rally in the Waldorf and reminding such interested parties as the Burmese and the Indians face to face that the desperately dangerous aggressions in Laos and South Viet Nam are no less real "because men are knifed in their homes and not shot on the field of battle."

Words are no substitute for policy and the strength and determination to support it but words, as Mr. Kennedy discovered during the presidential debates of 1960, can be convincing and clarifying agents. He may have discovered at the UN a forum from which he can effectively debate at the highest level.

Washington Reports:

Clark, Keating See Congress Setting Up Urban Affairs Dept.

A NEW CABINET POST, the Dept. of Housing & Urban Affairs, is vitally needed and should get enough support to be passed by Congress when it resumes in January, Sen. Joseph S. Clark (D-Pa.), sponsor of the Administration-backed bill for the department, and Sen. Kenneth B. Keating (R-N. Y.), who also submitted a bill for the post, declared on Washington Reports to the People, AFL-CIO public service educational program heard on 450 radio stations.

"I think fundamentally the need for this department arises from the fact that the urban population of our country is growing by leaps and bounds," Clark said.

"At the same time the agricultural population is shrinking rapidly. We have had a Dept. of Agriculture for over 100 years and do not have an agency in the federal government to coordinate and advance the many programs necessary to nurture the orderly growth of our urban areas."

Both senators made it clear that an urban area is not only the city, but the area surrounding the city. Clark noted that 70 percent of the U.S population now lives in urban areas. Keating added that "about 20 percent of our people live in the really big cities," and the people are moving from the cities to suburban areas.

To make this plain, Keating urged that the name of the proposed department be changed.

"The title, "Urban Affairs, seems to me rather cold and forbidding," he asserted. "A lot of people associate the word 'urban' with skyscrapers, speedways and massive shopping centers, but according to the Census Bureau the word means any community with a population of more than 2,500 people. I suggest the name Dept. of Community Affairs, or Dept. of Community Development. Then the people will realize the new department would be concerned with all the people and the communities in which they live."

THE VARIOUS AGENCIES that now have to do with housing would be under the new department, the senators said. The problems it would handle would be manifold: housing, including the FHA program, and public housing; pure water, transportation, community planning.

"A decent home for every American was the goal of the Taft-Ellender-Wagner Act of 1949," said Clark. "We are a long way from this goal, but in addition to a decent home for every American, we have got to have decent places for commerce and industry to carry on their wealth-producing activities.

"The department will also carry on research in urban problems just as the Dept. of Agriculture carries on agricultural research."

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

THE OVERRIDING FACT in the closing weeks of the congressional session was the stubbornness shown by House conservatives—a stubbornness pointing to trouble on bills next year unless the Administration can counter it.

The session just closed is rightly termed a productive one—unusual in the number of bills passed that Congress had rejected during the Eisenhower years. The minimum wage bill was a genuine breakthrough as it expanded protection of workers into the service industries.

Kennedy asserted an affirmative role in the legislative process without incurring the bitter animosity that sometimes is provoked by White House activity on bills.

In the Senate, major programs were approved on school aid, retraining of workers displaced by automation and long-range financing of foreign economic aid. These represented to some extent plowing of new ground.

The fact remains that not one of these programs passed the House. They were bottled up in the Rules Committee or beaten on the floor, and on the long-range financing issue the House pointblank refused any compromise.

House conservatives forced the watering down of other measures before even a bare-bones version of programs urged by the President and passed by the more liberal Senate was accepted.

"I'VE NEVER SEEN THEM MEANER," the New York Times reported a 10-year senator as saying. The normal courtesies lubricating relations between House and Senate disappeared as House opponents of Kennedy programs rejected compromises even in appropriations bills.

Conservative southern Democrats and Republicans used their positions of central power from committee chairmanships or long seniority to tie up bills or emasculate them.

On a money bill involving the District of Columbia, the House twice rejected a measure already agreed on in conference committee because it contained a $5 million item for district schools. The bill was dumped and the district left with a heavy deficit.

Rep. Otto Passman (D-La.) served notice a dozen times that he would not tolerate more than $3.9 billion in foreign aid—and refused final action even on that sum until he was sure no additional funds could be voted in some other appropriation measure. About $3.9 billion was the final figure.

In the last money measure, House conferees got Senate spokesmen to accept restrictions on long-range Treasury financing of programs already approved earlier in the session. The authorization for Treasury financing was killed in a conference committee legislative rider; the House passed the bill and adjourned, leaving a raging Senate the choice of swallowing the medicine or killing the whole bill, carrying $1 billion for many agencies.

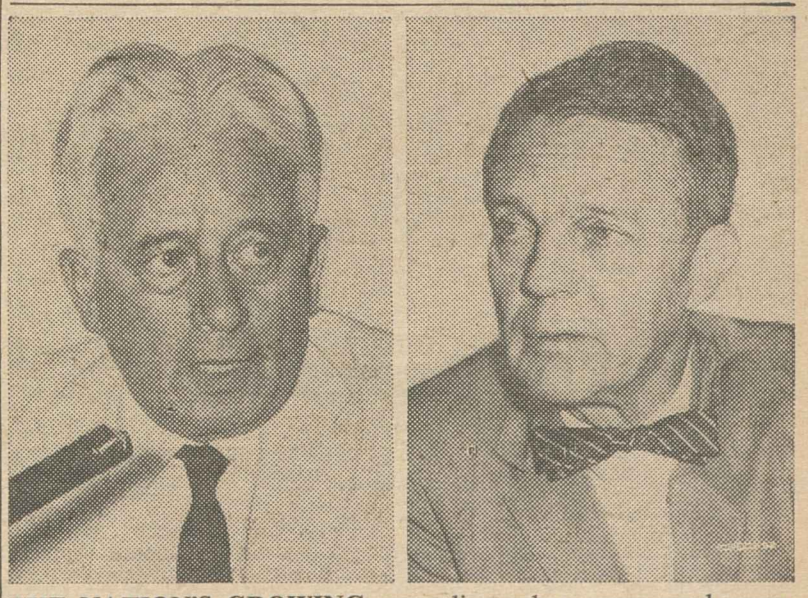
THE SENATE IN OTHER DAYS often was the principal chamber in which great issues were decided. Now the roles were reversed; Senate debate is still the more illuminating because the House is unwieldy in membership, but the House through committee action and effective organization of the conservative coalition forced the Senate to knuckle under on programs.

The GOP floor leader, Rep. Charles A. Halleck (Ind.), has rebuilt control of the solid Republican membership. He lost only six or eight votes on showdowns late in the session as contrasted to a loss of 30 or more in the earlier months.

The Administration failed to hold on later issues the substantial number of southern Democratic votes it attracted on the minimum wage bill. Its influence became weaker after the ailing Speaker Sam Rayburn left to rest in Bonham, Tex.

The curse of the liberals—absenteeism and less strict attention to business—played its part in Administration defeats.

A rebellious House, battling Kennedy programs in committee and on the floor and mulish in conference committees, can be a tough obstacle in the second session beginning in January.



THE NATION'S GROWING, sprawling urban areas need representation in the Cabinet and the means is the proposed Dept. of Housing & Urban Affairs, Sen. Joseph S. Clark (D-Pa.), right, and Sen. Kenneth B. Keating (R-N.Y.), declared on Washington Reports to the People, AFL-CIO public service radio program.

How to Buy:

Sales on Columbus Day Offer Cut Prices on Coats, Dresses

By Sidney Margolius

THE Columbus Day sales give you your first opportunity of the season to buy winter coats for the family at reduced prices.

This department considers two types of women's coats to be especially good value this year for their basic usefulness and relatively moderate prices.

One is the recently - introduced foam-backed coats. The other is Orlon and Dynel coats, better styled and more reasonable this year.

Foam - backed coats for women are widely available now in both long coats and toppers. This useful idea also is spreading into men's and children's garments and rainwear. Boys' and men's jackets, and even men's work clothing, are available with foam backing.

Generally women's foam-back coats are either wool jersey or acrylic fiber, such as Orlon or Acrilan, laminated to a foam backing. This backing makes a warm garment with less weight and bulk than winter coats and jackets usually have. The foam backing also helps resist sagging and loss of shape.

Women's casual coats and toppers of this type are available for as little as $25-$35. Dressy coats with foam backing are priced under $60 even with fur trim. Retailers are offering foam-backed women's walking suits. The long jacket also is wearable as a separate coat.

Children's foam-backed jackets are an especially useful idea for cold-weather school and play wear. These cost about $10, or a little more in the reversible type with knit cotton on one side and water-repellent cotton poplin on the other. In buying children's jackets or sports coats, whether foam-backed or not, you'll save work and protect your children against wet weather if you look for jackets treated with one of the new water and spot-resistant finishes such as Scotchgard or Syl-mer.

Another good idea for children is raincoats with detachable zip-out Orlon acrylic pile liners so they can be used in cold weather or as lightweight coats.

Men's jackets and surcoats in foam-backed fabrics (either knit or smooth surface) generally cost $15-$20. But the most interesting development is the new foam-backed work clothing for outdoor workers. These generally are cotton twill bonded to foam. These come in one-piece suits or separate pants and jacket (both foam-backed).

WOMEN'S DRESSES: You'll also find sales in October of women's fall dresses. Dark cottons have become increasingly popular for all-year wear, in designs or weaves like twills, checks or tweeds, usually associated with wools and other fibers. These are generally treated for crease resistance, since wrinkling is the traditional problem with cotton fabrics.

A recent test by the New York State (Cornell) Experiment Station found that dry cleaning proved most satisfactory in preventing shrinkage and stretching, and keeping the color and crease-resistance of dark cottons. The testers also found that hand washing is preferable to machine washing to minimize shrinkage, fading and loss of body, but that crease resistance seemed to be lost at about the same rate by both methods.

WATERED HAMS: Agriculture Sec. Orville L. Freeman merits the public's thanks for his recent withdrawal of the previous Administration's permission to packers to add water to smoked pork products. Freeman commented that opinions of consumers expressed at the hearings held by the department showed a general objection to added "moisture" (that's what food processors often call the water they add to meats, cheese and other foods).

Now the cue for us consumers is to make sure we do not buy watered hams and other smoked pork products. The Agriculture Dept.'s rule applies only to pork products packed under federal inspection. Those packed and sold within a state's borders may still have water, and often do, depending on how carefully your state and local authorities police adulteration of foods. The only way to be sure you are getting smoked ham and butts with no water added is to look for the federal inspection legend on the wrapper or can.

The Tories Are Loose!:

Democracy Called 'Worst Government'

CHICAGO—"Help Stamp Out Communism," urged a leaflet available in the lobby outside the meeting room where "We, The People!" held its 7th annual Constitution Day convention here.

"Styles (rubber stamps) below—Circle your choices—75 cents each, 3 for $2" was the plea to delegates to the parley of the ultra-conservative group which describes itself as a "national coalition of American patriots."

How " 'The Summit' leads to Disaster" and "Repeal the Income Tax" will help stamp out communism is unexplained, but these are just two of the 46 stamps you can purchase from a Lombard, Ill., firm.

The fair-sized crowd, which was supposed to represent hundreds of thousands of American conservatives, had a sprinkling of those in their middle years. Most of the delegates were either very old or very young. Not many came of age during the 1930s.

The Leadership Conference for the Liberty Amendment also was held at the Sheraton-Chicago Hotel. Delegates to this parley were invited to stay for the "We, The People!" convention. The Liberty Amendment group wants the government to "stay out of private business" and seeks repeal of the personal income tax.

Rep. John H. Rousselot (R-Calif.) spoke at both meetings. The New Frontier, he said, is a form of economic feudalism, state planning and regimentation. Pres. Kennedy, he commented, was trained in the home of Fabian socialism.

Robert Welch, founder of the John Birch Society, the main speaker for one of the "We, The People!" sessions, declared flatly that democracy is "the worst form of government there is."

Welch said one of the things "wrecking" the republic is the promotion power of "labor union bosses" to the extent that there is government "of and for one class." Other "republic-wreckers," according to Welch, are direct election of senators, unemployment insurance, the graduated income tax and what he called federal "control" of education, transportation and communication.

In introducing Welch, Dr. Charles Pavey of Columbus, O., ripped what he called the "left-wing, one-world" press as part of the "treasonous conspiracy trying to change the United States from a republic to a democracy." His "red-list" included the New York Times, the Washington Post, Time and Life.

From Soup to Nonsense:

One by One the Eternal Verities Turn into Transient Folk Tales

By Jane Goodsell

I THINK THERE'S A PLOT afoot to disprove everything we learned at our mothers' knees. Scientists, historians and researchers are up to their necks in experiments to prove that our firmest convictions are just a lot of nonsense.

Anybody who was ever a child knows that you have to eat spinach to grow up big and strong. It isn't something you learned. You absorbed it, and you never forget it the way you forget Latin declensions and the principal exports of South America.

It becomes part of your childhood, mixed up with riddles and spankings and licking the bowl of cake batter. And if you sometimes balked at eating your spinach, you never questioned its value.

So what happens? About the time you're ready to pass this information to your own children as the wisdom of the ages, you learn that it's been disproved. Some food expert, with enough credentials to prove that he ought to know what he's talking about, announces that spinach is not only a non-essential food but, quite possibly, detrimental to health.

Everybody knows, too, that elephants never forget. It's hard to find a child of 10 to whom you can relay that factual tidbit without having him answer, "Heck, I knew that a long time ago."

And everyone does know it—just as everyone knows This Little Pig Went to Market.

Well, the scientists have been working on that one, too. With gleeful shouts and you-wuz-robbed attitude, they announce that it isn't true and never was. Elephants have very poor memories.

TAKE CHRISTOPHER COLUMBUS. Everybody knows that Christopher Columbus discovered America. Not only that, they know when. If you haven't another date in your head except your own birthday, you know that "In fourteen-hundred-and-ninety-two, Columbus sailed the ocean blue."

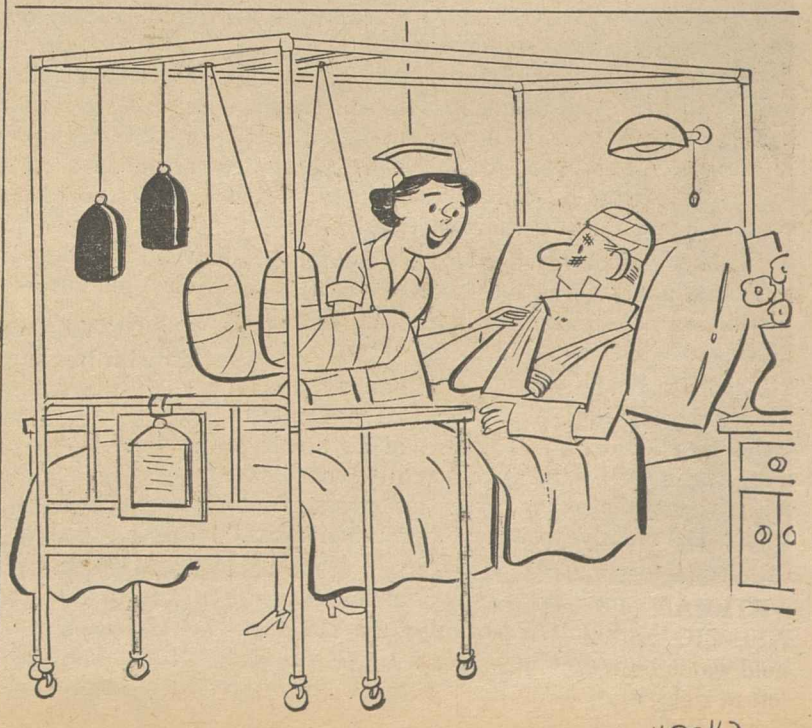
I hate to tell you this—in case you don't know it—but perhaps he didn't.

The Smithsonian Institution has got hold of a rock which leads them to suspect (don't ask me how) that a bunch of Norwegians may have landed on our shores several jumps ahead of Columbus.

Now, if it should turn out that De Soto didn't discover the Mississippi, it wouldn't upset me much. I can't always remember that he did.

But Columbus is altogether different. He discovered America in 1492! My mother told me, my father told me, my teachers told me. I know it as well as my own name. If I should be wakened out of a sound sleep and asked who discovered America, I'd know the answer.

There aren't many things I know that well. But one by one they're all being proved untrue.



Comfy?

'Gimmicks' Lure Chiselers:

Common-Sense Reasons Cited By Business in Locating Plants

Some American communities are still trying to lure "runaway" plants with false attractions—tax abatement, low wages and anti-labor laws—but most intelligent businessmen prefer common-sense, bread-and-butter reasons when they look for new plant locations.

That conclusion, and the reason for it, are presented in an article on "The Truth and Consequences of Industrial Plant Migration" in Economic Trends & Outlook, a feature of the American Federationist, AFL-CIO monthly magazine.

The article, prepared by the federation's Dept. of Research, summarizes business thinking in this observation:

Since businessmen are interested in producing and selling at a profit, their major concerns in locating plants are practical economic factors—customers, raw materials, skilled labor.

Citing several authorities, including a senator who has since become President—John F. Kennedy of Massachusetts—the article in the September issue of the Federationist pinpoints these conclusions:

● Growing industries are not usually attracted by gimmick lures such as so called "right-to-work" laws or tax-free plants. They look primarily for locations near their customers or raw materials, or for areas with trained manpower and good educational and research facilities.

● The few industries attracted by low wages, anti-labor laws and gimmicks are low-investment industries seeking unskilled labor. They can move easily from one low-wage area to another. They do not represent the prospect of sound community economic growth.

● The sound economic health of a community depends on growing, diversified industries. Such industries depend mainly on nearby customers to buy the things they produce, and for skilled labor, good schools, community facilities.

Pirating a Problem

In spite of the arguments against it, plant pirating is a problem, according to the article. The AFL-CIO Dept. of Research says:

"Many communities think they can solve their problems through special lures to pirate plants from other areas. Competition among communities, on the basis of such lures, is harmful to the nation.

"Low wages mean poor customers for shopkeepers. Tax-free plant structures mean a low tax base for the community's schools, roads, hospitals. A plant lured to a town by low wages and gimmicks may leave for another town with additional 'attractions.'"

Economic warfare between U.S. communities should not be tolerated, the article says, if the common goal of a rapidly growing economy is to be achieved.

Decent federal standards for social and economic progress in every state, and public understanding of the effects, could do much to keep cut-throat practices out of the competition of America's communities for expanding industries, it says.

'Ephemeral Aggrandizement'

The magazine recalls that eight years ago the then Sen. Kennedy described the aim of industrial migration for the Atlantic Monthly as "the expansion and prosperity of every section of the nation, not the ephemeral aggrandizement of one at the expense of another." The American Federationist article makes these additional points:

● The great growth of industry in the South and West—from 20 percent of the nation's manufacturing jobs in 1899 to 30 percent—has been given a strong push by the federal government—low-cost power in the Tennessee Valley region, military installations, federal contracts, RFC loans, soil conservation programs, tax amortization certificates.

● Effects of the Indiana "right-to-work" law of 1957 were tested in a survey by Forbes Marketing Research, Inc. Of 10 reasons given for building or expanding plants in that state, nearness to markets was given as first in importance. Labor skills were second.

Only seven of 100 companies listed R-T-W as a factor in their decisions, and only one cited the law as a primary attraction. That company had only 60 jobs.

● New York and Minnesota state surveys came up with similar findings. So did economic analyses reported in the Harvard Business Review and Dun's Review.

● The pace of the South's progress has slowed down slightly in recent years, and it is still far behind the nation in per capita income, educational standards, lower living standards. The relative slowdown suggests not enough spur exists despite the progress made.

Stop Exploiting People, Woods Industries Told

A blunt warning that the American forest products industry should stop exploiting people who work in the woods and barring the public from recreation on its land was sounded by a union president before a Forest Land Use Conference in Washington, D. C.

Pres. Paul L. Phillips of the Papermakers & Paperworkers praised scientific forest management for keeping supplies ahead of industrial demands for timber and for bringing a "considerable degree of permanence" to the paper industry.

Saying that the industry nevertheless had to be "dragged into forest conservation, kicking a little and screaming a lot, by pure unadulterated economics," Phillips told the conference:

"Although the exploitation of our forest resources is rapidly being eliminated, there is still one form of exploitation which has seen only a nominal improvement—the exploitation of people."

Many paper mills have done remarkable jobs, he said, in reducing the accident frequency rate in manufacturing but have done little to reduce accidents in the woods.

Some firms buy their wood through an "army of small contractors" to avoid responsibility for accidents and to "prevent any effective action to increase wage levels," he added.

"Companies and their forest management experts have an obligation to do a better job than they are doing for the people who work in the bush," he maintained.

Companies also have an obligation, he went on, to reverse the policy of buying up and sealing off large tracts of land and forests.

"Any company which has a large tract of land suitable for outdoor recreation purposes has an obligation to make it available if not to the public, at least to its employes," he said.

"I would strongly urge both the private owners of forest lands and those who make forest management their life's work to give serious consideration to the suggestion that a 'public be damned' attitude" will have a serious effect on company public relations, he added.

Other speakers at the conference sounded similar warnings. The chief speaker was Dean George A. Garratt of the Yale University School of Forestry.

GOP Scores in Michigan Voting

Lansing, Mich.—Republicans scored major victories in election of delegates to the state constitutional convention convening here Oct. 3. The results were interpreted as lessening chances of major reforms, including reapportionment of the rural-dominated legislature.

Convention delegates were elected from legislative districts and GOP candidates won seats in 21 districts which presently have Democratic legislators. This gives them a 99-45 majority in the constitutional convention.

FDA Hits 'Bootlegging' Of Repackaged Drugs

The Food & Drug Administration, continuing its crackdown on the sale of free physicians' samples of prescription drugs, has seized more than $500,000 worth of "bootleg" repackaged drugs in 11 states.

Both doctors and drug salesmen have been identified as sources of supply for the repackagers, selling free samples either for cash or in trade for merchandise. The repackaged drugs are then peddled at a discount to retail druggists who dispense them over the counter.

Food & Drug Commissioner George P. Larrick said the repackaging operations—often carried out carelessly by inexperienced workers, according to the FDA—have resulted in:

● Dangerous mixing of drugs. Government inspectors have found powerful medications, intended for use only under medical supervision, which carried labels of mild medicines and even of non-prescription vitamin preparations.

● Destruction of labeling which includes warnings and directions for use.

● Disregard of expiration dates on antibiotics.

● Storing of repackaged samples in unlabeled containers or in containers with labels loosely affixed with rubber bands.

The FDA told the AFL-CIO News it is illegal for a physician to sell his samples to a repackager or a druggist and also unlawful for a pharmacist to buy drugs intended as free samples. The agency, however, has not brought any criminal charges in its drive to wipe out the bootlegging of drugs. Its seizures have been civil actions carrying no penalty other than confiscation and destruction of the drugs.

Larrick called for voluntary action to eliminate the diversion of sample drugs and recommended that:

● Drug manufacturers curtail and control the distribution of samples and supply physicians only with the drugs they want.

● Pharmacists discontinue using physicians' samples to fill prescriptions.

AIW Delegates Debate Setting Up Strike Fund

Chicago—The 500 delegates to the 135th convention of the Allied Industrial Workers held off until the final day of the parley a vote creating a strike fund. They were evenly divided during vigorous debate on the issue.

Pres. Carl W. Griepentrog in his keynote speech and report strongly urged creation of a solid strike fund. He told the delegates that more will have to be spent in time and money if the union is to move ahead on the organizing front.

Griepentrog predicted that AIW strikes will not increase because of a solid strike fund. "If we have a strike fund, bread and butter for you and your families while on strike, management will have lost its weapon of starving you," he said.

Griepentrog reported that the union is holding its own in organizing. From 1957 to 1959, he said, five new plants were organized and 25 plants shut down or moved away. Between 1959 and 1960, 40 new plants were organized and the union lost 40 through closings.

The AIW president called for an end to inter-union feuding and said sticking to historical emphasis on jurisdiction boundaries is sheer luxury on the part of labor.

Carl Rowan, deputy assistant secretary of state for public affairs, told the delegates that the United States is determined not to yield any of its fundamental rights in West Berlin. "If the U.S. is weak in Berlin, our word will mean nothing to the peoples of Africa and Southeast Asia," he asserted.

Rowan said "who trusts who" is the issue in settling world problems and easing tension.

Racial suspicion is a potent factor in world affairs and Washington is strained by race incidents in this country, he added.

"Africa is not convinced that we support its legitimate aspirations and its people are not certain of what the U.S. stands for today," he said.

James G. Patton, president of the National Farmers' Union, urged a $2 an hour minimum wage as the only way for a family to earn $4,000 a year, the requirement for a minimum budget. He warned about the danger of having so much of the economy geared to defense.

AN AFL-CIO UNION CONTRACT covering 200 employes at Model Laundry—Dry Cleaning Co., Cincinnati, recently ended 20 years of representation by an unaffiliated union. Seated are Henry A. Marks, president of the firm, and Florence Smith, president of Laundry & Dry Cleaning Local 248, who led the organizing drive at the company's two plants. Other members of the negotiating committee, standing left to right, are Mrs. Clara Posey, Local Sec.-Treas. Margaret Patton, Roland Shelton, Mrs. Annie Johnson, Pearl Dragoo and Mrs. Roberta Jefferson.

International Labor Standards Urged to Meet Import Challenge

Establishment of international fair labor standards to combat unfair foreign competition and advance living standards around the world has been urged by a number of AFL-CIO unions in testimony before a House Labor subcommittee.

The subcommittee, headed by Rep. John H. Dent (D-Pa.), is studying the effects of imports and exports on U.S. employment.

Pres. James B. Carey of the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers suggested that an agreement between nations on labor standards could be administered by the Intl. Trade Organization under the General Agreement on Trade & Tariff (GATT).

"The way would then be open for a solution in terms of raising wages in the exporting country," Carey said. "Thus, we could work together with labor of other countries instead of working against each other."

Carey's statement noted that the U.S., through the Marshall Plan, had done much to rebuild the economies of free nations, many of which now have returned to active participation as international trade competitors.

This increase in competition, he said, "is a challenge, not a threat." He counseled against restrictionist trade policies and urged, instead, attention to problem areas.

The IUE president also urged revision of tax laws to eliminate incentives to "international runaway shops." He cited General Electric which he said holds up the Japanese firm Toshiba as an example of low-wage foreign competition but actually is the chief stockholder in Toshiba.

Lazare Teper, research director of the Ladies' Garment Workers, also cited runaway shops "on an international scale," which he said have become a threat to domestic industry.

Recent rises in imports of women's and children's wear, "particularly from substandard wage areas," were the result of tariff reductions, not excessive American prices, Teper declared. He urged that no further tariff concessions be made.

Liberalized but regulated world trade, he said, is the key to improving living standards everywhere.

Exec. Sec. Gerald R. Coleman of the Hatters urged that the doctrine of the Walsh-Healey Act be applied to foreign trade to require that importing firms pay a fair wage on products shipped to U.S. markets.

Coleman cited severe damage to domestic industry from imports of fiber caps and women's straw hats, but declared:

"Although our industry has been severely hit by low-wage, sweatshop imports, we believe that we must also recognize labor's obligation to help raise the standard of living of all peoples, which would be a better deterrent to communism than lower tariffs."

He said the U.S. should lower tariffs where and when European and Japanese manufacturers raise wages.

Vice Pres. Andrew Arcuri of the Doll & Toy Workers noted that the AFL-CIO—at its Executive Council meeting last February—had urged the promotion of international fair labor standards. He called on the subcommittee to support such action, which he said would go far toward solving "acute problems" created by the importation of toys from low-wage countries.

Leather Workers Hurt

A statement filed by the Leather Goods Workers said unfair foreign competition is causing some 17 percent of firms in the industry to "fall by the wayside" each year.

"We here have striven to eliminate sweatshops," the union said. "We have a national minimum wage, one of the chief purposes of which is to do just that. There is no reason why the products of sweatshops abroad should get preferential treatment."

The Dent subcommittee, which is planning field hearings on the West Coast and possibly in the Midwest, also heard appeals from a number of unions seeking changes in tariff and quota regulations because of special problems in their industries.

Vice Pres. Victor H. Thomas of the Cement Workers said domestic producers and workers had been hit hard by "dumping" of imported cement on East Coast markets. He urged revision of the Anti-Dumping Act to speed up Treasury Dept. procedures and guarantee timely action against such practices.

William M. Scanlon, representing the Boot & Shoe Workers, said shoe imports had increased more than 300 percent between 1955 and 1960 and last year alone were the equivalent of 10,000 jobs. The union, he said, is concerned not so much with the imports themselves as with the labor conditions under which they are being produced.

"American shoeworkers could accept the reasonableness of a competitive situation in which their jobs depended purely on the business astuteness and capabilities of American industry openly and freely competing in the field of quality and value," Scanlon declared.

Effect of Imports Serious

Pres. George Fecteau of the United Shoe Workers said that because a rapid rise in the productivity of American shoeworkers already has reduced their employment opportunities, the effect of footwear imports is especially serious.

He urged Congress to enact a bill introduced by Sen. Edmund S. Muskie (D-Me.) to limit shoe imports from any country to a percentage of the U.S. market no greater than its average percentage over the preceding three years.

Montreal Guild Wins First Pact

Montreal, Que.—The Newspaper Guild has won its first contract in Montreal, an agreement covering about 125 Montreal Star delivery employes.

The union had a budding organization here in the late 1930s but it was crushed by employer opposition. Its revival got under way when it won a bargaining election in the Star's delivery department last January.

The two-year contract provides wage increases in three steps—$8.20 a week for drivers; $11.60 for top mechanics; $13.50 for dispatchers; $10 for helpers; 60 cents an hour for casual drivers. The 40-hour workweek was cut to 38.75 hours immediately and will become 37.5 hours in April 1962.

Subcommittee Recommendation:

Fairer Enforcement Of T-H Proposed

By John M. Barry

Sweeping changes in the procedures of the National Labor Relations Board have been recommended by a House Labor subcommittee to bring about faster, fairer and tougher enforcement of the Taft-Hartley Act.

"Unconscionable delay," especially in the processing of unfair practice cases, and penalties that amount to no more than "a slap on the wrist" have made the law ineffective and almost futile, said a report of the subcommittee headed by Rep. Roman C. Pucinski (D-Ill.)

The subcommittee said that "in many areas and in many industries, the policy of the United States as set forth in the Labor-Management Relations act of 1947—to encourage the practice and procedure of collective bargaining—is not being effectuated."

The report cited a declaration by AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany that:

"As a practical proposition, it is all but impossible for workers to form unions today where the employer is willing to mobilize and make use of all the legal weapons at his command to oppose unionization."

Pucinski was joined in the majority report by his fellow Democrats on the subcommittee: Representatives James Roosevelt (Calif.), John H. Dent (Pa.) and Julia Butler Hansen (Wash.).

Two members of the Republican minority — Representatives Clare Hoffman (Mich.) and John Ashbrook (O.)—charged that the hearings had been set up as a forum "from which the so-called Eisenhower board . . . could be castigated and condemned."

They accused witnesses of seeking "the repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act or at least its emasculation through amendment." They rejected the majority recommendations and called instead for assignment of the board's functions in unfair practice cases to the U.S. district Courts.

A third Republican—Rep. Robert P. Griffin (Mich.), co-author of the Landrum-Griffin Act—also submitted a separate statement. He said that while he agreed with most of the points in the minority report, he nevertheless felt the hearings "were useful and could serve as the basis of some constructive legislation."

Delegations of Authority

The majority called on the board to delegate decision-making powers to trial examiners in unfair practice cases and to adopt a system of limited review of the examiners' rulings.

The board has authority for this step, the group said, even though Congress rejected Pres. Kennedy's NLRB reorganization plan proposing a broader delegation of such powers.

Earlier this year the board delegated authority in representation cases to regional directors, and the subcommittee said limited experience had been "encouraging." If this does not solve the delay problem, the committee said, "serious consideration should be given to exploring other methods for holding faster NLRB elections."

The subcommittee also recommended board regulations "to prevent abuses of its processes by dilatory tactics in representation cases."

It suggested that the NLRB disbar attorneys from practice before the board if they violate such regulations or advise their clients to commit unfair practices to gain further time.

The subcommittee hit hard at what it termed a lack of adequate remedies in unfair practice cases.

Citing the union charge that existing penalties actually are "a license for union-busting," the majority urged the board to consider the problem "with an eye to taking the profit out of unfair labor practices." It suggested that the board revitalize its so-called Joy Silk doctrine and order recognition of a union where an employer thwarts a fair election.

The report also calls on the board to make greater use of its discretionary powers to seek court injunctions against flagrant and continuing unfair practices.

"Injunctions are now utilized extensively against union activities and to an almost nonexistent extent against employer unfair practices," the committee charged.

(NLRB Chairman Frank W. McCulloch, in a recent speech, reported that the board now is considering a plan to seek federal court injunctions against bad-faith employers. Excerpts from the speech appear on page 6 of this issue.)

The subcommittee also found that the mandatory injunction provisions of the law, relating to secondary boycott, had worked hardships in many cases. It urged that the act be amended to permit board officials to exercise their discretion in these instances.

Although it noted that the present NLRB general counsel, Stuart Rothman, has almost doubled the number of complaints issued, the majority urged an amendment to require the issuance of complaints in all cases where the general counsel has reason to believe a violation has occurred, and to require a summary report of the reasons for dismissing a charge when a complaint is denied.

In other areas, the subcommittee recommended:

- Granting of equal time to unions to counter management statements before "captive audiences" of employes, plus use of company facilities at cost to match management mailings to workers.
- Prosecution of management race-hate propaganda as an unfair practice, with the goal of resolving constitutional "free speech" questions.
- Continuation of the practice of setting aside elections where community pressures—by public officials, newspapers, law officers, merchants, etc.—prevent a free choice.

The subcommittee noted that "considerable improvements" have been detected in NLRB operations at the regional level since it began its study last May 8.

Meany Appointed For Bible Week

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany has been appointed as one of four honorary vice-chairmen for this year's observance, Oct. 16-22, of National Bible Week. Others are Bud Collyer, television master of ceremonies; Harry Golden, editor of the Carolina Israelite, and Mrs. E. Lee Ozbirn, president, General Federation of Women's Clubs.

National Bible Week is sponsored by the Laymen's National Committee, Inc., founded in 1940 to call attention to Bible precepts and to encourage regular church attendance.

Schnitzler on Anniversary:

Union Label Called Symbol Of Free Workers' Standing

New York—Union labels and services represent the great advantage workers in the free world enjoy over slave labor in totalitarian nations, AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler declared here.

The occasion was the golden anniversary of the Union Label & Service Trades Council of Greater New York and Long Island, marked by a dinner dance attended by 1,000 business men, government officials and union leaders representing every segment of the city's labor movement.

Today the union label is widely recognized as a standard of excellence, with the result that people who look for it feel confident about getting their money's worth, Schnitzler said. Tomorrow it may take on even greater significance as the symbol of free labor, he added.

"What we have to impress upon our fellow Americans and the people of all nations still free of the iron curtain is that under Russian domination there will no longer be a union label or any freedom—for labor or any other citizens." Schnitzler told a cheering audience.

The AFL-CIO official noted that although organized labor over the years has provided the spark for increased production, broader markets and a more prosperous nation, cutthroat competition constitutes a "blight to this nation's economy."

Chiseling a Problem

"It helped bring about the 1929 crash, and unless it is checked it may cause another economic tailspin," he warned. "It is a problem of restraining the suicidal business urge to cheapen a product by reducing the quality of workmanship and service and materials."

He pointed out that proof of American labor's foresight in fostering fair competition was its promotion of the union label, shop card and service button "long before National Recovery Administration codes were created or even dreamed of during the administration of the late Pres. Franklin D. Roosevelt."

Competition is fine "so long as it remains ethical and does not seek to capture the consumer dollar with lower price tags made possible by cutting wages, depressing working conditions and giving the customer less quality for his money," he said.

Others who spoke included New York's Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller; Sec.-Treas. Joseph Lewis of the AFL-CIO Union Label and Service Trades Dept.; Pres. Harry Van Arsdale, Jr., of the New York City Central Labor Council; and Raymond R. Corbett, legislative director of the New York State AFL-CIO.

Rockefeller drew cheers when he said that instead of indulging in speech-making he was "turning myself inside out to show that my coat has a union label."

In his prepared speech, Rockefeller called for enactment of medical care for the aged linked with the social security system. He held that it was "only logical that the social security system should be the agency for financing medical care for the aged on a fiscally sound, contributory basis."

Boycott Hits Segregated State Officials' Parley

ing part may use U.S. funds to cover the travel and living expenses of their representatives.

The Labor Dept., however, said it would not at this time question attendance at the meeting by state officials who choose to go. One BES staff member, Jerry Foster, will be present because, it was decided, his duties attach him to the conference rather than to the Labor Dept. He is executive secretary of the conference.

The decision to stay away this year is in keeping with a policy established early by the Kennedy Administration to have no part of discrimination in any form. Atty. Gen. Robert F. Kennedy and other Administration figures recently resigned from the Metropolitan Club in Washington because it bars Negro members.

The AFL-CIO's usual complement of observers at the interstate conference also will be absent, consistent with the federation's policy opposing discrimination, said Nelson H. Cruikshank, director of the Dept. of Social Security, and Boris Shishkin, director of the Dept. of Civil Rights.

Shishkin and Cruikshank charged that Marion Williamson, Georgia employment security director, who headed the arrangements committee for the conference, had made no advance attempt to assure non-segregated facilities.

Williamson, a former president of the conference, said the issue of racial discrimination was a "phony" and accused officials who favor "federalization" of unemployment insurance of trying to undermine the meeting.

Labor Under Sec. W. Willard Wirtz denied the charge, declaring that department representatives were motivated solely by their opposition to segregation.

States expected to boycott the meeting represent about three-fourths of all workers covered by the unemployment insurance system. In a number of cases, state employment security directors were ordered by their governors to cancel plans to attend the Atlanta meeting.

Walsh-Healey Minimum Pay Set at $1.15

Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg has established a minimum wage of $1.15 an hour for all industries subject to the provisions of the Walsh-Healey Act except where a higher wage has previously been established.

The Walsh-Healey Act covers employes who work on government supply contracts costing $10,000 and up. The minimum will apply to contracts for which bids are invited, offers solicited or negotiations commenced on or after Sept. 22, 1961.

The minimum permits the employment of learners at wages below the $1.15 rate under the conditions authorized for other workers under the Fair Labor Standards Act. The employment of apprentices and handicapped workers also is governed by the FLSA.

NAM Bolts ILO, Cries 'Socialism'

The National Association of Manufacturers has pulled out of participation in the Intl. Labor Organization, contending that it is dominated by delegations with Socialist "leanings."

The action by the board of directors severed completely the industrial group's ties with the tripartite international organization, an arm of the United Nations. The NAM refused to participate in 1961 in nomination of an employer delegate with the U.S. Chamber of Commerce, a practice it had been following since 1946.

The U.S. is represented in the ILO by an employer, a worker and a government delegate.

A NAM spokesman was reported as saying that while the 10 Communist nations represented in the ILO did not constitute a majority, free enterprise advocates were in a minority because of what he termed the Socialist leanings of many other delegations.

Unions Prod FCC on Job Effect of TV Sale

Two unions, fighting for jobs of members threatened by change in ownership of two television stations in Rochester, N. Y., have challenged the Federal Communications Commission policy of refusing to consider the potential effect on jobs as a factor in judging whether sale of a station is in the public interest.

The unions—the Broadcast Employes & Technicians and the Television & Radio Artists—have asked the FCC to reconsider an order denying a hearing on whether an estimated 20 percent reduction in jobs resulting from change in ownership would be in the public interest.

Washington D. C. Atty. Warren Woods, in asking for a rehearing, said the FCC's refusal even to consider the impact on employment is "contrary to the policy of other government agencies and the courts."

The two unions have charged that the station owners refused to "bargain in good faith to make the transition to new ownership as easy and painless as possible."

A NABET official stated in an affidavit that the president of one station had told him he was "less disposed to make concessions to the employes" since the FCC had approved the transfer of ownership.

If the change in ownership goes through, the Gannett chain which publishes Rochester's two daily newspapers, would also operate one of the city's two television stations. At present, it shares control of one channel.

In the FCC vote approving an involved three-way shift of ownership, Chairman Newton N. Minow dissented on the ground that no affirmative showing had been made that the changes would be in the public interest.

WLW Bars Renewal Of Auto Union Program

troit and broadcast in 16 other cities where the UAW has substantial membership, consists of news, commentary, interviews, discussion and music presented by Nunn, as well as cut-ins on each station for local news, weather and announcements.

Program 'Unacceptable'

The UAW said that it sought in August to renew the time purchase from WLW for another year, but was told by the station on Sept. 7—four days before the expiration date—that the program was "unacceptable." Later, the union reported, it was informed by Station Mgr. Robert Dunville that a new sustaining program, which he considered more acceptable and more in the public interest, was being substituted for Eye Opener.

When the UAW sought another time slot for its program, it was offered the period from 12:30 a.m. to 5:30 a.m., one day a week, the union said.

(Efforts by the AFL-CIO News to reach Dunville were unavailing. Another WLW spokesman said the substitute program, Conference Call, would link news editors of stations in the Crosley chain for a combined broadcast.)

In filing the union's complaint with the FCC, Joseph L. Rauh, Jr., Washington attorney, noted that the Nunn program had a Neilson Home Coverage rating in Cincinnati 50 percent higher than the next most popular program at the same hour and several hundred percent higher than other programs.

Even when the Eye Opener program was carried by WLW, the station's schedule was heavily weighted with programs expressing right-wing and management points of view, Rauh charged.

"Without Nunn's program there will be no expression whatever of (the) labor and liberal point of view," the UAW counsel declared. "This rank censorship by WLW and refusal to permit all points of view to be expressed require revocation of license."

Hart told the Senate that while final judgment on the case must be withheld until the FCC completes its investigation, one of the most important functions of the commission is "to enforce the obligation of broadcast stations to present all points of view."

"This duty of the FCC is the exact opposite of censorship," he declared. "It is the duty to ensure free speech by making certain that all points of view are presented to the public. Free speech becomes meaningless unless there are outlets for speech."

The Senator said he was concerned that the termination of the Nunn program may be keeping the liberal-labor point of view off the air, but that he would express the same concern if a sharply conservative voice were being denied air time.

"We insist on freedom of speech," he observed, "not out of some spirit of sentimentality, not merely because the founders of this nation assigned it high priority; we insist on it because it is essential if we are to develop effective answers to the problems we face as a people. We insist on freedom of speech not to propagate error, but because it is the only way we can hope to discover truth."

Meat Cutters Again Beat Teamster Raid

Fayetteville, Ark.—An attempted raid by Teamsters Local 823, unaffiliated, on members of Meat Cutters Local 425 at the Welch Grape Juice Co. plant in Springdale, Ark., has been beaten back.

Employes of the processing plant, part of a nationwide chain, voted in a National Labor Relations Board election to keep the Meat Cutters as bargaining agent. The vote: Meat Cutters 58, Teamsters 23, neither 1.

The Meat Cutters won a labor board election in 1955 and have had a contract since. The Teamsters petitioned for an election when the present contract was open for negotiation, and Local 425 consented to an election in order to avoid a delay in bargaining, Pres. Robert Parker said.

It was the second loss in two years for the Teamsters. Local 425 won an election from Local 823 last year at a poultry processing plant in Noel, Mo., according to Parker.

The Meat Cutters local has units throughout Arkansas and in parts of Missouri and Oklahoma.

'Distortion' Charged to Reader's Digest

Errors on BLS Data Called Unpardonable

could submit a story containing so many errors."

Clague said the Digest might "at least partially repair the damage" to responsible officials of the BLS, which he termed "an old and honored agency" with "jealously guarded nonpolitical direction and operation," by "setting the facts straight." He asked Wallace to carry another article "to present an accurate statement on the measurement of unemployment."

Clague said on Sept. 28 he had not yet received a reply to his request. Wallace told the AFL-CIO News that he did not recall yet having seen the Clague letter.

The Digest article, written by James Daniel, a roving editor, ran in the September issue under the title: "Let's Look at Those 'Alarming' Unemployment Figures."

Writer's Charges

In the article offered as "an eye-opening report," Daniel said the BLS had been "pouring out a stream of doleful figures," and that its "definitions and methods . . . have steadily been altered to magnify the unemployment problem."

A review of the BLS's "curious operations" for 20 years, Daniel charged, showed "that the claimed rise in unemployment from recession to recession (in the post-war years) has, to a large extent, been engineered."

He accused the BLS of "juggling statistics to show progressive deterioration in the U.S. economic system." This provides "excellent fodder for the Communist line," he said.

Because of the Employment Act of 1946, Daniel said, "the worse unemployment grows—or can be made to appear—the easier it is to push Uncle Sam into new federal spending programs and new controls over the economy."

In a slashing analysis of details of the Daniel article, the BLS pointed out that this agency, in fact, does not control the "methods and definitions" used by the government to measure joblessness.

The definitions and methods instead are an inter-agency responsibility, under guidance of the Bureau of the Budget's Office of Statistical Standards.

Accuracy Verified

There has been only one change in 21 years in the "definition of unemployment," and this was thoroughly discussed with business, labor and public advisers in advance, the BLS said.

The agency added that it does not even gather and process the statistics that make up material for the jobless figures, but that this has been done for many years by the Census Bureau in the Dept. of Commerce.

The BLS serves as one of many groups on the interagency body and only in the last two years has it even analyzed and published the figures.

The BLS pointed out, also, that the accuracy of the government's overall reports on employment and unemployment is "clearly reflected" by independent evidence.

The "trend" of joblessness is verified by the actual count of persons drawing jobless compensation. This insured unemployment, the bureau declared, "has also shown a rising trend over the past decade."

In addition, a sample of payroll records of 180,000 manufacturers employing 25 million wage and salary workers also "confirms the recent rise in unemployment," the BLS declared.

The BLS branded as "false" an intimation by Daniel that Census Bureau interviewers ask people in a household, "How many people here want a job?" The bureau retorted, "No such question is asked."

The BLS labeled some of the article "misleading" and other parts "erroneous."

It rejected a charge that survey questions were altered in the 1930s, and pointed out that "the survey was not initiated until 1940." A change in 1945, BLS declared, had the effect of obtaining a more complete count of the employed and revealing "a reduction" in the jobless total.

Inaccuracy Shown

Another Daniel statement, BLS added, referred to differences between BLS and national census figures in 1940 and 1950. BLS did not survey unemployment in either year, the BLS rebuttal noted. The Census Bureau surveys of joblessness were later revised upward, it was added.

A Daniel charge that a change in the system was designed to retain new enumerators more adept at "sniffing out elusive cases of 'marginal and occasional' workers" to boost the jobless count was hit as distortion. Staffing depended on the new sampling areas, BLS said.

To the Daniel charge that "the United States has a fine employment story to tell, but it goes largely untold," BLS replied that the jobs story comes almost entirely from the household surveys which Daniel criticized. It is told often, BLS said, in special reports and studies and in Labor Dept. publications.

strate that "we believe in a free society for all men regardless of their earning status, their ethnic origins or the color of their skins."

He warned that the American trade union movement still has its share of enemies in the nation, singling out the U.S. Chamber of Commerce and the National Association of Manufacturers for "toying with the idea" of putting unions out of business.

Unity Approved Earlier

Prior to the merger convention itself, the New Jersey State Federation of Labor, meeting in Newark, had approved the unity agreement and the constitution for the new state organization by a unanimous vote of 2,085 delegates.

Meeting in Atlantic City, the New Jersey State Industrial Union Council had taken similar action, with 675 delegates voting for the merger documents.

The agreement specified that the former state federation would nominate the president and the secretary-treasurer and the former state council the first and second executive presidents. The separate conventions made these choices which went into effect at the merger convention:

President—Vincent J. Murphy, president of the state federation.

Secretary-Treasurer — Charles H. Marciante, secretary-treasurer of the state federation.

First executive vice president—Joel R. Jacobson, president of the council.

Second executive vice president—Victor D. Leonardis, secretary-treasurer of the council.

The federation selected 25 vice presidents to serve on the merged organization's executive board and the state council 12. Two remaining vice presidents will be named by the new executive board within 30 days of the merger convention.

Per Capita 40 Cents

The current officers will serve until the 1964 convention when the posts will be filled, under the merger agreement, "without regard to previous affiliation." The next convention will be in 1963, but no elections will be held.

The per capita will be 40 cents per member per year, with the executive board granted authority under the constitution to increase it by not more than 10 cents in the event of a financial emergency.

Murphy, in a brief speech, declared that the merger was an answer to those who predicted chaos, adding that the united labor movement in the state will do the job that needs doing.

Jacobson told the convention that the merger demonstrated the simple wisdom of the principle that "in union there is strength."

The state gubernatorial contest between former Labor Sec. James P. Mitchell (R) and Richard J. Hughes (D) drew the attention of the separate merger conventions. The state federation convention voted to remain neutral in the contest, the council endorsed Hughes after hearing both candidates.

The completion of the New Jersey merger leaves only a handful of city and county organizations unmerged before the Oct. 1 deadline laid down by the AFL-CIO Executive Council at its June meeting.

Slurs on BLS Scored In Business, Congress

A Reader's Digest article charging that unemployment statistics have been "juggled" upward "to push Uncle Sam into new federal spending programs" has been denounced by business leaders and by bipartisan spokesmen in Congress.

A Democratic senator, Republican congressman and business officials joined in and defended the integrity of the job survey system.

The Reader's Digest article, entitled "Let's Look at Those 'Alarming' Unemployment Figures," appeared in September. It was written by James Daniel, a Digest roving editor.

Sen. William Proxmire (D-Wis.), in a floor speech, said the charges leveled against the Labor Dept.'s Bureau of Labor Statistics are "serious" because they reflect not only on the accuracy and completeness of the jobless figures but on the integrity of federal employes.

Proxmire, who is chairman of the Joint Economic Committee's Subcommittee on Economic Statistics, said he expected his group would invite the author of the article to document his charges.

Rep. Thomas B. Curtis (R-Mo.), saying he long favored improvements in the survey system, nevertheless lashed the article as "false" when it suggests that any limitations in the figures are due to a lack of integrity of public servants.

R. J. Eggert, an economist with the Ford Division of the Ford Motor Co., protested to Reader's Digest in his capacity as chairman of the Federal Statistical Users Conference. This group includes over 150 business firms, farm groups, labor unions and research organizations.

The Daniel article is "an unwarranted attack" on the integrity of the jobless survey system and the BLS, Eggert declared. Eggert said the conference members know the survey system can be improved "but we are convinced that any shortcomings are not due to incompetence or to wilful mishandling of data."

Vincent P. Ahearn, managing director of the National Sand & Gravel Association, protested the article as a "vicious attack" on BLS Commissioner Ewan Clague.

Ahearn, a 10 year member of the Business Research Advisory Council to BLS, said Clague and the BLS staff had been "maligned and slandered" in an article "replete with misrepresentations and distortions."

The Washington Post editorially rapped Daniel "for inventing a devil theory of unemployment." The Post said Daniel might have wondered why the Eisenhower Administration should have been so eager to juggle figures and increase the pressure for public spending.

IMF Meet Sets Up Americas' Program

Paipa, Colombia—A program of action for the Intl. Metalworkers Federation in the Americas, based on problems that concern free trade unions in the metal-working field, was developed at the IMF's first inter-American meeting here.

Four U.S. union representatives attended—Education Dir. Ben Segal of the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, who acted for the Auto Workers and the Shipbuilders as well as for his own union; Rudy Faupl of the Machinists; and Meyer Bernstein and Dean Clowes of the Steelworkers.

Auto Union Votes Strike At Harvester

Chicago—Authorization to call a strike of 35,000 Intl. Harvester Co. workers at midnight Oct. 1 was voted in balloting by members of the Auto Workers.

UAW Vice Pres. Pat Greathouse, heading negotiations with Harvester and three other agricultural implement firms employing 90,000 workers, said the union still was hopeful of "fruitful settlements."

Contracts with the John Deere and Caterpillar Tractor firms also were due to expire Oct. 1, and those with the Allis-Chalmers Co. on Nov. 1.

The union rejected a Harvester counterproposal as "inadequate and unrealistic." Management asserted its proposal matched the General Motors-UAW settlement. Greathouse said it didn't and listed several deficiencies.

Jobless Rate Nudges 7% In 10th Straight Month

NAM Hit On 'Pullout' From ILO

By David L. Perlman

The National Association of Manufacturers has been accused by AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany of "running away" from the fight against communism by permanently withdrawing from participation in the Intl. Labor Organization.

The NAM, complaining that supporters of "free enterprise" are outnumbered in the 100-nation ILO, revealed that it will no longer join with the U.S. Chamber of Commerce in nominating the U.S. employer delegate and selecting a staff of advisers. The NAM boycotted the last ILO general session but said at the time that its withdrawal from participation was "temporary."

Meany charged that the NAM action presents to the world the "wholly unwarranted suggestion . . . that our country is not united in opposing the forces of communism."

A Chamber of Commerce statement reaffirming support of the ILO was welcomed by Meany as "a realistic position."

He said labor will continue to work with U.S. employers "in the ILO's monumental task of achieving a better life for workers throughout the world."

The ILO, set up under the League of Nations with the goal of improving working conditions and raising living standards throughout the world, is now a specialized agency of the United Nations.

The effect of the NAM decision is to break off cooperation with the government of the United States in the ILO.

Both Republican and Democratic administrations have backed the organization, and appointment to the ILO's annual conferences are official appointments of the United States.

The NAM declined direct comment to the AFL-CIO News but a spokesman said the organization's board of directors had rejected by an overwhelming majority a motion to re-establish a policy of participation in ILO activities.

The NAM spokesman said his organization was not retreating to isolationism but was taking what it considered a more realistic attitude toward international organizations. He suggested that there is growing disillusionment in the United States with the operations, although not the objectives, of the UN and other world bodies.

U.S. employer delegates in the ILO are "up against a stacked deck and can't accomplish anything," he said.

Ford Pact Delayed, 73 Plants Out

By Eugene A. Kelly

Detroit — Tighter liaison between national bargaining committees here and local bargainers in the plants has been agreed to by the Auto Workers and the Ford Motor Co. in contract negotiations resumed after a walkout of 120,000 UAW-Ford workers.

The walkout came, as the union had warned it would, when an Oct. 3 deadline arrived without an agreement on basic issues. Bargainers had agreed to an economic settlement similar to the General Motors agreement but still were in dispute on non-economic and local matters when UAW members started walking out at 73 Ford plants across the country.

As the AFL-CIO News went to press, agreement on local plant issues had been reached by management and labor at 26 UAW units with 47 still unsettled.

Other developments:

- UAW notified the Chrysler Corp. that it faced a strike also unless management quit "dragging its feet" in negotiations on a new contract.
- The union signed a three-year contract with GM and UAW locals at GM plants ratified it by what the union said was an "overwhelming vote."
- Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg called the Ford shutdown "regrettable" and said the Administration "appeals to the parties . . . to exert every effort to settle the remaining issues" and to end the strike promptly.

The strike at Ford was the first companywide walkout since the union won bargaining rights in 1941.

It came shortly before negotia-

NLRB Reverses Indiana Rule:

Agency Shop Held Bargaining Right

By John M. Barry

The National Labor Relations Board, in a sharp policy shift, has upheld the agency shop as a lawful subject for collective bargaining.

The ruling, involving a case in Indiana where the union shop is outlawed, does not necessarily set a precedent for other so-called right-to-work states, a board spokesman emphasized.

By a 4-1 vote the board nevertheless reversed a 3-2 decision handed down last Feb. 20, and ordered General Motors Corp. to bargain with the Auto Workers on an agency shop arrangement affecting some 14,000 non-union GM workers in nine Indiana plants.

The majority opinion was signed by the two new members appointed by Pres. Kennedy — Chairman Frank W. McCulloch and Gerald A. Brown—and by two Eisenhower appointees who were in the minority in the February decision — Philip Ray Rodgers and John H. Fanning.

Boyd Leedom, who was in the majority in the February ruling, filed a dissenting opinion essentially unchanged from his earlier views.

The agency shop differs from the union shop in that employes are not required to become members of the union representing them, but must pay the union an amount equal to initiation fees and regular dues.

Indiana's "right-to-work" law was not at issue in the case, both GM and the UAW agreed. The company contended, instead, that the agency shop proposed by the union was outlawed on the federal level by the Taft-Hartley Act.

The NLRB majority nevertheless noted that the Indiana Appellate Court, on June 19, 1959, had found the agency shop to be legal under the state's "right-to-work" law. That case involved Meade Electric Co. and the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers.

The NLRB spokesman said the effect of the board's ruling was to

September Dip Held 'Seasonal'

By Gervase N. Love

Unemployment dropped only slightly in September, persisting without substantial change at the nearly 7 percent level it has been stuck at for the last 10 months, the Labor Dept. has reported.

The dip was 457,000 to 4.1 million jobless, equivalent to a seasonally adjusted rate of 6.8 percent. This compares with a rate of 6.9 percent in August and prompted Seymour L. Wolfbein, the department's manpower expert, to assert that again there had been "basically no fundamental shift in the seasonal rate," which "has been as flat as anything could be thus far in 1961."

Employment dropped more than seasonally by 1.5 million to 67 million, reflecting a decline of 650,000 in farm employment—about 500,000 more than was expected seasonally. The Labor Dept. attributed the decline to Hurricane Carla, which flayed the Gulf states during the week of the employment count.

Wolfbein cited four "quite favorable" points in the monthly report. They were:

- Unemployment among adult men was reduced more than seasonally, the seasonally adjusted rate dropping from 6.1 percent in August to 5.7 percent.
- Long-term unemployment of 15 weeks or more also dropped more than seasonally, declining by nearly 200,000 to 1.3 million.

'Priority' Tag Given 5 Bills In Congress

Labor has put a second session "priority" label on five major bills left hanging when Congress adjourned, an AFL-CIO spokesman has declared.

Legislative Director Andrew J. Biemiller predicted that Congress, after "hearing from the people" during the three-month recess, will act on:

- Health care for the aged through social security payments.
- Federal aid for school construction and teachers' salaries.
- A recession-triggered flexible public works program.
- Federal minimum standards for state unemployment compensation programs.
- Retraining of jobless workers.

Biemiller added that labor also "very much wants" congressional action on situs picketing legislation and reorganization of the National Labor Relations Board. He predicted that carefully drafted legislation to enable the NLRB to speed up decisions in unfair labor prac-

Goldberg, Hodges, Heller Defend Integrity, Accuracy of Job Figures

Two cabinet members and the chairman of the President's Council of Economic Advisers have publicly defended the integrity and value of the government's statistics on employment and unemployment, which were attacked in a Reader's Digest article as deliberately "juggled" to "magnify" joblessness and promote "spending" programs.

Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg, Commerce Sec. Luther H. Hodges and CEA Chairman Walter W. Heller in speeches or statements declared that the jobs and joblessness figures published by the Bureau of Labor Statistics are accurate and unbiased.

BLS Commissioner Ewan Clague, who has served under both Democratic and Republican administrations, denounced the Digest article —written by a staff editor, James Daniel—as grossly distorted and laced with factual errors.

Clague in a letter to Digest publisher DeWitt Wallace asked space for another article that "might at least partly repair the damage." Clague's office said on Oct. 5 that the commissioner had received no reply from Wallace. The AFL-CIO News was unable in the last few days to reach either Wallace or Daniel by telephone.

The Daniel thesis in his article was that the BLS juggled figures "to show progressive deterioration in the U.S. economic system."

The "claimed rise in unemployment from recession to recession has to a large extent been engineered," he charged. "The worse unemployment grows—or can be made to appear—the easier it is to push Uncle Sam into new federal spending programs and new controls over the economy," he asserted.

Heller in a speech Sept. 29 to a group of specialists referred to a

Job Fairness Stressed for Handicapped

The entire labor movement was called on to take a "full and active" part in assuring equal job opportunity for physically handicapped workers by AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany in a statement supporting National Employ the Physically Handicapped Week.

Equal opportunity, "a basic principle and a major objective" of organized labor, must be sought for the physically handicapped just as vigorously as for other groups, he declared.

"Nothing is more vital to the human spirit than self-reliance and self-support," he continued. "When we deny those advantages to persons already at a disadvantage, we violate the precepts on which our civilization was founded."

Getting the handicapped a fair break in employment is not a once-a-year problem, Meany emphasized, but a continuing one. With the number of jobs found each year arely equal to the number of handicapped added to the labor force, he said, "a backlog of 2 million or more remains constant."

"As we intensify our pursuit of the goal of full employment," he added, "all of us must be aware that its achievement involves the full, productive use of handicapped workers along with the rest. To that end, we in the AFL-CIO are closely cooperating with the President's Committee on Employment of the Physically Handicapped, and we urge our affiliated unions, central bodies and all other elements in the labor movement to take a full and active part in this campaign to widen the scope of equal opportunity."

Tassler Gets Area Post in Labor Bureau

Bernard Tassler, formerly managing editor of the AFL-CIO American Federationist, has been appointed area director for Maryland, Virginia and the District of Columbia of the Bureau of Labor-Management Reports in the Labor Dept.

He had been assistant director of the bureau's Technical Assistance Division since 1960, when he entered government service after more than 25 years with the AFL-CIO and the predecessor AFL. In his new post he will direct bureau activities affecting more than 1,500 local unions in the area.

Tassler, a former New York City newspaperman who once served as director of the New York City AFL Publicity Bureau, succeeds Abraham Friedman, who was appointed the federal bureau's regional director in Chicago.

Born in Rockville, Conn., Tassler was educated in the public schools of Hartford, Conn., and New York City, and at the Washington Square College of New York University.

PUBLIC MEMBERS of the Presidential Railroad Commission, now hearing the union side of the work rules dispute, did their "homework" for the formal hearings by riding with train crews on both freight and passenger runs. Two commission members are shown here at the Cicero, Ill., yard of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy on the start of an inspection tour. Charles A. Myers, industrial relations professor at Massachusetts Institute of Technology, is standing on the steps. On the ground, second from left, is John T. Dunlop, Harvard University professor. With them are three crew members, union and management officials.

Pioneering for '60s New Need: Schnitzler

Windsor, Vt.—A "pioneering" approach to union organizing, keyed to modern conditions, was urged by AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler in an address to the 6th annual convention of the Vermont AFL-CIO Labor Council.

Schnitzler said the increasing number of representation petitions filed with the National Labor Relations Board and the greater percentage of election victories by unions gives a "clear indication that the workers of America are ready for organization."

"But we have not as yet spread our efforts into the organizational field to make membership in our unions possible for many of them," he declared.

Agreeing that organizing is a more difficult task today than it was 20 years ago, Schnitzler asked:

"Who is there who would say that it is harder than it was 30 or 40 years ago? . . . It is not as difficult as it was during the days when this labor movement was built."

With the larger memberships and greater resources available today, he suggested, modern trade unions should be able to accomplish much more in the organizing field than the pioneers of the labor movement.

One trouble, he said, is that "we've been tied too much to the past. We've forgotten to build toward the future and set the kind of goals the membership is talking about, but which we have not as yet translated into action."

Goals for '60's

He urged the delegates in their organizing efforts to depart from the old technique of citing such labor victories of the past as the 8-hour day, free public schools, minimum wages, social security, etc.

These benefits, Schnitzler noted, are enjoyed by non-members, too, "and it's pretty hard to say to someone that you ought to come in with us because we made it possible for you."

He called instead for "pioneering of the '60s."

"It's up to you now to take this trade union movement further up the ladder toward the goals we've set for ourselves," he declared.

The convention chose John Lawson of Barre, secretary-treasurer of the Stone & Allied Products Workers, as new state president. James R. Cross was re-elected to his 11th term as council secretary-treasurer. Both were unopposed.

Among resolutions adopted were several calling for a vigorous program of political and legislative action by the council.

Auxiliaries Issue Convention Call

The third constitutional convention of the AFL-CIO Auxiliaries will be held in the Bal Masque room of the Americana Hotel, Miami Beach, Fla., from Dec. 7-11.

Full instructions on eligibility for representation are included in the convention call. Features include a luncheon for delegates and visitors on Dec. 9.

Peru Unions Join Protest Over Sears

Lima, Peru — Latin American union groups have added their voices to the chorus of protests by U.S. labor against the U.S. government's selection of Sears, Roebuck & Co. to represent the nation's retailing industry at the Intl. Trade Fair this year in Lima.

The Peruvian labor movement voiced its objections through Pres. Arturo Sabrosa of the Confederacion del Trabajadores—the workers' federation—and Pres. Felix Loli of the CSEP, representing clerks and commercial workers. Sabrosa said Sears maintains a company union in its Lima stores to keep out legitimate trade unions.

The AFL-CIO Executive Council has criticized Sears' selection at a time when consumers are boycotting the company because of its anti-union policies. The boycott was launched by the Retail Clerks in 1960.

Bitter Disputes Past:

Seniority Principle Gains in Acceptance

A generally favorable experience record of both workers and employers with seniority agreements is the major force in creating increased observance of seniority principles, the AFL-CIO Dept. of Research has found.

Analyzing current practices in Collective Bargaining Report, a feature of the monthly AFL-CIO American Federationist, the department asserts that bitter disputes over the "seniority issue" are pretty much a thing of the past.

Length of service now is widely accepted as controlling, or at least a key factor, in deciding the relative status of employes, it said.

Seniority disagreements now arise more frequently, the study reported, on the drafting of rules and the application of seniority systems rather than on the principle of preference based on length of service.

"This change," it said, "is part of a gradual shift in attitudes on workers' rights. No longer is management wholly free, where workers are organized, to pick and choose among employes solely as it wishes, to fire, lay off, promote or transfer whomever it wants, on whatever basis."

The magazine's report on seniority gave this picture of changing attitudes:

- Slowly but definitely, under a steady prodding from unions, recognition has grown that workers, too, and not employers alone, have rights.
- Mere payment of wages does not meet all of an employer's responsibilities to workers. The view has grown that certain worker rights, particularly the right to continued employment, should increase in proportion to length of service with the employer.

The longer a man works for an employer the more closely his life becomes invested in that employment, the Dept. of Research observed.

In return for this "investment," the department found, worker rights now reasonably include some assurance of job security, some opportunity for advancement and additional benefits accruing with longer service. These are not absolute rights, but are contingent upon basic competence and on the availability of work, the report stated, adding:

"The growth of worker rights is reflected not only in seniority practices but also in changing concepts of what constitutes 'fair play' in discharge and discipline, and in the increase in severance pay arrangements to compensate for the loss of valuable rights earned during employment."

Other findings in the report:

- Almost 70 percent of layoff and recall provisions made seniority the controlling factor in layoffs, according to a 1954-55 survey by the Labor Dept.
- In general, unions seek the broadest units and rights in "bumping" junior workers in order to provide the greatest job security for longest-service workers.
- Another important use of seniority is in determining preference for advancement. This usually does not mean that the senior worker gets a job for which he lacks ability, but that he gets a trial.

California AFL-CIO Hits Nixon Gubernatorial Bid

San Francisco—Thomas J. Pitts, executive secretary-treasurer of the California State AFL-CIO, has denounced former Vice Pres. Richard Nixon's bid for the state's governorship as asking the voters "to wet-nurse a fallen national politician who is starving for public attention."

Nixon's cumulative voting record in Congress, Pitts said, showed "dedication to special interests" and "moral callousness towards the hopes and aspirations of workers and the great social needs of our free society."

Nixon's effort for state office, Pitts further charged, "presents the voting public with a situation which smacks of the attempt made by a national figure in 1958 [former Sen. William F. Knowland] to use our state's highest office as a stepping stone for lofty ambitions nationally."

Nixon's announcement of his candidacy for governor provoked an instant intraparty storm as another GOP candidate, former Gov. Goodwin J. Knight, charged that an "emissary," one J. Howard Edgerton, had tried to "buy" Knight out of the race by promising Nixon would give him any state job he wished, including that of state supreme court justice.

Nixon Denounces Charge

Knight's charge was denounced as false and preposterous by Edgerton, by Nixon himself and by Robert Finch, a Nixon aide. A countercharge was that Knight offered to lead a pro-Nixon state delegation to the Republican presidential nominating convention in 1964 if Nixon would refrain from running for governor.

The reference by Pitts to the 1958 California race for governor referred to Knowland's drive for the governorship in what was widely interpreted as an effort by the senator to control the California Republican organization in furtherance of his national political ambitions.

Knight, then governor, showed extreme reluctance to step out of Knowland's way. He agreed to do so, and to run for the Senate instead, only after visiting Nixon in the then Vice President's Washington office.

Knowland, campaigning on a demand for a "right-to-work" law, was overwhelmed by Democratic candidate Edmund G. Brown by more than a million votes in the general election. Knight lost the Senate race to Democrat Clair Engle but by a lesser margin.

Brown is expected to seek re-election to the governorship and to face the winner of the Republican primary in November 1962.

France Pledges Aid To New ILO Institute

Geneva—The French government will contribute 5 million francs (about $1,020,400) to the endowment fund of the Intl. Labor Organization's new Intl. Institute for Labor Studies.

In a letter to ILO Dir.-Gen. David A. Morse, the French labor minister, Paul Bacon, said a first installment of 1 million francs will be paid in the near future, with the balance to be forthcoming in subsequent installments.

Deck Officers Walk Out:

Ship Strike Starts As Injunction Ends

San Francisco—A strike of ship deck officers in the West Coast's maritime trade developed here as the government's 80-day Taft-Hartley no-strike injunction expired and Local 90 of the Masters, Mates & Pilots regained freedom of economic action against the ship owners.

The local began picketing vessels in coastal and intracoastal trade, and members of the Sailors Union of the Pacific observed the picket lines. Ports from Mexico to the Canadian border were closed to the outbound movement of ships except those sailing to foreign ports or carrying substantial military cargoes.

Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg dispatched a three-man mediation panel to the West Coast to work with the union and the shippers' association in seeking an agreement that would end the dispute.

The major issue is the refusal of employers—the Pacific Maritime Association—to agree on what the local called an "equitable distribution of available work"—a rotation-of-work clause in the contract whose termination date was Sept. 30. The union said fewer than 600 of its 2,300 members have regular jobs.

The shippers—13 companies with 136 ships—offered the local the same terms accepted by MMP locals on the East and Gulf coasts. The union based its rejection on the ground that only the Pacific Coast has a serious unemployment problem among deck officers.

Goldberg said the "earliest possible settlement" of the dispute is "imperative" and that "public interest will not permit continuation of shutdown." He asked the union and PMA to cooperate with his emissaries — Undersec. of Labor Willard Wirtz, Dir. William Simkin of the Federal Mediation & Conciliation Service, and Prof. James Healy of Harvard University, member of Pres. Kennedy's Maritime Emergency Board.

The dispute is the only one remaining from the martime strike of last summer and the Taft-Hartley injunction invoked by the President to end it. Before the present walkout, Local 90 members voted 404-24 to reject the employers' so-called last offer during the injunction period.

Contracts of the Sailors Union of the Pacific, affiliated with the Seafarers, have been extended from their termination date Sept. 30 without settlement.

FOR THE SEVENTH consecutive year, the United Labor Council of Huntingdon County, Pa., maintained a labor booth at the Huntingdon County Fair. Pictured are fairgoers signing up for gifts donated by county businessmen. Council Pres. Frank M. Davis said the booth staff talked to about 1,000 visitors and passed out 50,000 pieces of union informational material.

Ford Settlement Rests On Local Agreements

tions were recessed for a 24-hour period to let the bargainers get some delayed sleep. The union said Ford's offer on economic issues had one "very significant" difference from the terms at GM —unemployed workers at Ford will get $40 a week for 26 weeks from the company's supplemental unemployment benefits (SUB) fund as against $24.50 at GM.

Still at issue on the national level as the strike started were differences over production standards, the number of union committeemen chosen to represent workers on grievances, job classifications for skilled trades workers, the use of "outside" contractors, and wage rates at the company's steel plant at River Rouge, Mich.

The UAW, in this year's negotiations on new contracts, had authorized local strikes involving about 257,000 of GM's 310,000 workers. Settlement was reached after 14 days on local issues, and on these contract improvements:

An annual wage increase of 2.5 percent or 6 cents an hour, whichever is higher; continuation of the cost-of-living increase from the preceding contract except that 12 of the 17 cents involved was added to base rates; an increase in SUB benefits—and betterment of the SUB plan; a workweek guarantee of 65 percent of regular pay for all hours not worked up to 40 a week, except in an unscheduled short week. In the latter case a worker would get 50 percent of his rate for the hours not worked up to 40.

Also provided for at GM are higher pensions and hospital-medical insurance fully paid by the company.

Council, Board Set New York Sessions

The AFL-CIO Executive Council will hold its fall meeting in New York City at the Commodore Hotel beginning Oct. 10.

The council sessions will be preceded on Oct. 9 by a meeting of the AFL-CIO General Board in the same hotel. The board, composed of a representative from each AFL-CIO affiliated union and department plus the council, will devote its one-day session to organizing problems.

Missile Sites Body Upholds Call-in Pay

The President's Missile Sites Labor Commission has approved the finding of a subcommittee that an eight-hour "reporting time" provision in a contract between the Machinists and the Boeing Airplane Co. at Vandenberg Air Force Base is not uneconomical and does not violate Pres. Kennedy's executive order calling for "economical operations."

The subcommittee, investigating a charge by the Air Force that "any pay in excess of four hours is unreasonable if no work is performed," came to these conclusions:

- An eight-hour call-in pay provision has been a part of the labor agreement between the IAM and Boeing at all IAM locations for more than 20 years, and does not apply to missile sites alone.
- The contract clause, giving an employe who reports for work in accordance with instructions a minimum of eight hours' pay at his base rate, has "adequate safeguards" against abuse. If an installation has an emergency shutdown or a worker leaves voluntarily or is discharged, he is paid only for hours actually worked.
- In a total payroll of $24 million covering 30,000 Boeing employes across three weeks, only $349 in reporting time was paid under the contract clause.

U. S. Steel Asks Arbitration of C-O-L Raise Due Under Pact

Pittsburgh—Pres. David J. McDonald of the Steelworkers has notified the union's district directors, staff representatives and locals that the U.S. Steel Corp. has asked for arbitration of the 3-cents-an-hour cost-of-living wage increase due Oct. 1 under the 1960 contract.

Another wage increase due at the same time, estimated by the union to average 9.5 cents an hour, is not in dispute and has become effective for some 500,000 workers in the industry.

The disputed contract clause, also in union's agreements with other steel producers, provides that the cost-of-living adjustment be applied to wages unless the amount due is offset by the estimated average net cost of insurance per active employe for the calendar quarter ending Dec. 31, 1962.

"To date," McDonald said in his letter to union officials and locals, "all efforts to arrive at a reasonable settlement of what the amount of cost-of-living adjustment should be have failed."

He added that Heath Larry, U.S. Steel's administrative vice president, wrote him on Sept. 15 that "there was no hope of agreement and requesting arbitration of our differences."

Seeks Company Stand

"I have answered Mr. Larry with the request that he reveal to the union exactly what is the company's position that they wish to have arbitrated," McDonald added.

"To date, the company has refused to state what adjustment, if any, they believe their employes are entitled to . . . The interests of our members are protected by the provisions in the agreement which specify that any unresolved differences will be finally determined by a third, impartial actuary and the amount of adjustment due is payable effective Oct. 1, 1961."

Actuaries representing the USWA and the company have been attempting to work out an estimate of projected insurance costs. Because of the technical nature of the dispute, it would not go through the regular arbitration procedure but a third actuary would be named to give an impartial decision.

As the wage increase went into effect, the issue of a steel price increase was still unsettled. Steelmakers estimated the raise averaged 13 cents an hour rather than the 9.5 cents at which the union put it, and said it would cost the industry $28 million in the fourth quarter alone.

Sec. of Labor Arthur J. Goldberg at a press conference in Washington said that the Kennedy Administration, which asked the steel industry to withhold inflationary price increases when the wage hikes went into effect, will make a comparable request of the union when contracts are up for negotiation next spring.

"The Administration is strongly of the view," he said in reply to a query, "that it is important to the economy as a whole, and therefore to management and labor alike, that we pursue responsible price and wage policies. And, therefore, the activities of the Administration will be directed equally, in steel and elsewhere, to management and labor looking toward this end.

"I learned from Scandinavia [from which he had recently returned] that we want to do this within the total context of preserving free collective bargaining, and stability and settlements are likewise a desirable consideration. We don't want to disrupt our ecenomy by strikes.

"So in all these matters, we have to try and achieve a balance of stability of all types—price, wage and collective bargaining stability."

CORRECTION

The AFL-CIO News, in the Sept. 23 issue, incorrectly identified the Locomotive Engineers as an AFL-CIO affiliate. Of the five railroad operating unions cooperating in testimony before the Presidential Railroad Commission, the Trainmen, Switchmen, and Locomotive Firemen & Enginemen are AFL-CIO affiliates; the Locomotive Engineers and the Conductors & Brakemen are unaffiliated.

Senate Liberals Check Tax Boon for du Pont

A group of liberal Democratic senators, led by Tennessee's Albert Gore, successfully blocked Senate action this year on a bill to provide tax relief for the giant E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co.

They served notice that they were prepared to keep the adjournment-bound Senate in session for "extended debate" on a House-passed bill which would allow stockholders to pay a capital gains tax—rather than higher income tax rates—on a distribution of General Motors stock resulting from a court order. Du Pont, which is a major supplier of General Motors, has been ordered in an anti-trust action to dispose of its 63 million shares of GM stock.

During the debate, Sen. Pat McNamara pointed out that workers who receive severence pay—even though earned over a period of years—must pay full income tax on it. He challenged the equity of special treatment for stockholders.

Gore and Sen. Paul H. Douglas (D-Ill.) said the bill was designed to provide tax relief for the company, rather than the stockholders, and questioned the speed with which the House-passed bill was being pushed as compared with the delay in acting on Pres. Kennedy's package of tax reform proposals.

The only Administration tax bill to be enacted in the first session was a measure assigning an identifying number to each taxpayer—for most people, their social security number—so that automatic data equipment could be used to process forms. The identifying number would be included in reports of dividend and interest payments, as well as wages.

Safety Body, Goldberg Laud Labor Campaign

Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg and the National Safety Council have lauded organized labor for a safety campaign credited with helping bring about the lowest death rate in years during the Labor Day weekend—6.6 deaths per 100 million miles of travel. The record should encourage continuing efforts to curb accidents, they told AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany and the heads of affiliated safety units.

Birchites in the Armed Forces

THE LABOR MOVEMENT is the logical target of the radical right wingers who have resurrected McCarthyism and the politics of fear under the label of the John Birch Society.

Labor's social, economic and political programs conflict at every turn with the John Birchers who call for repeal of the income tax, impeachment of Chief Justice Earl Warren, withdrawal from NATO and the United Nations and dumping programs such as urban renewal. In the guise of fighting communism, the radical right is subverting and attacking the basic principles and policies of American democracy.

This lunatic fringe operating in its own limited sphere is symptomatic of a reaction to the tensions of the cold war. As a symptom it merits attention, especially when its spokesmen turn up in the top echelons of the military.

The use of armed forces indoctrination courses to peddle the disordered libels of the John Birch Society is a breach of democratic tradition. No military organization or military leader has the right or authority under the American system of democracy to promote a political program within the armed forces.

The action of Sen. J. William Fulbright (D-Ark.) and other members of the Senate in exposing the radical right's infiltration of a part of the armed forces in a service to the nation. The Administration's order to prevent future indoctrination by political generals is in keeping with the traditions of our democratic philosophy.

Whose Integrity Is Smirched?

THE BUREAU OF LABOR STATISTICS in the words of its commissioner, Ewan Clague, is "an old and honored agency" that has created and maintained a reputation for integrity.

The statistics it produces on employment and unemployment, consumer prices, wage scales and a long list of other important economic areas are vital to the functioning of the economy. Labor and management have agreed for years to accept the figures produced by BLS on the basis of data gathered by its own surveys or by other government agencies.

Into this situation comes the multi-million circulation Reader's Digest with a grossly distorted and factually misleading attack on the BLS, making the incredible claim that the bureau is magnifying the unemployment problem to justify new federal "spending" programs.

The BLS has exposed the Digest article in a devastating analysis of its distortions, inaccuracies and misrepresentations. Top Administration leaders have quickly defended the integrity of BLS and assailed the Digest for its irresponsible action.

The integrity of the BLS is beyond question; not so that of the Reader's Digest.

Joblessness: 6.8 Percent

THE NUB OF THE GOVERNMENT'S REPORT on unemployment in September is the failure of the economy to achieve more than an expected seasonal improvement in joblessness.

Adjusted for seasonal variations, the unemployment rate in September remained virtually unchanged at 6.8 percent of the labor force—a rate that has stuck at about this level for the past ten months.

Economists are forecasting a drop in the unemployment rate for the month of October. We hope they're right—10 months is an intolerable period to have nearly 7 out of every 100 workers seeking employment ending up on the jobless rolls; especially in contrast to the signs of economic recovery in other areas of the economy.

We Call This 'Indoctrination'

New Paperback Volume:

Wayward Pressman Belabors Wayward Press in Book Form

By Alexander Uhl

THE FACT THAT the American press, owned by millionaires, overwhelmingly is Republican, generally anti-labor and anti-liberal and that its columns reflect this, an old, old story. But when the story is told by a master-writer, ironic, painstakingly accurate and utterly devastating, then it is a new and lively story.

A. J. Liebling, caustic author of "The Wayward Press" in the New Yorker, has just brought up to date a number of his articles and republished them in paperback book form called The Press, issued by Ballantine Books at 75 cents a copy. It is a big 75 cents worth.

Take what he has to say about today's "great" publishers:

"The men of the new order do not meddle with the locals as long as they come up with the tithe. They are, for the public, faceless and their coups are often inside jobs. Hearst tried to take cities by storm, but the new men prefer a rendezvous at the back gate.

"Mr. Samuel I. Newhouse, the archtype, specializes in disgruntling heritors, or profiting by this disgruntlement. A family feud is grist to his mill, but if he can't get a paper that way he will talk beautifully of the satisfactions of cash, rapidly quoting sections of the capital-gains law as he accepts his hat. If the owner shows him the door, he exhibits no resentment."

With this kind of ownership, it is no wonder that anything liberal or labor gets the full treatment from most of the press either on the political front or the labor front. Liebling cites chapter and verse.

Labor is always "stubborn" in the press dictionary, while management is always devoted to "principles." The strikers are always victimizing the public, "not, I could not help noting, the management."

Analyzing the Long Island Railroad strike of 1960, Liebling cites the editorials that berated the railroad unions for callously using "their power to cause intolerable disruption of the daily lives of myriads of innocent bystanders in labor-management rows." But not a word about management and its "power to prevent intolerable disruption."

"The truth appeared to be that neither side had got all it wanted," Liebling declared after the strike was over, "and that what the newspapers called pigheadedness in a railroad conductor is what they call devotion to principle in a railroad president."

Liebling picked up from there to analyze the reporting on the recent maritime strike in New York City which produced indignant cries that "664 maritime workers" were tieing up the town by their stubbornness in a dispute with 11 railroads.

"The corollary, that 11 railroad presidents were being equally stubborn," Liebling added, "was left for the reader to figure out for himself.

"No newspaper anywhere in the nation, apparently, has had a kind word for the working man since about 1936—on this point. The press is not lopsided, but unilateral, monolithic, solidary and unanimous."

The Newburgh story of cracking down on relief recipents for the benefit of the taxpayers even if it means taking it out on helpless children is an old one to Liebling. He was writing about the same sort of thing in New York back in 1947 when some of the wealthiest newspapers were headlining stories about the "woman in mink with $60,000" living on relief in a hotel and how the "lady in mink" became a symbol for claims that relief "clients" were chiseling the city.

IN THE END the "mink" coat turned out to be a mangy, old garment with a torn lining; the people who had been "living in hotels" at the expense of the taxpayers, turned out to be a handful of people who had been placed in modest hotels for emergency reasons and the grand jury "investigation" that was supposed to shock the world fizzled out into nothing.

As early as 14 years ago Liebling suggested that labor unions, citizens' organizations and possibly political parties should back daily papers of their own.

"These," he said, "will represent definite, undisguised points of view and will serve as controls on the large profit-making papers expressing definite, ill-disguised points of view."

He cited the Labor Party's Daily Herald in England, but that was before the party gave up control of the paper. As things stand now, Liebling glumly concludes, nothing much is being done to combat today's single-minded, rich man's press.

Morgan Says:

Integration Has Practical Side, South's Businessmen Discover

By Edward P. Morgan

(This column is excerpted from the nightly broadcasts of Edward P. Morgan, ABC commentator sponsored by the AFL-CIO. Listen to Morgan over the ABC network Monday through Friday at 7 p. m., EDT.)

THOUGH THERE IS a long, hard and even treacherous trail left to climb, the way of desegregation has taken a heartening turn for the better. Breaking with a practice that has stood for 100 years, the city of Memphis, Tenn., followed Atlanta, Ga., and Dallas, Tex., in the orderly, if token, introduction of Negro children into formerly all-white classrooms. The walls of Memphis are still standing and although there is always the chance of delayed reprisals, city authorities are breathing more easily.

Morgan

If there is a vibration through the thoroughfares of this old metropolis of the Deep South perhaps it is a muted trumpet note of triumph from Beale Street where the blues of that jazz master, W. C. Handy, can henceforth be a little less blue because 13 Negro first-graders desegregated four public schools without incident.

Has the civilized approach suddenly triumphed over the savagery of racial violence? It is not, of course, so simple. But respectable elements are having an influence which they did not exert before, and one of these, interestingly enough, is the business community.

The latest issue of Business Week, a responsible and highly respected magazine, attributes the September successes in Dallas, New Orleans and Atlanta, including the defeat of a die-hard segregationist for mayor in the Georgian capital, in large measure to the dramatic fact that "businessmen in many southern cities have decided to play an active role in navigating the . . . difficult shoals of race relations, especially where this issue affects business growth."

In other, blunter words, perhaps, merchants, bankers, manufacturers and other pillars of the Chamber of Commerce are moving to support law and order in the transition to fulfillment of constitutional rights because it is good business, because they have found that boycotts and the turmoil of a racially-inflamed community have cost them money. As one citizen of Dallas sardonically put it, "they did the right thing for the wrong reasons."

That may be too harsh an observation. Moral principles need not be eroded just because they find themselves in the same van with expediency. Idealism would not get very far if it did not, now and then, have practical support. The winner in Atlanta's mayoralty election is a businessman, Ivan Allen, Jr., and the Business Week article says some of his backers "make clear that they regard the election as a test of the ability of the business community to play a public role in handling racial matters that they see as linked to problems of industrial and business growth."

The move in Memphis was different. There was no preconditioning of the city on the scale of Atlanta's public meetings, discussions and conferences on adjustment. In fact the residents of Memphis didn't know until police moved out in massive force to prevent disorders.

SOME OBSERVERS wonder whether this "closed" method may not breed a delayed reaction of violence without more overt and long-range efforts to change public attitudes. But the school board appears confident that won't happen. For one thing, one member told this reporter, "the newspapers and the broadcasting stations have done an excellent job in reporting the Atlanta story, the Dallas story" and other helpful illustrations of adjustment. For another thing, quietly, very quietly, a biracial group of responsible citizens has been dealing with the problems behind the scenes. This is a vital factor. It means communication between divergent elements of the city, a circumstance that did not exist in Little Rock or New Orleans in their days of shame and terror —which now, encouragingly, may have been put permanently in the past in both communities.

A mere glance at the reports of the U.S. Civil Rights Commission on education and voting rights reveals instantly how much hard work there is still to be done before the enjoyment of civil rights can become a reality not just in the South but in many other parts of the country. The commission's report in depth on discrimination in housing will reveal vicious practices proving that prejudice is not an exclusive southern product; there are ghastly stockpiles of it north of the Mason-Dixon line.

But, hopefully, a combination of human decency and sheer economics will make gradual headway on this problem too. When landlords and real estate agents discover, as they will, that discrimination is not only unprincipled and illegal but unprofitable, they will get the message, as businessmen in Atlanta, Memphis, Dallas and elsewhere are already getting it at lunch counters, in schoolrooms, on buses, in the public parks and even in their hearts.

Washington Reports:

Rival Senate Whips List Tasks Senate Left for 2nd Session

THE FIRST SESSION of the 87th Congress passed much-needed legislation but left a number of uncompleted tasks for action in the second session next year, Sen. Hubert Humphrey (D-Minn.), majority whip, and Sen. Thomas H. Kuchel (R-Calif.), minority whip, asserted in the final 1961 Washington Reports to the People, AFL-CIO public service program heard on 450 radio stations.

"This has been a doing Congress, a working Congress and next year we will add the finishing touches to this stage in American history," Humphrey said.

Kuchel said that the Republican Party cooperated with the Democrats in such measures as minimum wage, highways, housing, urban development and defense. The Republican whip denounced some of those members of Congress who cut back foreign aid.

"I very much regret that some in the Congress and in the country have opposed even our giving military assistance to free peoples," he asserted.

Both said a fight will be made next year for federal aid for school construction and teacher salaries. Humphrey said he was hopeful of success in such efforts, but "I must confess that we have run into some very difficult situations in this field."

"But we are not quitting, nor is the President quitting," he asserted.

KUCHEL SAID that whether federal aid is passed next year depends upon the public.

"Not unless the people of this country realize that we need to give young people in America the best possible education (will there be action in this field)," he declared.

"I must say there is no justification for the almost 1 million children in the country who attend schools half-days because we do not either have the school houses or the school teachers to cope with the burgeoning population. The problem of educating the youth of America is one that concerns every family in this land."

Humphrey said that both Congress and the President "started (with the beginning of the Administration) to meet the recession head on." Toward this end he mentioned area redevelopment, temporary unemployment compensation extension, improvement of the minimum wage, the expansion of the highway program. He also included on the plus side social security legislation, the airport program, military construction, the farm bill, peace corps, water pollution control, migratory labor, foreign aid, reorganization of the defense structure ("which for some years had been permitted to deteriorate in the name of economy").

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

THE 27TH ANNUAL CONFERENCE of southern governors was marked by significant evidences of the great psychological and social changes that are to come. The speeches made sense, the proposals made sense, and an acceptance of reality was in the air.

Said Nashville's Mayor Ben West, welcoming the governors to his city, and fully conscious of the racial and economic problems that haunt the South's heritage:

"In our beloved Southland we can no longer sit under our magnolia trees, and sip our mint juleps, and plunk on our banjoes."

By common consent the so-called race issue was brushed aside, which may not strike outlanders as exactly the way to deal with it but which nevertheless shows a maturity that onetime Sen. Tom-Tom Heflin of Alabama, who fought the Catholics and promoted racism with equal fervor, would never have understood. The governors met as schools in three more major southern cities were desegregated, peacefully and decently, and nobody thought it politically or morally desirable to stir up mob violence.

THE RACE ISSUE arose indirectly in the choice of a new chairman. Gov. Orval Faubus of Arkansas is the senior governor, and by tradition thus entitled to head the group. But Faubus is the governor who roused the Little Rock mobs several years ago, and he apparently was compelled to recognize that he didn't have the votes to win.

A nominating committee headed by Virginia's Gov. J. Lindsay Almond, Jr., who broke Sen. Harry F. Byrd's "massive resistance" policy on Virginia schools, proposed Gov. Buford Ellington of Tennessee as new chairman.

An attempt was made by Governors John Patterson of Alabama and Jimmie H. Davis of Louisiana to substitute Faubus, but Faubus himself withdrew his name, saying he didn't think the conference was the place for "political competition." The New York Times reported that an unnamed southern governor, with obvious relief, commented:

"To make an omelet you've got to break some eggs. It was the only way to come out of it alive."

The conference was not free of the familiar "states" rights' theme, expressed in a charge that the federal government shows "unrelenting encroachment" in the field of water use. But Ellington warned that the South's more serious problems "jump far beyond the boundary lines of our states." On foreign policy, "the states must join the federal government in reaching those decisions that control the future of the world." The conference rose in spontaneous support of Pres. Kennedy's United Nations speech.

MOST SIGNIFICANT OF ALL, perhaps, was the attention the group gave the South's economic plight—a plight compounded of wasted natural resources, exhausted farm soils, extremely low per capita income, and exploitation of its workers by fly-by-night industry, often pirated away from other sections by the ignoble proffer of non-union men and women driven by poverty to accept a bare living.

A committee on industrial development headed by Gov. S. Ernest Vandiver of Georgia warned that the South must diversify its economy. There should be an effort to attract "research-born industries," the committee said. More vocational training should go to produce skilled workers. The South should make greater use of the research facilities of its own universities.

The southern states, said the astounding report adopted by the conference, should "cease 'shooting with a shotgun'" to "bag any and all (business) enterprises," regardless of what stability they could offer and what they would contribute to improving a community's welfare, and "use the 'rifle approach' in order to interest industries paying high wages."

Political and business leaders thinking in terms of raising per capita income, thinking of the need for diversifying industry to give their economy a stable and enduring foundation, thinking of training workers and equipping them to earn high wages, are sometimes in short supply in almost any state. The South seems to be getting lucky.

MEDICAL CARE FOR THE AGED under social security will be acted on in the second session of the 87th Congress, Sen. Hubert Humphrey (D-Minn.), majority whip, on left, asserted on Washington Reports to the People, AFL-CIO public service radio program. Sen. Thomas H. Kuchel (R-Calif.), minority whip, on the same program urged public backing of federal aid for education.

Opponents Look Again at Health Plan for Elderly

A couple of chinks have appeared in the defenses organized medicine uses against health care for the aged through the Social Security System:

• The Board of Trustees of the American Hospital Association, at a meeting in Atlantic City, voted to recommend to its House of Delegates a plan for a special review by the trustees, in cooperation with the Blue Cross Association, for the preparation of a new report to the association on health care for the aged. The recommendation specifically called for a study of "legislative possibilities of utilizing the social security mechanism," but without what the trustees called "objectionable provisions" of bills introduced in Congress to date. The association has stood since 1958 on a statement opposing the Social Security approach "at this time."

• The American Medical Association broke precedent by opening the columns of its Journal to an article on "Health Care Under Social Security" by Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey (D-Minn.), one of the co-sponsors of the labor-backed King-Anderson bill to set up a health care program under social security.

The hospital association trustees tacitly conceded that the Kerr-Mills Act passed last year, under which a program of federal matching grants to the states for health care for the aged was set up, has failed to meet the health problems of the aged. "Unfortunately," its statement said, there has been "little or no action in certain state legislatures."

NAM 'Pullout' from ILO Hit as Default of Duty

tions and research into world labor conditions, establishes policies through international treaties in such areas as freedom of association and condemnation of slave labor, and provides technical assistance for emerging nations. Each nation is represented at the ILO annual sessions by one employer, one worker and two government delegates.

Meany pointed out that in the last ILO session last June, despite refusal of the NAM to participate, Soviet bloc delegates suffered "a series of decisive defeats. The basic principle of a free labor movement, independent of government, was overwhelmingly reaffirmed."

Meany added:

"We in the AFL-CIO are deeply committed to the proposition that while employers and unions in America may disagree on terms and conditions of employment, they are united in their devotion to human freedom.

"The way to demonstrate that unity," Meany said, "is to stand firm against totalitarianism in such world forums as the ILO. No battle can be won by running away."

Chamber of Commerce Pres. Richard Wagner, who headed the employer delegation to the ILO's last session, said he feels "very strongly" that American businessmen should continue to participate in ILO activities.

In an interview broadcast by the Voice of America, Wagner praised the ILO for having "contributed a great deal toward dignifying those who labor and improving working condtions all over the world."

He said the organization is "an excellent forum where we businessmen as American citizens should do things to improve to the greatest extent possible the image of this country in the minds of other people and to also improve understanding."

AIW Convention Votes To Build Strike Fund

Chicago—After two days of heated debate, the 500 delegates to the 13th convention of the Allied Industrial Workers voted 241 to 183 for a 50-cents-a-month strike fund. Starting Jan. 1, 1962, the AIW strike fund will be deducted from union dues.

The fund will be built up to approximately $500,000 in the first year, after which strike benefits will be paid to members engaged in authorized strikes. AIW President Carl W. Griepentrog said the fund "will strengthen the bargaining position of every AIW local and improve the bargaining atmosphere for every AIW member even if he never walks a picket line."

Benefits Proposed

Striking members will get a $15 check during the third week of a walkout and will receive weekly increases of $2.50 until the benefits reach $25 a week. Benefits will continue indefinitely, and one extra benefit will be paid after the first week of a return to work.

The strike fund was the major issue of the four-day convention here. Minor changes were made in the union's constitution. Election of officers will be held at the next biennial gathering.

In a telegram to the AIW delegates, Pres. Kennedy said:

"The Allied Industrial Workers have done an outstanding job during the past year to highlight the serious issues confronting the American people at home and abroad."

Assistant Labor Sec. Jerry Holleman, final convention speaker, told the delegates that workers in small manufacturing companies must be prepared to meet changing job requirements or face unemployment. The time is approaching, Holleman said, when many of these workers will need new or refined skills to meet new job demands.

Other convention speakers included Carl Rowan, deputy assistant secretary of state for public affairs; James G. Patton, president of the National Farmers Union; Leon Keyserling, chairman of the Council for Economic Progress; Al Barkan, deputy director of the AFL-CIO Committee on Political Education; Nelson Cruikshank, director of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Social Security; Joseph Lewis, secretary-treasurer of the AFL-CIO Union Label & Service Trades Dept.

Historic Blackpool Conference:

British Labor Shifts Policy, Reverses Nuclear Arms Call

Blackpool, England—The British Labor Party, in a major turnabout, has reversed the unilateral disarmament policy adopted a year ago which had created a sharp schism in its ranks.

Three of the four major trade unions that had provided the bulk of support for the arms policy that brought the party "to the brink of disaster," as Party Chairman R. H. S. Crossman said, switched their position to the "policy for peace" proposed by the party executive.

These were the Amalgamated Engineering Union, Railwaymen, and Shop, Distributive & Allied Workers. Their shift was presaged by a similar stand at the British Trades Union Congress last month. Only the huge Transport & General Workers Union continued to back the old policy and it went down to defeat as it had at the TUC convention.

The new policy grew from what Crossman called the "imperative from below"—the demand of party workers that the breach between the conference and Labor members of Parliament be healed. It had the support as well of the TUC, the party executive and the parliamentary Labor Party.

It reaffirms "multilateral and comprehensive disarmament under international control," coupled with a steady increase in the power and scope of the United Nations. It advocates agreements to ban nuclear testing, proposes establishment of a "non-nuclear" zone of controlled disarmament in central Europe, and backs British support of the North Atlantic Treaty Alliance (NATO).

Nuclear Tests Hit

It "deplores" Soviet resumption of nuclear tests, expresses "regret" that the United States felt it necessary to resume its tests and calls for East-West negotiations on Berlin.

The vote to reverse the Labor Party's approach was 4.53 million to 1.76 million and was a dramatic victory for Party Leader Hugh Gaitskell, who last year repudiated the "ban the bomb" disarmament policy.

The conference, the party's 60th, was held in an atmosphere of mounting confidence growing out of a Gallup Poll report giving Labor its most substantial lead in five years over the ruling Conservatives.

The feeling of unity was momentarily jarred, but left unimpaired, by a sharp 45-minute debate over expulsion of the Electrical Trades Union. The discussion was marked by foot-stamping and hooting, but the national executive's action was upheld in a card vote. The convention found that the union was "managed and controlled" to serve the Communist Party. Its action followed a similar step by the TUC congress.

With only a few dissenting voices, and climaxed by Gaitskell's call to service, the party reached agreement on a broad domestic program.

It included selective public ownership, the party's new name for nationalization of industry. The debate touched off a sharp exchange between Gaitskell and Gen. Sec. Frank Cousins of the Transport & General Workers, who accused the leader of "taking the party away from socialism."

Other platform planks were planned expansion of the economy, accelerated research and development programs, a heavy accent on broader social services, democratic education and "fair taxation."

The conference vigorously condemned the Conservative government's "pay pause" policy, charging it with destruction of long-standing wage council procedures for setting pay rates for public, semi-public and some industrial workers.

George Googe Of Pressmen Dies at 61

Pressmen's Home, Tenn.—George L. Googe, secretary-treasurer of the Pressmen since 1952 and southern regional director for the former AFL from 1928 to 1949, died of a heart attack here on Sept. 29. He was 61.

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany and Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler expressed "extreme sorrow" at the news, and wired the union that Googe, "whose leadership has contributed so much to the well-being of the American workers, will be greatly missed, not only by the members of his own union but by the countless thousands he helped all over the country."

A native of Claxton, Ga., Googe made his home in Atlanta, where he was buried. He entered the printing industry at the age of 10 on the Brunswick, Ga., Journal.

In 1925 he was elected a vice president of the Georgia Federation of Labor, a year later became the youngest alderman ever elected in Savannah, and in 1948 was chosen a vice president of the Pressmen. He was widely known in political circles, having been a delegate to every Democratic National Convention since 1928.

He was a vice president of the Intl. Allied Printing Trades Association and of the AFL-CIO Union Label & Service Trades Dept.

Article by Minton Gets World-Wide Play

An article by Pres. Lee W. Minton of the Glass Bottle Blowers will be given wide distribution by the United States Information Service, the union has announced.

The article, headed "Collective Bargaining At Its Best," appeared in the union's publication Glass Horizons and was reprinted in the book Labor's Story.

'Work' Forces Appeal For New Idaho Drive

Twin Falls, Ida.—Businessmen here have been urged to try again to outlaw the union shop in Idaho—despite defeats suffered by so-called "right-to-work" supporters in a 1958 referendum and in this year's session of the legislature.

Three nationally-prominent leaders of the so-called "right-to-work" movement, including the chairman of the U.S. Chamber of Commerce's new Special Committee for Voluntary Unionism, came to this city of 42,000 to beat the drums for state and federal anti-labor laws and for repeal of both the Davis-Bacon and Walsh-Healey prevailing wage laws. They spoke at a "labor relations dinner" of the Twin Falls Chamber of Commerce.

Wofford B. Camp, treasurer of the U.S. Chamber of Commerce and head of its "work" committee, told the group how he and other big California growers had "organized" and "beaten down" efforts of farm workers to organize. "We did not lose a battle," he declared.

Lucius P. Chase, vice president and general counsel of the Kohler Co., dated what he branded as labor's "ominous power" to the New Deal Administration of Pres. Roosevelt. He called for a drive to repeal both the Walsh-Healey Act of 1936, which sets minimum wages for manufacturing industries doing business with the government, and the Davis-Bacon Act, passed in 1931 during the Hoover Administration, establishing area prevailing wage scales for federal public works and public building construction.

Chase's firm, the Kohler Co. of Sheboygan, Wis., has a long record of union-busting and is now seeking to upset an NLRB decision holding it guilty of unfair labor practices in a seven-year-old Auto Workers strike.

Harry J. Lambeth, a staff attorney of the U.S. Chamber of Commerce and editor of its Labor Relations Letter, called for a letter-writing campaign in support of legislation to put unions under anti-trust laws. Such a law, he said, would prevent industry-wide strikes. He told his audience that "union influence is overwhelming in Congress."

Lambeth urged a two-edged drive for enactment of a "right-to-work" law, through a referendum petition and through the legislature.

Chemical Worker 'Citizen of Year'

Marshall Jacobs of Falls Church, Va., a member of Chemical Workers Local 63, was named winner of the "citizen of the year" award instituted this year by the Washington, D. C., Gas Light Co.

A gas company serviceman, he was presented with a silver trophy by Donald S. Bittinger, company president. He was chosen for the honor by an independent board of judges in recognition of 20 years of work with teenagers in Metropolitan Washington through coaching teams in the American Legion Junior Baseball League.

Two other members of Local 63 were among five-runners-up who received certificates of award for good citizenship. They were Edgar A. Beall, Annandale, Va., and Percy H. Butler, Washington.

Pilots Ask Reversal Of CAB Examiner

Chicago—The Air Line Pilots will ask the Civil Aeronautics Board to reverse a trial examiner's report holding that Southern Airways had bargained in good faith and had not violated the Railway Labor Act in a dispute with its pilots.

The only issue in the dispute, ALPA Pres. C. N. Sayen declared, is whether Southern's veteran pilots are to be returned to their proper seniority positions ahead of newly-hired strikebreakers and accorded grievance rights. Both of these rights, he asserted, are guaranteed by the Railway Labor Act.

Convention Cheered:

Woodworkers Plan Organizing Step-Up

Miami Beach—The 22nd constitutional convention of the Woodworkers opened here on a note of optimism paced by the officers' report indicating a step-up in organizational efforts in the United States and Canada.

Oregon's Sen. Wayne Morse (D) reminded the more than 300 delegates that the recent conference of southern governors had been warned that the reason industries brought South are not proving economically advantageous is because "the appeals made for industrial location in the South have been invariably stressed on the availability of non-union labor, and non-union labor is going to be low-wage labor."

Morse pointed out that the recently-adjourned Congress had appropriated $52 billion for defense, foreign aid and space exploration—"all of which was needed and will prove a great stimulus to American business.

"However," he continued, "the ugly question arises—suppose we devote ourselves to military and civil defense for the next decade and there is no war. Will we find ourselves armed to the teeth and ready to run for our concrete dugouts, waiting for war that does not come?"

An all-out drive to organize workers in the Newfoundland woods—where the IWA fought the hostile government of Premier J. R. Smallwood—will be conducted, the convention was told.

"We will rally all of our resources and might to bring organization to those stalwarts whose union was literally legislated out of business by an antagonistic government," Pres. A. F. Hartung told the cheering convention.

Officers to serve for the ensuing term were to be nominated later in the convention. Balloting, as usual, will be conducted by mail with the entire union membership participating.

All resolutions approved by the convention likewise must be ratified by referendum.

Other speakers included assistant Labor Sec. Esther Peterson, Organizational Dir. Nick Zonarich, of the AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept., Vice Pres. William Dodge of the Canadian Labor Congress, Al Barkan, deputy director of COPE, and Adolph Germer, veteran union leader who formerly was IWA organization director.

Actors Urge U. S. Probe of Runaway Films

Hollywood, Calif.—The Actors & Artists' executive board has asked Congress to hold public hearings on the problem of "runaway" production of American motion pictures in other countries.

Meeting here for the first time, the board said foreign production is "depriving American artists and technicians of tens of thousands of jobs" and argued that congressional action is needed.

Rep. John H. Dent (D-Pa.), chairman of a special House subcommittee on the effect of imports and exports on jobs, was urged to hold hearings and make recommendations to Congress to "remedy the present deplorable situation."

Pres. Conrad Nagel presided at the meeting of the AFL-CIO parent body of performers' unions—Actors Equity, Television & Radio Artists, Musical Artists, Variety Artists, Screen Actors and Screen Extras.

REGISTRATION CAMPAIGN sponsored by New York City AFL-CIO, aimed at registration of all union members for the upcoming municipal election, was carried to a mass rally of hospital workers. The newly-formed Brotherhood Party, supported by the labor council, is backing Mayor Robert F. Wagner, also candidate of the Democratic and Liberal Parties. Shown (left to right) Sec.-Treas. Cleveland Robinson of Retail-Wholesale Dist. 65; Mayor Wagner; Rev. Martin Luther King, and Pres. Leon J. Davis of Retail-Wholesale Local 1199.

Why 'Work' Is Bad Labor Aides Tell

Labor commissioners in states which ban the union shop tell why they think "Right-to-Work Is a Bad Law" in a pamphlet by that title issued by the National Council for Industrial Peace.

The pamphlet is based on testimony by Labor Commissioner Marion E. Martin of Maine to her state's legislature when a "right-to-work" law was being considered. She included replies to queries.

Copies of the pamphlet are available free from the Council at 1074 National Press Building, Washington 4, D.C.

NLRB Shifts, Holds Agency Shop Subject to Bargaining in Indiana

establish the agency shop as a lawful subject for collective bargaining in all states that do not have "right-to-work" laws and at least in Indiana among the states that do.

It remains to be seen what the board will decide if similar cases arise in other "right-to-work" states, the spokesman said. He noted that because the parties had agreed to bypass the state law, the NLRB majority reached its decision under Sec. 8(a)(3) of the act—which permits union-security agreements—and did not reach the question of Sec. 14(b)—which permits states to outlaw the union shop.

Nineteen states now have "right-to-work" statutes in force. Some of them purport to ban the agency shop along with the union shop, while others make no mention of the subject. In Florida as well as Indiana state courts have ruled the agency shop to be a legal form of union security.

The board spokesman noted that while interest in the agency shop has grown in recent years, that type of union security clause actually pre-dates the Taft-Hartley Act. The first agency shop on record, he said, was negotiated in 1939 by the IBEW with the Utah Power & Light Co.

He added that federal statistics show that about 6 percent of all contracts now contain the agency shop.

Followed Court Ruling

The UAW case arose following the Indiana Appellate Court's 1959 decision. The union submitted proposals for an agency shop to cover GM employes at the nine Indiana plants and filed an unfair practice charge after the company refused to bargain on the subject. The complaint was dismissed in the NLRB ruling last February.

The board voted to reconsider the case at the request of the UAW and the NLRB general counsel. Supporting briefs were filed by the AFL-CIO, the Retail Clerks, the Commercial Telegraphers, the Steelworkers, and the Indiana Building & Construction Trades Council.

In reversing the earlier decision, the NLRB majority held the agency shop to be a lesser form of union security than the union shop, declaring that there was "no doubt" as to its legality in the light of the legislative history of the act, plus board and court decisions.

The majority cited a Supreme Court decision of 1954, which said:

"This legislative history clearly indicates that Congress intended to prevent utilization of union security agreements for any purpose other than to compel payment of union dues and fees.

"Thus Congress recognized the validity of union's concern about 'free riders,' i.e., employes who receive the benefits of union representation but are unwilling to contribute their share of financial support to such union, and gave unions the power to contract to meet that problem while withholding from unions the power to cause the discharge of employes for any other reason."

"Certainly," observed the NLRB majority, "the Supreme Court clarified that which Congress sought to permit in the area of union security and that which it sought to limit."

Subject to Appeal

The ruling may be appealed by GM to the federal courts. The Supreme Court already has been asked to review a decision of the Kansas courts holding that the state's generally-worded "right-to-work" law bars agency shop agreements as well as the union shop.

In his dissent, Leedom argued that Indiana's "right-to-work" law had a direct bearing on the case and that the majority was applying a broad definition of union membership in one section of the act and a narrow definition in another.

He contended, further, that under the agency shop non-members would not be entitled to some benefits "guaranteed union members" but would have the same dues-paying requirements.

Priority Tags Given 5 Bills in Congress

tice cases would pass Congress even though a presidential reorganization plan was defeated this year in the House.

Session a 'Success'

Biemiller, interviewed on the Mutual Broadcasting network's Labor News Conference, described the first session of the 87th Congress as "a success" from labor's viewpoint.

He cited enactment of a minimum wage bill, depressed area legislation and "the most comprehensive housing bill that Congress has ever passed" as highlights of the first session.

The AFL-CIO legislative director gave credit to "Pres. Kennedy and his White House aides and other members of the Administration" for enactment of progressive legislation despite the fact that there were "21 fewer well-defined liberals in the House of Representatives in the 87th Congress than there were in the 86th."

Biemiller said "a liberal Administration directed by a vigorous young President made a tremendous difference in getting bills passed."

Conceding that the Administration suffered a setback on federal aid to education during the first session, Biemiller predicted that when congressmen return home during the recess and talk to their constituents "they will change their minds and get back to work on this very important question."

There are still "many children who are going to school on a platoon system or in dilapidated buildings," he noted.

Health Care Backing Grows

Likewise, he said, there is growing support for health care for the aged and "every reason to believe that a bill will pass in the next session."

Biemiller also predicted congressional approval of pending legislation strengthening the Welfare & Pension Plan Disclosure Act and establishing a cabinet Dept. of Urban Affairs.

He said he did not think legislation to put unions under the anti-trust laws would "go very far" and added that any attempt to pass such legislation would be "resisted vigorously" by the AFL-CIO.

The AFL-CIO's legislative director praised the Kennedy Administration for using its executive power in support of civil rights and anti-discrimination policies. Biemiller called for strengthening of voting rights and added:

"We believe very strongly that there should be a system worked out of assistance to school districts to establish desegregated schools, and we will back such legislation."

Kennedy High, Congress Lags In CWA Poll

Members of the Communications Workers have given Pres. Kennedy and his Administration a strong vote of confidence, but are sharply divided on whether Congress has done a good job.

In a poll conducted by CWA as part of a continuing series, a fat 69.1 percent of the members polled considered Kennedy "an effective President," 18.6 percent disagreed and 12.3 percent said they didn't know.

His Administration "performed creditably," 60.1 percent declared. Another 28.9 percent disagreed and 11 percent had no opinion.

In evaluating Congress—as of mid-summer when the mail ballots were sent to a random cross-section of CWA members — members divided three ways in response to the question:

"Has the Democratic 87th Congress done a good job for the American people?"

The "yes" vote was 38.1 percent.

Another 32.2 percent answered "no."

A large 29.7 percent said they didn't know.

Papermakers Elect New West Coast VP

Portland, Ore.—Oscar Robertson of LaMirada, Calif., is the newest vice president and regional director of the Papermakers & Paperworkers. A UPP international representative since 1956, he was elected at a special convention here to replace Al E. Brown, now UPP vice president at Albany, N. Y.

Birch-Military Link Seen Threat to U.S.

Biemiller Warns of Danger to Security

Boston—The linking of the "radical reactionaries" of the John Birch Society and high officers of the armed forces presents a "considerable danger" to America's security, Andrew J. Biemiller, AFL-CIO director of legislation, declared here.

In an address to the Massachusetts State AFL-CIO Biemiller declared the AFL-CIO believes with the Administration that "no military leader has the right to promote any political program among his own troops or among the public as a whole."

This holds especially, he emphasized, when military leaders link up with the John Birch Society and its "fellow travelers." Biemiller stressed that:

"When a group of wealthy, fanatical men undertakes to destroy public confidence in American leaders, past and present; in American institutions; in social progress, and even in the ability of the people to govern themselves, they are eating away at the fiber of our country and our way of life."

Biemiller traced activities of the Birch Society, "the bitter enemies of democracy itself," and its leader, Robert Welch, from their emergence a year ago with attacks on former Pres. Eisenhower and other American leaders. He described the society's second phase as marked by an attack on all progressive and liberal aspects of American domestic and foreign policies. In this phase it became clear, said Biemiller, that "the labor movement was and still is a primary target."

Link With Military Hit

The third phase, the link-up with the military, is "far more serious," the AFL-CIO legislative director said, because it made the Birch society respectable to "reactionaries of every stripe."

The involvement of the military started in 1958 when Eisenhower, then President, ordered use of military personnel and facilities to arouse the public to the menace of the cold war.

Citing the statement of Sen. J. William Fulbright (D-Ark.), who helped expose the link-up in a memorandum to Defense Sec. Robert S. McNamara, that the background and training of military officers does not equip them with the "balance of judgment" to deal with the total strategy for the nuclear age, Biemiller pointed to the historic and constitutional tradition of civilian control of the armed forces.

Officers attempting to carry out the 1958 directive, he said, turned "in many instances to civilian groups that seemed to have simple, direct answers to the nation's complex problems—groups like the John Birch society."

The result, he added, is the "spectacle of military leaders undermining confidence in the nation they themselves are sworn to defend. I say it's no longer laughable; it's monstrous."

Civilian Control Lost

Biemiller asserted that Maj. Gen. Edwin A. Walker of the 24th Infantry Division stationed in Germany, an admitted member of the Birch society, in his indoctrination of American troops overturned the policy of civilian control, because "an officer in the U.S. service has no more right to take public issue with his commander-in-chief than a sergeant has to agitate against the orders of a general."

If the Birch brand of philosophy is "Americanism," Biemiller said, "Khrushchev can relax." The nation must stand for an Americanism that the Birch followers "have never learned."

"We must stand together as a whole people, jointly committed to the general welfare . . . This kind of Americanism, the real kind, means more social security, not less; economic well-being for all, not just a few; more real equality; more genuine community of interests; more efforts to achieve, through government and all other channels, the perfection of our democracy."

In this outlook there is no place for the "direct, black-and-white concepts of the military mind; there is no place for the child-like, red-and-white concepts" of the Birchers.

ICFTU Protests Libyan Arrests

Brussels, Belgium—The Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions has asked the Intl. Labor Organization to intervene immediately in Libya to avert what it called a possible breakdown of trade union activities in that country.

The request followed the arrests of 20 union leaders during a strike called to enforce a wage raise granted by a bipartite commission. Among those arrested was Salem Shita, general secretary of the Libyan General Workers Union and a substitute member of the ILO governing body. An ICFTU mission has been denied entry into the country.

The ICFTU plans to file a formal complaint with the ILO charging the Libyan government with violating international labor conventions on the freedom of association and collective bargaining. It has contributed $1,000 to the relief of the strikers' families.

Dixon Urges Strengthened Trust Laws

Federal Trade Commission Chairman Paul Rand Dixon has urged heavier fines and mandatory jail sentences for repeated violations of anti-trust laws.

Testifying before the Senate Anti-Trust committee, Dixon also endorsed legislation which would hold top officials of a law-breaking firm responsible if there was "reasonable cause" for them to be aware that subordinates were violating anti-trust laws. The bills were introduced by Subcommittee Chairman Estes Kefauver (D-Tenn.). Dixon was counsel for the subcommittee before his appointment to the FTC.

Citing the anti-trust case against major electrical equipment manufacturers in which 45 second and third echelon officials were fined or sent to jail, Dixon remarked:

"Somewhere at the top, responsibility just seemed to disappear. I think the top officials ought to be responsible."

Both Dixon and a spokesman for the government's General Services Administration endorsed another bill which would require bidders on government contracts to certify that there was no collusion in the bidding.

'Seasonal' Dip Holds Joblessness Near 7%

- "Long-term" unemployment of more than 27 weeks declined by 150,000 to about 750,000.
- Involuntary part-time employment among non-agricultural workers for economic reasons dropped by 600,000 to 2.5 million, or to about the same level as in September 1960.

The number of people without jobs for 15 weeks or longer was 452,000 more than the 805,000 listed a year ago for September 1960. Those unemployed 27 weeks or longer totaled 243,000 more than a year earlier, when 417,000 were in this category.

Against these "favorable" indicators Wolfbein posed two adverse factors:

- Continuation of the unemployment rate at a high level.
- Continued unemployment of nearly 1.5 million among workers out of jobs 15 weeks or more.

The report also showed a seasonal fall in the work force, which declined from 73 million in August to 71.1 million as college and high school students left jobs and returned to their classes.

Wolfbein said that on the basis of the favorable factors, October might show "some real improvement," although it may be hard to tell the difference between real improvement and the snap-back from Carla. October is usually the low spot of the year for unemployment.

In answer to a query he said that if the unemployment rate of 6.8 percent were maintained this month, the October total of unemployed would be about 3.9 million and would be below 4 million for the first time since October 1960, when it was 3.6 million. He said he was "very hopeful" that an improvement in the rate will be shown by the end of the year.

Kennedy Aides Defend Employment Figures

"rash of uninformed and unscientific attacks on the unemployment statistics of the U.S. government."

Citing the BLS and the Census Bureau, the latter of which actually gathers the statistics Clague's bureau publishes, Heller paid tribute to their "competence and integrity" despite the "occasional vulgar attacks" on them.

The Council of Economic Advisers, he said, saw "no misleading signals" arising from present techniques of gathering information on jobs and joblessness. Other evidence, to the contrary, "indicates clearly that the overall statistics are delivering their message loud and clear," despite "biased broadsides and barbed innundoes" against them.

Hodges in a statement said:

"I have every confidence" that the Census Bureau's surveys of employment and unemployment "are based on the most advanced methods devised for sample surveys." He continued:

"The results give us an accurate picture of what we have chosen to measure, namely, the extent to which we are fully utilizing our available manpower. . . . We have sought, and will continue to seek, the most accurate picture of employment conditions in the U.S."

Hodges in speeches and press conferences has continually referred to existing joblessness—shown by the BLS to be stuck for 10 months at nearly 7 percent of the work force—as a troublesome symptom despite general business recovery from the recession.

Expert Advice Used

Goldberg, asked directly about the Digest article in an Oct. 2 press conference, pointed out that the techniques for gathering the job figures "have been developed throughout the years through several administrations, Republican and Democratic, based upon the advice of the best experts available" in and out of the government.

"They are the most accurate figures of any nation in the world," he said, "and reflect the best informed judgment on how figures of this type should be maintained."

Critical articles, he continued, "do not reflect an accurate knowledge of what our figures state. . . . I am satisfied that our figures are accurate figures."

Performers' Unions to Aid Rome Parley

Pres. Herman Kenin of the Musicians and Henry Kaiser, general counsel of the AFM, have been designated by the U.S. government to serve as advisers to the official delegation at the Diplomatic Conference on Neighboring Rights in Rome, Italy, Oct. 10-26.

Together with Executive Sec. Donald F. Conaway and Morton Becker, general counsel of the Television & Radio Artists, they will join U.S. representatives and others at a conference called to complete the drafting of international treaties recognizing and safeguarding performers' rights to recordings played in foreign countries.

The AFM has tried for many years to bring about such a treaty in the field of performers' rights.

In 1949 Kenin was an American delegate to a conference of the ILO Committee on Salaried Employes and Professional Workers, and there for the first time presented the views of professional musicians on the reproduction of copyrighted material.

Kenin said he hopes the Rome conference will achieve the goal—"adequate protection for the rights of musicians in broadcasting, television, and the mechanical reproduction of sound under international copyright laws."

Cancer Drive Honors Mrs. Roosevelt

Federal Charters Opened To Bolting Teamster Locals

RESOLUTION PLEDGING the AFL-CIO to raise $1 million for the Eleanor Roosevelt Cancer Foundation is presented to the First Lady of the Free World by AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany at the New York meeting of the Executive Council which adopted it. The presentation took place on Mrs. Roosevelt's 77th birthday.

Tribute to Mrs. Roosevelt:

'March on Cancer' Has $1 Million Goal

New York—The AFL-CIO has given Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt a 77th birthday gift of a $1 million pledge to help fight the most terrible disease of our time—cancer.

It presented the First Lady of the Free World with a copy of a resolution pledging to raise the $1 million for the Eleanor Roosevelt Cancer Foundation, on the basis of a dime per member, by the opening of the federation's convention on Dec. 7.

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany told reporters that "labor's march on cancer" in November is designed to honor a "very wonderful woman," as he urged every AFL-CIO affiliate and every federation member to "join wholeheartedly" in the nationwide drive.

Mrs. Roosevelt expressed her appreciation for this "very grateful, very wonderful move." The initiative and interest of the labor movement in this campaign, she said, means a great deal to the country and to the world.

At a press conference later she praised the AFL-CIO announcement that the federation will pay for all administrative costs and that the entire sum raised will go to the foundation to build new cancer research facilities and to sponsor an international fellowship program for training cancer research scientists.

Kennedy Bids Fund Drive 'All Success'

New York—Pres. John F. Kennedy has wished "all success" to the AFL-CIO campaign to raise $1 million from its affiliates and their members for the Eleanor Roosevelt Cancer Foundation.

In a telegram to federation Pres. George Meany at the Executive Council meeting here, Kennedy said he was "delighted" to learn of the campaign.

"Your decision to undertake this special effort in behalf of the general welfare, at a time when you are also confronted with many problems of direct and immediate concern to your members, exemplifies again the spirit of public service that is traditional in the American labor movement," Kennedy's message said.

Organizing Spotlighted By Board

By Willard Shelton

New York—A proposal for stepped-up organizing activities, including methods of getting joint agreement where various unions are involved in a specific organizing campaign, is anticipated for the AFL-CIO convention next December, Federation Pres. George Meany has said here.

Meany told a press conference following a meeting of the federation's General Board that "one of the major problems" in organizing the unorganized arises when "more than one" AFL-CIO affiliate is active in a particular organizing situation.

The federation cannot sponsor a joint effort, Meany said, "unless the unions involved are really in joint agreement."

He said there would be "some specific proposal" arising from the Executive Council and presented to the convention to meet the problem.

Meany made his remarks after the General Board devoted its meeting exclusively to the question of organization and the "changing pattern" of the country's working force, with a heavy increase in white collar and service trades employment and a proportional decrease in workers in production and other blue collar occupations.

The General Board, which under the AFL-CIO constitution

IBT Reaffiliation Rejected by Council

By Saul Miller

New York—The AFL-CIO will issue federal local union charters to Teamster locals "not happy" with the Hoffa regime which "indicate a desire to join the ranks" of the federation.

The council empowered Pres. George Meany and Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler to issue the charters after rejecting overwhelmingly a proposal to invite the Teamsters with present leadership to rejoin the AFL-CIO.

The actions on the Teamster issue highlighted the fall meeting at which the council launched a dime-a-member drive to raise $1 million for the Eleanor Roosevelt Cancer Foundation by Dec. 7, tagged the first session of the 87th Congress a "qualified success" and called for an intensive lobbying campaign to improve the record in the second session. (See other stories, this page.)

The three-day session followed a meeting of the AFL-CIO General Board devoted exclusively to organizing which indicated that proposals for stepped-up organizing activities, including methods of reaching joint agreements on campaigns, are expected to come before the federation's fourth convention opening Dec. 7 in Miami Beach. (See story, this page.)

On the question of a federation internal disputes plan, Meany said the council subcommittee headed by Vice Pres. Al J. Hayes made a "progress report" to the meeting here and plans a series of sessions before the next council meeting to try to complete its report. He said the next few subcommittee meetings would determine if "real progress" can be made, adding "I am hopeful."

The internal disputes subcommittee had submitted a partial progress report at the last Executive Council meeting in June. The unit was set up as a result of action by the AFL-CIO convention at San Francisco in September 1959 adopting a policy of "final and binding" arbitration to handle internal disputes and instructing the council to develop a detailed plan and procedures.

Meany announced at a press conference that the resolution on the issuance of federal charters was adopted by a vote of 24 to 2 with one abstention. He said that voting against the proposal were Vice Presidents Joseph Curran and William L. McFetridge. Vice Pres. Joseph A. Beirne abstained on the ground that the resolution did not go far enough.

The earlier vote on rejecting a proposal by the Transport Workers for readmission of the Teamsters under the union's present leadership was rejected 25 to 2, Meany announced, with

Congress Seen 'Qualified Success'; Problems of 'Magnitude' Remain

New York — The first session of the 87th Congress was a "qualified success," with the most productive record since 1933 offset by the "magnitude" of problems left unsolved.

The second session, said the AFL-CIO Executive Council in a unanimously adopted statement here, depends on how loud and clear the voices of union members and other citizens can be heard on Capitol Hill. Personal letters and visits can help it surpass the achievements of the first session and head off any trend to reaction, the council said.

The council analysis declared that presidential leadership and reform of the House Rules Committee were key elements in securing passage of long-sought and badly-needed social measures including wage-hour improvements, aid to depressed areas, housing, unemployment compensation, water pollution and social security benefits.

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany told a press conference that while the reform in the Rules Committee was "quite an improvement," it was "not as effective as we had hoped it would be."

The council statement credited the Kennedy Administration for securing passage of an "impressive array" of other legislation including aid to dependent children, community health facilities, disarmament agency, the Peace Corps and highway and airport construction.

But, the statement, continued, "we cannot and should not ignore the failures, which unhappily have a cruel and immediate impact upon all wage-earners, their children and their parents, and upon our country's efforts to strengthen democracy everywhere on earth."

The list of failures included

AFL-CIO GENERAL BOARD, meeting in New York Oct. 9, discusses opportunities and problems in organizing workers presently outside unions, with special attention to shifting patterns of employment and growth of the civilian labor force.

'Inhumanity to Man':

Council Denounces Newburgh Aid Curbs

New York—The AFL-CIO Executive Council condemned the "punitive measures" proposed for public welfare recipients in Newburgh, N. Y., as "another stark symbol of man's inhumanity to man."

The council voiced its condemnation in approving a report of the Community Services Committee declaring that "we oppose all such proposals for humanitarian reasons, because of their callous disregard for the self-respect and dignity of the human person and because they would not solve the very real problem of general assistance."

Organized labor believes, the council said, that the necessity for public assistance can be kept to a minimum through adequate, comprehensive social insurance programs, through full employment at a living wage, through the elimination of slums and causes of dependency rooted in discriminatory employment practices and through education and training for jobs in a changing economy.

The controversial Newburgh plan consisted of a 13-point program of curtailment which Leo Perlis, director of AFL-CIO Community Services Activities, branded "a complete denial of human rights."

Applicants Photographed

It included photographing of relief recipients; denial of relief to unmarried mothers who bear more illegitimate children; a maximum of three months of relief except for the aged, blind and disabled; requirement of evidence of employment for new arrivals, and the assignment of ablebodied male relief recipients to city work.

State Atty.-Gen. Louis J. Lefkowitz on behalf of the State Board of Social Welfare obtained a temporary injunction from State Supreme Court Justice John Donahue barring enforcement of 12 of the 13 points in Newburgh's program. The lone point permitted is a requirement that able welfare recipients report to the city welfare department monthly for review of their cases.

The council approved also CSC reports spelling out the role of labor in organizing community recreation, and a memorandum of understanding with government agencies on participation in civil defense emergency welfare services. The memorandum pledged to stress to union members the necessity for union participation in civil defense planning and to help determine how skilled union manpower may be most effectively used in "meeting a national emergency."

The council approved also a committee proposal to name Whitney M. Young, Jr., executive director of the National Urban League, and the Rev. Sheldon Rahn, executive director of the Dept. of Social Welfare, National Council of Churches, to the National Advisory Council of the Community Services Committee.

'High Compliment' Missing—Meany

New York—A "$1 million" lawsuit against AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, charging libel and slander, was threatened in a television interview here by James R. Hoffa, president of the ousted Teamsters Union. Said Hoffa: The suit would be filed in federal court.

Meany, in a press conference, told reporters that he had been "told" about the Hoffa declaration, but as to being served with a court summons:

"I haven't been paid that high compliment yet."

Congress Held Qualified Success; Problems of 'Magnitude' Remain

the "neglect of high and continuing unemployment," the council said, adding that "the Administration and Congress were gravely remiss in ignoring two measures—a temporary cut in the withholding income tax and a program of short-term public works projects—that would have created millions of jobs."

Congress also deferred "with little justification" a bill to assist in the retraining and relocation of workers victimized by automation, the council said.

Another area of congressional failure listed was federal aid to education. The council noted that "an unfortunate religious dispute developed which was fomented and exploited by the foes of federal aid with such insidious skill that the basic aid measures were strangled in a parliamentary tangle." The question of medical care for the aged, it recalled, did not get beyond the committee hearing stage.

The council said the second session offers an opportunity for action on better regulation of health and welfare funds, improved federal standards for unemployment compensation, tax revision, situs picketing legislation and National Labor Relations Board reform.

It noted the President's veto of a bill to strengthen the longevity pay system in the postal service, adding that it regretted the action and expressing the hope the President will change his view when he "re-examines the question next year."

A "disheartening development," the council said, was the success of the "reactionary coalition" in cutting down the foreign aid bill to "less than adequate terms."

A high level of statesmanship will be needed next year, the council warned, when the issue of extending the reciprocal trade program comes up. It called for an intensive campaign of letters and visits to make it clear that "what's good for the country is also good for members of Congress."

Building Trades Back Ban on Bias in Training

New York—The AFL-CIO Building & Construction Trades Dept. executive board has endorsed testimony by Department Pres. C. J. Haggerty supporting a bill by Rep. Adam Clayton Powell (D-N.Y.) to eliminate race discrimination from apprentice training programs.

Existing apprenticeship programs must be expanded to meet the demand for skilled craftsmen, the board said. The need is made "imperative" by the "growing shift of the labor force from unskilled and semi-skilled workers to highly-skilled occupations."

The necessary expansion must be accomplished with "no artificial limit imposed by race discrimination," the statement said.

The board called on all national and international unions affiliated with the department to use their good offices with local management-union joint apprenticeship committees "to increase their quota of new apprentices to meet the anticipated demand."

In addition to urging local support of the department's national anti-discrimination policy, the board declared it is backing the Powell bill "to provide a firm legal foundation for this policy."

Powell, sponsor of the apprenticeship bill, is chairman of the House Labor Committee. AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, in subcommittee hearings on the measure, called for a Fair Employment Practices Act to meet all problems of employment discrimination on grounds of race, creed or national origin.

Joseph Landis Dies, Led Teachers in '40s

Cleveland, Ohio — Joseph F. Landis, president of the Teachers from 1943 to 1948, died here at 70.

An English teacher in two high schools here from 1917 to his retirement in 1957, Landis was president of the Cleveland Teachers Credit Union at his death. He had helped form the Cleveland Teachers Union in the 30's and was its president from 1939 to 1944. Later he was an American delegate to the the Mexico City conference of UNESCO.

Ousted IBEW Local Loses on Appeal

The executive council of the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers has rejected an appeal of IBEW Local 28, Baltimore, against revocation of its charter by Pres. Gordon M. Freeman.

The council found that Freeman acted properly when he refused authorization of a strike of 1,400 Local 28 members against electrical contractors last June 19, when he ordered the local not to strike, and when he revoked the charter after the walkout began. The suspended local has one more avenue of union appeal—the IBEW convention in 1962.

Since the charter lifting, the union has approved the application of new Local 24 in Baltimore and has issued a charter.

Railroad Merger Seen Threat to Jobs, Defense

New York—The AFL-CIO Executive Council has expressed "its grave concern" over the threat to economic recovery, future transportation and the needs of national defense posed by the railroad merger situation.

The current spate of applications to merge railroads—receiving extremely rapid action from the Interstate Commerce Commission—threatens to throw another 200,000 railroad workers on the unemployment rolls, the council said.

It pledged that the entire American labor movement will stand united behind the rail unions "in their efforts to defeat the pending unsound railroad merger proposals."

The statement called on Congress and the Administration to act immediately to protect the public interest "from the seriously adverse effects which would result if the plans of the financial interests controlling the railroad industry to deprive the nation of adequate rail facilities by unsound railroad mergers were to be approved."

Garment Union Presses Runaway Firm's Return

Philadelphia—The Ladies Garment Workers has filed two actions in U.S. courts to compel a "runaway" dress manufacturer to reopen his plant in Philadelphia and to pay damages to the 215 union members who lost their jobs.

The court petitions were directed at forcing Sidele Fashions, Inc., which moved to a non-union plant in Ware Shoals, S. C., two years ago, to carry out a National Labor Relations Board decision and an arbitrator's finding.

Union attorneys took these actions:

- They asked the 3rd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals to modify the NLRB decision by ordering Sidele to return its plant to Philadelphia.
- They asked the U.S. District Court here to enforce the ruling of G. Allan Dash, Jr., garment industry arbitrator, that Sidele must re-establish a blouse manufacturing plant here or pay almost $400,000 in damages to former employes and the ILGWU's Phildelphia Dress Joint Board.

The arbiter's ruling was made two months ago. When the employer made no move to comply, the union went into court.

The NLRB decision, by a three-member panel, was that the company violated the labor law by moving its plant in order to wring contract concessions from the union.

The panel ordered Sidele and its owners, Mac J. Cahn and Sidney L. Schiro, to take these steps:

Offer all those who lost their jobs reinstatement at a plant in the Phildelphia area, if the firm resumes operations here, or to offer them jobs at the Ware Shoals plant; to pay all travel and moving expenses of former employes and their families; to pay all wage losses of each laid-off employe from the date he was terminated here to the date of an offer of reinstatement or to the date that he secures "substantially equivalent employment."

Textile Base Pay Up in Puerto Rico

Increases of 3.5 cents to 15 cents an hour in minimum wage rates for the textile products industry in Puerto Rico have been ordered by Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg as of Nov. 3 under the provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act.

The secretary issued a wage order based on the recommendations of a committee which met in San Juan, P. R. The committee recommended, and Goldberg approved, new rates ranging from 64 cents to $1.15 for several classes of workers.

Charters Opened to Bolting IBT Locals

Council Votes 25-2 to Reject Proposal for IBT Reaffiliation

Vice Presidents Curran and A. Phillip Randolph recorded against the council's action.

Meany stressed that on the readmission vote he was asked to make it clear that the "people who voted against the motion are not in favor of corruption." Two members of the council—Vice Presidents Walter P. Reuther and Maurice A. Hutcheson—were not present for either vote. Reuther was in Detroit negotiating a new contract at the Ford Motor Co. and Hutcheson is ill.

Meany said that an existing file of applications from various Teamster locals seeking affiliation with the AFL-CIO would be carefully viewed before any action is taken. He said that any Teamster local desiring a federal local union charter from the AFL-CIO must break with the Teamsters before applying.

At an earlier press conference the federation president had indicated that he had received about 100 applications in the past year or so from Teamster groups seeking federation affiliation and that 40 of these had come since Aug. 1.

Meany stressed that no special machinery was being created to process these applications and that the existing departments and staffs of the AFL-CIO would function as they always have in terms of chartering independent groups seeking direct affiliation with the federation.

The text of the statement adopted by the Executive Council is as follows:

"It is the sense of this meeting of the Executive Council that the executive officers are empowered to use their judgment as to the issuance of federal charters to local groups who leave the Teamsters Intl. Union and who indicate a desire to join the ranks of the AFL-CIO and to give these groups all the support that an affiliate of the AFL-CIO is entitled to receive."

Meany said that the council had discussed a resolution submitted by Beirne, and adopted by the executive board of the Communications Workers, asking creation of a new AFL-CIO union or organizing committee to organize teamsters, and that the council's action disposed of the CWA resolution.

Meany noted in reply to a query that at the Teamsters convention in Miami in July, Teamsters' Pres. James R. Hoffa had said he intended to organize and charter local unions in any jurisdiction that was not satisfied with its present affiliation.

Meany said the action of the council was to charter any local that is "not happy" with Hoffa.

'Large Number' of Inquiries

He said he did not know how many local unions will leave the Teamsters but reaffirmed that he had received "a large number" of inquiries.

Meany said the council decision against the Transport Workers proposal for readmission of the Teamsters indicated faith in the AFL-CIO's constitutional provision against corruption and a reaffirmation of its determination to stamp out all traces of corruption.

He referred specifically to the section of the constitution which under the heading of "Object and Principles" declares that one of the major objectives is "to protect the labor movement from any and all corrupt influences and from the undermining efforts of Communist agencies and all others who are opposed to the basic principles of our democracy and free and democratic unionism."

Meany told reporters, in reply to questions, that nothing has happened since expulsion of the Teamsters in 1957 to indicate there has been any change for the better and that, in fact, there is every indication that the union "more than ever is now under the domination of corrupt and criminal elements." He said the record of the Ethical Practices Committee hearings showed that Teamster Pres. James R. Hoffa is unfit "by our ethics" to be head of a trade union.

Asked on what grounds the Teamsters might be readmitted, Meany said they can again become members of the AFL-CIO by conforming to decisions and recommendations of the 1957 convention and to the ethical practices codes. He stressed that a key factor also is the constitutional section dealing with corruption.

Can Be Brought Up

Meany made it clear that the question of Teamsters reaffiliation can come up at the AFL-CIO's convention scheduled to open in Miami Beach Dec. 7 and that any matter can be brought up by delegates.

He said that Vice Pres. James A. Suffridge made the motion to reject the proposal for an invitation to the Teamsters and that the motion was seconded by "17 other vice presidents."

The TWU resolution was sent to the council by its president, Michael J. Quill, with a letter declaring that the resolution was adopted at the recent convention of the union in New York.

The council rejected unanimously another portion of the TWU proposal calling on the council to set up a committee to amend the constitution and to allow disciplining and expulsion of any individual officer or member of an AFL-CIO union.

Meany said that this approach runs contrary to the entire structure of the AFL-CIO, under which unions discipline their own members. He noted that the federation can discipline an international union only for its actions or in some cases for failure to act on activities of its own officers if those activities conflict with the constitution of the AFL-CIO.

Told by reporters that Sen. John L. McClellan (D-Ark.) had expressed to newsmen support for the chartering of a new union to oppose the Teamsters, Meany commented, "We can run the affairs of the AFL-CIO without the gratuitous advice" of McClellan.

In other actions the council:

- Called on Congress and the Administration to protect the public interest from the adverse effects of railroad mergers. (See story, page 2.)

- Commended the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers for bringing the original unfair labor charges against the General Electric Co. that have resulted in a National Labor Relations Board hearing on the "bargaining by ultimatum" issue.

- Condemned the "punitive measures" proposed for public welfare recipients in Newburgh, N. Y., as another "stark symbol of man's inhumanity to man," and approved other Community Service Committee reports on community recreation, civil defense emergency welfare services and new members of the National Advisory Committee. (See story, page 2.)

- Greeted the formation of the National Council of Senior Citizens for Health Care through Social Security.

- Heard a report from Meany that "for all practical purposes" mergers of local central bodies are now complete. The final state merger took place in New Jersey last month. An extension beyond the Oct. 1 deadline set earlier by the council was granted to the Chicago groups, with unresolved issues to go to Meany. About a half-dozen local central body charters have been revoked in Michigan, New Jersey and Ohio. Most central bodies are near merger agreement in New Jersey.

- Heard a case involving the Leather Goods Workers and the Meat Cutters involving transfer of membership from the latter to the former in Chicago, Los Angeles and Montreal, affecting some 2,000 workers. Meany said the unions had agreed to meet and set up ground rules to cover the transfer.

- Rejected an appeal by the former president of the Minneapolis Central Labor Union, Walter Cramond, from his suspension by Meany on grounds of handling the body's financial affairs in a slipshod and careless manner. In upholding Meany, the council noted that there was no problem of dishonesty involved.

FACTUAL PRESENTATION on obstacles and opportunities in organizing and analysis of growth of unions and number of workers was given General Board by AFL-CIO Dir. of Organization John W. Livingston (top) and Dir. of Research Stanley H. Ruttenberg. (Story, pages 1 and 3.)

IN PRESS CONFERENCE at close of General Board meeting, Meany tells reporters that AFL-CIO convention in December will receive proposals on organizing activities, including methods of getting agreement where more than one union is involved in specific organizing campaigns.

Outlook for Organizing Absorbs General Board

meets at least once a year, is composed of the president or chief executive officer of each of the federation's 133 national and international affiliates, plus members of the Executive Council and a spokesman of each of the federation's six trade and organization departments.

The board heard a report on organizing problems from AFL-CIO Director of Organization John W. Livingston and an analysis of major changes in the patterns of employment and kinds of jobs from Director of Research Stanley H. Ruttenberg.

No Formal Action

There were "no votes" or formal resolutions in the General Board, Meany told reporters. The discussion by individual speakers was constructive, offering both "ideas" and "proposals," he said, which would be considered by the Executive Council for presentation of an organizing program to the federation convention scheduled to open Dec. 7 in Miami Beach.

The problem of organization was complicated, Meany said, by the fact that "as production increases, employment doesn't."

"Every recession," he said, seems to leave us with management showing a greater degree of efficiency, "so that more is produced" with fewer workers.

The unemployment situation, he said, seems likely to "continue to be bad," with as high a percentage of joblessness probable "this coming January as there was last January."

The jobless ratio, according to Bureau of Labor Statistics figures, has been stuck for 10 successive months at just under 7 percent of the total labor force.

'Not Organizing Enough'

The "consensus" of the General Board meeting, Meany told reporters, was "that we are not organizing enough, and that we ought to do something about it."

"I think the merged labor movement could do better" than it has done in the organizing field, he said.

The labor movement is nevertheless in "very good shape" despite the "whacking away" at unions by the press, and by so-called "right-to-work" committees, and by businessmen's trade associations such as the Chamber of Commerce and the National Association of Manufacturers.

An agreement to handle problems created by competitive organizing operations by more than one AFL-CIO affiliate, he indicated, did not have to wait for a settlement of "all jurisdictional problems" between unions.

Organization has been denied in competitive situations "to any number of workers who would wish to come into the AFL-CIO," he told his press conference, and if this situation is settled, a failure to solve "all problems" does not mean that "we cannot move in the organizing field."

The board gave a warm welcome to New York's Mayor Robert F. Wagner, who is running for reelection in November with the nomination of the city's Democratic and Liberal parties and the additional nomination of the newly-formed Brotherhood Party created by AFL-CIO unions affiliated with the New York City Central Labor Council.

Wagner told the board that New York has a million members of organized labor and that they have helped make it "a city in the forefront of social progress."

"Human and humanitarian values will always come first," said Wagner, "at least as long as I have anything to say about it."

Meany said in reply to a question that he was not "satisfied" with the Kennedy Administration's programs for meeting long-range unemployment. "I think they've done something but I don't think they've done enough," he said.

Elders' Council on Health Care Hailed

New York — The formation of the National Council of Senior Citizens for Health Care through Social Security was greeted by the AFL-CIO Executive Council as another indication of growing popular support for a soundly based health care program.

The new council, formed under the chairmanship of former Rep. Aimee J. Forand (D-R. I.), includes 50 senior citizen groups. The federation council urged all national and international unions and state and city central bodies to "cooperate with this new organization in any way that seems appropriate."

FHA 'Mercy' Plan Off to Slow Start

Homeowners and mortgage lenders have been slow to take advantage of regulatory changes by the Federal Housing Administration designed to help them avoid foreclosures.

Although the new regulations went into effect four months ago, an FHA spokesman said there has been surprisingly little activity under them so far, even though unemployment has continued at nearly 7 percent through the year.

The changes are intended to cut red tape in the application of two provisions of the Housing Act of 1959 that permit the FHA commissioner in certain cases to acquire defaulted mortgages insured by the FHA or to work out extended moratoriums on the monthly payments of homeowners.

The commissioner may take either of these steps if he finds the buyer has fallen behind in his payments through no fault of his own and if there is a good chance that he will be able to catch up later.

The first few applications for assignment of defaulted mortgages have just been received by the FHA, the spokesman said, and the number of grace period extensions—or "forbearances"—also has been low.

He attributed this to lack of widespread knowledge of the new regulations, rather than any reluctance on the part of lenders to cooperate.

"Most lenders, being businessmen, are willing to take these steps to keep a mortgage going," he said. "They have nothing to gain by foreclosing when this course is open."

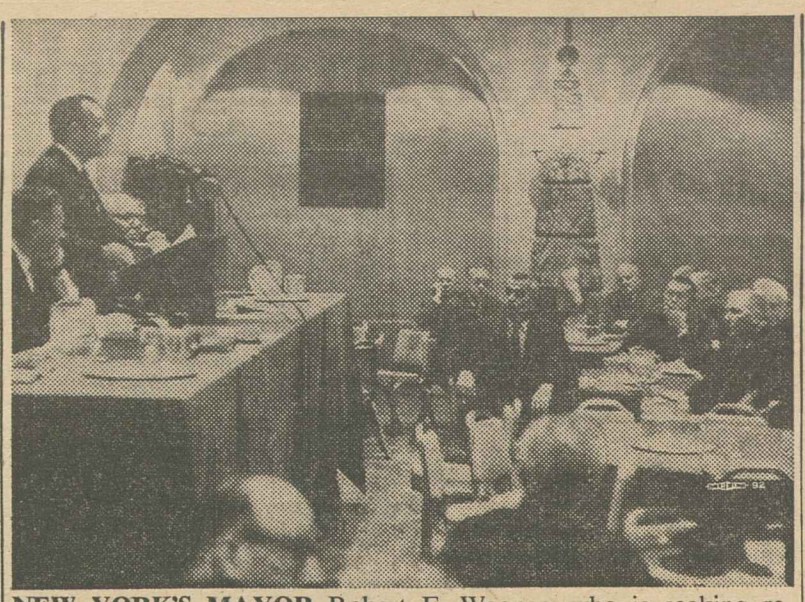
Homeowners having trouble meeting monthly payments on their FHA-insured mortgages because of unemployment or other economic distress should consult their lenders, who then may initiate requests for extended grace periods, the FHA advised.

August Strike Days At Post-War Low

The number of strikes during August set new low post-World War II records for the month in number of workers involved, the number of days lost, and the percentage of working time lost, the Bureau of Labor Statistics has reported.

BLS said an estimated 325 stoppages began in August, and 225 continued from July. They involved 160,000 workers who were idle for 1.32 million man-days or 0.13 percent of all working time.

July strikes also were at their lowest level since the war.



NEW YORK'S MAYOR Robert F. Wagner, who is seeking reelection next month, welcomes AFL-CIO General Board to city. Wagner won Democratic nomination against opposition of old-line machine, is also nominee of Liberal Party and newly-organized Brotherhood Party set up by AFL-CIO Central Labor Council.

Actors' Union to Bar Theater Segregation

New York—Members of Actors' Equity, in a major policy decision, have announced they will not perform in any legitimate theater in the United States or Canada where segregation is practiced on either side of the footlights. The policy will take effect June 1, 1962.

The decision was announced by the union at its first general membership meeting of the 1961-1962 season. Executive Sec. Angus Duncan of Equity revealed these details:

- Beginning next June 1, each theater booking contract will have a clause providing that no discrimination or segregation will be practiced against any actor or theater patron because of race, creed or color.
- Agreement on the principle of the new policy was reached by theater owners and Equity last May, and desegregation was made a joint venture of the union and the League of New York Theaters.
- Equity has received pledges of "complete cooperation" from the Theatrical Stage Employes, and has reason to believe that other theatrical unions will cooperate.

Broadway shows are booked for out-of-town showings by the League of New York Theaters through an independent booking office. Contracts for such bookings are between the actors' union and the league.

Equity made a significant breakthrough toward desegregation by agreement with the theater league in regard to Washington, D. C., in 1948. Since then it has reported making "quiet progress" in desegregating legitimate theaters in St. Louis, Baltimore and other cities, Duncan said, but decided this year that progress has been too slow.

The effective date of the desegregation agreement was postponed to June to allow time for present contracts with theaters to expire.

Praises Theater League

Duncan praised the theater league for its willingness to "make desegregation a joint venture." The league, because of a basic agreement expiring only in 1964, could have refused to discuss the subject now.

Said Duncan: "Equity and the league both realize that some jobs and some profits may be sacrificed to this principle, for worthwhile gains are not easily won. But we have chosen our course, and Equity is grateful to all those whose cooperation makes this achievement possible."

2 Postal Unions Rap Raise Veto

Two AFL-CIO postal unions have voiced strong disappointment at Pres. Kennedy's veto of a bill to raise longevity pay for long-service postal workers.

The President said in his veto message that "budgetary needs are too urgent to permit approval" of the bill without an accompanying increase in postage rates. Congress failed to act on an Administration rate-rise proposal.

Letter Carriers Pres. William C. Doherty commented: "Disappointment almost reaches the point of disenchantment when one finds that the President has fallen into the old fallacy of equating postal employe benefits with postal rates." He said the union's executive council will be called into special session "to determine our future course on postal wages."

The Postal Clerks, in a bulletin to members, declared: "We fail to see the connection between the duty of a government to provide its employes with an equitable salary and a postal rate increase."

Maritime Unions Blast Sears' Trade Fair Role

New York—The AFL-CIO Maritime Trades Dept. has sharply criticized Commerce Sec. Luther H. Hodges for refusing to "remove" Sears, Roebuck & Co. as the American representative of the retailing industry in a forthcoming trade fair in Lima, Peru.

The department's executive board, in a meeting here, adopted a resolution supporting a consumers' boycott against the Sears chain.

The Retail Clerks, the Maritime Trades board pointed out, are currently picketing "a large number of Sears stores" in protest of a policy of "open warfare upon organized labor."

Sears spokesmen have admitted before a Senate committee the "use of illegal and unprincipled methods" in resisting unions, the board recounted.

The company has "resorted to use of labor spies," has "spitefully discharged employes for adhering to union principles" and has "affronted organized labor" in every U.S. city, the resolution stated.

The AFL-CIO Executive Council has backed the Retail Clerks boycott of Sears, the Maritime Trades Dept. noted. The boycott should be backed, it declared, "until this corporation ceases to welsh upon its agreements" with the Retail Clerks "and recognizes the principle of fair dealing with organized labor as a whole."

The Maritime Trades board also backed Canadian and U.S. members of the Seafarers Intl. Union in a dispute with British and Canadian shipping companies involving picketing of the ship Northern Venture.

The resolution charged the U.S. State Dept., Labor Dept., and Commerce Dept. with resorting "to every available forum . . . to deprive Canadian seamen of their rights" and called on the agencies to "cease and desist."

2.6 Million Handicapped Placed Over 10 Years

Jobs have been found for 2.6 million handicapped workers in the past decade through the 1,800 local officers of the Federal-State Public Employment Office system, according to Sec. of Labor Arthur J. Goldberg.

In the last fiscal year, he said, there were 252,925 placements compared to 293,000 in fiscal 1960.

Goldberg Sees Advance:

'Seasonal' Changes Mark Job Picture

By Robert B. Cooney

Changes in the job situation between August and September were "mainly seasonal" but there were signs of "continuing recovery" in the recession-battered hard goods industries, Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg has declared.

The Labor Dept.'s detailed job report for September disclosed a rise of 509,000 workers on non-farm payrolls to push the total to an all-time high of 53.9 million. A spurt of 360,000 in state and local government jobs as schools reopened made up most of the increase, with manufacturing adding 150,000.

Earlier, the Labor Dept. had reported a decline of 457,000 in unemployment to a total of 4.1 million, leaving the seasonally adjusted jobless rate at 6.8 percent. The jobless rate has hovered just under 7 percent for 10 straight months.

A separate Labor Dept. survey showed job improvements in two-thirds of the nation's 150 major labor market areas. The total areas with substantial unemployment—joblessness of 6 percent or higher—declined from 85 in August to 72 in September. This compared to 42 a year ago and an all-time record of 101 areas at the recession low point last February.

In an accompanying statement, Goldberg said the detailed job report for September showed "notable improvement" since February. He said non-farm jobs had risen by 2.6 million—double the seasonal upturn for this period and with 500,000 of the gain occurring "among the hard goods industries which bore the brunt of the recession."

'Hard Goods' Jobs Rise

The "hard goods" or durable goods sector of manufacturing showed a job rise of 129,000 between August and September to a total of 9.3 million. This total was still 123,000 below September 1960.

Goldberg listed as a favorable factor in the job picture an hours and earnings gain among factory workers since February. He also cited in September a more than seasonal drop in adult male unemployment and declines in long-term unemployment and involuntary part-time work.

Saying he was "hopeful" of a drop in the jobless rate, Goldberg asserted this would still leave problems of long-term unemployment and the need for retraining of workers and he again urged congressional passage of an Administration-proposed development and training bill.

The September report showed a more-than-seasonal drop of 183,000 to a total of 1.26 million long-term unemployed — those jobless 15 weeks or longer. This group totaled 805,000 a year ago. The figure was at a postwar low of 149,000 in 1953.

The group of those jobless 27 weeks or longer declined by 153,000 to a total of 760,000, "still nearly twice the level of a year ago."

"There were 800,000 teenagers among the unemployed in September, one-fifth of the jobless total," the report said.

Of the younger teenagers, half were not in school fulltime. There were about 850,000 in the 14- to 17-year age bracket who were in the labor force and not in school, with an unadjusted jobless rate of 22 percent, the report noted.

Largely because of a drop in average hours, arising from the 10-day General Motors strike, weekly earnings of factory workers in September fell by more than $1 to $92.66. This still was $1.58 above a year earlier.

Dr. Seymour Wolfbein, Labor Dept. manpower expert, said Hurricane Carla had reduced agricultural and construction employment.

Labor Conventions Set For Remainder of 1961

$1 Million for 'March on Cancer'

WORLD HEALTH AWARD to Gen. Omar N. Bradley (center), board chairman of the Eleanor Roosevelt Cancer Foundation, draws approving smiles from Pres. Kennedy and Mrs. Roosevelt.

Fund Drive Asks Dime A Member

She expressed special gratification "about the educational activity which will be conducted by labor through the foundation" with the goal of saving lives through early detection and diagnosis.

Mrs. Roosevelt, who has written a syndicated newspaper column since her days in the White House, is a longtime member of the Newspaper Guild.

The council resolution recalled that union members, even more than other Americans, owe "an unpayable debt" to Franklin D. Roosevelt and now have the opportunity to honor Mrs. Roosevelt and her own "greatness."

The situation with respect to cancer today, the council said, is similar to that of infantile paralysis a generation ago. For many years the labor movement gave unstinting support to the March of Dimes; "while the result of this mass assault on that disease was long in coming, it was surely worth every cent and every ounce of effort."

Therefore, the council declared, "we pledge to raise from our affiliated unions and their members the sum of $1 million at the rate of 10 cents a member, to be turned over to the Eleanor Roosevelt Cancer Foundation at our convention in December."

In a letter to the presidents of affiliated unions, Meany said the campaign "should have the most moving appeal to everyone in our ranks."

"It is, of course, a welcome opportunity to prove our abiding admiration, respect and affection for a great citizen who is beyond dispute the First Lady of the free world; and by indirection, perhaps, to pay tribute again to the memory of the leader who restored and preserved the American way of life, Franklin D. Roosevelt," he said.

MRS. FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT
55 EAST 74TH STREET
NEW YORK CITY 21, N. Y.

August 19,1961

Dear Mr. Meany,

I have just been informed of the plans adopted by the AFL-CIO to raise $ 1,000,000 for the Cancer Foundation. This is a most generous action and I wish to express my deep appreciation to you and to all the members of the trade unions who are making this possible.

I was especially gratified to learn that the labor movement will organize an educational campaign through the Foundation to acquaint working people and their families about the cancer problem. Such a campaign can be helpful in saving lives through spreading knowledge about cancer warning signs and through encouraging timely medical examinations.

Very sincerely yours,

Eleanor Roosevelt

First Goal: Saving 2.5 Million Lives

By Dr. John R. Heller

It is a stark and sobering fact that one out of four members of the American labor force will get cancer in the course of a lifetime. This year alone cancer will take the lives of 100,000 working men and women.

If we speak in cold dollar figures, the loss in services and salaries is about $215 million every year. The annual cost to the national economy is nearly 50,000 man-years of productivity.

Yet a clear and hopeful statement can be made about cancer. Today one in three who are stricken by cancer is being cured. But even more important is that we have in our hands the scientific and medical knowhow to save one in two—if every patient were diagnosed and adequately treated at the earliest possible moment.

Let us see what this means for the working men and women of this nation. Given present trends there are about 2.5 million persons in the labor force who will die needlessly of cancer. That's the difference between saving one life out of three, as we do, or one life in two, as we could. What is required to avert these needless deaths is detecting and diagnosing cancer as early in its development as possible. This is of crucial importance, because the earlier treatment is begun, the greater the opportunity for cure.

Thus the educational effort which the AFL-CIO is undertaking in cooperation with the Eleanor Roosevelt Cancer Foundation is unequivocally a life-saving endeavor. Not only the members of the trade unions but their families should learn about the danger signals, symptoms which require prompt attention by a physician. Equally important is the need for regular annual medical checkups.

For those cancer patients who cannot now be saved by available methods and for the millions who may yet become victims of cancer, the greatest hope lies in research on the causes, diagnosis, treatment, and most important of all, prevention of malignant disease.

As chairman of the Scientific Advisory Board of the Eleanor Roosevelt Cancer Foundtion, I congratulate the trade union movement for its far-sighted program of support to the foundation and for launching an educational effort which can have only one result—the saving of our most precious asset, human life.

What Foundation Does About Cancer

The Eleanor Roosevelt Cancer Foundation is a national voluntary health organization devoted primarily to cancer research. It is the only organization in the country to which Mrs. Roosevelt has given the use of her name. She did so because of the distinctive contribution it makes in the fight against cancer. Its program is not duplicated by any other organization.

The twofold program of the foundation provides for:

1. Building new cancer research facilities at hospitals and medical schools in various parts of the country. These laboratories and institutes will be named for Eleanor Roosevelt.

2. Sponsoring an international fellowship program for cancer research and the training of advanced cancer research scientists both in this country and abroad.

Gen. Omar N. Bradley is chairman of the foundation's Board of Governors. Rep. James Roosevelt (D-Calif.) is president. Sidney Glazier is national executive director.

The Scientific Advisory Board of the foundation is headed by Dr. John R. Heller, president of the Memorial Sloan-Kettering Cancer Center, former director of the National Cancer Institute.

In order to extend its program and to cut down on multiple appeals to the public the Eleanor Roosevelt Cancer Foundation has become affiliated with the American Cancer Society.

The following grants have already been authorized by the Eleanor Roosevelt Cancer Foundation:

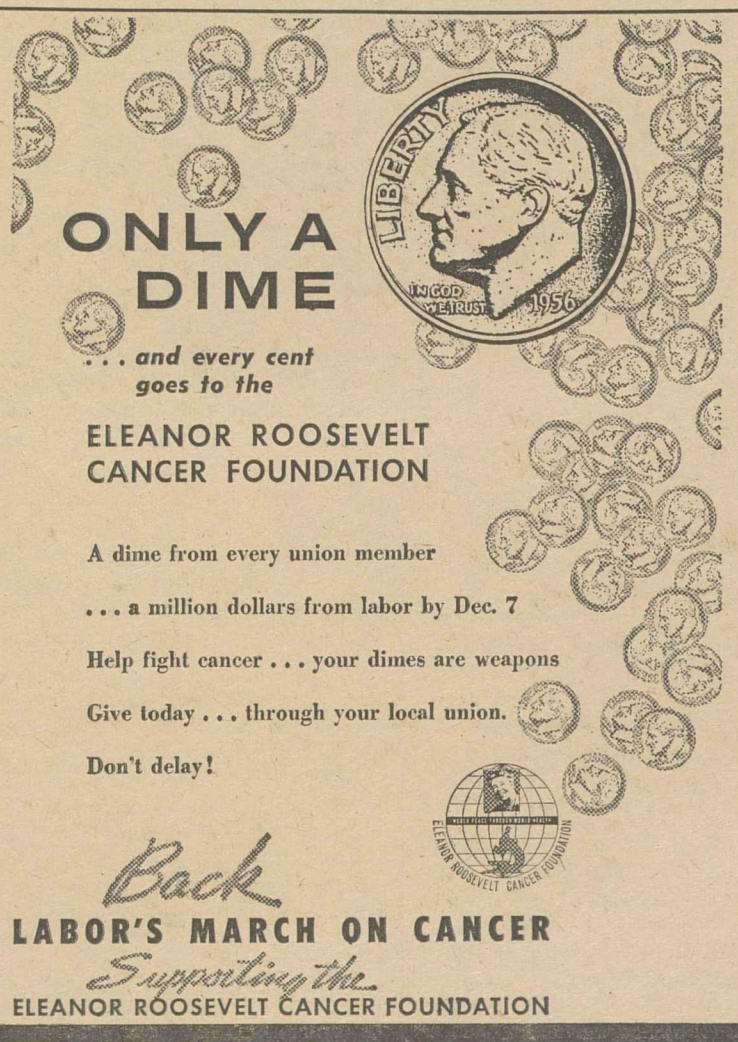
1. To the Jefferson Medical Center in Philadelphia for an Eleanor Roosevelt cancer research facility.

2. To the University of Utah Medical School for building a cancer research facility.

3. To the American Medical Center at Denver for cancer research and the care of cancer patients.

4. To the University of Colorado Medical Center for establishing an Eleanor Roosevelt Institute for Cancer Research.

5. To the Intl. Union Against Cancer for an international fellowship program to spur advanced cancer research and training.



Dimes Did the Job In Earlier 'March'

A generation ago a group of Americans, inspired by Pres. Franklin D. Roosevelt, organized a national campaign against infantile paralysis known as the "March of Dimes."

Over the years the labor movement was a primary supporter of that cause. The ultimate result, of course, was the Salk vaccine—the preventive weapon medical science had sought so long in vain.

While there's no precise parallel, the same spirit motivates "Labor's March on Cancer." The same weapon—the lowly dime—is involved, and also the same goal of relieving the suffering of mankind.

Every Cent You Give Gets to Its Goal

To 'Do Something About It'

THE CHANGING PATTERN of the nation's work force and the growth of employment in government, retail trade services and similar areas pose difficult organizing problems.

When this shift from the more traditional areas of union organizing activity is combined with the factor that in too many cases more than one union is involved in a specific organizing campaign, the difficulties of organizing the unorganized grow apace.

The AFL-CIO General Board reached a consensus that the various affiliates are not, in the words of AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, "organizing enough and that we ought to do something about it."

To this end a number of constructive ideas and proposals were advanced at the board meeting, and it is anticipated that specific proposals to solve the problem of competing unions in organizing campaigns will be brought before the AFL-CIO convention in December.

With 38 percent of eligible workers organized in unions and the patterns of employment shifting to the more difficult-to-organize areas, the problems of bringing new workers into the labor movement is complicated also by the new campaigns being launched by business and industry to extend so-called "right-to-work" laws and indications of renewed drives for punitive and restrictive legislation.

To meet this challenge and to extend unionization to new areas, the trade union movement is giving a high priority to resolving the internal problems that hinder effective organizing.

The Quack Peddlers

GOVERNMENT AGENCIES are handicapped in fighting quackery—in foods, drugs and fake medical cures—by the uphill legal battles necessary to drive a useless remedy off the market.

The Food & Drug Administration, for example, bears the burden of proof to demonstrate to a jury that neither seawater nor garlic nor alfalfa pills possesses the curative powers claimed by unscrupulous or self-deluded promoters. Scientists and doctors must spend dreary hours in laboratory and courtroom to establish that a "miracle ingredient" in some commercial beauty product will not really rejuvenate an aging face.

The $1 billion a year drained from the public by health fad quacks and fake drug peddlers is not the whole story. When a cancer patient who could be cured by proper treatment goes instead to a witch doctor offering electrical impulses leading from a machine playing a tape recording of Smoke Gets in Your Eyes, the cost cannot be measured in dollars.

The Food & Drug Administration and the American Medical Association turned a spotlight of publicity on these charlatans through a jointly-sponsored National Congress on Medical Quackery.

Public exposure, certainly, is an important weapon in driving the quacks out of business.

But exposure alone is not enough. The mumbo-jumbo of pseudo-science will continue to claim its victims so long as it takes months—sometimes years—of litigation to put a stop to fakery.

The FDA is seeking legislation that would shift the burden of proof to those claiming curative values for foods, drugs, cosmetics and medical devices. The conference has demonstrated the urgent need for stronger federal protection of both the health and pocketbook of the consumer.

A Line to Toe:

Identical Bid Cases Underscore Need for Business Ethics Code

THE AMERICAN BUSINESS community is far from out of the hot water that it fell into when the price conspiracy of a number of top flight electrical corporation officials—including General Electric—was exposed.

Only recently the hot water got a bit hotter with publication of a report analyzing identical bidding in almost 100 cases involving work for the federal government. The report, published by the Joint Economic Committee, was based on information given to the Department of Justice by a number of government agencies.

The study was requested by the joint committee because of the large role government purchases play in the American economy, "their cost to the taxpayer, and piecemeal evidence which suggests that identical bidding has become a common and widespread phenomenon. . . ."

A 20 percent sampling of government contracts over the years 1955-1960 abundantly proved the accuracy of this statement.

The "identical bid" cases covered 93 contracts including such a variety of products as rock salt, dairy products, filing cabinets, chemicals, dry ice, weed control chemicals, laundry soaps and detergents, metal pipes, pumps, meters, switches and photographic film. Even the dead were not spared. One of the cases involved undertaking services for the remains of Navy personnel.

In view of the involvement of the electrical machinery industry in the price fixing scandals, it is not surprising to find that 36 of the 93 cases involved that industry. Chemicals and allied products, and stone, clay and glass products were second, with 12 cases of identical bidding each. Primary metals were involved in eight cases, instruments and related products in seven cases. Foods, textile mill products, machinery other than electrical, and construction, ranged from two to four cases.

The Joint Economic Committee Report barely skims the surface of what is likely to be revealed when a recent executive order of Pres. Kennedy become fully operative. This calls on all federal agencies to report to the Dept. of Justice all cases involving two or more identical bids.

The fact that business today is being looked upon with skeptical eyes both by congressional committees and the public in general was underscored in a speech before the eighth annual Mid-Atlantic Public Relations Conference in Washington. Robert L. Barbour, Meriden, N. H., editor and public relations expert, told the conference that "big business is exposed as never before to the risk of public and government indictment resulting from poor judgment and questionable ethics at the top and middle management level."

BARBOUR CALLED ON corporation public relations executives to urge adoption of a code of business ethics and "then sell and re-sell it right down the line."

So far there has been little indication that American business and industry is sympathetic to the idea of sitting down and adopting codes of ethics. Instead, the nation's business organizations have flatly denied wrongdoing on any considerable scale and have resisted corrective legislation. Efforts to tighten up controls over the administration of pension plans—almost 95 percent management run—have met with protests that there is no need for such legislation.

In the light of the evidence of business wrongdoing that is slowly but surely being gathered, it is clear that American business had better heed Barbour's advice that it "is operating today in an explosive atmosphere that can destroy public confidence and good will overnight no matter how closely top management may be trying to toe the ethical line." (PAI)

Morgan Says:

McNamara's Curb on Speeches Counters Rightist-Military Link

By Edward P. Morgan

(This column is excerpted from the nightly broadcasts of Edward P. Morgan, ABC commentator sponsored by the AFL-CIO. Listen to Morgan over the ABC network Monday through Friday at 7 p. m., EDT.)

DEFENSE SEC. McNAMARA has made public a memorandum tightening and clarifying the guidelines which civilian and military officials connected with the Pentagon must follow in expressing their views in public.

The memo is bound to cause the radical right to go up in the smoke of freshly frenzied protest that here is new proof of Kennedy Administration attempts to gag the brass, especially on the passion-soaked subject of how to combat communism. But before the extremists' smokescreen of patriotic outrage obscures the vital issues involved, a few important points need to be clearly noted.

Morgan

McNamara's action was not forced to counter a wave of war-mongering or witch-hunting by the armed forces—by and large U.S. officers in uniform are as prudent and level-headed as any other segment of our society and are more soundly grounded than most perhaps in the historic American concept that the military is subservient to civilan authority.

The fact is that McNamara's action was necessary to counteract the growing and embarrassing identification of some military men with extreme right-wing political views in such a way that made them appear to oppose, officially, certain policies of the very government they were sworn to serve. An extreme example was the case of Maj. Gen. Edwin A. Walker whom the Army disciplined for trying in connection with an anti-Communist indoctrination program to influence his troops to vote along the lines of his own political bias.

McNamara's memo, in a sense, puts a new and precise interpretation on orders to the military stemming from a 1958 National Security Council decision mobilizing governmental agencies to fight the cold war. It was the impetus of that NSC decision which encouraged military participation in and direct or indirect sponsorship of a wide series of anti-Communist seminars, so-called, around the country, many if not most of which bore a marked right-wing influence.

Now, the secretary rules, defense officials appearing at meetings sponsored by non-government groups must not express partisan political views and must confine their remarks to subjects within the jurisdiction of the Pentagon. This is to eliminate the dangerous embarrassment of an officer's individual opinion on, say, Gen. de Gaulle or Fidel Castro being misinterpreted as the official Administration "line."

Military sponsorship of a public information meeting must be carefully nonpartisan and it is left largely to the good sense of the commander in the field to determine whether Pentagon criteria are being met. A Defense Dept. spokesman doubted, for example, that the Fourth Army command could have justified its connection with a controversial right-wing seminar in San Antonio recently.

THE SENATE ARMED SERVICES Committee has been favorably impressed with McNamara's courage, balance and fairness in handling this ticklish situation. And there is hopeful reason to believe that when a subcommittee under Mississippi's Sen. Stennis (D) gets around to a "study" of the subject, the hearings will be calm and dispassionate. Contrary to the apparent convictions of such bipartisan right-wingers as South Carolina's Sen. Thurmond (D), Arizona's Goldwater (R) and Tower (R) of Texas, there are matters of higher priority in the Pentagon these days than participating in partisan pep rallies on the cold war.

But even if McNamara wins this round in asserting civilian will to minimize opinionated military faux pas—whether of the right or left—his work has just begun.

As Senate Foreign Relations Committee Chairman Fulbright (D-Ark.) indicated in his critical memo on the role of the military in public political orientation (a memo which launched Thurmond into a flamboyant orbit of protest), questions should be raised about the efficacy, soundness and breadth of orientations at such Pentagon-sponsored institutions as the National War College.

Fulbright was particularly oncerned over the relationship of the Joint Chiefs of Staff and the War College with three other groups—the Institute for American Strategy, the Foreign Policy Research Institute at the University of Pennsylvania and the Richardson Foundation, which helps finance both.

The Strategy Institute not only sponsors many of the forums Fulbright complained about but with the Joint Chiefs' authorization took over, in effect, the responsibility of training reserve officers on active duty, using War College facilities.

The question here is whether the orientation was not an aggressively dogmatic approach to the cold war in actual conflict with Administration policy.

A sharp McNamara look at this whole set-up is needed and, reportedly, is coming.

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

THE SUPREME COURT has under consideration an appeal from Tennessee citizens seeking judicial intervention to prevent the state legislature from continuing a system of apportionment that gives gross over-representation to rural voters, gross under-representation to city voters. Its decision may be momentous. If the court should strike down the existing Tennessee legislative apportionment law, it would violently shake the rural stranglehold over many states—and might eventually produce sweeping changes in the House of Representatives in Washington.

The courts have historically declined to intervene in districting cases, holding that the issue involved was essentially "political" in nature. In the most recent decision, involving congressional districts in Illinois, the court refused to upset a districting map where one member of the House represented a district with 250,000 people, another a district with more than 900,000. Justice Frankfurter wrote the controlling opinion, saying it was not the business of courts to remedy for citizens an inequity they urged against their own legislatures.

If this precedent stands, city voters will continue to be underrepresented despite their great number. It has been abundantly proved that rural legislative members refuse to increase city representation and reduce the representation of their own areas because it would be voting themselves out of office.

THERE ARE ELEMENTS OF HOPE. The 1945 Illinois case was decided by a bare four-to-three vote, and the justice who made the difference carefully refrained from joining in Frankfurter's opinion. Indeed, he seemed to agree intellectually with the three-member minority although he voted against them.

Since 1945 the Supreme Court has moved on a path in racial cases that seems to set new precedents for moving a step further. It has struck down an Alabama law that effectively disfranchised Negro citizens of Tuskegee, Ala., in the guise of using the state's claimed power to redistrict geographical areas in any manner it chose—however inequitable the results. The high court said Alabama couldn't.

The Tennessee city residents asking relief against their own state legislature point out that the court clearly feels able to intervene when the voting rights of a citizen are trampled because of his race. They ask whether it is not equally a violation of the constitution's due-process clause when voting rights are trampled because of citizens' place of residence.

The court has often given great weight to changing circumstances. The 1960 census proves that this country is overwhelmingly an urban country, in which the majority of our people have peculiarly urban social problems.

A FURTHER FACTOR of significance is that the Justice Dept. has actively entered the case, with Solicitor Gen. Archibald Cox arguing in support of the Tennessee citizens.

Agreeing that the courts are not all-powerful, that they cannot remedy all public wrongs, he argued that this did not mean they were always "powerless" in so-called "political" cases.

"In the face of admitted wrong and crying necessity," he said, the justices may do great damage to our whole governmental system if they choose "inaction through excessive caution or a fancied impotence."

Counsel for the Tennessee citizens, Charles S. Rhyne, said bluntly: "There is nothing in the constitution that ordains that state government must be an agricultural commodity."

The temper of the times, vast changes in the patterns of our national life, the active support of the Dept. of Justice and a rich new vein of precedent for court action to protect the rights of citizens—all elements offer the justices a chance for re-examination.

A drastic decision is not required. If the existing Tennessee apportionment law is declared unconstitutional, it will require no more than that the state legislature do what the Tennessee constitution has commanded it to do for 60 years—redistrict the state to give reasonably fair recognition to population shifts.

As We See It:

Soviet Atom Bomb Test Fallout Held Beyond Limit of Safety

DR. RALPH LAPP, one of the nation's leading nuclear physicists, has called upon the United Nations Atomic Radiation Committee to brand Soviet Russia guilty of a crime against humanity if the USSR is found to have gone beyond the safe limit in contaminating the atmosphere with its current nuclear bomb tests.

In an interview on As We See It, AFL-CIO public service educational program carried on the ABC radio network, Lapp said that in his opinion Soviet Russia is now exceeding the "safe annual limit" for testing.

"They have, according to the latest count, sent up over 10 megatons of weapons," he said. "I don't know how much would be dirty, but this in my opinion exceeds the safe level that a number of scientists, some of them from the Atomic Energy Commission, agreed upon as a safe level back in 1957. We also find that we get 10 times as much radiation dose from these Arctic tests in Russia as we get from American tests in the Pacific."

Lapp said he expected the Soviet Union to continue testing until "they have managed to produce some kind of agreement over Berlin, their way."

Lapp said that if the Russians tested the 100-megaton bomb "at an altitude of 300 miles up, sent up in a rocket, such a bomb would send out a vast amount of thermo-radiation, heat, in all directions. It would be visible in Europe, in Japan, in India. . . . Within 800 miles, you would have the possibility of retinal damage to anyone looking at the bomb, retinal burns, lesions on the back of the eye."

HE EXPLAINED that a megaton is the physicist's clinical shorthand for 1 million tons of TNT, so "if we talk of an attack of 10,000 megatons, we are talking of an attack of 10 billion tons of TNT."

"That is roughly 3 tons of TNT for every person on the planet," he said. "Now, that gets the planet ankle-deep in TNT."

Lapp said America has "the capability (in stockpile) of 30,000 megatons of strategic weapons . . . and the Russians I would credit with at least 10,000 megatons."

"I don't think you need more than 10,000 because I don't think any country is large enough to absorb more punishment. . . . Certainly the population of the U. S., with their pitiful knowledge of how to protect themselves from fall-out, could be killed by the tens and tens of millions from such a concentrated attack."

SOVIET RUSSIA should be branded guilty of crime against humanity if UN Atomic Radiation Committee finds it has gone beyond the safe limit in contaminating the atmosphere with latest bomb tests, Dr. Ralph Lapp, noted nuclear physicist, said on As We See It, AFL-CIO public service educational program carried on the ABC radio network.

How to Buy:

'Boiler Room' Salesmen Unload Overpriced Goods by Telephone

By Sidney Margolius

WE'VE BEEN WORKING overtime—on our own time—trying to straighten out some of the jams working people get into by buying high-priced encyclopedias with extra equipment, vacuum cleaners sold with purported bonuses for referrals, etc.

In many cases the wife got the family into the jam by believing statements made by a salesman, or often nowadays a saleswoman. But husbands often are responsible, especially when buying cars and jewelry on time or leading the family into a spurious food-freezer plan.

Now we're going to blow a siren on the latest overpriced hard sell, the telephone selling of carpeting by boiler-room operators.

The telephone solicitor gets the leads, often by telling you that his company is having a huge clearance or a special sale, or that a friend of yours said you were thinking about buying carpeting. A solicitor often make 120 phone calls a day. The boiler-room company then dispatches a salesman to the homes of people who indicate they are interested.

"Boiler room" is the name law-enforcement agenices used to apply to a roomful of solicitors phoning people to sell stocks or get donatins to dubious charities. Now the technique is being used more and more to sell consumer goods.

The prices charged by boiler-room operators are flagrantly high—in fact, sometimes 30-40 percent more than you would pay for the same carpeting in a regular store. In an interview with Home Furnishings Daily, one of the leading operators reports he buys the carpeting wholesale at $3.75 a square-yard and adds $2 a yard for padding and installation and $4 a yard for his expenses and profit. The total of $9.75 in this example is known in the trade as the "par" price. The salesman then charges as much over "par" as he judges he can get. This particular boiler room limits its salesmen to $4 over par.

In contrast, Home Furnishings Daily estimates that stores in the same area sell the same carpeting for about $8 a yard plus the cost of padding and installation, or about $10 complete.

BUYING CARPETING from canvassers on the installment plan without comparing prices at regular stores can result in real tragedy. Previously, this department reported that in Detroit hundreds of families paid high prices—some as much as $30 a yard—for what later proved to be inferior carpeting. But the sellers had turned over their contracts to a Detroit bank which then insisted on payment. The Michigan families organized what they called "The Suckers Organization," picketed the bank, and agreed among themselves not to make further payments.

The boiler-room operators are pretty cocky. A leading operator is reported to have said boiler rooms can outsell regular stores because their canvassers have "aggressiveness and tenacity." Moreover, once they get into your home they find you are easier to sell than when you visit a store.

Nine boiler rooms have been started in Chicago in the past two months, making 15 now in operation. They're already doing almost as much carpeting business as the department stores—selling $12 million of carpeting a year compared to the $14 million floor-covering volume of the stores.

No doubt many families are in the market for carpeting, judging from our mail. But this is an expensive investment that must be bought with care. Not only are there deceptive practices, but inferior goods to guard against. We advise shopping at least three regular stores, comparing weight, closeness of weave, fiber content, and in the case of pile-type rugs, height of pile.

From Soup to Nonsense:

A Passionate, Outspoken Plea For the Unmagnetic Personality

By Jane Goodsell

THE 20TH CENTURY is no place for introverts. Everybody these days is supposed to have a happy, outgoing personality, and those who don't are looked on as hopeless misfits in need of psychiatric help.

I think it's time somebody spoke up in defense of the ingoing personality, and it might as well be me because that's the kind of personality I've got. I'm the shy, quiet type who doesn't sparkle at parties or exchange confidences with strangers.

The thing nobody seems to understand about us introverts is that we're just as happy and well-adjusted as anybody else. Okay, so we don't have magnetic personalities. Maybe we aren't more fun than a barrel of monkeys, and we're sort of tongue-tied at parties. But we're happy. Or anyway we would be happy if people would stop trying to drag us out of ourselves and into conga lines and three-legged races.

We're not maladjusted or abnormal. We just happen to prefer hanging on the sidelines to integrating with the group. Especially when the group is cheering or dancing the Charleston or marching around in funny hats.

Time was when ingoing personalities were treated with kindness and tolerance. They were even accorded a certain amount of respect on the theory that still waters run deep.

Today, in this group-spirited, togetherness-mad age, they're treated like social problems, and viewed as maladjusted unfortunates who don't get enough fun out of life.

AN INGOING personality is considered a serious psychological defect. Quiet children, who prefer solitary pastimes (such as reading books) to kicking the can with their peer group, are viewed with alarm and trotted off to psychologists to have their personalities overhauled.

This attitude is all wrong. And what's more, it's dangerous. The world needs introverts. If everybody develops a sparkling, magnetic personality, there won't be anyone around for extroverts to magnetize and sparkle at. A party composed solely of outgoing personalities, vying with each other to be the life of it, is too terrible (and too noisy) to contemplate.

Instead of urging us shy people to loosen up and let our hair down, we should be encouraged to stay as sweet as we are. And we are rather sweet, you know. We're nice, we're restful. We don't tear around like cruise directors, organizing committees and dividing people into teams. We don't frighten babies by chucking them under the chin and making faces at them. We even listen when people talk to us. Well, maybe we don't exactly listen, but at least we don't interrupt.

We do have our good points even if we'll never make cheer leaders or sweethearts of Sigma Chi.

So please stop trying to draw us out. Quit asking us if the cat has our tongue. Don't try to turn us into radiant, bubbling, exurberant, sparkling, outgoing personalities. We're happy in our shells. We like it there and, in our shy, quiet, introverted way, we have just as good a time as anybody else. So lay off us, will you?

Michigan Survey:

Consumer Spending Seen Swinging Up

CONSUMER CONFIDENCE in the economy has improved decisively during the past three months, the University of Michigan Survey Research Center has reported.

The center's third 1961 measurement of changes in consumer expectations revealed that "a large proportion of the American people are aware of the upturn in business conditions, and a growing number judge the economic outlook for the next 12 months as 'good.'"

The opinion that attractive buys are available in household goods, cars and houses also has gained considerable ground. Consumers are expected to make a sizable contribution to business recovery in coming month.

Dir. George Katona and Eva Mueller of the center's Economic Behavior Program caution that the findings of the August survey spell "recovery and not boom" as far as consumer spending is concerned.

In August the center's Index of Consumer Attitudes and Inclinations to Buy, which is based upon the answers to six key questions, had fully recovered its pre-recession high of January-February 1960, but remained below the peak level of 1955-56.

The most striking change over three months has occurred in people's appraisal of business conditions. In May-June 1961 opinions about recent economic trends were divided: about as many people judged that business was better than a year earlier as judged that it was worse; at present nearly three times as many people say "better" than say "worse."

Expectations regarding business conditions in the coming year improved somewhat in spring 1961 and underwent more substantial improvement during the summer. Yet consumer confidence in the longer range business outlook fails to measure up to the peak 1955-56 reading. The survey directors say "it is not surprising that after two recessions, occuring in fairly rapid succession, fewer consumers than in the mid-Fifties anticipate 'continuous good times over the next five years.'"

OTHER CENTER FINDINGS in brief, based upon telephone re-interviews of people questioned in the May-June survey, are:

- Personal Finances: The number of people who thought they and their families are better off financially than a year ago showed an additional rise between May-June and August 1961, though again the 1955-56 peak was not reached.
- Market Conditions: Price expectations have changed little during the past year. Nearly two-thirds of consumers expect some price increases. The majority of people appear to have become accustomed to prevailing prices, and resentment against rising prices is not pronounced. Favorable attitudes toward buying household goods and cars are at or near their 1955-56 peak, also high in the area of housing.
- Buuying Intentions: Intentions to buy automobiles during the next 12 months are today more frequent than in August 1960, but less frequent than in mid-1959. Intentions to buy new cars show a rise of at least 10 percent; intentions to buy used cars are unchanged. The proportion of families who may buy a house is slightly higher than in August 1960, but below the mid-1959 figure.

Increases in personal income, which are likely in the period ahead, will not only add to ability to buy but would also provide an additional stimulus to consumer optimism, the survey indicates. Yet it does not anticipate that a real boom in consumer spending on durable goods and houses will develop.

Two considerations speak against a consumer buying spree—the persistence of a high level of unemployment and the worsening of international tensions which contributes another element of uncertainty. People as a whole do not associate a stepping-up of the cold war with more employment opportunities in defense industries and general prosperity.

Conference Finds:

Health Quacks Reap $1 Billion Annually

Americans pay $1 billion a year for useless—and sometimes dangerous—health cures, government and medical experts declared at a unique National Conference on Quackery here.

The conference, sponsored jointly by the Food & Drug Administration and the American Medical Association, sounded a warning against "20th Century witch doctors" including:

- Outright charlatans who use meaningless electronic contraptions to delude patients into believing they are being "scientifically" cured of ailments ranging from overweight to cancer.
- Peddlers of "blunderbuss" vitamin combinations and special "health foods" promoted by "50,000 door-to-door canvassers." As a result, Food & Drug Commissioner George P. Larrick declared, "millions of people are attempting self-medication for imaginary and real illnesses with a multitude of more or less irrational food items."
- Big manufacturers of cosmetics and drugs who use misleading claims of "miracle ingredients," often backed up by "rigged research."

Health, Education & Welfare Sec. Abraham A. Ribicoff urged cooperation between government agencies and the medical profession—despite differences in the legislative area—against "a common foe, the charlatan and the quack who prey upon the innocent in search of better health."

He cited $250 million spent each year on quack treatments of arthritis and rheumatic diseases. He said the Food & Drug Administration is now engaged in a legal battle against sellers of sea water, priced up to $20 a gallon, "which has been offered as a modern preventive and panacea for virtually all human ailments."

"The witch doctor's tom-tom has given way to the illustrated brochure; the medicine show extravaganza to the television commercial," Ribicoff declared. He added:

"What is more, the hard-working, well-equipped physician of today is handicapped in competition with the quack. His enemy—disease—is complex, the quack's simple. His treatment may be long, painful, uncertain and expensive. The quack's is swift, painless, sure and expense is usually geared to the patient's purse."

Bogus Devices Widespread

Larrick warned that even when the government, often after a protracted legal battle, is able to stop the distribution of worthless diagnostic and treatment devices, it is almost impossible to prevent their use. He said "between 3,000 and 5,000 practitioners . . . are now treating patients with bogus electrical devices."

One such device, he said, is the so-called Sonus Film-O-Sonic machine, a playback tape recorder for treating all kinds of diseases by means of electrical impulses from musical recordings. Some 450 of these machines had been sold before distribution was halted.

Larrick also lashed out at "the professional research quack—the M.D. who specializes in arranging for 'tailored studies' of products intended for the over-the-counter market."

'Rigged' Research

"More and more," the FDA chief said, "we are running into what we are sure is rigged research—the study that was set up and written up to support a claim, rather than to seek the scientific truth."

FDA officials and medical experts scoffed at claims for special health foods.

"The woods are full of food faddists and crackpots on the subject of nutrition," said Dr. Frederick J. Stare, chairman of the nutrition department of the Harvard School of Public Health.

He said 15,000 canvassers are peddling a "vitamin" pill composed of alfalfa, parsley and watercress, and that garlic pills are sold as cures for high blood pressure. "You're being taken in if you add a little seaweed to your diet," he said, "unless you just happen to like seaweed."

Dr. William H. Gordon of Lubbock, Tex., said quackery exists in space age America because it plays on man's emotions.

He said that fear, superstition, gullibility are utilized by quacks to "reap an incalculable harvest annually of money, lives and disillusionment."

Rochester Pacts End TV Dispute

Rochester, N. Y.—The Broadcast Employes & Technicians and the Television & Radio Artists have settled their differences with Rochester's television stations over the bargaining table and have withdrawn a petition asking the Federal Communications Commission to reconsider its approval of a three-way shift in ownership.

The unions had protested the FCC's refusal to consider impact on employment as a factor in approval of the change in ownership of the city's two television channels.

Under the agreements negotiated by the two unions, workers left jobless by the changeover will receive severance pay and paid-up hospital and medical insurance, and will be placed on preferential rehiring lists.

Textile Union Hails Report On NLRB

Four recommendations by a House Labor subcommittee to speed up and overhaul National Labor Relations Board procedures have drawn praise from the Textile Workers Union of America as "constructive" and a "clear confirmation" of a TWUA white paper of last January charging NLRB bias, delays and inefficiencies.

TWUA Pres. William Pollock said he welcomed the recommendations of a subcommittee headed by Rep. Roman C. Pucinski (D-Ill.), especially these:

Application of the same standards in union representation elections which Congress applies to internal union elections under the Landrum-Griffin Act; disbarment from NLRB practice of attorneys who advise their clients to commit unfair labor practices wilfully; the use of injunctions against employer unfair practices; use of the NLRB's rule-making powers to speed up pre-election hearings.

Pollock urged that where the subcommittee's recommendations call for administrative action, the NLRB take such corrective steps immediately. In cases where congressional action is needed, he urged that corrective legislation be drafted for introduction at the next session of Congress.

New York Raises Hotel Pay Base

Albany, N. Y.—A unanimous recommendation of a nine-member tripartite wage board that minimum pay rates for some 100,000 hotel workers in New York state be gradually increased to $1.15 an hour has been approved by State Industrial Commissioner M. P. Catherwood.

The minimum, now $1 an hour, will move up to $1.05 on Nov. 3 for employes in both all-year and resort hotels. For all-year hotel workers it will rise to $1.15 on Nov. 3, 1962, and for resort hotel workers it will increase to the same level on June 3, 1963.

Workers were represented on the tripartite board by Pres. Peter Ottley of St. Albans Local 144, Building Service Employes; Sec.-Treas. James Marley of Whitestone Local 6, Hotel & Restaurant Employes, and Sec.-Treas. John Litto of Rochester Local 466, Hotel & Restaurant Employes.

ELECTRONIC VACCINE GUNS were used to administer some 15,000 polio shots in clinics sponsored recently by AFL-CIO central labor bodies in Des Moines, Sioux City and Ottumwa with the cooperation of the Iowa State AFL-CIO and its community services staff. Scenes from the Ottumwa clinic show (top) a mother lining up her 14 children for the shots, provided at 50 cents each to cover costs, and (bottom) a youngster's anticipatory agony—he hadn't been "shot" yet. The Ottumwa and Polk County (Des Moines) Labor Councils each have purchased an electronic gun, which eliminates skin punctures by forcing vaccine through the pores, and will make them available to other labor bodies in the state.

Board Backs Hod Carriers' Site Picketing

The Hod Carriers have won a ruling from the National Labor Relations Board that reverses a previous NLRB decision on jobsite picketing.

The board by a 3-2 vote found that Hod Carriers Local 41 did not violate the Landrum-Griffin Act when it picketed a construction site in Hammond, Ind., shortly after another union had won a collective bargaining election.

The union, in picketing a jobsite of Contractor George DeJong, sought to require DeJong and the Calumet Contractors Association, of which he was a member, to bring their employment standards up to those prevailing in the area, the board found.

The NLRB majority—Chairman Frank W. McCulloch and Members John H. Fanning and Gerald A. Brown—agreed that picketing for recognition would have been unlawful. In this case, he said, the union had announced that it was not seeking recognition but sought only to "eliminate subnormal working conditions."

NLRB Members Philip Ray Rodgers and Boyd Leedom dissented. They argued, as they had in the decision by a three-member panel last Feb. 10, that the picketing was "clearly an attempt" by the union to force itself on DeJong's employes as their bargaining agent.

The new ruling followed an appeal by the Hod Carriers for full board consideration. They asserted that the panel ruling was in conflict with a decision of the U.S. Supreme Court and an NLRB decision in another case.

'Vote No' Buttons Upset Labor Board Election

Rockford, Ill.—An employer who passed out "Vote No" badges in his plant before a union representation election interfered with his employes' free choice, the National Labor Relations Board has ruled in throwing out the results of an Apr. 28 election and ordering a new vote within 30 days at the Chas. V. Weise Co. here.

In the first election, the vote was 59 for Retail Clerks Local 1354, against 220, challenged 75, void 1. The union's objection was upheld.

An NLRB investigation showed that the company president wore a badge saying "Vote on the right side—Vote NO," instructed supervisors to wear the badges, and to give one to anyone who wanted one.

The employer contended that, since distribution of buttons by a union has been found permissible, no distinction should be made for similar conduct by an employer.

The board disagreed, finding that because of the employer's control over jobs and working conditions, his action in making campaign buttons available "placed the employes in the position of declaring themselves as to union preference, just as if they had been interrogated as to such preference, and thereby interfered" with their free and untrammeled choice.

UAW Has Answer To Office Paycuts

Milwaukee—Auto Workers Local 248, which bargains for 5,500 production workers at the West Allis works of the Allis-Chalmers Mfg. Co., expressing "shock" at pay cuts and layoffs for white collar workers says it will offer membership to the 6,000 salaried workers here.

"Only where there is a collective bargaining agreement is there any semblance of protection for senior employes," said Pres. Charles M. Schultz of Local 248.

Paycuts of 5 to 25 percent have been levied by the company on 13,000 salaried workers to increase profit margins. One white collar unaffiliated local union of engineers and draftsmen has a contract.

Kennedy Cites 'Reluctance':

Farm Labor Import, School Bills Signed

Pres. Kennedy has signed bills extending the Mexican farm labor importation law and continuing two school assistance programs, but he sharply criticized the failure of Congress to enact Administration proposals in both fields.

In signing the Mexican farm worker bill "despite its shortcomings," Kennedy pledged that the Administration will use "every means" to prevent the use of imported labor from "adversely affecting the wages and working conditions" of domestic farm workers.

In a separate statement, Kennedy said he had signed "with extreme reluctance" a bill extending for two years the National Defense Education Act and the program of assistance to "federally impacted" school districts, those which have heavy concentrations of federal civilian or military personnel.

Kennedy sharply criticized congressmen who blocked the Administration's program for comprehensive federal aid to education while supporting "impacted" aid to their own districts. The President said bluntly:

"It ill becomes those who insist that we cannot afford the expenditure of federal funds to aid the public education of all children to insist with equal fervor upon the passage of this unsound and uneconomical measure which aids the education of only some. . . .

"Individuals who profess opposition to federal aid to education on grounds of states' rights, racial or religious controversy, budgetary economy or academic freedom do not hesitate to demand this federal aid to build schoolhouses and pay teachers' salaries in their own areas."

Kennedy said he signed the Mexican farm labor bill—which the AFL-CIO had asked him to veto—because "some Mexican workers will still be needed next year" to help harvest U.S. crops and because discontinuance of the program would have a "serious impact" on the economy of Mexico.

Stresses Secretary's Role

The President emphasized that the law "authorizes, and indeed requires, the Secretary of Labor to permit the employment of Mexican workers only when he can determine that their admission will not adversely affect the wages and working conditions of domestic agricultural workers." He added:

"The adverse effect of the Mexican farm labor program as it has operated in recent years on the wage and employment conditions of domestic workers is clear and cumulative in its impact.

"We cannot afford to disregard it. We do not condone it. Therefore I sign this bill with the assurance that the Secretary of Labor will, by every means at his disposal, use the authority vested in him under the law to prescribe the standards and to make the determinations essential for the protection of the wages and working conditions of domestic agricultural workers."

In his statement on the school bill, Kennedy emphasized that "the need to improve the standards of education . . . will still be before the Congress next year," and added:

"That need must be met on a basis which, for every dollar spent, goes much further to attack our most critical deficiencies than the measure I am required to approve."

The President noted that "overcrowded and hazardous classrooms are undesirable anywhere, whether filled by the children of federal employes or by the children of other federal taxpayers, and whether the local resources are strained by the location of a federal facility or by any other cause. A quality education is a necessity for all American children, not merely those who by good fortune live in a district covered by this program."

McNamara Checks Military Ties To Partisan Information Forums

Defense Sec. Robert S. McNamara has called a halt to public speeches by high-ranking military officials embracing politically partisan views.

In a memorandum to civilian service chiefs, McNamara ordered Defense Dept. personnel to limit their public expressions to views that are "nonpartisan in character and in accordance with established national policy."

The order appeared designed to stem the growing identification of armed forces representatives with such right-wing extremists as the John Birch Society.

Recently, for example, the department disciplined Maj. Edwin A. Walker, an admitted member of the Birch group, for what the Army said was an attempt to influence 24th Infantry Division troops under his command in Germany to vote for certain political candidates. Walker, who was subsequently relieved of the command, is now on temporary leave in the United States.

On a broader scale, Sen. J. William Fulbright (D-Ark.), chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, has complained to McNamara over military participation in public information symposiums at which some speakers have castigated national leaders and attacked domestic and foreign policies.

'Danger to Security'

AFL-CIO Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller recently described the link between the military and "radical reactionaries" as a "considerable danger" to American security. Addressing the Massachusetts State AFL-CIO, Biemiller said "the spectacle of military leaders undermining confidence in the nation they themselves are sworn to defend . . . (is) no longer laughable; it's monstrous."

In his memorandum, McNamara said a clarification of policy on public statements was prompted by "recent inquiries and events," an apparent reference to the Walker case and the controversial seminars, such as the right-wing forum held recently in San Antonio, Tex., with 4th Army participation.

The defense secretary's order emphasized that department personnel are authorized to take part in outside public information programs, but only if these conditions are met:

- There must be no interference with their assigned duties.
- They must address themselves to subjects "within the cognizance" of the Defense Dept.
- The views they express must be nonpartisan and must accord with national policy.
- Their participation must not "lend an air of sponsorship to the statement of others which may be either partisan in character or contrary to established national policy."

McNamara also reaffirmed the authority of commanders to provide military facilities and personnel for public information programs conducted by non-governmental groups. But he added these provisos:

The programs must not interfere with military missions; they must be nonpartisan; they must be sponsored by "responsible organizations," and they must not provide a platform for speeches opposed to national policy.

Steelworkers Settle C-O-L Pay Dispute

Pittsburgh—The Steelworkers and the U.S. Steel Corp. have settled a dispute over division of a 3-cents an hour cost-of-living wage increase due Oct. 1 by allocating 1.5 cents to wages and 1.5 cents to meet increased estimated costs of social insurance benefits.

USWA Pres. David J. McDonald had previously notified union district officials and locals that the company had suggested arbitration and that he was awaiting an answer to his request for a specific proposal on what the company wanted to arbitrate.

Newspaper Guild Gains First Puerto Rico Unit

San Juan—The Newspaper Guild won bargaining rights for its first Puerto Rican unit when employes of the San Juan Star voted for it, 35-14. The English language daily, was established in 1959 by Cowles Magazines, Inc.

BSEIU Local 32B Passes 40,000-Mark

New York—Local 32B of the Building Service Employes, one of the nation's largest local unions, has expanded its jurisdiction to Brooklyn and Staten Island as the result of a merger with BSEIU Local 32K.

The 1,600 new members bring Local 32B's membership past the 40,000 mark, the union stated. The merger, ordered by the international union, will be followed by an intensive organizing drive.

Rohan Fills Vacant Post For Pressmen

Cincinnati—Vice Pres. Alexander J. Rohan of Washington was elected secretary-treasurer of the Pressmen at a special meeting of the union board of directors here.

He was named to fill the vacancy left when Sec.-Treas. George L. Googe died suddenly at Pressmen's Home, Tenn., on Sept. 29. He will serve until the members can nominate candidates and vote in a referendum election.

Rohan, a native of Haverstraw, N. Y., joined Yonkers, N. Y., Local 266 in 1932 and served as its recording secretary before moving to Washington in 1938. He was active in Washington Locals 1 and 351 and later with Local 72 when several area locals were merged.

He was appointed an international representative in 1951, acting for the union before the Wage Stabilization Board, Labor Dept. and State Dept. He was first chosen a vice president in 1953 and had been reelected without opposition since.

Economic Outlook:

Rapid Production Rise Held Key to Reduced Joblessness

A continuing and rapid rise of production beyond the second quarter of 1962 will be necessary if unemployment is to be reduced to "something that approaches a level of minimum, temporary joblessness," according to an analysis in the current issue of the AFL-CIO American Federationist.

"If the upturn from the recession fails to continue rapidly through the second half of next year, however, high unemployment could persist, with the possibility of another recession and rising joblessness in 1963," adds Economic Trends and Outlook, a feature of the monthly magazine.

If unemployment is to be cut significantly, the article emphasizes, the rise in production must be accompanied by federal programs for retraining and relocating unemployed workers and for reviving economically distressed communities.

"Should the present pickup follow the course of the previous upturns from recessions," it warns, "it will begin to run out of steam about 12 to 15 months after the upturn started. That would be the April-June quarter of 1962.

Slowdown Possible

"In that event, the second half of 1962 could see a considerable slow-down in the rise of production, an even slower improvement in unemployment and no further significant reductions in the level of joblessness. The number of unemployed could persist at about 5 percent to 5.5 percent of the labor force for the remainder of 1962 and early 1963.

"There is a danger, therefore, that the present rapid pick-up may follow the general pattern of the upturn from the 1958 recession when high levels of joblessness remained through 1959 and early 1960, followed by the recession of 1960-1961."

The article, which is prepared by the AFL-CIO Dept. of Research, holds that a "continuing and rapid" rise in production, sales and profits "is probably assured" for the rest of this year and the first half of next, but "high levels of unemployment" threaten to persist despite "lagging but significant improvements."

A yearly production rate of $540 billion is foreseen for the final quarter of 1961, a a rise of 6.5 percent to 7 percent from the first quarter. Unemployment, however, "will probably decline only to about 6 percent." This is called a "considerable improvement" over the nearly 7 percent of the first nine months, but still "represents widespread joblessness and difficulties for many hundreds of thousands of families."

1962 Outlook

Looking a little farther into the future, AFL-CIO economists expect, if the upturn continues, that total national output may rise to a $560 billion yearly rate in the April-June quarter of 1962, an increase of about 3.5 percent. But they expect unemployment to drop only to about 5.5 percent of the labor force.

"The problem of high unemployment would remain after 15 months of rapid increases in production, sales and profits and lagging improvements in employment," the article concludes.

Action by the federal government is necessary to carry the improvement pattern through the second half of next year and into 1963, the magazine asserts, and to help workers and businesses hurt by automation and industrial migration.

"Additional measures are needed to enable the President to move quickly and decisively against a recession in 1963 or 1964, if and when another general economic decline begins," it declares.

The article lists the major forces behind recovery to date as federal spending for goods and services; federal measures bolstering family incomes, such as temporary unemployment compensation and stepped-up payment of GI insurance dividends; rebuilding of inventories by business, and increased consumer spending.

"While the real volume of total national production rose 2.8 percent and profits rose 14 percent (in the second quarter of 1961), nonfarm employment increased only 1 percent and agricultural employment declined," the magazine points out.

"As a result, the number of unemployed remained at nearly 7 percent of the labor force—no change from the recession low-point."

Future Recovery Factors

Present trends indicate the major sources of economic strength in the next nine months will be increased defense orders and spending; increased business investment in new plants; home building stimulated by government programs; increases in consumer spending accompanying improvements in employment and restoration of full workweeks; higher spending by state and local governments stimulated at least in part by matching federal funds, and additional strength from exports and inventory building.

Despite the improvements expected to result from these factors, the article declares, "the decline in unemployment will be too slow to achieve a level of minimum, temporary joblessness by mid-1962."

"Only additional expansionary policies by the federal government can provide assurance that the present economic upturn will not follow the general pattern of the pick-up from the 1958 recession, when high unemployment persisted until the 1960-1961 recession started," the Federationist article maintains. "Expansionary measures are needed to encourage a continuing and rapid rise of production, sales and jobs through 1962 and into 1963."

L-G Bureau Gets Public Advisers

Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg has appointed a seven-member Public Advisory Committee on Labor-Management Reports to consult with the Labor Dept. on administration of the 1959 Reporting & Disclosure Act.

Labor Advisory and Management Advisory committees are being formed, he said.

Public Advisory Committee members are: Benjamin Aaron, director of the University of California Institute of Industrial Relations; Max Cooper, chairman of the labor relations committee of the National Institute of Certified Public Accounts; University of Illinois Prof. Robben W. Fleming; Msgr. George G. Higgins, director of the Social Action Dept. of the National Catholic Welfare Conference; Columbia University Prof. Walter Gellhorn; Howard University Pres. James M. Nabrit, Jr., and Brown University Prof. Philip Taft.

Musicians Bid For Live Shows On Local TV

The Musicians have asked the Federal Communications Commission to require all television stations to program some live, musical shows and to revoke licenses when stations fail to live up to program pledges.

In a brief filed with the FCC commenting on the agency's rule-making proposals, the union endorsed a proposed requirement that applicants for a television channel be required to list steps they will take to encourage local musical and dramatic talent.

The same requirement, the Musicians said, should be set for radio broadcasting license applications.

The union said "live music as an outlet and opportunity for local self-expression . . . is practically nonexistent. It has been replaced by a garbage heap of tapes and cans and by unregulated Madison Ave. assumptions and dictations of public need."

Beaten Union Organizers Return to Hosiery Mill

Ellijay, Ga.—Two Hosiery Workers' officials have returned to their organizing efforts in this small mill town, undaunted by beatings they received earlier from a gang of local hoodlums.

Second Vice Pres. Ted Benton and Organizer William W. Rainey have filed a representation petition with the National Labor Relations Board in behalf of some 350 workers at the Chadbourn-Gotham Hosiery Mill here. The NLRB has scheduled a hearing Oct. 20.

Benton and Rainey were beaten up on their first visit to Ellijay, when they responded to an appeal from local mill workers for organizing help. Treatment of their injuries required hospitalization in Chattanooga.

Trial of the two unionists on a charge of "fighting" was postponed Oct. 3, when town and police officials failed to appear at Recorder's Court here. The trial now has been set tentatively for Oct. 17. The "fighting" charges against five Ellijay residents accused of being among the attackers also may be heard on that date, a town official said.

A Justice Dept. investigation of the case for possible violation of federal civil rights statutes still is in progress.

Religion-Labor Group Sets Expanded Program

An expanded program of service to labor and the churches has been launched by the Religion & Labor Council of America under the direction of a three-man staff from new headquarters in Washington, D. C.

The council, founded in 1932 as the National Religion & Labor Foundation, serves as a liaison agency between leaders of religion and labor through a 48-member executive board equally divided between union representatives and ministers, priests and rabbis.

Executive board members, meeting at the council's new offices, 2000 K Street, N. W., announced that RLCA has been granted a charter as an educational corporation by regents of the University of the State of New York.

The board made these program assignments:

Dr. Kenneth Watson, former pastor of the Community Methodist Church in Tujunga, Calif., as executive director.

Dr. Clair M. Cook, former head of the organization in Columbus, O., as education director. He will work with seminary students and edit two periodicals—Religion & Labor and Walking Together.

Matthew K. Clarke, formerly an instructor at Bronx Community College who has been active in Newman Club and Catholic social action groups, as program director. He will conduct seminars on ethical behavior and supervise local RLCA groups.

The national co-chairmen are the Rev. Roy McCorkel of the American Friends Service Committee, Philadelphia, and John G. Ramsay of Washington, Presbyterian elder who is community relations director for the Steelworkers. Al Whitehouse of Cincinnati, USWA district director, is treasurer.

The RLCA executive board includes AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler, Pres. Walter P. Reuther of the Auto Workers, Pres. David J. McDonald of the Steelworkers, Pres. Joseph A. Beirne of the Communications Workers, Pres. George M. Harrison of the Railway Clerks, Pres. James B. Carey of the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, Pres. Jacob Potofsky of the Clothing Workers, Pres. A. Philip Randolph of the Sleeping Car Porters, Pres. James A. Suffridge of the Retail Clerks, Pres. H. E. Gilbert of the Locomotive Firemen & Enginemen, Sec.-Treas. Patrick E. Gorman of the Meat Cutters and the Rev. Charles C. Webber of the AFL-CIO religious affairs staff.

Watson, the new RLCA executive director, is a journeyman electrician and member of the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers. Holder of degrees from three colleges, he wrote a doctoral dissertation in 1960 on "Religion in the Market Place."

Cook, author of The Modern Samaritan and a contributor to the Christian Century and other church journals, was a Machinist and union officer in New England, where he also served as a minister for 12 years. His doctor of theology work at Boston University involved a study called Protestantism and the American Labor Movement, 1827-1869.

Clarke holds a master's degree in American literature from Columbia University, and has completed residence requirements for a Ph.D. degree in American Studies at Western Reserve University, Cleveland, O.

Idaho R-T-W Backer Can't Wait for Law

An Idaho industrialist who is a member of the U.S. Chamber of Commerce's Special Committee for Voluntary Unionism isn't waiting for enactment of so-called "right-to-work" laws in order to knock out the union shop, according to the National Council for Industrial Peace.

The citizens' group charged that R. V. Hansberger, president of the Boise Cascade Corp., "has deliberately traded 35 years of industrial peace" in his company's lumber mills and plants to further his "right-to-work" drive and political ambitions. Hansberger has been boosted by right-wing Republicans in Utah as a candidate for the U.S. Senate.

John M. Redding, director of the industrial peace council, said Hansberger has refused to continue existing union shop agreements in contract renewal negotiations.

Redding charged that Hansberger's actions and his selection to serve on the Chamber of Commerce's special committee "is evidence of a deliberate and calculated nationwide campaign of fomenting labor strife."

Strike End Signaled:

UAW, Ford Reach National Agreement

By Eugene A. Kelly

Detroit—Agreement has been reached by the Auto Workers and Ford Motor Co. on the national terms of a new three-year contract, subject to ratification by UAW local unions and settlement of local plant agreements.

The new national terms, providing progress toward the job security the UAW had demanded for auto industry workers, signaled an end of the strike that started Oct. 3 after the expiration of the Ford-UAW contract and after contract extensions voted by the union's national negotiating committee.

The UAW executive board meeting for seven hours here to review the status of auto industry negotiations, voted:

- Approval of Ford management's proposals on the national economic and non-economic sections of a new agreement covering 120,000 workers.
- A recommendation for acceptance of the contract by the 180-member National Ford Council.
- Termination of the national strike if the Ford Council approved.

As the AFL-CIO News went to press, Ford Council delegates were considering a report from UAW Pres. Walter P. Reuther on details of the executive board contract action and details of the contract agreement itself.

The board directed a return to work by all members of local unions which have reached agreement on local contract supplements, and voted to follow the same procedure on settlement of local strikes as that followed in the General Motors strike—asking local union leaders and local plant managements to meet in Detroit to settle their disputes here.

Unsettled local issues will be reviewed by UAW officers and authorization to continue strikes will be granted if the facts warrant, the union said. At the time the board met, 26 UAW units out of 73 had not settled disputes on plant working conditions.

The executive board also decided to take a new vote at Kenosha, Wis., Local 72 on acceptance or rejection of the UAW's agreement with American Motors. The local, at a meeting attended by some 3,000 of the local's 12,000 members, had voted to reject a contract which four other locals of AM workers accepted.

Saying that the board considers "the AM agreement is an extremely favorable contract" with respect to national economic matters and local union supplementary agreements dealing with working conditions, production standards, seniority, overtime and other matters, the UAW decided to conduct an educational campaign to "acquaint the Local 72 membership thoroughly" with the provisions of the agreement and then to take a new vote under the supervision of the international union.

"The decision to hold a new vote under these more favorable circumstances," the board said, "is made in keeping with the democratic traditions of the UAW even though the board has the constitutional authority to rule that the contract was ratified" by a majority of all AM workers.

The national Ford agreement follows the general outlines of the contract which went into effect at General Motors Oct. 3. Major benefits include wage increases of 2.5 percent a year or 6 cents an hour, whichever is greater; continuation of the cost-of-living escalation clause; improved supplemental unemployment benefits; wage supplementation during short workweeks; higher pensions and life insurance, and medical-hospital insurance paid for by the company.

Next on the UAW schedule was stepped-up bargaining with Chrysler Corp.

TWO SETS of auto negotiations have kept Harold Schauer, above, busy for more than three months. Vice president of Auto Workers Local 412, representing engineering employes at Detroit Chrysler plants and one American Motors unit, Schauer has sat in on talks with management negotiators for both firms.

Boss Unfair, But Not for Pegler Piece

Mineral, Va.—An employer's action in reading to his workers a bitterly anti-union column by Westbrook Pegler was not coercive but other employer conduct did interfere with an election lost by the Clothing Workers, the National Labor Relations Board has decided.

The board set aside an election held here Jan. 26 at the Myrna Mills, Inc., and ordered a new election by Nov. 6 on the basis of these findings:

- The employer sent letters and leaflets to all employes and made a speech to them saying he had shut down a plant in Honesdale, Pa., because of union "interference" and "increasing demands" and "don't let that happen here."
- Agents of the employer signed a coercive newspaper ad threatening a plant shutdown if the union won an election; threatened employes with job loss, and otherwise created an atmosphere of fear in this semi-rural community.

The Pegler column was printed Jan. 25 in a Richmond, Va., daily paper. It alleged union violence at Henderson, N. C., and Berryton, Ga. The union claimed the action of Samuel Dorksy, company owner, in reading it was coercive. The NLRB rejected the charge.

CORRECTION

The Allied Industrial Workers have asked the AFL-CIO News to correct a statement in the September issue of the Allied Industrial Worker that the Chattanooga (Tenn.) Times had carried an editorial asking workers at the Peerless Woolen Mills, Rossville, Ga., to vote against the union.

It was not the Chattanooga Times but the Chattanooga News-Free Press that carried the editorial, according to AIW Pres. Carl Griepentrog. The Times, he said, was "eminently fair" to the union.

EIGHT SEWING MACHINES purchased through funds raised by AFL-CIO needle trades unions were presented to the Esperanza Sacoto manual training school in Portoviejo, capital of Manabi province in Ecuador, by AFL-CIO Rep. Robert E. Houke, on temporary assignment in that country. The school is sponsored by the Provincial Labor Federation and is named after the first woman to support the labor movement in Portoviejo. Houke is here shown inspecting some of the school's handiwork as the students look on.

Deck Officers End West Coast Strike

San Francisco—Agreement by the Masters, Mates & Pilots and the Pacific Maritime Association on a memorandum of settlement has ended the last of the labor disputes that tied up American sea traffic and led to a Taft-Hartley injunction last June.

Members of the MMP's West Coast local voted 335-252 to accept a new three-year contract subject to ratification by members in a secret ballot referendum, and to man 45 tied-up vessels.

The agreement was based on a formula recommended by a three-man panel named by Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg. Under it, unsettled issues will go to binding arbitration.

Race Bias Ban Sought In U. S.-Aided Housing

The U.S. Civil Rights Commission has urged Pres. Kennedy to issue an executive order aimed at eliminating racial discrimination in the sale and financing of homes.

The bipartisan six-member commission was unanimous in asking the President to direct the Federal Housing Administration, Veterans Administration and Federal National Mortgage Association to "take steps" to assure non-discrimination by builders, banks and real estate brokers in home sales financed or insured by these agencies.

Four members also recommended that either the President or Congress require a similar non-discriminatory policy by all federally-regulated banks and other financial institutions.

The commission majority said that federally-regulated lending institutions "are a major factor in the denial of equal opportunity."

Commission Chairman John A. Hannah added that if bankers exercise leadership "the goal of equal housing opportunity will become practical and attainable."

10-14-61

Joining Hannah in the majority recommendations were Ervin N. Griswold, Rev. Theodore M. Hesburgh and Spottswood W. Robinson III. Commission Vice Chairman Robert G. Storey and Commissioner Robert S. Rankin dissented in whole or in part.

On the unanimous recommendations on housing, the commission noted that the 1960 campaign platforms of both parties pledged action to prohibit discrimination in federally-assisted housing.

"Denial of equal housing," the report declared, "means essentially the deliberate exclusion of many minority groups from a large part of the housing market and to a large extent confinement in deteriorating ghettos."

The commission added:

"Federal programs, federal benefits, federal resources have been widely, if indirectly, used in a discriminatory manner—and the federal government has done virtually nothing to prevent it."

The commission suggested as one step that government agencies require builders and developers to sign agreements containing nondiscrimination provisions.

The report was the third of five scheduled to be issued this year. Previous recommendations covered voting rights and education. The next report was announced as dealing with equal opportunity in employment.

Labor Parley Assails Britain's Wage Freeze

Blackpool, England—The "whole edifice" of Conservative government promises "lies in ruins," Hugh Gaitskell, Labor Party leader, charged at the party's 60th conference here.

Gaitskell challenged the Conservative administration's "pay pause," or wage freeze, and gave voice to organized labor's basic complaint that the government is putting its emphasis on curbing wages rather than on boosting output and increasing productivity.

"The present crisis is no temporary affair," he declared, charging that Britain's progress is lagging behind that of other industrial nations.

"It is a crisis of spirit, of British society today. If we are the sick man of Europe today, tomorrow we may well be its poor relation."

Britain's greatest need, he said, is economic expansion—the nation cannot fill its obligations at home or abroad without it. He looked to extension of public ownership, coupled with effective economic planning and expanded research and development, to accomplish it.

Sparked largely by trade union delegations, the conference greatly strengthened Gaitskell's leadership of the party by backing up his "policy for peace," indicating that any Labor government would be friendly to the United States. Gaitskell himself, in advocating endorsement of his program, welcomed the Kennedy Administration's foreign policy. He said that in some key instances it had resulted in proposed measures long advocated by the Labor Party.

To the alliance with the U.S., he said, a Labor government could bring what is now lacking on Britain's part, a firm stand against outdated colonial policies.

The conference overrode Gaitskell by narrow margins on two issues—U.S. Polaris bases in Britain and the training of German NATO troops there. A year ago, when the party conference advocated unilateral nuclear disarmament, Gaitskell refused to accept the vote as binding and the conference this year reversed itself.

Gaitskell himself criticized U.S. policy on Cuba and Red China.

Transport Workers Re-Elect Quill, Guinan

New York—Michael J. Quill was re-elected president of the Transport Workers at the union's 11th constitutional convention here. The 750 delegates also re-elected Sec.-Treas. Matthew Guinan.

TWU members in the New York City area were able to view highlights of the convention within a few hours after the final session adjourned. Filmed excerpts of the five-day proceedings were televised in a special TWU program.

Legislative Funds Voted in 2 States

Two AFL-CIO state organizations have put into operation plans for raising funds to help build support for liberal legislative programs. The Tennessee Labor Council at its convention in Nashville approved an assessment of $1 per member to build support for a 14-point program. In Oregon, all 24 county and area labor councils have approved the plan adopted at the state convention in June urging all members to contribute $1 to support an 18-point program. Comparable fund-raising plans were adopted earlier in Mississippi, Louisiana and Alabama.

Tennessee

Nashville—The Tennessee State AFL-CIO at its convention here passed by overwhelming voice votes constitutional amendments assessing each affiliate $1 per member per year to finance a campaign for a legislative "Program of Progress."

The special fund, collections for which begin in January, will be used only for political action, public relations and legislative action campaigns in support of the program, including not only liberalization of present laws and enactment of new legislation, but the building of defenses against anti-union enactments.

"If we develop and mobilize our potential political strength," the delegates were told in literature explaining the program, "we have the power to stop passage of future anti-labor legislation, to repeal some of the existing bad laws, and to enact legislation to raise the purchasing power and living standards of all Tennessee workers.

"With over 175,000 members, organized labor is far the largest economic organization in Tennessee.

"Because in past elections we have generally failed to develop and mobilize our potential political strength, probably less than 12 percent of [our] potential—less than 82,000 votes—has supported the candidates recommended by labor.

"When we develop and mobilize even 55 percent to 65 percent of this potential—377,000 to 445,000 votes—organized labor will be the strongest political force in Tennessee. To accomplish this will require careful planning, effective COPE organization and adequate finances. But it can and must be done."

The political action support for the Program of Progress includes solidifying the labor vote behind friendly candidates for governor and the legislature, with COPE committees, including women's activities departments and telephone squadrons, in all political subdivisions down to election precincts having union membership.

The public relations phase will

Oregon

Portland—All 24 central county and area labor councils in Oregon have approved the political education and action program enacted at the State AFL-CIO convention in June and have recommended that all locals in their areas contribute $1 per member to a special fund to build support for an 18-point legislative program.

The $1 per member may be contributed either individually or, upon authorization, through the union treasury. Several local unions have already forwarded their contributions to the State AFL-CIO office here.

Support for the program also has come in the form of endorsements by building trades councils in eight counties or areas, including the big Portland body; several district councils of the Lumber & Sawmill Workers, and the Portland District Council of Carpenters.

State AFL-CIO Pres. J. D. McDonald, Executive Sec.-Treas. James T. Marr or Political Education Dir. George Brown has visited each county or area labor council twice since the convention to build up support for the program. Al Green, western states director for the national Committee on Political Education, has accompanied Brown on several of his trips. In addition, volunteer speakers have been visiting local union meetings in a number of counties to build up grass roots support for the program.

The funds raised will be used for political activity in support of candidates for national, state, legislative and district offices as well as for legislation. The money coming from rank-and-file union members will be augmented by a voluntary $50 club of full-time union officers.

The $1 per member campaign is being pushed with appeals for 5 cents each to back 18 pieces of state or federal legislation, "plus a dime."

The legislative program includes increased workmen's compensation and unemployment insurance, with broader eligibility

NLRB Urged to Bar Textile Mill Closing

Shutdown Set After Union Vote

By David L. Perlman

Rossville, Ga.—The Allied Industrial Workers have asked the National Labor Relations Board to block the closing of a big Peerless Woolen Mills plant here and prevent the scheduled dismissal of nearly 1,700 workers by Christmas. Peerless is owned by Burlington Industries, the nation's largest textile chain.

The union won a representation election in August and was attempting to negotiate a first contract when Burlington announced it will shut down the Rossville mill.

A Burlington public relations representative, James Love Jr., was quoted in the Chattanooga Times of Sept. 26 as declaring that the vote for union representation "was a consideration" in the decision to close the plant. He said there were other financial problems involved and "this thing had been in the works for some time."

AIW Regional Director Dominick D'Ambrosio said the union has filed unfair labor practice charges with the NLRB and has asked the labor board's general counsel, Stuart Rothman, to seek a federal court injunction to prevent the plant from being closed before the NLRB has acted on the union's charges.

An injunction, he said, would prevent "another Darlington." D'Ambrosio referred to the similar closing of the Darlington Mfg. Co. mill in South Carolina shortly before Christmas in 1956, after the Textile Workers Union of America had won bargaining rights.

An NLRB examiner, months later, found that the company had been guilty of unfair labor practices but said there was no meaningful remedy for the 540 jobless workers since the firm had gone out of business. An attempt by the TWUA to force the Deering, Milliken tex-

For Eleanor Roosevelt Foundation:

Workers Rally to March on Cancer

The AFL-CIO $1 million "March on Cancer" will get under way formally next month, but already union members "are really excited" about it, according to AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler.

Speaking on the Mutual Broadcasting System's Labor News Conference, Schnitzler said workers are responding to the drive to raise funds for the Eleanor Roosevelt Cancer Foundation "because we're taking it right to them and they're showing their interest and their reaction by the way they speak to their officers."

Schnitzler discussed the program under questioning by Harry Conn, editor of Press Associates, Inc., and Duane Emme, reporter for Labor, the railroad unions' newspaper.

All workers know or have heard of someone who has died or is ill of cancer he said, adding that 2.5 million people now in the labor force "are going to die needlessly of cancer." He called cancer a "national plague," adding that "we must do something about it."

"It is my opinion," he said, "that the time for finding an actual cure or a cause for cancer shouldn't be measured in days, months or years, but it should be measured in dollars.

Meany Hails Maryland Labor for Drive to End Restaurant Race Bias

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany has congratulated the Maryland State & D. C. AFL-CIO and its president, Woodrow F. Strong, for their "vigorous campaign" to secure the elimination of racial discrimination in restaurants along U. S. Route 40 in the state.

Route 40 is the principal Washington-New York motor road. Continued refusal of restaurant owners to serve African diplomats en route between the two cities has caused repercussions in all parts of the world. Pres. Kennedy has intervened personally, and the area AFL-CIO passed a strong resolution at its recent convention.

"I have followed with interest," Meany wrote, "the vigorous campaign of the Maryland State & D. C. AFL-CIO on behalf of eliminating discrimination in places of public accommodation.

"The international aspects of the problem, created by unfortunate incidents on Route 40, have been the focus of public attention. However, as you have properly emphasized, equal treatment should be assured at all times to all persons as a matter of Americanism. Our own citizens surely should enjoy the same rights as visitors from abroad. There must be no passport requirements in public places.

"Therefore let me congratulate you and your organization on your continuing fight against segregation, discrimination and all other forms of bigotry. I assure you that you are reflecting the policies and principles of the AFL-CIO as a whole."

State Dept. officials have conferred repeatedly with owners of restaurants along Route 40, both singly and in groups, in an effort to halt their segregation practices, and to ease the tension it has caused in other parts of the world, particularly in Africa and Asia. The restaurateurs, for the most part, profess they would lose the bulk of their trade, which they say comes from southern truck drivers, if they were to cater to Negroes, but that they would be willing to desegregate if other cafe owners along the highway were to do the same.

The area involved is between Baltimore and the Delaware line.

Maryland, which boasts that it pioneered religious freedom in the New World back in 1649, is to all practical purposes politically governed by legislators from the Eastern Shore—those counties east of Chesapeake Bay—with a strong background of segregationist sympathies.

Bishop Tells Priests To Use Union Labor

El Paso—The bishop of El Paso has instructed pastors of Catholic parishes to specify, in advertising for bids on churches and schools, that only union labor can be used.

Bishop Sidney M. Metzger wrote pastors in an episcopal letter that economic and industrial growth in this area of Texas has increased faster than wages and benefits in many cases.

"This is not to be wondered at," he wrote, "since labor unions have been unable to overcome indifference and lack of understanding." Unions also have suffered, he said, "from hostile attitudes and pressures."

Labor's $1-Million Cancer March Rallies Rank-and-File Support thing was true of polio. It wasn't until Pres. Roosevelt dramatized the seriousness of polio that the people became conscious of their own responsibility of providing the money to carry on the research. Now, it is pretty nearly completely eliminated. But it has only been eliminated to the extent that it has through the dollars that were contributed by the American people. And for that reason, I maintain cancer is in the same category.

"If we give freely now we will live longer—all of us."

Schnitzler said organized labor undertook the campaign "conscious of what we believe to be our responsibility to the welfare of the human beings that are members of the trade union movement as well as those that are not." The drive, he claimed, will "make everybody more conscious of what cancer is."

"They're going to be more concerned that the medical profession has sufficient dollars to continue the research program until they actually find a positive cure as well as being able to properly diagnose in time," he said.

The drive was authorized at the recent meeting of the AFL-CIO Executive Council in New York. The foundation, which has merged with the American Cancer Society, is headed by Rep. James Roosevelt (D-Calif.), son of Mrs. Roosevelt and the late President. Chairman of its scientific advisory board is Dr. John Heller, president of the Memorial Sloan-Kettering Cancer Center.

Schnitzler recalled that Heller has pointed out 100,000 working men and women will die needlessly of cancer this year alone, adding that "if earlier diagnosis had been made, they would have been saved."

"According to the figures of the American Cancer Society, in 1946 only one patient out of four was saved," Schnitzler said. "Today they say that half of all cancer patients could be saved if it is diagnosed early enough.

"The average person suffering a pain fears first that he has cancer and he resists going to a doctor for fear of finding out that which he doesn't want to find out. Finally when the diagnosis is made, many times it is too late for corrective surgical work. . . .

To Eliminate Fear

"Now, if we do the research that should be done to find not only the positive cure but to find the cause, then there won't be that fear connected with cancer and as soon as there is an early pain or sign of some kind, properly diagnosed, with proper surgical attention given, I think that this dread disease can be practically wiped out."

Schnitzler said "we'll use every means at our command" to make the $1 million drive, on the basis of a minimum of 10 cents a member, a success.

Each of the 135 international unions, each of the 50 state central bodies and each of the 880 city central organizations will establish contact with each local union in affiliation with it, he explained.

"We're not afraid of duplication," he added. "We want to bring this to the attention of the trade union member so that he will be fully consicous of what is expected of him."

The slogan during November, he said, will be "Ten Cents a Member, More if You Can Afford It." Many workers, he predicted, will give more than 10 cents, but if the average is 10 cents the total "would reach the million dollars we want to get together." It is planned to present the sum to Mrs. Roosevelt during the AFL-CIO convention opening Dec. 7 in Miami Beach, Fla.

Schnitzler stressed that gifts to the campaign will be accepted from persons outside the labor movement and may be made either through union bodies or directly to the national or local American Cancer Society.

All the money raised, he emphasized, will be spent on research, because there will be no administrative costs in raising it through the AFL-CIO organizations.

Labor Aide Appointed by Cancer Group

Michael Johnson, formerly assistant director of the Ladies' Garment Workers' Union Label Dept., has been appointed director of labor activities for the Eleanor Roosevelt Cancer Foundation, Rep. James Roosevelt (D-Calif.), foundation president, has announced.

Johnson's initial assignment will be to help with Labor's March on Cancer, which was authorized by the AFL-CIO Executive Council at its recent meeting in New York. The AFL-CIO is raising $1 million for the foundation to be presented at its next convention, which opens in Miami Beach on Dec. 7.

Johnson, a veteran of 25 years in the labor movement, was education director for the former Pennsylvania Federation of Labor for a decade.

He helped set up the first mobile diagnostic medical facility for the ILGWU in Pennsylvania, has served in many voluntary health agencies and has been a member of the board of the National Association for Mental Health. In his new post he will push foundation educational activities aimed at saving workers' lives through early detection and prompt diagnosis and treatment of cancer.

Asian Labor Body Raps Soviet Tests

Saigon, South Vietnam—The executive board of the Asian Regional Organization of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions at a meeting here protested the resumption of nuclear bomb tests by the Soviet Union and expressed its concern that they represent both a physical danger to the world and a threat to peace.

The board also passed a resolution deploring restrictions on freedom of movement in Berlin imposed by the Communist authorities of East Berlin. Through the United Nations and the Intl. Labor Organization, the board urged the Soviet government to remove the "artificial and arbitrary barriers" that divide the city.

Goldberg Hails March on Cancer

Sec. of Labor Arthur J. Goldberg has wired Pres. George Meany that the AFL-CIO's decision to raise $1 million for the Eleanor Roosevelt Cancer Foundation "gives me new reason to be proud of my long association with the labor movement."

"Once again the AFL-CIO has demonstrated in deeds its devotion to the national welfare," he said. "Knowing union members as I do, I have no doubt whatever that you will meet or surpass your goal, and I join you in the hope that this great new effort will lead to as happy results for humanity as the original 'March of Dimes' in which labor played such an outstanding part."

NLRB Order:

Georgia Firm Must Rehire 159 Strikers

A Georgia cotton mill has been directed by the National Labor Relations Board to rehire 159 discharged workers fired during a strike, to pay them lost wages of $150,000 or more and to engage in good-faith bargaining with their union.

More than two years after the Textile Workers Union of America struck the Fitzgerald Mills Corp. of Fitzgerald, Ga., a three-member NLRB panel rejected an intermediate report by Trial Examiner Lee J. Best and reached these directly contrary conclusions:

- In negotiations that started late in 1948, mill management delayed in giving information requested by TWUA Local 1252, engaged in "mere surface bargaining," and refused to consider any contract proposals except its own.
- Local mill management had no real authority to reach a settlement but followed the telephoned orders of company Pres. Floyd W. Jefferson, Jr., in New York City, or Sec.-Treas. Mark M. Horblit, in Boston, Mass.
- Company representatives made no genuine effort to reach agreement. They made no concessions before the strike began May 11, 1959, and did not bargain in good faith.
- The plant general manager solicited the strikers to abandon the union and go back to work, saying he would "die and go to hell" before he would sign a contract with the striking union.
- By denying reinstatement to the strikers upon their unconditional application and by returning some strikers to work without their former seniority, the company discriminated as to the hire and tenure of employes and violated the law.

Unfair Practice Strike

The panel disagreed with a finding of the trial examiner that the union called the strike to "bring economic pressure in order to force further concessions."

Pointing out that the union could hardly have been seeking "further concessions" in view of the absence of any concessions at all by the mill, the NLRB ruled that the strike was the result of the management's failure to bargain in good faith and was an unfair labor practice strike at all times.

"There is clear evidence," the board said, "which reveals that the cessation of work was the result" of the management's conduct.

Best as trial examiner found that the company acted in good faith in bargaining that began on or about Jan. 20, 1959; in posting bulletin board notices for its employes, and in reinstating some employes without full seniority as economic strikers who had been "permanently replaced."

Board Chairman Frank W. McCulloch and members Boyd Leedom and Gerald A. Brown, on the basis of the testimony Best himself quoted and on the rest of the record, reversed him, as both the union and the NLRB general counsel had requested, and held the strikers protected against discharges.

The board ordered the company to offer 159 named workers "immediate and full reinstatement to their former or substantially equivalent positions, without prejudice to their seniority or other rights and privileges, discharging, if necessary, any replacements in order to provide work for such employes."

Management has asked the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans to reverse the NLRB. The union asked the Second Circuit Court of Appeals in New York to further liberalize the decision.

Labor Seeks Role in Latin Aid Program

New York—The AFL-CIO will seek labor representation on government and inter-American agencies handling the promotion and financing of social projects under the Administration's Alliance for Progress program for Latin America.

The AFL-CIO Executive Council, meeting here, declared also that the federation will assist unions affiliated with ORIT as well as international trade secretariats in their efforts fully to participate in and share in the benefits of the program.

The council approved a report by its Inter-American Affairs Committee recommending these actions which grew out of a meeting of 22 AFL-CIO unions involved in inter-American activities.

The meeting was held during the council sessions for the purpose of exchanging information and exploring the possibilities of coordinating activities of the 22 unions represented in terms of the Alliance for Progress program.

U.S.-Japan Textile Pact Tagged Backward Step

New York—The U.S.-Japanese agreement on American imports of textiles and apparel for 1962 is a "serious backward step," the AFL-CIO Executive Council has declared, because it threatens the "constructive approach" worked out in Geneva earlier this year.

The council adopted a statement voicing its "serious concern" and warning that unless the multilateral arrangements worked out among cotton textile exporting nations in Geneva are extended, the "forces urging unilateral solution to the import problem will be immeasurably strengthened."

The statement hailed the Geneva agreement of July 21, 1961 as a "major advance" in providing a worldwide acceptable approach to orderly marketing of textiles and apparel by definitions to evaluate the flow of such trade between nations, broadening the base for international trade relations and setting up relief from undue pressure of imports.

The bilateral agreement with Japan, the council said, authorized Japan to increase its 1961 shipments of apparel despite the "heavy burden" of imports and the poor condition of the apparel market in the U.S.

Further concessions were made in negotiations for the 1962 agreement, disregarding the classification structure, market disruption controls and other measures worked out in Geneva.

To strengthen the forces seeking one-country solutions to the import problem by raising duties, etc. "would be a tragedy for the United States and the entire free world," the council declared.

Randolph's Charges Rejected:

AFL-CIO Performance Cited In Fighting Discrimination

By Saul Miller

New York—The AFL-CIO Executive Council has rejected charges by Vice Pres. A. Philip Randolph that the federation has failed to come to grips with the problem of racial discrimination in unions.

The council adopted over Randolph's lone opposition vote a 20-page report by a subcommittee set up in June to review a memorandum on civil rights in the AFL-CIO submitted by Randolph. The detailed and documented report answers Randolph's charges and concludes that the "purport" of his memorandum is to have the AFL-CIO set up a "punitive program" in the civil rights field.

The council-adopted report—signed by vice presidents George M. Harrison as chairman, Richard F. Walsh and Jacob S. Potosfky—declares:

"Mr. Randolph loses sight of the fact that the AFL-CIO has been, and is today, a major and foremost force in the land for the elimination of all forms of race discrimination, segregation and racial injustice."

The "major" responsibility for the "gap that has developed between organized labor and the Negro community," the report declares, falls "upon Mr. Randolph himself."

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, terming the report "very factual and constructive," told reporters that the consensus of the council during discussion was that Randolph should cooperate in trying to solve the problems of civil rights rather than attack the labor movement.

He commented that Randolph appears to be on the "other side of the table" against the AFL-CIO instead of on "our side" helping to work out solutions. Randolph's attacks, he added, prevent the federation from making even faster progress.

In a general analysis of the Randolph memorandum, the council report notes that the AFL-CIO has an estimated 1.5 million Negro members, and that the federation's civil rights policy "is forthright and unequivocal" that there must be no denial of benefits of union membership to any worker because of race, creed, color or national origin.

Among the multitude of organizations in the AFL-CIO, it notes, there are "many imperfections and shortcomings with respect to nondiscrimination." The report then details the intensified activities in affiliates and state and local organizations on civil rights.

The AFL-CIO, it says, has only one form of punishment—expulsion—which does not "cure the offending practices," but rather removes the membership of the expelled organization from "corrective influences from the parent body through education and persuasion."

In a detailed consideration of Randolph's memorandum the report makes these points:

● The charge of racial exclusion from craft unions by tacit consent is based on one local union case which is receiving "diligent attention" and is nearing solution. Randolph, says the report, has cited "the exception that proves the rule."

● The charge of racial exclusion from apprenticeship training programs is laced with "inaccuracies and misstatements." It cites Meany's recent testimony before Congress supporting legislation to deny federal assistance to apprenticeship programs where discrimination is practiced.

The report notes the charge that there are no Negro apprentices among Bricklayers in Washington is in error, citing a top apprenticeship award presented to a Negro member of the union.

Randolph's implied charge of discrimination in hiring of the AFL-CIO headquarters staff was tagged "false" by the report. It cited numerous positions filled by Negroes on the staff and clerical level, noting that "on the other hand" Randolph's own headquarters staff at the Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters, the union of which he is president, is all "non-white" and that his agreement with the Office Employes Union, covering the staff, "does not contain a non-discrimination clause."

The charge of racial barriers to occupation status, says the report, is not supported by the facts as it concerns motion picture operators in New York City. The report lists the names of Negro operators holding top jobs as projectionists.

Employers at Fault

In the hotel and restaurant industry, Randolph leaves the impression that the Hotel & Restaurant Workers Union discriminates against Negroes, the report says, whereas, the discrimination in fact is practiced by employers who do the hiring. The subcommittee report says that the union has "one of the strongest and most comprehensive civil rights programs anywhere."

The report terms "false and gratuitous" Randolph's charge that "not one single step has been made to desegregate and integrate Jim Crow unions" that belong to AFL-CIO affiliates. The report cites a number of specific cases in Washington, Baltimore, Cleveland, etc., where such integration has been accomplished.

It adds that "there is no evidence of any effort" by Randolph to get the Pullman Co., with whom he negotiates contracts, to agree to employment without regard to race or color. The company, says the report, employs only non-whites in the U.S.

Meany Supported

To the charge that Meany has failed to place "the moral weight of his office" behind the federation's Civil Rights Committee and Dept. of Civil Rights, the report declares "this is simply not true," citing the numerous awards from Negro and other groups, statements, speeches and activities by the federation president.

To charges that the federation has not effectively mobilized for civil rights and that there has been a loss of faith in labor by the Negro community, the report replies:

"The record shows that when false charges and unwarranted attacks have been leveled against the AFL-CIO, untruthfully accusing it of weakness in the pursuit of civil rights, these charges and attacks have been met with silence from Mr. Randolph. This silence and tacit consent of Mr. Randolph as a vice president of the AFL-CIO have lent plausibility to these charges and attacks in the eyes of the Negro community. . . . The major share of the responsibility for the 'gap' that has developed between organized labor and the Negro community, therefore falls upon Mr. Randolph himself."

To Randolph's recommendations for a national conference of union presidents and creation of civil rights committees and departments in affiliated unions, the report details actions already taken in this area.

Democratic Practice

To the complaint that not enough unions elect Negro delegates to their conventions or the AFL-CIO convention, the report notes that democratic practice provides for free choice, not directions or suggestions from "the top."

The report defends the competence of the director of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Civil Rights in reply to Randolph's demand that the department be headed by a Negro, and it cites also the need for professional knowledge. It defends the AFL-CIO's educational and publications program on civil rights and objects strongly to Randolph's target date approach to compliance, with expulsion as the remedy.

It reviews a charge brought against the Molders union, noting an intensive investigation by Meany that showed no evidence of discrimination.

Finally, the report analyzes the role of the Negro American Labor Council, concluding that it has "neither offered nor given any cooperation" to the AFL-CIO civil rights program and that its record is one of "words rather than action."

Goldberg Sees Gains In Union Fight on Bias

Unions are doing a "progressively better job" in the area of race discrimination, Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg told a Washington, D. C., press conference.

His remark came in answer to a reporter's question asking whether he agreed with an AFL-CIO Executive Council action on proposals offered by federation Vice Pres. A. Philip Randolph.

Goldberg declined comment on the "internal affairs" of the federation, saying it would be "not appropriate," but said that on the "general issue" he felt there was "growing awareness" among unions that discrimination in the economic field is "morally wrong and harmful."

The record of unions is "not perfect," he said, and all problems have not been solved. There has been "good cooperation" by labor in the President's Committee on Equal Employment Opportunity, he continued. In apprenticeship programs, no plans with discriminatory features are now registered with the Labor Dept., he added.

Goldberg also told reporters that two subcommittees of the President's Advisory Committee on Labor-Management Policy had submitted tentative reports for discussion by the full group.

The Secretary announced that lost time in unauthorized strikes on missile sites had been sharply reduced since advent of a Missile Sites Commission with power to process grievances and a no-strike pledge by international unions. Time lost in the June-July-August period, he said, was 768 mandays of more than 4 million worked.

Council Protests Choice Of Sears for Trade Fair

The AFL-CIO Executive Council has protested to Pres. John F. Kennedy against the government's selection of the "anti-union" Sears, Roebuck & Co. as representative of U.S. retailers at the Intl. Trade Fair of the Pacific in Lima, Peru, Oct. 12 to 29, and has requested that Sears be replaced by a more representative company.

The council, in a telegram sent by AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, urged Kennedy to take action unless Sears "guarantees non-interference with the rights of its employes" to join or not to join a union of their choice and negotiates in good faith with recognized bargaining agents of a unit of its employes.

The Retail Clerks are pushing a consumer boycott against Sears for its bargaining record in San Francisco and other cities. The boycott was endorsed by the AFL-CIO Executive Council in August 1960.

Union groups have protested vigorously to Commerce Sec. Luther Hodges against his department's choice of Sears to represent the U.S. in Lima.

Puerto Rico Ruling Hit For Lag in Basic Wage

New York—AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany said the recent action of a minimum wage board in Puerto Rico in voting a 4-cent hourly increase in the knit goods industry by a 5 to 4 vote was "very disappointing."

Meany reported the federation's Executive Council had discussed the situation and was concerned by the decision which found three public members and two employers teaming up to make a one-vote majority. The three labor members and one employer member opposed the 4-cent decision.

The 1961 changes in the wage-hour law apply a percentage increase to Puerto Rico but leave actual tripartite determination up to minimum wage boards which can cut back the percentage. The wage in knit goods was set last year in Puerto Rico at $1 an hour. Under the application of the 15 percent increase in the minimum it should have gone up to $1.15, but the board voted for $1.04 an hour.

Winding up its three-day meeting the council took these actions:

● Approved a report of a subcommittee to amend the constitutional provisions governing pensions for the federation's executive officers to provide for surviving widows, and set up a subcommittee to investigate the current status of staff employe pension plans in terms of a possible increase in benefits.

● Set the next meeting of the council for Dec. 6 at Miami Beach, the day prior to the opening of the federation's biennial convention.

● Approved a change in name of the Intl. Molders & Foundry Workers of North America to the Intl. Molders & Allied Workers Union.

Steelworkers Win Stay in Vote Suit

Pittsburgh—A District Court ruling that the Steelworkers' procedures for nominating and electing international officers fail to meet requirements of the Landrum-Griffin Act has been stayed by U.S. Circuit Court Judge Austin Staley pending an appeal to the 3rd Circuit Court of Appeals in Philadelphia.

The ruling was handed down by Federal Judge J. P. Willson in a suit by former Pres. Nicholas Mamula of Local 1211 to set aside an election resulting in his defeat and the victory of Kay Kluz for director of Dist. 20, in nearby Beaver Valley. Willson based his decision on a finding that the union constitution does not require a secret ballot for nominations.

The union contends a secret ballot is required only in elections, and cited a ruling by former Labor Sec. James P. Mitchell that its election procedures are in "complete conformity" with L-G.

Zander Sees Government Union Surge

New York — Pres. Arnold S. Zander of the State, County & Municipal Employes expects the number of public employes in labor unions to triple within the next two years, he told a meeting of personnel experts here.

Zander predicted that the recommendations of a committee now studying federal recognition of labor unions will, if adopted, do as much for the growth of public employe unions as the Wagner Act did for unions in the '30s. Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg heads the committee—the President's Task Force on Employe-Management Relations in the Federal Service.

"I would strongly advise public officials," Zander said, " to start preparing now" for quick employe union growth and recognition with little friction.

British Rubber Marks Industrial Peace Era

London—A 21-year period of industrial peace is being celebrated this year by the 100,000 workers and 150 firms which comprise the British rubber industry.

U.S. Names Meany, Reuther as Advisers

United Nations, N. Y.—The appointment of AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany and Vice Pres. Walter P. Reuther as special advisers to the U. S. delegation to the United Nations has been announced by Ambassador Adlai E. Stevenson, chairman of the delegation.

Stevenson said Meany and Reuther were invited to participate in the deliberations because of a need of "expert knowledge on social and economic questions" to cope with the "ever-increasing array of complex questions" before the UN's 16th General Assembly.

Unions Back Great Lakes Shipping Aid

New York—Passage of legislation to provide direct government aid to American flag shipping on the Great Lakes will be a major objective of the AFL-CIO Maritime Committee in the next session of Congress.

The committee, which met here, made plans for a campaign in support of a bill introduced by Rep. Alvin E. O'Konski (R-Wis.). The bill would authorize payment of government subsidies on construction and operation of vessels for domestic commerce on the Great Lakes. Federal ship operating subsidies are now paid only for service on essential foreign trade routes.

The committee declared that American flag operations on the lakes "are threatened with extinction" by foreign flag competition.

"The maintenance of a healthy shipping industry on the lakes under our own flag is vital to the economy of the area and to our ability to mobilize our strength in an emergency," the committee stated.

The meeting also acted on problems affecting maritime safety, automation and military merchant ship operations.

The Maritime Union, American Radio Association and Lakes Seamen's Division of the Steelworkers were represented at the meeting. The Shipbuilding Workers (IUMSWA) also participated. NMU Pres. Joseph Curran is chairman of the committee, which maintains legislative, research and public relations activities in Washington on behalf of its affiliates.

Legislative Program Set In Tennessee

be aimed at developing public support for the program.

The 14-point legislative program includes repeal of the compulsory open shop law; liberalization of workmen's compensation, with maximum benefits raised from the present $34 to $48 weekly; reapportionment of the legislature on the basis of the number of qualified voters; an increase in unemployment compensation from $32 to $45 a week and extension of benefits from 22 to 39 weeks.

Also, guaranteed state loans for college educations for qualified high school graduates; modernization of the prevailing wage law; enactment of a temporary disability insurance law; outlawing of professional strikebreaking agencies; extending the protection of safety laws to construction workers; state tax revision; passage of a state Fair Labor Standards Act; railroad safety and sanitation legislation; increased juror pay, and opposition to "any legislation detrimental to the welfare of the people of Tennessee and members of organized labor."

The convention, in addition to adopting its legislative program, also approved constitutional changes establishing a new executive board consisting of 17 vice presidents and the four executive offices.

Officers re-elected were Steve A. Para as president, Earl W. Burnett as first vice president, Matthew Lynch as secretary and Charles M. Houk as treasurer.

Para was named by the board as director of both political and legislative activities, with Houk as assistant in the political education field and Burnett as assistant in legislative activities.

Illinois Labor Urges Standard of 30 Hours

Peoria, Ill.—A national movement for the 30-hour week with no reduction in weekly take-home pay was called for by the Illinois State AFL-CIO.

The action was taken by the state convention here two days after Sec. of Labor Arthur J. Goldberg rejected the proposition that the workweek should be cut in order to provide more jobs. Goldberg said the first task is to put all Americans willing and able to work back on the job.

The 2,300 delegates declared that "the impact of job displacement through automation, labor-saving devices and speed-up must not become a source of higher profits for the few and hardship for the many."

Goldberg told the convention that Pres. Kennedy would propose new legislation to Congress next January to deal with the unemployment situation "if the measures we have already taken do not bring the percentage of unemployed substantially below its present level."

A resolution chiding Kennedy for vetoing a longevity postal pay bill was adopted by unanimous vote of the convention.

Gov. Otto Kerner said "there will be no legislative restrictions on the collective bargaining process as long as he is in office. From the platform he announced that he was naming a convention delegate from Electrical Workers Local 134, Robert R. Donnelly, as the state director of labor.

Pres. Reuben G. Soderstrom of the State AFL-CIO was awarded a 50-year membership emblem of the Typographical Union. Soderstrom, Executive Vice Pres. Stanley L. Johnson and Sec.-Treas. Maurice McElligott had been re-elected to these posts by referendum vote before the convention. A proposal to elect officers at conventions was defeated.

Other Actions

In other major actions, the convention:

- Urged Sunday closing of all "non-essential" retail stores.
- Called for amendments to the state health and safety laws to protect workers from radiation hazards and to provide protective appliances to safeguard the hearing of workers at airports.
- Applauded the enactment of a state Fair Employment Practices Act in the 1961 legislative session, but urged quick action by the legislature to include firms with 10 or more employes. The law now covers only employers with 100 or more workers, although eventually it will limit coverage to firms with at least 50 employes.
- Requested legislation and administrative orders to give state and municipal employes union recognition and collective bargaining rights.
- Called on the members of the Illinois legislature to resolve differences over congressional redistricting to prevent the chaos that would result in statewide competition for the state's 24 congressional seats.
- Voted to establish a committee "to study, discuss and adopt means by which they can establish an effective, racially-integrated apprenticeship program."
- Asked for a "low-rate graduated income tax" to avoid the need to increase the Illinois sales tax—now the highest in the nation at 3.5 percent, with an additional one-half percent collected by municipal governments.

Dollar Drive Backs Oregon Labor's Goals

and establishment of federal standards for jobless benefits; establishment of a state minimum wage law and improvements in the federal law particularly with respect to coverage and overtime; prohibition against the use of professional strikebreakers; establishment of compulsory auto insurance; retention of the state basic income tax and opposition to a sales tax.

Also, opposition to control of workmen's compensation by insurance companies; improvements of the state "little" Bacon-Davis Act; repeal or modification of the Taft-Hartley and Landrum-Griffin Acts; opposition to anti-labor laws, including any proposed "right-to-work" legislation; support of economic development for Oregon.

Also, backing of health care for the elderly under social security; improved wages, pensions and fringe benefits for public employes; federal aid to education; support for a broader public housing program; retention of Oregon's initiative and referendum law, and reapportionment of the legislature on the basis of population.

New York Labor in Action:

Record Registration Credited to Unions

New York—An all-out labor drive for registration of voters here has been singled out by political analysts as responsible for the record number of more than 3.5 million citizens now eligible to vote in the city's mayoral contest Nov. 7.

The labor campaign was under the auspices of the Brotherhood Party, established recently by the New York City Central Labor Council. The drive was the only concerted effort undertaken by the AFL-CIO unions which comprise the newly-formed Brotherhood Party.

Out of 68 District headquarters—one for each of the city's Assembly Districts—came trade unionists for a door-to-door campaign urging registration.

Techniques Used

Twenty-four trucks with sound equipment and signs toured the five boroughs that make up the city. There were torchlight parades of union members' automobiles in various parts of the city on the first registration day.

To top it off, a battery of telephone "organizers," supervised by the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers telephone operators local, called thousands of unionists whose records showed they had not registered. Fifty telephones were in constant use at labor council headquarters throughout registration week.

To ensure that recent arrivals from Puerto Rico and other unregistered citizens could vote, sample literacy tests were distributed for practice so that this requirement for new voters could be met. Members of the New York Teachers local supervised these literacy test trial runs.

The upshot of the drive was that more than 203,000 new registrants were enrolled on the books.

Political observers are agreed that without the Brotherhood Party drive, there wouldn't have been anything near the 203,000 new registrations.

Test on Nov. 7

The final test of labor's political action program will come on election day, Nov. 7. The Brotherhood Party is supporting mayor Robert F. Wagner for re-election and his running mates, Abraham Beame and Paul Screvane, for controller and city council president.

Wagner beat the professional politicians who opposed him in the September Democratic primary, a victory that was unexpected by so-called experts. The dimension of his triumph in a primary among enrolled Democratic voters presumed to be loyal to the party machine, was the stunning surprise. It demonstrated an independence among democratic voters which has forced new interpretations of voting patterns in the metropolitan area.

The Brotherhood Party is playing a part in this development that is called the "new politics"—voters making their choices on the basis of fact rather than tradition.

The party's "grass roots" district headquarters, supervised by experienced trade unionists, is in daily touch with union members at their homes and plants.

More Jobs, Not Budget, Held Primary Concern

The United States "cannot afford" a balanced budget during the present period of high unemployment and unused plant capacity, AFL-CIO Research Director Stanley H. Ruttenberg has warned.

A balanced budget is practical and will be attained "over a period of years," Ruttenberg declared, "if we have general prosperity and high levels of employment and production."

If we try to balance the budget now, "we'll balance it at the expense of large scale unemployment and unused plant capacity," Ruttenberg warned, citing the current jobless rate of 6.8 percent of the labor force.

Ruttenberg, interviewed on the Mutual Broadcasting network's Labor News Conference, said the AFL-CIO still favors a temporary tax cut "to stimulate the economy" if the jobless rate "remains above 6 percent" during the coming year.

The AFL-CIO's economic spokesman also made these points:

- The interest ceiling of 5.25 percent on home mortgages insured by the Federal Housing Administration should be enforced by congressional authority for the FHA to refuse to insure loans on which "discounts" have been paid by the borrower. Ruttenberg termed the practice of discounting "contrary to the basic fundamental purpose of setting an interest rate ceiling."
- It is possible to have both wage increases and price reductions in highly efficient industries where productivity is rising. "If you could get price reductions in the industries whose productivity advance is greater than the economy as a whole and price increases in industries whose productivity is less, you'll get relative price stability" without a wage freeze.
- In steel negotiations next spring, "the American trade union movement would rise up in arms . . . if the President were to say there should be no wage increase." Ruttenberg emphasized that "the stage would be different if the President said that a wage increase is normal, that we need to improve the standards of living and increase the real ability of the people to buy," as well as relating pay rises to increased productivity.
- The AFL-CIO "will support a continuation of our reciprocal trade program" but "it is necessary to make sure that unemployment which results from import competition is taken care of."

The government has a responsibility, Ruttenberg emphasized, "to help the workers, to help the industry and to help the company adjust to the problem of import competition."

- Assignment of account numbers to all taxpayers is not "regimentation." It is "good, sound administration" and "an efficient way to make sure that the government collects the taxes which it is entitled to collect."

Mashburn Appointed to Rehabilitation Council

Lloyd A. Mashburn, president of the Lathers, has been named to a four-year term on the National Advisory Council on Vocational Rehabilitation. The appointment was announced by Health, Education & Welfare Sec. Abraham Ribicoff.

Mashburn, a former Under Sec. of Labor, succeeds Pres. James A. Brownlow of the AFL-CIO Metal Trades Dept.

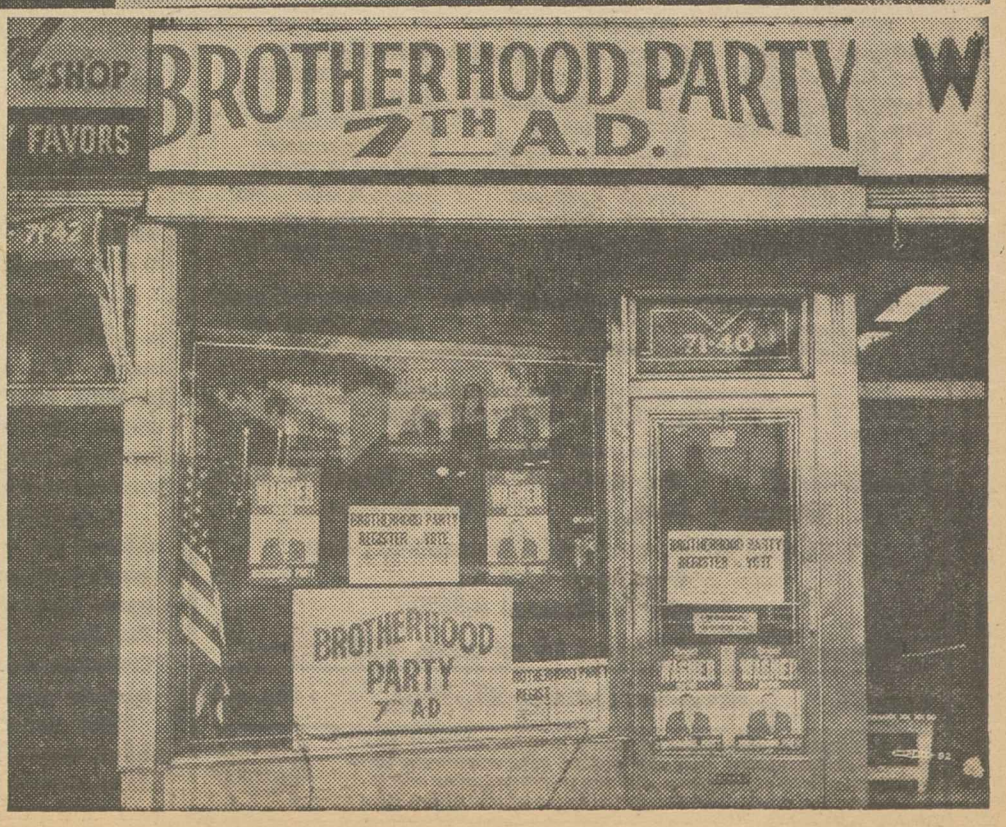
Labor Sparks Record N.Y. Registration

Pavement pounding, telephone appeals, sound trucks and torchlight parades all went into New York labor's drive that helped bring total registration for the Nov. 7 city election to a record 3.5 million voters. (See story, opposite page.)

The campaign was conducted by the new Brotherhood Party, recently formed by the New York Central Labor Council, and drew the support of unionists in all five boroughs.

Highlights of the drive are pictured on this page. Union members are shown as they distributed information on registration—along with sample literacy tests—from door to door, at subway entrances and at supermarkets.

The Brotherhood Party—along with the Democratic and Liberal Parties—is supporting the re-election of Mayor Robert F. Wagner, whose slate won a surprise victory over organization-backed candidates in the Democratic primary.



It's Time to Get Ready

THE 1962 CONGRESSIONAL election campaign has moved into a critical period, the period between sessions of Congress when officeholders take the voters' pulse and scan the field for potential opposition.

The campaign started with the fall of the gavel convening the first session of the 87th Congress in January 1961. As the session progressed senators and representatives were fashioning the record on which they would have to face the voters in the fall of 1962.

Yet during this period of preparation for the 1962 elections, most voters were content to relax after the intense presidential campaign of 1960 and slip into the "off-year" mentality of breathless political pundits.

Labor has learned there are no "off years" politically. It has worked hard in 1961 to register the unregistered, to place the issues before the electorate, to raise the necessary funds to maintain an effective operation.

In a few areas this year there are elections—a New Jersey governor, a mayor for New York City and two special elections to fill vacancies in the House. But by and large the major political effort has been to build for 1962.

A NUMBER of state AFL-CIO organizations have won convention and membership approval of programs to put political education and action on a year-round basis, properly financed and directed toward realistic legislative programs.

A number of international unions have created new political action machinery and set up operating committees at all levels of the organization.

The trend to more effectively organized and directed political education programs is important, but along with the machinery and the issues there must be operating funds.

The AFL-CIO Committee on Political Education is stepping up its campaign for contributions to finance the 1962 congressional campaigns and the numerous gubernatorial elections taking place next year. For the 1962 elections confront labor with one of its most important tasks in recent years.

DESPITE PRES. KENNEDY'S national victory in 1960, there were 21 liberals who went down to defeat in House contests. Those defeats were immediately reflected in the House on federal aid to education, medical care for the aged, reorganization of the National Labor Relations Board, foreign aid and many other areas.

The job in 1962 is to regain the liberal seats lost in 1960 and to add to the liberal bloc so that the vitally needed social and economic legislation that failed of passage in the first session can be put on the statute books.

The job also is to retain the liberal margins in the Senate which approved much of the legislation later rejected, blocked or weakened in the House.

It's the same job in the states where the election of liberal governors is a prerequisite to blocking the new anti-union assault triggered by the NAM and Chamber of Commerce.

The 1962 election campaign is under way now. And now is the time to get rolling and contribute that dollar to COPE.

Sunday Statesman Editorial:

Paper Says Idaho Doesn't Need Right-to-Work-for-Nothing Law

The following editorial is excerpted from the Oct. 8 issue of the influential Idaho Sunday Statesman, which is published in Boise and is the largest newspaper in the state.

RUMBLING AROUND Idaho these days is talk of a revival of the "right-to-work" issue which dominated the 1958 state election campaign, created an endless amount of bitterness and left a number of festering sores. All that Idaho needs to break out in a fighting rash is another try at right-to-work.

The Statesman, a vigorous opponent of the "right-to-work" bill in 1958, assures one and all that this newspaper is again ready to do battle against this kind of Idaho legislation. Our reason is the same as it was the first time—Idaho has no need for such a law; we have a minimum number of unions, we have no union thugs directing the labor show, and Idaho labor has not, in any instance, performed to a degree that would justify legislation to curb it.

The "right-to-work" idea in Idaho is generally credited to the farmer element in the state but there are other interested parties. For some reason that defies understanding, Idaho has groups and individuals with strong determination to retain minimum wage levels that leave the state in national disgrace,

We can sympathize with any industry that faces unreasonable wage demands, and we hold no torch for any union that makes them. But there has to be a fair analysis of what is going on wage-wise in Idaho and there shouldn't be those who, to hold down the miserably low level on unskilled labor, go so far as to want protection of the law in this activity.

THE IRONICAL PART of the whole business is that both the interested Idaho farmer and Idaho businessman do themselves great financial harm in their hope to perpetuate share-cropper state wages. It is common sense to realize that their own products have to sell for less when the consuming public has minimum income.

Politically, the Idaho "right-to-work" drive kicked the teeth out of the mouths of a large number of unthinking Republicans who, in their greed for wage scales they would not want either for themselves or their families, nevertheless tossed caution to the winds and dove into a kind of cold water they never knew existed.

Craft unions, able to command comparably higher wages, retain dignity and responsibility. In Idaho, non-craft unions already are making progress, and probably generating part of the "right-to-work" conversation as underpaid workers search for union help. This has been the history of union organization—workers have been driven to seek help from unions when their incomes were substandard. This will continue to be the history of union effort.

IT IS AT ONCE EVIDENT that not a single interested supporter of the "right-to-work" idea lives on an income slightly above a dollar an hour. Most of them long since have "had it made," to use one of the day's faster phrases.

Additionally, their large earnings are subject to heavy federal and state taxation while the low-wage group is on the tax floor.

At the same time farmers and corporations are protesting higher taxes.

One of the reasons for their tax dilemma is that their workers are not paid sufficiently high rates to make them taxpayers of any substantial proportion.

Idaho needs working conditions in unskilled classifications that return fair wages. This must be the first consideration in the operation of any farm or business. Where it is impossible to pay a reasonable wage, and where workers are expected to subsidize the business, the whole arrangement stands in the quicksand of instability.

Where and when Idaho may need corrective legislation for handling labor matters, the legislature is the place for correction. And any time there is merit in connection with such a need, we are confident the legislature will pay heed. But a general "right-to-work" law has no place in the present Idaho picture.

The Statesman believes in, and pays all employes, decent wages. Most important, they have buying power. That Idaho needs ahead of restrictive labor legislation. Idaho's slow pace in economic progress today grows out of Idaho wage levels—our total buying power. Any industrial progress that came into any part of Idaho would be beneficial not in the number of jobs but in the amount of the payroll. Our state could have thousands of new employes who were underpaid and our economic problems would worsen because of governmental costs.

Idaho needs instead a right-to-do-better organization working in behalf of the residents of this state. Idaho doesn't need a "right-to-work"-for-nothing law or that kind of a reputation.

We have other greater needs.

Morgan Says:

America Had Better Get Used To Life on a Volcano's Slopes

By Edward P. Morgan

(This column is excerpted from the nightly broadcasts of Edward P. Morgan, ABC commentator sponsored by the AFL-CIO. Listen to Morgan over the ABC network Monday through Friday at 7 p. m., EDT.)

ABOVE THE LOVELY sweeping curve of the Bay of Naples there are Italian peasants who live, year in and year out, on the side of Mount Vesuvius. They are in constant danger. They never know when lava may boil up again out of the gently steaming crater above and spill down upon them. There is nothing they can do about it except move away but that is no solution, really, because good land is at a premium in over-populated Italy and the soil on the volcanic slopes is rich. So they go on, raising their wine grapes, their tomatoes and their bambini, praying and hoping fate will not be too cruel to them.

Morgan

One of the basic adjustments we Americans have to make, I think, is to realize that we are living on the side of a volcano and will be living on it for the rest of our lives.

The Europeans have realized it for generations. The Asians have on the whole existed in such grinding poverty that catastrophe to them has been little more than a break in monotony. The Africans and most Latin Americans are so caught up in the leap from the primitive life to the jet age that nothing else matters.

But the North American civilization has been voluptuously privileged. It has feasted off the incredible riches of nature, it has had vast room in which to stretch, the invigorating air of the northern temperate zone to breathe and until a generation ago two mighty oceans between which it lay secure.

Now, in a twinkling, all this is threatened with destruction. It is hardly astonishing that we panic a little, nor is it anything strange that our impulse is to barge right out and lay low the threat, as our pioneer forefathers would spring up in the middle of the night to shoot dead a coyote in the sheep corral. But we must not panic and we must learn that unless we hold our fire, though keeping the fowling piece at the ready, we may have nothing left to defend, including the sheep.

Consider what Pres. Kennedy said at a recent news conference: "We happen to live, because of the ingenuity of science and man's own inability to control his relationships with one another, we happen to live in the most dangerous time in the history of the human race."

Belatedly, the Administration seems now to be bearing down on a point that had been neglected before—neglected in part perhaps because with the buoyant hope of youth the leaders of the New Frontier had rather expected their very freshness and zest would somehow magically help dissolve the icy intransigence of the Communists. This, of course, did not happen and so now new attention is given the neglected point—that tension with the Communists may continue indefinitely.

NO NEGOTIATIONS can bring a quick and easy solution. The crisis is one of extremely long duration and this Administration in the White House is not likely to end it, nor is the next, nor the next after that though each, with good fortune, may be able to mitigate it a little.

If we are going to adjust successfully to a permanent lease on the side of the volcano, all of us, including the people in the information business, are going to have to change some definitions and some values. If a crisis is going to be permanent, we had better begin to accept it as a normal situation. If we do that, then the day-to-day ups and downs won't throw us so easily into a tizzy.

Khrushchev became a pen pal again and wrote to the Japanese and British that he was all set to settle the Berlin question. But he did not indicate that he had changed his terms. Western ears twitched with hope when Gromyko hinted we might not have to deal with East Germany on access rights to Berlin after a one-sided peace treaty, as the Communists had originally maintained. But against that hint came the ominous demand that all West Berlin's ties with West Germany be severed. So it goes: pressure on, pressure off, pressure on again.

However well-equipped we may be to knock the Russians out in the second round, it seems wiser to train ourselves to outlast them in the cross-country marathon. Or, as the President put it in more stirring prose at the University of North Carolina, if we can "do our duty undeterred by fanatics or frenzy at home or abroad we shall be neither Red nor dead but alive, free and worthy of the best traditions and responsibilities" of our great land.

As We See It:

Arctic 'Window' Opens World To Soviet Fallout Downpour

A RUSSIAN BOMB, detonated in the Arctic, "produces actually ten times the radiation dosage of an American bomb of the same power and the same altitude of detonation tested in the Pacific."

Ralph Lapp, atomic scientist, member of Quadri-Science, Inc., Washington, D. C., so declared as he continued his discussion of the effect of the Soviet Union's renewal of nuclear tests in an interview on As We See It, AFL-CIO public service program carried on the ABC radio network.

"Now there is a reason for that, a meteorological reason," he continued, "and it is that there is a peculiar break between the troposphere and stratosphere which occurs near the Arctic Circle and there is a kind of window through which the Russian debris enters and leaves. . . . The material comes down all over the world, but the Russian tests in the Arctic bring down their material (radioactive fallout) five times faster than our tests in the Pacific."

Lapp said that fallout from the Russian tests has fallen in the United States largely over the East, "although some has come down in the central area and Little Rock has gotten quite a bit."

Lapp, who worked on the Manhattan Project, which provided the basic research for development of the first atom bomb, said that a nuclear war between the U.S. and U.S.S.R. "would concentrate in one night, perhaps two nights."

"Under these conditions, I do not think you would ask whether or not you were winning, you would expend full effort because you wouldn't be sure," he declared.

"Once a war like this starts, there would be few restraints. There would be no real difference between a democracy and a totalitarian state once war breaks out because the President cannot consult the people."

LAPP SAID that if the attack were forced up to 10,000 megatons (a megaton is the equivalent of 1 million tons of TNT), both sides would be all but destroyed.

"I think we would be in the broken-back phase of our life and we would be struggling merely to get food and to live," he went on.

Knowledge of the fact that the Soviet Union would be in the same situation should deter Nikita Khrushchev, he said.

"In my opinion, only a madman would want to sacrifice the physical assets of the Soviet Union —and he would do it if he started a nuclear war," said Lapp. "In a nuclear war, while there would be no winner, one side can come out on the low end of the totem pole. . . . If I put myself in Mr. Khrushchev's shoes and think of how my neighbors, Poland, Finland, China, might behave if I were in a broken-back posture, I think this might be an incentive not to go to war."

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

GEN. EISENHOWER IS REPRESENTED in extensive interviews on his 71st birthday as "hard at work" on a job he admittedly was unable to accomplish during his eight years as President—"the remaking of the Republican Party in his own image."

The extraordinary thing about this is not the implied acknowledgement of wasted opportunity in the eight years. It is that the General seems convinced that the present public image of the Republicans and his own general attitudes on national policy are sharply in conflict.

In the interviews he is quoted as telling an old friend that the Kennedy Administration is "spendthrift if not downright profligate."

He is quoted as asking: "What else can I do? I put a stop to the New Deal-Fair Deal spending spree only to see the same mania come back just as strong under this present bunch. I have no choice but to try to stop it again. To do otherwise would be a dereliction of duty."

The New York Times report says the General recalls he felt "great surprise" at discovering in 1952 that the late Sen. Robert A. Taft was far "left" of him on such questions as aid to public housing and federal aid to public education.

There is surely nothing in this expression of his basic political attitudes that creates the image of a party leader drastically at odds with the Republican Party leaders who actually remain in the House and Senate.

SEN. EVERETT McKINLEY DIRKSEN (Ill.) and Rep. Charles A. Halleck (Ind.), the GOP's congressional leaders, constantly make the same complaint against the Kennedy Administration that it "spends" too much.

Halleck swings his whip and persuades the overwhelming majority of House Republicans to help kill school aid, to try to limit expenditures on water pollution, to check investment in public housing and urban renewal.

Just one time in his eight years, Gen. Eisenhower took a line that the American people should be provided the social services they feel they need, when he presented a proposed budget that would offer substantial parts of these services. But his Treasury secretary, George M. Humphrey, denounced the budget as too big and said it would lead to a depression that would "curl your hair," and the President meekly abandoned what he had recommended.

The Republican delegations in Congress are opposed, by and large, to health care for the aged through the social security system. So is Gen. Eisenhower.

They are opposed to improvement of unemployment compensation through higher federal standards required of the states. So is the former President.

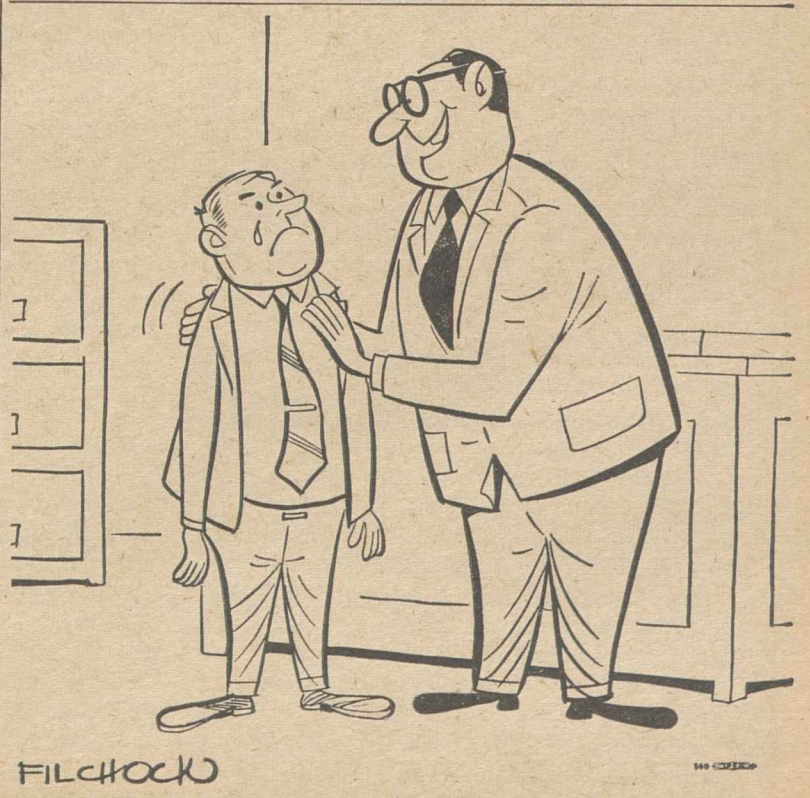
THE REPUBLICAN PARTY may be seriously in need of a new "image," although the narrowness of the vote last year can be used by GOP leaders to argue otherwise. At the same time, the same leaders recognize that their "failure" has been in the huge populous urban and suburban areas, where Mr. Kennedy won and Mr. Nixon lost the election.

It never seems to occur to them that what they need in the cities is different party policies—policies that recognize the needs of the voters there, the burden imposed by slums and overloaded school systems and a mountain of public debt increasingly hard to finance and jumping much faster than federal debt.

It has been no secret to observers in and out of the Republican Party that Gen. Eisenhower was far more conservative than Taft in domestic affairs. Taft was a realistic and experienced politician, with the feel such a vocation gives for the way Americans think and desire. There may be somebody rising to influence in the Republican Party who will succeed in changing its image, but it passes imagination to think that Gen. Eisenhower will be the one to do it.



"Prentiss, your suggestion on economy merits a special award. At the pay office you'll find two checks—one your severance pay."

How to Buy:

Thanksgiving Food Prices Low; Mattress Buys Require Care

By Sidney Margolius

A SMART SHOPPER still can keep down food costs in this expensive year by knowledgeable selection of those items most plentiful. Even while many prices are high, some foods are bargain-priced.

You particularly get a break on this year's Thanksgiving dinner. The turkey supply is 28 percent above last year and prices are at a record low.

November also is a good month to look for buys in coats and dresses, with the Veterans' Day sales offering cut-price specials. Blankets also go on sale this month.

But some prices are rising. Manufacturers have announced increases on work clothing. We advise filling in your needs now before these hikes show up on retail tags.

Here are tips on November buying opportunities:

MATTRESSES: The slowdown in the home-furnishings business has forced some price-cutting of mattresses. Many stores around the country have been promoting innerpring mattresses at the $39 level, and also offering box springs at that price. But sometimes these $39 promotions, which generally are good value in themselves, are used as bait to try to sell you much higher-priced mattresses. While sellers have been cutting tags on lower-priced mattresses, they now even have brought out deluxe mattresses to sell for as much as $89 and even $99. Previously the high for the nationally-advertised deluxe mattresses was $79.

Innerspring mattresses are still much more widely bought than the latex foam type. For one thing, the innerspring type costs much less despite the reduction in recent years from the first lofty prices on the foam type. For another, many people consider the innerspring type firmer.

In shopping mattresses, compare the number of coils. You may have noticed that one type has a relatively small number of coils, generally 220 to 312 in the full size. Another, more expensive type has a large number of coils—800 or even 1000. These are the deluxe mattresses. They have small coils individually pocketed in muslin.

The other type has fewer but larger coils. Whichever type you shop, the number of coils is one of your ways of comparing value. Thus, in the small-coil type, a mattress with 1000 coils is considered better quality than one with 837 (other construction equal). In the large-coil type, a mattress with 312 coils is considered a better grade than one with 220 or 180.

In general, the more coils the firmer the support. A 220-coil mattress is a standard quality at a moderate price. But even here quality varies depending on the amount of filling and quality of coils, weight of ticking, and construction features.

Some mattresses of the same basic quality and number of coils carry a higher price tag because the ticking has a floral or other design instead of plain stripes, or they have tuftless construction or tape tufts instead of the less-expensive button tufting.

Foam latex mattresses also have been subjected to price cutting, with six-inch mattresses with boxsprings offered for as little as $90. In comparing foam mattresses, ask whether they are actually natural-rubber foam latex or the less-costly urethane foam (which still can be satisfactory.)

FOOD: Besides turkeys, as low as 29 cents a pound in some markets, cheese is the food bargain of the month. Often when cheese supplies are big the retail prices miraculously defy the law of supply and demand. This year prices actually have gone down, especially on American cheese. Eggs too are cheaper than last year.

In meats, beef chuck and lamb are reasonable and pork is starting to come down as supplies increase. Broilers still are cheap. In lamb, you'll get most for your money in shoulder chops and roasts, stew, and ground lamb.

Puerto Rico Medical Plan Unveiled; Doctors Balk

San Juan, P. R.—A government-sponsored plan proposing comprehensive medical care financed by withholding taxes for all of Puerto Rico's 3.2 million citizens has been unveiled here by the administration of Gov. Luis Munoz Marin.

The program met the same strong opposition from organized medicine that greeted its original discussion by government officials a year ago, when it was branded "socialized medicine" by the doctors. It was made public after 11 revisions of a proposal originally laid before Munoz Marin in June by Sec. of Health Guillermo Arbona.

Medical, surgical, rehabilitation and dental treatment are offered in the proposed program, with patients obtaining treatment from privately-practicing physicians. The doctors would receive fixed fees.

The financing would come from a special withholding tax of 1.5 percent from employers and 2 percent from employes on all salaries between $2,000 and $24,000 a year. Members of families with incomes of less than $2,000—about 60 percent of all Puerto Ricans—would be covered without cost.

The Puerto Rico Medical Association called the program harmful and unrealistic and voiced "deep preoccupation and its most energetic protest and opposition to establishment on our island of a regimented form of medicine."

A bill covering the plan will be introduced in the legislature this winter.

From Soup to Nonsense:

Hail to Thee, Blithe Spirit, Author of the Modern Menu

By Jane Goodsell

CYMBALS CLANG. The lights dim. A cathedral hush falls over the spectators as a solemn procession wends its way through the room. Flames burn in the darkness.

The music swells to a crescendo and, suddenly, there is silence. Lights flicker, and the procession halts. A scarlet-coated giant reverently lowers his sword.

What are we witnessing? The coronation of Charlemagne? The heralding of Richard the Lion Hearted? The preamble to Salome's dance of the seven veils?

Come, let's take another look. With infinite tenderness, a towering sheik lifts a great copper dome, and the object of adoration is revealed in all its glory. What is it? The head of John the Baptist? The crown jewels of England? The Dead Sea Scrolls?

Why bless my soul, it's two lamb chops! But wait! These are no ordinary lamb chops. Now close your eyes and listen while I read to you from the menu: "Center cut chops from spring lamb, tender and delicate as a lullaby, skewered with mushrooms and grilled to supreme perfection, served with tiny, buttery, garden-fresh peas and fluffy rice, prepared with infinite care."

Some lamb chops, huh?

Dining out in a plush restaurant has become one of life's most thrilling experiences. It isn't so much the food which may (or may not) be better than mama used to fix. It's the pomp and majesty, the ceremonial rites and the aura of black magic that elevates eating to an occult art.

BUT IT'S THE MENUS that really take your breath away. In size alone, they are awe-inspiring. Surely even the Magna Charta pales beside the awful majesty of these gold-encrusted documents, emblazoned with Napoleonic crests and heraldic symbols.

And the language! There is nothing in literature to compare with the nobility, the poetry, the imagery of the modern restaurant menu.

Did Omar Khayyam ever rise to such heights of eloquence as the literary genius who composed the following description of baby lobster tails? "Sauted in a chafing dish in golden butter with a whisper of garlic, blended with rare, imported herbs, flamed in Cognac and escorted by a mound of wild rice from India, fluffed to perfection."

Did Shelley ever write anything as lyric as this paean of worship to Poulet en Brochette? "Tenderly young, milk-fed bird, marinated in wine with French shallots and herbs, basted with fresh creamery butter, seasoned with salt, freshly-ground pepper and a tantalizing flavor secret, broiled to the height of perfection, accompanied by specially selected mushrooms and, for a final gourmet touch, potatoes Parisienne."

Truly, eating out is a great and ennobling experience. The only trouble is that I get so carried away by the beauty and majesty of it all that I get a lump in my throat—which makes it difficult to eat.

'The Beginning Breed':

A Cloakmaker Dies –His Ideals Endure

The following tribute to a pioneer member of the Ladies' Garment Workers—and in a broad sense to an entire generation of union members—appeared as an editorial in Justice, the ILGWU newspaper:

ONLY THE CLOAKMAKERS knew him well but millions of garment workers, knowingly or not, were the beneficiaries of his willingness to serve. When he joined the ILGWU in 1902 the union's funds were non-existent, its membership was family size, its strength was microscopic.

The shops in which he worked were dirty, dark fire traps. His work day began in darkness and ended in darkness. Alone, he had crossed a vast ocean, dreaming in the ship's steerage of freedom, prosperity, sunshine in the Golden Land. When the reality of slum and sweatshop confronted the dream, he held fast to the hopes and the ideals he had brought from the old world, strongly confident that where freedom flourished, oppression and exploitation could not long endure.

From the start, the union was for him the instrument of progress. He was a charter member of his local. He was the chairman of his shop. In the precious hours after the long day's work he met with fellow members of his local's executive board, helping to plan its campaigns, advising on strikes, debating strategy, combatting the fears inspired by the bosses.

For 60 years, this was his life. His ILGWU membership started when Theodore Roosevelt was President of the United States. It continued through six decades filled with growing social enlightenment, two world wars, a major depression and the threat of a third war. During all of this time, he served, as shop chairman, as chairman of his local, as hall chairman in great strikes.

IN HIM WAS NO FEAR even though he was slender in stature. His strength was made of pride in his union and his work, dignity in his bearing and speech, determination in his resolve to act and a tenacious adherence to the ideals of brotherhood and cooperation.

He was expert at bolstering the waning spirits of a group of strikers. No one knew better than he how to "stop the power," and when the union committee walked into the unorganized shop in which he worked as a young man, calling for the workers to rise from their machines, it was he, in the moment of group indecision, who by being first on his feet, led the others out the door.

He was never big brass and the highest office he held in his union was that of business agent. In his later years, he returned to the shop, working at the machine but continuing as executive board member. When the time came, he left the shop and although he worked no more at the machine, he continued to spend many hours at his local headquarters and was a welcomed, regular attendant.

HIS KIND GROWS RARE. He was of that beginning breed in our union who put no limit on the time and the energy they gave to it, yet made no demands on it. Through all the storm and stress of building their union they never knew cynicism, managed to raise families, sent their children to college and took glowing pride in the strikes and the collective bargaining and the hard-won contracts through which the work day and the work week were shortened, standards were raised and the garment worker achieved democratic participation in the determination of work rates and conditions.

In his last years he was concerned with newcomers to the industry, with organization problems, with the educational work of his Local 23. His fellow cloakmakers, in six decades, were the pace setters for the millions who in that time have been on the roster of the ILGWU. And in his cloak local he was a pace setter. He died the other day at the age of 79. His name was Louis Gordon. His local ledger number was No. 1. His life was a thing of beauty.

Research Dept. Analysis:

School Cost Burden Heaviest for Poor

The poorest families and the poorest states bear the biggest proportional burden of school costs, according to an analysis by the AFL-CIO Dept. of Research.

Labor's Economic Review, a feature of the current issue of the AFL-CIO American Federationist, asserts that federal aid to schools is needed now just as state aid was a generation ago—to equalize educational opportunities for American youngsters, whether they live in big cities or on farms, in wealthy communities or depressed areas.

The analysis in the AFL-CIO's monthly magazine points out that local school funds are generally raised from property taxes, a system "completely divorced from the concept of tax equity," while a large share of state funds comes from "insidiously regressive" sales taxes.

In contrast, 80 percent of the federal government's revenue is raised through progressive income taxes on individuals and on corporation profits.

When states and localities try to raise taxes on big corporations within their jurisdictions, the article notes, "too often those who write the tax laws are not too subtly reminded that plants and jobs can be moved" elsewhere.

The Dept. of Research analysis emphasizes that "it is increasingly evident that if the corporate giants are to contribute a fair share to the maintenance of state and local public services and if this share is to be equitably distributed, the federal role as tax collector and dispenser of federal grants-in-aid for education and other purposes must grow."

Tax Disparity Stressed

Also emphasized is the disparity in the tax burden for education on persons in "rich" and "poor" states.

Although Delaware has a per capita income more than twice that of South Dakota and spends $126 per capita on schools as compared with $70 in South Dakota, the average resident of South Dakota paid $12.30 out of every $100 of income in taxes as compared with a $6.50 average in Delaware.

Noting that "citizens of some of our lowest income states now shoulder the highest state and local tax burdens in the nation," the article states:

"Despite their unequal sacrifice, children who live in these states still attend tragically substandard schools."

Urging enactment of a program of federal grants "related to the school population and income levels of the various states," the AFL-CIO analysis concludes:

"With increased federal participation, the giant corporation, the wealthy and the moderate income family will all add to their contribution for the improvement of America's schools—but more nearly on the basis of ability to pay."

AFTRA Hits 'Two-way Bias' Of Publisher

Hollywood, Calif. — Executive Sec. Donald F. Conaway of the Television & Radio Artists has denounced what he termed an "anti-union bias" of the Crowell-Collier Publishing Co., exhibited both in a current labor dispute and in one of the company's publications.

Conaway said unionists who contemplate buying Collier's Encylopedia should be warned to consider this statement on Vol. 19, Page 58 of the encyclopedia under the word Unions:

"The policies customarily employed by unions, whether conservative or radical, capitalistic or socialistic, appear to lead all labor movements toward a socialistic society or its equivalent."

Such "bias" by a publisher is "reprehensible" and "totally without fact or foundation," Conaway said. The attitude is "demonstrated realistically," he said, in the company's bargaining relationship with AFTRA on a contract renewal covering five newsmen at Radio Station KFWB here, owned by Crowell-Collier. The union has been on strike at the station since July.

Conaway said the broadcasting activities of Crowell-Collier account for 6.4 percent of total revenues, with the rest coming from publishing of encyclopedias and other books.

Union Label Board Elects DeAndrade

New York—The executive board of the AFL-CIO Union Label & Service Trades Dept. has elected Anthony J. DeAndrade a vice president of the department. DeAndrade is president of the Printing Pressmen. He succeeds the late George L. Googe, secretary-treasurer of the Printing Pressmen, on the Union Label executive board.

THE COPE POLITICAL ALMANAC for 1962 is now off the press—printed in attractive green, gray and white tones, loaded with information from all the states on registration, filing dates, primary and general election dates, with a tail sheet carrying a summary. Copies may be obtained for 50 cents each by writing to COPE Public Relations, 815 Sixteenth St. N. W., Washington 6, D. C. COPE says orders should be sent promptly because only a small supply was printed above prepublication orders.

Surgeons, Family Doctors Split Over Fee-Splitting

Chicago—The doctors are fighting among themselves, and while it has some of the elements of a price war, the patient may have to dig deeper rather than pay less.

Now they're trying to figure out when a split fee is not a split fee. Dr. Robert S. Myers, executive assistant of the American College of Surgeons, maintained stoutly at a meeting here that it can't be done. The American Medical Association has been saying it can be done, too, when the doctor who refers the patient to the surgeon assists at the operation.

Not so, declared Myers; what the surgeon collects is his and let the patient pay the assistant. Besides, the assistant should be another doctor with surgical qualifications, not a family doctor. If no other assistant is available, then the family doctor may serve and should bill the patient himself for his operating room services.

Myers called the AMA position a "retreat" from its previously "staunch" stand against fee-splitting. Dr. F. J. L. Blasingame, AMA executive vice president, indignantly denied the charge.

Deficit Held No Barrier To Recovery

The importance of reducing unemployment levels, the need for more and better government planning and the unfavorable impact of cheaply-produced products on world markets are the major topics on Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt's current TV program "Prospects of Mankind," dealing with the challenge to American capitalism.

The program brought a surprising degree of agreement from liberal and conservative panelists on the proposition that a major roadblock to U.S. economic recovery is the belief that an unbalanced budget means poor administration.

The budget statement, made by Paul Samuelson, professor of economics at Massachusetts Institute of Technology and special adviser to Pres. Kennedy, was concurred in by Victor Reuther, assistant to the president of the Auto Workers; Eric Johnston, president of the Motion Picture Association; Robert McKenzie of the London School of Economics; and Erwin Canham, editor of the Christian Science Monitor.

"Prospects of Mankind" is prepared once a month in ccoperation with Brandeis University for the National Educational Television Network.

Rights Body Urges Steps To Halt Training Bias

The U.S. Civil Rights Commission has urged both congressional and Administration action to open up more skilled job opportunities for Negroes—and to help Negroes obtain the training needed for skilled jobs.

Lack of training opportunities has resulted in a "vicious circle of discrimination," the commission declared. "No program designed to eliminate discrimination in employment can be completely effective unless it includes efforts to eliminate discrimination in recruitment and training facilities."

Federal funds, the six-member bipartisan commission charged, are still being used to finance discriminatory state employment agencies and vocational training policies which tend to keep Negroes from seeking or obtaining training in fields which in the past have been largely closed to them.

The commission noted that the AFL-CIO constitution calls for elimination of all discrimination in union membership and has a collective bargaining goal of negotiating non-discrimination clauses in all contracts, and that the federation has "made progress." Of 26 international unions which had racial restrictions "as recently as 1940," 25 have dropped the color bar. The commission declared, however, that "existing civil rights machinery has not eliminated discriminatory practices and policies of some local unions."

In other recommendations, the Civil Rights Commission:

- Asked that the President's Committee on Equal Employment Opportunity, now functioning under an executive order, be given permanent status by Congress and broader powers.
- Urged the President to issue an executive order "making it clear" that employment resulting from federal grants-in-aid to states and cities is subject to the same non-discrimination requirements as employment by government contractors.
- Called for legislation to provide expanded federal aid in vocational education, apprenticeship training and retraining of jobless workers "on a non-discriminatory, non-segregated basis."
- Proposed an "affirmative program" to publicize availability of jobs with government contractors on a non-discriminatory basis and "to encourage all individuals to train for and apply for such jobs."

2 Republicans, Kefauver Split On Drug Costs

Two Senate Republicans, including GOP Leader Everett McKinley Dirksen (Ill.), have again clashed with Sen. Estes Kefauver (D-Tenn.) on whether drug prices and profits are too high.

Kefauver, who is chairman of the Senate Anti-Trust subcommittee, said in a statement that in his opinion drug prices and profits "by any test . . . are excessive and unreasonable." He made his comment as hearings resumed on his bill to stimulate price competition in the industry.

Dirksen, who has dueled repeatedly with Kefauver over the subcommittee's probe of the drug manufacturers, accused the chairman of "trying to pillory" the industry.

Besides, said Dirksen, the mimeographed advance text of Kefauver's remarks did not contain the qualifying words, "in my opinion." This, he said, left the implication that the subcommittee agreed with its chairman.

Another Republican member, Sen. Roman Hruska (Neb.), echoed Dirksen's objection.

Kefauver pointed out that the subcommittee had indeed reached such a conclusion and had so indicated in its report last June. Even though the Republican members had dissented, the Democratic majority had approved it, he pointed out.

On a number of occasions, Dirksen has cut short subcommittee hearings by objecting to meeting being held while the Senate was in session—a rule which is seldom enforced.

On occasion, Kefauver has retaliated by calling night and Saturday sessions to hear witnesses who did not complete their testimony.

Kefauver told the GOP members that legislation to break up restrictive patent monopolies and encourage prescriptions by generic rather than drug names is the "alternative" to federal price control of prescription drugs. He added:

"The people of this nation need this legislation . . . the prices of ethical drugs are unreasonably high and have remained consistently uniform among the dominent sellers for a number of years. There is every indication that this condition will continue unless something is done about it now."

Price Tactics Exposed In Canadian Oil Probe

Ottawa, Ont.—Some of the tactics the major oil companies use to extract the last possible penny from the pockets of a captive market, the Canadian motorist, were laid bare at a public hearing conducted here by the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission.

The commission's investigation is based on a seven-year study which led the Justice Dept.'s Combines Investigation Branch to conclude there are "clear grounds for concern" in the way the big companies handle service stations.

The earlier probe had uncovered two practices now outlawed in the United States but still legal in Canada; the investigation was ordered to determine if the public interest is adversely affected and if the Canadian law should be changed. They were:

- Service station operators who lease their premises from the oil companies are required to handle tires, batteries, lubricants, antifreeze and other accessories from suppliers who have paid commissions to the companies so as to get their products into the filling stations.
- The stations may be required to handle only the line of accessories that the oil company itself has branded or which it supplies as a wholesaler.

The companies have a number of weapons to enforce their dicta, testimony showed. Witnesses told of hearing oil company salesmen threatening to raise the rent unless the station operator sold more products on which the company got commissions. They said salesmen had even removed competing products, or had suggested that the operators do it.

Texas Canada Limited was shown to have two rentals in its leases—one a maximum and the other a minimum which presumably could be terminated unless the station operator behaved—and also a 24-hour cancellation clause. The company claimed the cancellation proviso worked both ways, but conceded no station operator had ever used it.

Testimony also showed:

- Buyers pay 10 percent more for service station commodities than they would without the commission agreements.
- One tire line cost the station $23 wholesale, but under a different name and with a different tread wholesaled elsewhere for $15.
- The capacity of service stations is not fully utilized. When Brian Dixon, Queens University economist, testified to this, Commission Chairman C. Rhodes Smith observed that it seemed "a waste of money" to build new ones.

The companies made blanket denials through submissions by counsel. There was no cross-examination.

Schnitzler to Laborers:

Spread Union Story Of Today, Not Past

Chicago—"We have been talking too much about things of the past rather than gearing ourselves for the future," AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler told the 14th convention of the Laborers' Union here.

Addressing the 1,600 delegates at Plumbers' Auditorium, Schnitzler said that organized labor must concentrate on telling the public what it is doing now, and not dwell too much on history, if the trade union movement is to grow in proportion to the growth of the population.

He said that the 8-hour day, free public schools, elimination of child labor and social security were gains registered when the labor movement had only 1 million members. Labor is as determined today to pioneer in building the future of America as were the pioneers of years ago, he declared.

"We have to gear all of our work toward the thinking of America as it is."

The story of labor's work in the field of legislation, in community services and in support to charities—if the public is told about it—can improve labor' image, he declared. Schnitzler asked the delegates to go home and tell this story in their communities.

United Funds Cited

One example Schnitzler cited was labor's support of united funds. "The United Community Funds & Chests of America has just released a report that in the last fiscal year $480 million was collected for charitable purposes of America," Schnitzler reported, "and they say that one-third, or over $160 million, came from the organized workers in America."

Laborers' Pres. Joseph V. Moreschi told the delegates the union's constitution must be streamlined if the organization is to progress and to comply with new federal, state and local laws. "We are fortunate that in the past we have been successful," Moreschi said, "and there are few obstacles in our path."

He said the delegates will have a chance to vote, later in the convention, on setting up an international union fund to help pay the expense of locals without the economic means to send delegates to future Laborers' conventions. He noted that if all locals were able to send delegates, there would be more than 2,500 attending.

The executive board recommended the fund, Moreschi said, so "we would practice to the fullest extent full democratic representation at our conventions."

Moreschi, who has headed the union since 1926, was re-elected president.

The delegates also re-elected Sec.-Treas. Peter Fosco and voted to increase the number of vice presidents from six to eight. Elected were Patrick Waldron, Edgar F. Smith, Charles J. Sullivan, Lee Lalor, Powell L. Bastine, Vernie Reed, Herbert Flesher and Robert Powell.

Dr. John T. Dunlop of Harvard University, impartial chairman of the Construction Industry Joint Conference, said all sections of the construction industry—employers and unions alike—will have to do a better job of explaining the industry and its significance and importance in the economy.

Dunlop predicted great growth of the construction industry and reviewed the importance it plays in the national economy. He said that for each $1,000 spent on a building project, more than $300 goes in wages to building tradesmen, with another $330 going into wages in the steel, lumber, brick and glass industries.

Yale & Towne Strikers Charge 'Boulwarism'

Philadelphia—Some 1,500 members of the Machinists and Office Employes, on strike for eight weeks at the Yale & Towne Manufacturing Co. here, have appealed to Mayor Richardson Dilworth to conduct mediation sessions "in a goldfish bowl."

The request to Dilworth was signed by Pres. Samuel Luterotty of IAM Lodge 1717; Pres. John McLaughlin of IAM Dist. 1, and IAM Grand Lodge Rep. Peter Stuart.

In it they charged that "Boulwarism" has been imported to Yale & Towne from General Electric in the person of Paul Hartig. Hartig, who was demoted from his job as general manager of the GE insulator department after testifying before the Senate's Kefauver subcommittee that price-fixing was "a way of life," has joined Yale & Towne as vice president and general manager.

"Boulwarism" is derived from the name of Lemuel Boulware, formerly a vice president of General Electric who directed labor and industrial relations for the company, and is a formula for bargaining that amounts to "take it or leave it."

"Under this new management, Yale & Towne now is seeking to destroy 35 of 37 contract conditions that our union has negotiated in good faith with the company over the past 18 years," Dilworth was advised. "The net result of company demands would be unbearable speedup and reduction of earnings."

The company has obtained an injunction so stringent that the union was forced to move its trailer headquarters from a lot it owns adjoining the plant. Pickets are restricted to five who must stay 50 feet from the gate, and no business agent can join the line.

The AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept.'s Yale & Towne Council has called a meeting here for later this month at which the Steelworkers, Auto Workers, Boilermakers, United Textile Workers, Office Employes and IAM will review the situation from the companywide point of view. UAW Local 53 is negotiating with the firm's Chicago plant and is strongly backing the Philadelphia strike.

Pilots Postpone Strike At Trans World Airways

Kansas City—A scheduled strike by Trans World Airlines pilots has been postponed indefinitely as the company and the Air Line Pilots resumed negotiations here.

ALPA Pres. C. N. Sayen said earlier that the strike had been called because "14 months of negotiations and mediation failed to produce any significant progress toward agreement."

Wages, hours and fringe benefits are all issues in the dispute.

NLRB Court Bid Urged To Block Mill Closing

tile chain to compensate the workers and rehire the workers is still pending in the NLRB and the courts. Darlington was controlled by Roger Milliken, president also of Deering, Milliken.

Some 500 Peerless production workers have already been terminated at Rossville and long-service employes have received notices. The AIW said the workers, some with more than 30 years of service, have neither a retirement plan nor severance pay.

The AIW said it has furnished the NLRB investigators with supporting affidavits from Peerless workers stating that plant officials had warned them during the election campaign that a union victory would lead to the closing of the mill.

Announcement of the closing of the Rossville plant has already been used in an anti-union campaign at another Peerless plant, at nearby Cleveland, Tenn., where the TWUA has petitioned for a representation election.

AIW Sec.-Treas. Gilbert Jewell said the union made "a standing offer to management to cooperate in every way to maintain operations" but the offer was "spurned."

The union said it has also been turned down in its proposal for a year's severance pay for Peerless workers thrown out of their jobs. The union added it had received "no cooperation" from management in its proposal that area redevelopment funds be sought "to modernize any part of the mill which requires it to be competitive in the industry."

Jewell charged that Burlington, one of the giant chains in the industry, "has a long record of frustrating the American system of collective bargaining."

The Textile Workers Union of America, which has made repeated attempts to organize Burlington mills, twice testified to the company's union-busting policies at Senate Labor Committee hearings.

The TWUA said it won 18 representation elections at Burlington plants over a 15-year period but the company signed only one union contract during the entire time—at a ribbon mill in a northern city which was subsequently closed down.

Cruikshank on New FDA Advisory Group

Nelson Cruikshank, director of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Social Security, has been named by Health, Education & Welfare Sec. Abraham Ribicoff to a new Citizens Advisory Committee set up to study the kind of consumer protection the Food & Drug Administration should attempt to provide.

The 16-member committee will be headed by Dr. George Y. Harvey of the University of Missouri.

Convention Backs Organizing:

Stone Workers Emphasize Need of Automation Controls

Cincinnati—Speakers at early sessions of the Stone & Allied Products Workers' convention here stressed the need for control of automation, political action by unions, and a stepped-up organizational drive.

Pres. Karl Feller of the Brewery Workers, with headquarters in Cincinnati, also reported on his recent European trip where he met with labor officials from Sweden, England, Italy, Belgium, and Norway.

"These people," he said, "live every day on the front line of Communist conspiracy, and I think it will be encouraging for you to know that they do not believe there will be a war."

Feller said this feeling arises from the solid stand the West has presented on Berlin, plus the opinion of labor leaders from other countries that a great deal of the present Communist bluster stems from internal fights among their own top leaders.

Added to the flood of refugees from East Germany and the jamming of the air-waves by the USSR, these things, Feller said, mean "simply that we must quit being afraid of Communist rocket-rattling."

Speaking on problems at home, he stressed the need for constant political education and political action, pointing out that everything won at the bargaining table can be swept away with a single piece of legislation.

So-called "right - to - workers" are not trying to contain labor, or control it, he said, but to get "a law which will destroy us." While the Kennedy Administration is friendly, he warned delegates to remember "that it is in Congress and the state legislatures that laws are forged to shackle labor."

He commended the setting up of the President's committee on automation, but said it can do little more than suggest what should be done.

"The difficult step," he declared, "is getting industry to accept such recommendations."

Theodore F. Silvey of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Research also stressed the problems posed by automation, declaring that in itself it "is neither moral nor immoral."

"Rather," he said, "people are moral or immoral, people are bad or not bad. It is up to them to determine whether we shall all benefit as much as possible from the new technology."

He reviewed the bargaining problems brought on by automation: shorter work periods, retraining of displaced workers, training of new workers, revamping of seniority systems, productivity and wage relationships, mobility of workers when jobs are destroyed, and the constructive use of leisure time.

The officers' report to the convention—the 10th of the organization, held every three years—said of automation that "it is our union's responsibility to see to it that automation does become a blessing and not a curse on the welfare of our members and others."

The report also showed 35 elections won and 23 lost since the last convention, with raiding attempts by the unaffiliated Teamsters and Dist. 50 of the unaffiliated Mine Workers repelled in two cases.

The Taft-Hartley Act, the Landrum-Griffin Act, "employer opposition," and workers' "fear of loss of jobs in a period of high unemployment" were the prime causes, the report said, of the lost elections.

"We take this opportunity to express our deep appreciation," the report said, "for the cooperation we have received from John Livingston, AFL-CIO director of organization, and N. A. Zonarich, IUD organizational director. These men have never failed to respond to our requests for assistance and information."

New 3-Year Pact Ends Coast Maritime Strike

San Francisco—A 14-day strike by 600 West Coast members of the Masters, Mates & Pilots has resulted in a three-year agreement that achieves the union's major goal—a contract clause designed to provide work for some of the local's 1,700 unemployed members.

Chief feature of the new pact, on which the deck officers were to ballot by secret referendum, is a proviso that relief crews will be hired through the MMP union hall when masters, mates or pilots with seniority leave a job permanently.

An 80-day Taft-Hartley injunction and two "last offer" wage proposals from employers failed to dent MMP Local 90's determination to get relief for its jobless members.

In negotiations that began last spring, the Pacific Maritime Association, representing operators of 44 vessels, had offered to settle with Local 90 on terms similar to those accepted by other MMP units on the East and Gulf Coasts, and by the Marine Engineers on the West Coast.

Said Capt. Robert Durkin, Local 90 president: 'We have different problems. The new contract is closer to what we fought for."

The employers and the union agreed to continue talks on unsettled issues including pension plan revisions and a mechanization fund, and to finance any new benefits out of the employer-contributed pension and welfare fund.

The employers agreed also to increase contributions to the pension-welfare fund from 50 cents to $1.15 a day, to give vacations of 90 days a year to masters, and vacation credits of five days a month to casual workers.

Under Sec. of Labor Willard Wirtz headed a three-man panel which helped write the formula which ended the strike.

GM Indicted in Anti-Trust Action

Los Angeles—A federal grand jury here has indicted the General Motors Corp., four Chevrolet sales executives and three southern California dealers' associations on criminal anti-trust charges.

All are accused of having conspired to stop Los Angeles Chevrolet dealers from selling cars through discount houses and referral services.

The grand jury said pressure had been exerted on dealers because discount sales "threatened to lower retail prices of Chevrolet automobiles in the southern California area."

Kennedy Calls for Federal Job Safety

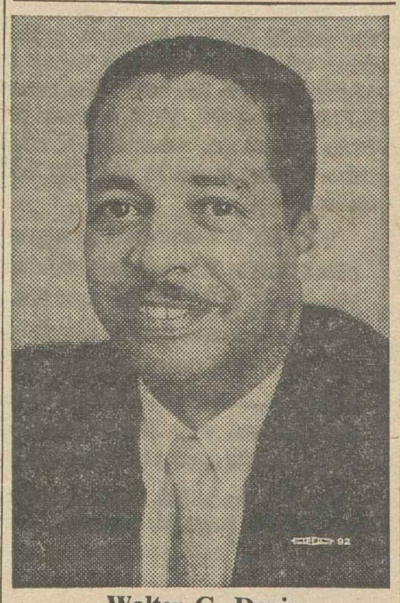
Pres. Kennedy has appealed to all U.S. government employes to help reduce the toll of on-the-job injuries: 42,640 civilian federal employes disabled last year, 242 dead, and 3 million days of time lost.

A poster now going up in federal installations shows a portrait of the President and a signed message: "It is the policy of the federal government to safeguard from injury all those who work for it."

Weaver Named To ILO Posts

George L-P Weaver, assistant secretary of labor for international affairs, has been named U.S. government delegate to the Intl. Labor Organization by Pres. Kennedy.

Weaver, at the time of his appointment as assistant secretary an aide to Pres. James B. Carey of the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, also was named U.S. government representative on the ILO Governing Body. In both posts he succeeds former Assistant Sec. George Lodge.



Walter G. Davis

Davis Named to AFL-CIO Rights Staff

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany has announced the appointment of Walter G. Davis of the Transport Service Employes as assistant director of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Civil Rights.

Over a period of 12 years, Davis had served his union as grievance chairman for Skycaps at New York's three major airports, special assistant to the union's president, president of New York Local 290, member of the international executive board and finally as union executive vice president.

As director of education and research for the last two years, he took an active part in the union's battle to save the diminishing jobs of service employes on American railroads.

Born in New York, Davis is a graduate of Columbia University, where he majored in public law, and attended the Brooklyn Law School. His residence has been in Teaneck, N. J., with his wife and three children.

U.S. Oil Firm Hit; Pakistan Pact Follows

Denver—Maybe there was no connection, but shortly after Gen. Sec. Loyd Haskins of the Intl. Federation of Petroleum Workers protested to directors of the Standard-Vacuum Petroleum Co. in New York against the firm's labor policies in the Far East, it settled a contract in Karachi, Pakistan, that it had been fighting since 1958.

The Pakistani Petroleum Workers' Federation had asked, three years ago, for wage increases and improved working conditions at Standard-Vacuum's Karachi plant. The union went on strike for 26 days, after which the dispute was adjudicated and an award was handed down in June 1959. The company and the union both appealed, and action was still pending when Haskins protested to the directors and a settlement was worked out.

The protest was filed on behalf of Standard-Vacuum employes in Burma, Ceylon, India, Singapore and South Vietnam as well as in Pakistan. In Saigon, the company's workers are facing a lockout, the first such lockout in Vietnamese history. In Singapore, the oil workers' worldwide trade secretariat has charged, the company is discriminating against union members and is questioning the jurisdiction and authority of the Industrial Arbitration Court.

Haskins also has asked Sec. of Labor Arthur J. Goldberg to review Standard-Vacuum activities in the Far East and to consider action by the U.S. government to curtail the firm's exploitation of workers in that area.

UAW, Chrysler Teams Turn to Non-Wage Issues

Detroit—The Auto Workers postponed setting a strike deadline in contract negotiations at Chrysler Corp. as union and management subcommittees settled down to intensive bargaining over non-economic issues.

With money matters set aside for the time being, two sets of negotiations went on simultaneously—by local shop committees on working conditions, and by five subcommittees discussing seniority, production standards, skilled trades, the workweek, and problems of salaried workers.

UAW Pres. Walter P. Reuther said a decision on a strike deadline must wait until negotiators report how they are doing in talks on the non-wage matters.

Hopeful of avoiding strikes such as those against General Motors and Ford, negotiators are seeking contract benefits similar to those obtained from the other auto makers.

Reuther told reporters the UAW "does not intend to have Chrysler workers subsidize the management" by accepting substandard provisions in a new contract.

Asserting that "when Chrysler buys a ton of steel it does not get a discount because it is in trouble," the UAW leader said: "Chrysler workers should have the same measure of equity as workers at the other auto companies."

In the Ford and GM negotiations, agreement first was reached on national economic issues, but other issues resulted in walkouts.

The last bar to agreement between UAW and Ford was overcome when Local 420, a key stamping plant near Cleveland, settled a dispute that had kept the plant closed for several days after other locals went back to work. Details of the agreement were not revealed pending a vote of the 3,300 local members.

The new auto industry agreements move the UAW closer to its goal of a guaranteed annual wage for auto workers. They provide a larger measure of security for workers on the job and those laid off, the union has said.

UAW Wins Pacts At Harvester, Deere

Chicago—It's two down and two contracts to go for the Auto Workers in this year's farm equipment negotiations.

Improvements similar to those gained from the auto industry are contained in new three-year pacts with the Intl. Harvester Co., covering 35,000 workers in 45 bargaining units, and with John Deere & Co., which has 16,000 workers in 8 plants.

For Harvester it was the first time since 1946 that agreement was reached without a strike. Management and UAW Vice Pres. Pat Greathouse said that was evidence of a "maturing relationship."

Negotiations are continuing at Caterpillar Tractor Co., where a strike deadline was set, and at Allis-Chalmers, whose contracts expire Oct. 31.

BSEIU to Award 10 Scholarships

Chicago—Pres. David Sullivan of the Building Service Employes has announced a new college scholarship program under which 10 children of members, to be selected on a regional basis, will receive awards worth a maximum of $2,000 each.

Geijer Rebuts David Lawrence:

Swedish Employers Accept Labor's Role

A major difference between labor-management relations in the United States and in Sweden, according to the latter's foremost union official, lies in the attitude of management—the unequivocal recognition by Swedish employers that the trade union movement "is an important part of a democratic society."

On the other hand, "I know that management in the United States still fights the very existence of the trade union movement," said Arne Geijer, head of the General Federation of Swedish Trade Unions and president of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions.

Geijer's observations were contained in a letter to AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, which he said had been prompted by inaccurate presentations of his views by American newspapermen.

"I would never dream of blaming the AFL-CIO for wrongs of the American labor market, but American journalists sometimes write as if I did so," the Swedish union leader said. "On the other hand, I have never seen any reference to my expressed criticism of the attitude of management in the U.S.A."

Geijer referred specifically to Columnist David Lawrence's account of a discussion the two had a few months ago, in which Lawrence cited Sweden's long period of industrial peace as an example for Americans and gave implied credit to Geijer for "moderate" wage policies.

Lawrence's column, which is syndicated by the New York Herald Tribune and appears in many other U.S. dailies, made no mention of Geijer's reminder that the Swedish Employers' Association as long ago as 1906 had issued a statement formally recognizing the role of trade unions.

Elementary Precondition

"I pointed out to him, as I have done many times on similar occasions, that the most elementary precondition for good relations between management and labor is that management accept the trade union movement as an equal partner," Geijer said in his letter to Meany, adding:

"There is a general understanding on management's side in Sweden that the trade union movement is an important part of our democratic society and they find it natural that employes are represented by an organization in negotiations with the individual enterprises and the industry as a whole."

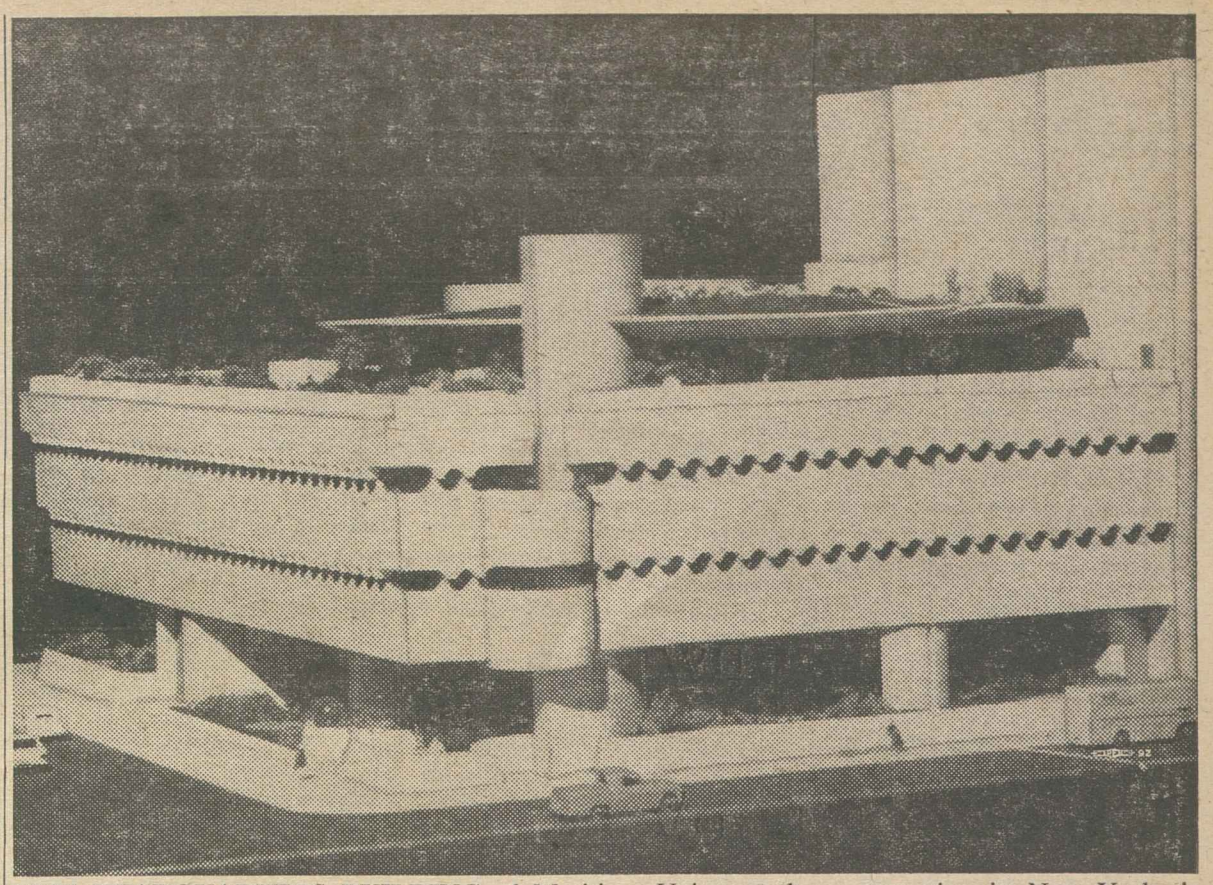
Other preconditions for industrial peace, the Swedish labor official suggested, are freedom from restrictive legislation and a national economic policy aimed at keeping employment at "a very high level."

He said Swedish employers and unions are agreed on the need for avoiding legislation that would limit their responsibilities. And the government's high employment policies, he noted, have the "full support" of management.

"One might say that the trade union view is shared by the whole society—that mass unemployment is the most terrible plague which can strike workers in any country," Geijer observed.

He also criticized Lawrence for quoting him so as to imply that he favored for the United States the Swedish system of central negotiations between top labor and management organizations.

"I must say once and for all that it is not possible to export a negotiations system from one country to another," Geijer declared. "Central negotiations have become possible here and suit Swedish conditions, but I do not think that they would be possible in (the) U.S.A. Sweden is a small country with a small economy in comparison with the American continent. It is not possible, in my view, to make any comparison between Sweden and U.S.A. in these respects."



NEW HEADQUARTERS BUILDING of Maritime Union, under construction in New York, is scheduled for completion in January 1963. Pictured is a model of the $4 million structure, which will include hiring halls and administrative offices of the NMU's pension and welfare plans. The block-wide site is on 7th Ave., between 12th and 13th streets.

Area Redevelopment Body Cites 31 'Promising' Bids for Help

Thirty-one "promising" applications for help from economically distressed areas are being processed by the Area Redevelopment Administration, Administrator William L. Batt, Jr., reported in a review of the organization's first five months.

Thirteen of the requests, he said in the report, involve commercial and industrial grants or loans, or both, which would involve an estimated ARA investment of $20 million and private, local and state investment of $132 million, and would create 4,822 new jobs.

The remaining 18 requests are for public facility loans or grants, most of them involving water or sewer systems or both. To create 6,120 new jobs, $7.2 million has been requested from ARA while other sources would put up $6.5 million.

The ARA has signed an agreement for its first worker training program. It provides establishment of courses in the Huntington, W. Va., area to train 325 workers, many of them former coal miners, with 125 in the first class. It will cost ARA $135,000.

Earlier the ARA had approved two public facility projects.

One was for a $160,000 loan and grant to help build a water system which will make possible a new locally-financed shirt factory at Gassville, Ark. The other was for a $213,000 sewer system at Cambridge, Md., which would permit one industry to start and another to expand.

The progress report showed the ARA expects to have a staff of 296 persons at full strength, and at present has roughly half of them—146.

The agency has designated as eligible for aid 663 areas—using criteria indicated by Congress when it passed the Area Redevelopment Act—covering all or part of 863 counties in 47 states and having a population of 28.6 million persons. The Labor Dept. has certified an additional 120 small labor markets.

Batt said "we take a long, hard look at everything."

He added that the ARA has to work with local people, with state governments and with other federal agencies.

"Every community that wants help first has to develop its own 'over-all economic development,'" he explained, "go to its state development officials and then come to us. We don't go to them.

Batt said 44 overall economic development programs, covering 194 counties in 25 states, have won ARA approval. These are long-range programs looking to economic improvements in regions where 11.3 million people live.

Former Teamster Unit Seeks Federal Charter

The AFL-CIO has received the first application for a federal charter from a former Teamster local under a policy adopted by the Executive Council at its recent meeting in New York.

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany announced that the application had been presented personally by James T. Luken, president of a Cincinnati local of more than 2,000 dairy drivers and workers that seceded from the Teamsters two months ago.

Meany said he had assured Luken that, in line with the Executive Council's action, the request would be processed in the usual manner and a charter would be issued immediately after a National Labor Relations Board election scheduled Oct. 31. The first vote will involve the largest unit and other NLRB votes in smaller units will follow.

Meany and Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler were authorized by the council to issue federal charters to Teamster locals which leave the expelled IBT and which "indicate a desire to join the ranks" of the federation.

Luken, a long-time foe of Teamster Pres. James R. Hoffa, led a mass revolt against the IBT that culminated last August in four Cincinnati locals voting to disaffiliate. The membership vote in Luken's own local of dairy drivers was 1,798 to 2.

In attempting to block the secessions, the IBT has obtained a temporary court injunction freezing the assets of the four locals except for normal operating expenses.

Luken has traced the split between Cincinnati Teamsters and the international back to 1953, when William Presser, Hoffa's lieutenant in Ohio, sent in his brother-in-law, Harry Friedman, to "take over." When opposition formed against outside direction, Luken found himself at the head of it. He said Presser subsequently told him to "get in line or get out." Thereafter the split widened.

Area Sales Tax Passes in Denver

Denver—Voters of Denver and three nearby counties have voted, 83,439-67,145, to put into effect next Jan. 1 a 2 percent sales tax on everything except groceries and prescription drugs.

The Denver Area Labor Federation opposed the tax although the Northern Colorado Building & Construction Trades Council favored the plan to raise money for capital improvements.

Machinists Launch ScholarshipProgram

The Machinists have launched a new scholarship program to help members under 35 and the children of members to get a college education. Five educators will name the winners of five scholarships, worth $1,000 a year for four years.

IAM Pres. Al J. Hayes said the program is being paid for by contributions of lodges, districts, state councils, ladies auxiliaries and the IAM itself. Application must be made before Dec. 31 to the IAM, Washington 6, D. C.

Maryland Labor Hailed For Drive on Race Bias

ture Eastern Shore delegates helped kill a bill aimed at outlawing racial discrimination in hotels and restaurants. The State AFL-CIO supported the measure both this year and last.

Gov. J. Millard Tawes, an Eastern Shoreman himself, has endorsed equal service legislation "in principle" but has refused to propose a specific measure. He will need Eastern Shore votes if he seeks re-election next year.

Unions Circularized

Meany's commendation followed Strong's circularization of city central bodies and local unions with a plea for support of the movement against racial discrimination. Strong included two other letters — one from Pres. Kennedy to John Feild, of the President's Committee for Equal Employment Opportunity, expressing himself as "most anxious" that foreign diplomats "have access to all public services and other accommodations, including particularly restaurants and other needs they may have while traveling." The second was from Frederick G. Dutton, special assistant to the President, asking labor's "cooperation in this effort" voluntarily to end discrimination in the state's restaurants.

"The Maryland State & D. C. AFL-CIO welcomes the opportunity of assisting the Administration under the good leadership of Pres. John F. Kennedy," Strong wrote the locals and councils, "in alerting the public as to the existing inequalities and nationwide publicity our free state of Maryland is receiving as a result of its failure to act in the crucial question of 'public accommodations.'"

This inaction on the part of both the state legislature and the state leadership is causing irreparable damage to our prestige and leadership abroad, not discounting, of course, the millions of American citizens who are discriminated against.

"We have long recognized this as a moral issue . . . and have advocated and strained for an end to all forms of discrimination. We appeal to you to give moral support wherever and however you may in this intolerable un-American practice.

"Let us practice what we preach, 'that all men are created equal' and should be treated equal in all places at all times."

NLRB to Restudy Policy On Appeals to Race Hate

Funds for Cancer Hit 10% Mark

The AFL-CIO $1 million "March on Cancer" was assured a good start when gifts amounting to more than 10 percent of the goal were received in advance of the drive's opening.

The total was sent past the $100,000 mark when three unions — Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, Maritime Union and Retail Clerks—all sent in checks for amounts above their quotas of 10 cents per member.

The sum was in addition to the $50,000 the AFL-CIO itself contributed to get the drive off to a good start.

The campaign is scheduled to begin Nov. 1. The $1 million, at a rate of 10 cents or more per member, will go to the Eleanor Roosevelt Cancer Foundation and is in the nature of a 77th birthday present to the First Lady of the Free World.

The AFL-CIO and its affiliated unions are absorbing all costs of raising the money. The full sum will go to the foundation, which is affiliated with the American Cancer Society, for the construction of new research facilities and for training or sustaining researchers.

Donations Stream In

Since the campaign was announced at the recent meeting of the AFL-CIO Executive Council in New York, a steady stream of delayed birthday cards for Mrs. Roosevelt has poured into AFL-CIO headquarters—most of them anonymous—enclosing dimes, quarters, half-dollars and an occasional $1 bill.

Additional contributions have been received in the name of Pres. Emeritus Daniel W. Helt of the Railroad Signalmen. It was requested, after he died recently, that instead of flowers contributions be made to the cancer fund through Meany.

Numerous gifts also have been received from state and local central labor bodies. These donations are not based on the 10 cents per member principle but are in addition to contributions from union members through their locals or internationals.

The Eleanor Roosevelt Cancer Foundation is the only organization which Mrs. Roosevelt has permitted to use her name. Her son, Rep. James Roosevelt (D-Calif.), is president, and Gen. Omar N. Bradley is chairman of the board of governors. National executive director is Sidney Glazier. Michael Johnson, former assistant director of the Union Label Dept. of the Ladies' Garment Workers, is director of labor activities for the fund-raising drive.

'Teens for Labor' Proves Success

Louisville — Boys and girls in the Teens for Labor Corps have worked so successfully that the Greater Louisville Central Labor Council has voted to sponsor the corps permanently.

Thirty-three youngsters aged 13 and up were organized in June by Council Sec.-Treas. Richard L. Miller to work one day a week or more during the summer, helping the county COPE and its Women's Activities Department.

Mrs. Floyd Rector, WAD director, reports that many corps members have now volunteered to continue to work after school and on Saturdays. Mrs. Rector has sent letters of appreciation to the teen-agers and their parents. The council will name three adult delegates to a TLC advisory committee.

STEELWORKER WIVES and children man a picket station on roads leading to the Roane Electric Furnace plant at Rockwood, Tenn. Some 35 wives of strikers set up their own picket line after many workers were arrested for violating a court order to stay 1,000 feet from plant entrances.

Men Jailed, Wives Hold Picket Line

By Eugene A. Kelly

Rockwood, Tenn.—Forty spunky women brought their children and stood in the highways here to raise their frail voices in protest of the hiring of strikebreakers to take the jobs of their menfolk at the big Roane Electric Furnace plant, making ferro alloys for the steel industry.

That may have changed the shape of the future for 415 members of Steelworkers Local 5495, on strike since Sept. 7 in what they term a protest against safety conditions at the furnace owned by a big company and controlled by a powerful financier—Merritt-Chapman & Scott Corp. and Louis Wolfson of faraway New York.

The story of the wives on the picket line brought the newspapers from Nashville and Knoxville and Chattanooga, and the radio and television men, asking what this strike was all about and taping statements and taking pictures.

It drew the attention of other union men, and the governor of Tennessee, and the State Industrial Safety Dept., wondering out loud why hazardous conditions haven't been corrected and how someone might get the company to sit around a table and talk about this thing.

Company Pres. Roland Baum would be out of town until Oct. 28, his office told Gov. Buford Ellington (D) in Nashville, but the governor sent a letter to Steelworkers District Dir. Lorne Nelles in Atlanta, Ga., saying he would do everything he can to set up a meeting.

Meany Cites Freedom Urge:

Anniversary Recalls Hungarian Uprising

A nation determined to be free "cannot be permanently overawed or enslaved by any tyranny," AFL-CIO Pres George Meany warned Soviet Russia on the fifth anniversary of the Hungarian uprising on Oct. 23, 1956.

He called the revolt "an historic landmark of greater significance than even its inspiring heroes or counter-revolutionary Soviet enemies realized," adding that it was the "most significant" event in the struggle for democracy since the Russians themselves overthrew czarism in 1917.

"Today, when the peace and freedom of all mankind are gravely menaced by the aggressive Soviet despotism," Meany said, "it is necessary to keep in mind one fact above all else:

"The Soviet government which so savagely suppressed the aspirations of the Hungarian people for democracy in October 1956 is only the continuation and expansion of the Bolshevik band that subverted and overthrew the young Russian democracy in November 1917."

It is the Communist "enemies of liberty, decency and world peace," he said, who built the "wall of shame and horror" that divides Berlin.

Bomb Threat Cited

"Only mortal enemies of freedom, like the Soviet aggressors, could so callously and planfully seek to terrorize humanity and threaten war with multiple megaton bombs in order to expand the area under the Communist yoke," he declared.

"The free world has yet to learn the full implications and meaning of this continuous pattern of Communist aggression. Not only Washington, London and Paris, but Accra, Baghdad, Cairo, Conakry, Djarkata and New Delhi have yet to realize fully the terrible potential of this chain of events in the

Unions Ask New Votes In 2 Cases

By David L. Perlman

The National Labor Relations Board has agreed to take a new look at a policy that allows employers to appeal to racial prejudice in union representation elections.

A consistent line of NLRB decisions has held that injection of racial issues by employers is not, of itself, grounds for setting aside representation elections lost by unions.

In two test cases which the NLRB will consider, the Textile Workers Union of America and the Clothing Workers have asked the board to review the refusal by two NLRB regional directors to throw out elections in which employers used labor's support for civil rights to play on the fears and prejudices of southern workers and communities.

The unions concede that the regional directors' rulings are in line with labor board precedent—specifically the NLRB's Sharon Hosiery Mills decision in 1958. They argue that the policy is wrong and should be reversed.

In response to the TWUA protest of an election held at the Allen-Morrison Sign Co., Lynchburg, Va., the board declared—in a telegram to the union signed by Associate Executive Sec. Howard W. Kleeb—that review was being granted "on the basis that compelling reasons have been made for reconsideration of board policy."

Also before the board, under a consent stipulation for review, is a

Election Case Dropped, NMU Hails 'Vindication'

New York—The government has settled without trial its 1960 suit challenging the conduct of the Maritime Union's election of officers and has stipulated that "the union and its executive officers acted at all times during the 1960 election in good faith" and the election "was not fraudulently conducted."

NMU Pres. Joseph Curran said the government's action "completely vindicated" the union's position. It indicated, he said, that the government found "no foundation" for action.

Former Labor Sec. James P. Mitchell had filed the Landrum-Griffin suit against the union on Oct. 3, 1960—the opening date of the NMU's convention. The election—in which 66 union officers had been chosen — took place the previous spring.

Curran said a numbering system for ballots, to which the government objected, had been instituted on recommendation of the Honest Ballot Association—the non-partisan, good government group which conducts all NMU elections—"to insure against multiple voting and ballot box stuffing." He said the union had begun action to eliminate the numbering system "before the government instituted its suit."

The union stipulated in the settlement that it would ensure that ballots in future elections would be without any means of identifying the voter with his choice of candidate and that it would not permit electioneering at polling places during the 60-day election period.

Curran said that the union had told Justice Dept. attorneys that the NMU wanted the case to go to trial unless the government was prepared to "completely vindicate" the union and its officers.

PERU'S TRADE UNIONISTS back up U.S. labor's consumer boycott of Sears, Roebuck & Co. with pickets at the Intl. Trade Fair in Lima, where Sears had been designated to represent U.S. retailers. The AFL-CIO Executive Council strongly protested selection of the "anti-union" firm in a telegram to Pres. Kennedy and Omer Becu, general secretary of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions, cabled his "regret" that Sears would represent the U.S. Signs carried by the pickets from the Commercial & Clerical Workers of Peru included these: "60 Million Workers of the Free World Reject Sears' Policies; Yankees Are Not Imperialists, Sears Is; Sears' History Is a Black One, Why Does It Represent a Democratic Country at the Fair?"

Buying Power Down:

Cost of Living Hits New Record High

By Robert B. Cooney

The nation's cost of living rose to a new record high in September, pushed mainly by seasonal increases for apparel and continued higher costs for services, the government has reported.

The Labor Dept., in a companion report, also said that both the take-home pay and the buying power of factory workers fell off between August and September.

The Consumer Price Index increased by two-tenths of 1 percent to 128.3 between August and September, according to the Bureau of Labor Statistics. This means the market basket of typical goods and services which cost $10 in the 1947-49 base period now costs $12.83.

"Thus far in 1961," the BLS report noted, "consumer prices have advanced by seven-tenths of 1 percent, the smallest increase for a January to September period since 1955."

The September CPI, at 128.3, was 1.2 percent higher than September a year ago, the report added. Higher charges for services were blamed for slightly over half the rise.

Stability Forecast

Asked for a forecast, BLS Deputy Commissioner Robert J. Myers replied there will be "very probably another increase" in the October CPI, with a slackening or leveling off expected by November.

Myers saw nothing suggesting a "take-off" in the cost of living, but rather "a substantial degree of price stability" in future months.

The September CPI will mean 1-cent or 2-cent an hour wage boosts for 86,000 workers as a result of a quarterly review of cost-of-living escalator allowances provided by their union contracts.

Some 51,000 workers—mainly employed by Greyhound and the Public Service Coordinated Transport Co. in New Jersey and by the Hayes and Northrup aircraft companies—will receive 1 cent hikes. Most of the 35,000 due 2-cent increases are with Douglas Aircraft.

A group of 11,000 meat cutters in Los Angeles supermarkets will receive an increase of 5 cents an hour on the basis of an annual review.

Earnings Down

The BLS report on factory worker earnings showed that average spendable earnings—after deduction of federal income and social security taxes—were $82.44 per week for a production worker with three dependents and $74.85 for a worker without dependents.

Both totals were 96 cents lower than in August, the report said.

The report said the earnings dropped "because of reductions in hours of work resulting from strikes in the automobile industry, the effects of Hurricane Carla and the observance of religious holidays occurring during the payroll reporting period."

The higher cost of living "contributed to a decline in buying power of 1.5 percent over the month," the report added.

"Compared with September 1960," the report concluded, "spendable earnings were up by $1.25 (more than 1.5 percent), the result of higher hourly earnings. Buying power was up by one-half of 1 percent."

Perlis Warns of Threat In Flu Vaccine Shortage

Thousands of Americans who want to protect themselves against influenza are being denied inoculations because of a nationwide shortage of vaccine, Leo A. Perlis, national director of AFL-CIO Community Service Activities, has declared.

The seven pharmaceutical manufacturers who produce the vaccine said in a recent joint statement that their production of the serum this year was three times what they turned out last year. However, they have been unable to fill all orders because of unprecedented demand, they said. The U.S. Public Health Service warned in August of a possible increase in flu this year.

The Phoenix (Ariz.) & Maricopa County AFL-CIO was forced to curtail sharply a scheduled mass inoculation when it was unable to obtain enough vaccine.

The labor council had what it thought was an iron-clad agreement for 5,000 vaccine units, but a few days before the inoculations were scheduled it was notified only 2,000 units would be available—and next was told that none at all was on hand. Protests from Milton V. Lee, AFL-CIO community services representative in Phoenix, with help from Perlis' office, plus borrowed dosages from the Maricopa County Health Dept., produced enough for nearly 5,000 inoculations.

None Available

Earlier Lee had tried to buy 10,000 additional units for which he would have paid cash. Over a three-day period he was unable to obtain a single unit despite telephone calls to manufacturers or their agents.

In nearly every case, he said, he was told: "We know of none available in the United States."

About three months are required to produce a batch of vaccine.

Perlis in a statement said that the shortage of influenza vaccine was comparable to the situation during a 1957 flu epidemic and to the shortage of Salk vaccine when polio inoculations became possible.

"On both occasions," he pointed out, AFL-CIO Community Services "urged that something be done to prevent a recurrence. The U.S. Public Health Service has a duty to alert the country to the danger of epidemics, but it also has an overriding obligation to make certain that production is geared to demand and that supplies are available.

"There is not even enough vaccine for older people, pregnant women, the chronically ill and children, whom the medical authorities have specified as being in special need of protection.

"Scarcity brings the cost of vaccine up and encourages black market manipulations of available supplies. Unless the vaccine is made readily available, many thousands of man-hours will be lost to industry in the event of a flu epidemic this winter."

Air Safety Award Cites Pilots Union

Chicago — The Air Line Pilots has been named the winner of Aviation Week magazine's annual air safety award for "distinguished service in achieving safer utilization of aircraft."

The award was presented at the annual ALPA safety forum here, at which the union gave its own annual award for air safety to two pilots with Pan American World Airways and Delta Air Lines.

ALPA Pres. C. N. Sayen accepted the Aviation Week award from Jerome Lederer of the Flight Safety Foundation for such accomplishments as "air safety forums, contributions to improved cockpits, approach and landing aids, improved collision-prevention techniques;" for focusing attention on special current needs to improve safety, and for giving scholarships in aero-medical programs.

Sayen then presented ALPA's own safety award to Capt. W. L. Collier of Sparta, N. J., and Capt. B. V. Hewes of East Point, Ga., members of the union's airport rescue and firefighting committees. Their efforts, Sayen said, led to a nationwide survey of airport firefighting facilities.

Capt. David S. Little of American Airlines warned 150 pilots and safety experts at the conference that a trend to shorter airport runways threatens safety records. Runways 10,000 feet long appear to be the minimum for safety, he said.

UAW-Chrysler Talks Approach Final Stage

Detroit — Negotiations on a new contract between the Auto Workers and the Chrysler Corp. approached their final stage as UAW Pres. Walter P. Reuther told the corporation the union expected a national economic offer by Oct. 29.

Talks on national issues involving wages and working conditions had been put aside while three-fourths of the 88 bargaining units reached agreement on local issues. Delays at other units had slowed the bargaining pace.

Reuther said technical people would be standing by for a company economic offer and that agreement in principle would allow subcommittees to draft the contract language promptly.

The UAW executive board, slated to meet Oct. 27, was expected to review the status of negotiations and to decide whether a strike deadline should be set.

Contracts covering more than 60,000 Chrysler workers have been extended by mutual agreement since the Oct. 1 expiration date.

Pattern Set

Reuther said previously that the union expected Chrysler, the last of the Big Three auto makers to settle, to meet the pattern of wages and benefits set earlier this year after short strikes at Ford and General Motors. The pattern followed this form:

A three-year agreement with annual wage boosts of 2.5 percent or six cents an hour, whichever is larger; continuation of the cost-of-living supplement; a short-workweek benefit giving covered workers partial pay for weeks in which less than 40 hours are worked; company-paid medical-hospital benefits; pension improvements, and major improvements in supplemental unemployment benefits (SUB).

In other auto negotiations, the union's Local 751 set midnight Oct. 28 as the deadline for a new agreement at the Caterpillar Tractor plant in Decatur, Ill. The UAW Mack Truck Council extended a strike deadline on a day-to-day basis at Mack plants in Allentown, Pa., Somerville and Plainfield, N. J., and Cortland, N. Y.

Early Cancer Detection Aim of Foundation Drive

An educational campaign to familiarize organized workers with the life-saving benefits of early diagnosis and treatment of cancer is one of the objectives in the AFL-CIO's $1 million campaign for the Eleanor Roosevelt Cancer Foundation.

The federation Executive Council at its recent meeting designated November for "Labor's March on Cancer," the objective being to raise the $1 million in donations of 10 cents from each member in honor of the First Lady of the Free World.

Experts have estimated there are 2.5 million men and women now in the work force who will eventually die of cancer but could be saved with early diagnosis and proper treatment. At present one out of every three cancer patients is cured, they say; with detection in the early stages and the kind of care available, half could be cured.

Available for union members during the campaign will be educational literature of various kinds from the American Cancer Society, with which the Eleanor Roosevelt foundation is affiliated.

The foundation already has given $250,000 to the Intl. Union Against Cancer to establish International fellowships for promising cancer researchers, and has made grants to help establish research centers at the Jefferson Medical Center, Philadelphia; University of Utah, and University of Colorado.

Experienced Picket Available to Dallas

Dallas, Tex.—When Office Workers Local 45 needed picketing help in its strike against Western Gillette Motor Transport, Inc., here, Fort Worth Local 277 supplied one picket with a solid labor background.

She was Mrs. Tennie Mark Orr, daughter of Assistant Sec. of Labor Jerry R. Holleman, former president of the Texas State AFL-CIO.

Mrs. Orr, a steward and member of the bargaining committee at Southwest Union Life Insurance Co. in Fort Worth, was among relief pickets who filled in while the Dallas members were voting to end the strike and accept a first contract with pay increases of up to 68 cents an hour.

N. Y. Labor Backs Area Loan Agency

Albany—A proposed amendment to the New York state law to establish a state Job Development Authority has been endorsed by Pres. Harold Hanover of the New York State AFL-CIO and other labor spokesmen.

The proposal—Amendment 4 on the Nov. 7 state ballot—would provide for loans of up to 30 percent of the cost of new industrial projects, with the remainder coming from banks and other private sources.

The amendment would set up a fund of $100 million, with depressed areas getting the priority for up to $50 million of the total. Hanover worked with its legislative sponsor, State Sen. Harold A. Jerry, is backing the proposals.

'No Right to Strike:'

Political Uproar Follows Ontario Labor Law Ruling

Toronto, Ont.—A turbulent political storm is boiling up in the wake of a magistrate's decision in the Royal York Hotel case which virtually outlaws the right to strike.

It rips to shreds the Ontario Labor Act, which has been on the statute books for 15 years, asserting that the law does not give a worker the right to strike and declaring that an employer has the right to fire anyone who withholds his labor in an effort to improve his wages or working conditions.

The ruling was handed down by Magistrate Thomas Elmore in a decision dismissing the request of the Hotel & Club Employes to prosecute Royal York management for unfair labor practices. Authorization for prosecution of such charges is required by Ontario law.

There were these repercussions on the the political front:

● Premier Leslie Frost of Ontario, said the decision should be appealed at once and that if it is upheld he will seek to change the labor act.

● Ontario Labor Minister Charles Daley warned the decision may plunge labor relations in Ontario into "chaos" and candidly said he would not have handed down the same decision.

● Sec.-Treas. Douglas F. Hamilton of the Ontario Federation of Labor warned that with labor relations "back in the jungle," unions may be forced to break the law and strike at the most opportune time. Ontario law now prohibits strikes or lockouts during the lifetime of a contract and requires conciliation in case of any dispute, with a three-man board holding hearings and publicly issuing recommendations. Not until seven days after the recommendations are handed down can the union strike, with a secret ballot required.

Elmore in his decision held that since the labor act does not give the specific right to strike, employers and employes drift into a master and servant relationship once the conciliation period ends.

A worker cannot legally begin a strike, the magistrate maintained, until he first has notified his employer that he is quitting his job. He held that the Royal York strikers, who walked out April 24 after the hotel refused to pay more than a 2 cents an hour wage increase, "had no right to strike and cease work and by so doing they ceased to be employes of the accused."

Union to Appeal

Vice Pres. Archie Johnstone of the Hotel & Restaurant Workers, leader of the strike, said the decision will be appealed to the Supreme Court of Canada if necessary.

Other labor officials warned massive strikes might be necessary if unions are to re-establish their clear right to strike.

The Royal York is the largest hotel in the British Commonwealth. About 800 strikebreakers have taken the place of the regular employes and more than a score of conventions and other meetings have been cancelled because of the walkout.

The union originally sought a pay hike of 10 cents an hour. The Queen Elizabeth Hotel, second largest in the British Commonwealth, recently scrapped a contract with the union which had another year to run and granted a pay hike of 10 cents over three years.

The Royal York is operated by the Canadian Pacific Railroad, the Queen Elizabeth by the Hilton hotel chain.

Yale & Towne Strikers Rally Strong Support

Philadelphia—Organized labor in the Philadelphia area has rallied solidly in support of employes of the Yale & Towne Manufacturing Co. on strike to resist a management attempt to impose a speedup in a new contract.

Nationwide support, in addition, was being built up by the AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept. through its Yale & Towne Industry Committee, composed of six unions having contractual relations with the company.

The council, at a meeting here expressed "full solidarity" with 1,500 members of Machinists Lodge 1717 and Lodge 14 of the Office Workers who walked out nine weeks ago when the company in negotiations demanded elimination or radical change in 35 of 37 contract clauses negotiated over the past 18 years.

Also represented at the meeting were the Auto Workers, Steelworkers, United Textile Workers and Boilermakers. UAW Local 53, representing 1,000 workers in the firm's Chicago plant, is seeking to negotiate a new contract to replace one that will expire on Nov. 9. Pres. Peter Lausas of Local 53 and Pres. Samuel Lütteroty of Lodge 1717 pledged that if the Chicago group is forced to strike, both will remain out until satisfactory settlements are reached with each.

In other developments:

● The IUD called on Sec. of Labor Arthur J. Goldberg for his "personal intervention" in the strike, charging the firm "demands retrogression" in the 35 Philadelphia contract clauses and "takes a similar position" in Chicago.

IUD Organization Dir. Nicholas Zonarich, basing the plea on the fact the firm has defense contracts, charged it with "Boulwareism" in its bargaining. The "take-it-or-leave-it" attitude, he asserted, was imported to Yale & Towne from the General Electric Co. where it had been learned by Yale & Towne Vice Pres. Paul Hartig, a former GE official.

● Zonarich also sent telegrams to Chairman Lister Hill (D-Ala.) of the Senate Labor Committee and Rep. Adam Clayton Powell (D-N.Y.) of the House Labor Committee asking them to investigate the company's labor-management practices and charging an effort "to destroy working conditions in effect under union contracts for 18 years."

"Under Mr. Hartig's direction," he said, "the company has simply placed its demands on the table and refused to bargain. Because of the spread of such tactics in U.S. industry, a look at the Yale & Towne pattern is in order. If this firm is permitted to compel employes' agreement to a speedup, other employers will seek to follow the same pattern."

● Another telegram from Zonarich went to Vice Pres. Lyndon Johnson, asked that as chairman of the President's Committee on Equal Employment Opportunity, he authorize an investigation of the company's white collar and professional employment practices.

Although Yale & Towne has defense contracts, Zonarich said, it "has not offered equal opportunity to Negro and other minority groups, except where our unions have demanded fair play in units of bargained-for workers."

Rail Telegraphers Postpone SP Strike

The Railroad Telegraphers postponed a scheduled strike against the Southern Pacific Railroad at the request of Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg to make a renewed effort at negotiating an agreement on job security.

A Presidential Emergency Board set up in September had upheld the union's contention that the issue was bargainable and recommended that the union modify its original proposal and explore various alternative methods of preventing the wholesale abolishment of jobs.

ORT Pres. G. E. Leighty said the strike was called after the railroad rejected proposals in line with the emergency board's recommendations.

Under Sec. of Labor W. Willard Wirtz and Chairman Francis A. O'Neill, Jr., of the National Mediation Board have been meeting with the two parties in an effort to pave the way for an agreement.

White Collar Unions Set Brussels Parley

Three represntatives of the AFL-CIO will attend an Intl. Non-Manual Workers' Conference to be held Nov. 3 and 4 in Brussels under the auspices of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions.

Pres. Howard Coughlin of the Office Employes, and Otto Nordenskjold, first secretary of the Swedish white collar workers' federation, will report on trends in non-manual employment and their social effects.

AFL-CIO delegates, in addition to Coughlin, will be Gerald P. O'Keefe, director of international affairs for the Retail Clerks, and John Pastin, director of the Office Technical Dept. of the Steelworkers.

Meany Finds Libel Suit 'Very Amusing'

"Very amusing" was AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany's comment on a $1 million libel and slander suit filed against him in federal court in Detroit by James R. Hoffa, president of the federation-ousted Teamsters.

The Hoffa suit followed a recent refusal of the AFL-CIO Executive Council to readmit the Teamsters, under present circumstances, to the federation, and Meany's press conference statement that there is every indication the union "more than ever is now under the direction of corrupt and criminal elements."

Also named as defendants in the Hoffa suit were 23 other members of the federation Executive Council. Also named was the late Charles J. MacGowan, a former member, who died more than a year ago.

Meany Lauds Bishop for Union Labor Requirement

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany has extended his "personal gratitude" to Bishop Sidney M. Metzger of the Roman Catholic diocese of El Paso for directing all pastors to specify in advertising for construction bids that only contractors employing union labor are eligible to bid.

"You have translated into action," Meany wrote the bishop, "the teachings of the Popes on the elements of social justice.

"I am confident that the members of the AFL-CIO in your area will prove themselves worthy of the confidence you have placed in them."

Bishop Metzger reminded his priests in a Labor Day message that wages and employment benefits have not kept pace with industrial progress in the Southwest and praised the policy of government bodies in paying the area-determined prevailing wage for work. He said also:

"It should be noted that time and time again, with little publicity or fanfare, labor unions have generously donated their time and work for needy projects. This laudable practice is one of long standing, and universal in the individual unions. I deeply appreciate the assistance rendered on many occasions."

In a subsequent Labor Day message Bishop Metzger added quotations from three Papal encyclicals on the rights of labor and said they are "particularly" pertinent in the El Paso area. Emphasizing a quotation from Pope Pius XI on the injustice of denying workers the right to form unions, Bishop Metzger said it is "almost inconceivable that even Catholics at this late date can view with suspicion the efforts of workingmen" to form unions.

Picketing Wives Swing Support for Strikers

strikers who had been in the county lockup since Oct. 10—for violating a court order not to come closer than 1,000 feet to the plant entrances—were released on bail, and they returned to the picket line.

The women kept their own lines alongside the access road waiting for the strikebreakers who went into the plant to take their husbands' jobs, talking about the smoke and fumes that caused their men to walk out for the tenth time in five years.

The company justifies the hiring of strikebreakers with the claim that the strike was caused by "a few troublemakers" and that it violated a no-strike contract clause specifically inserted because of previous so-called "wildcat" walkouts. The clause, the company said, gave it a legal right to discharge participants in a strike during the life of the contract.

"What's going to happen now?" a reporter asked Donald Daugherty, president of Local 5495, after a bonding company put up bail and he was let out of jail.

Public Opinion Shifts

"I believe we're going to win," said Daugherty, who wasn't so sure until the women and kids walked out on the picket line and public opinion began to change in the wide state of Tennessee.

District Dir. Nelles could feel things change after the white light of publicity began to illumine the dusty picket line in this hill-country town of 9,000 people, and after a woman picket, Mrs. Don Stevens, charged she was run down by a strikebreaker's car, and after another strikebreaker from Knoxville confessed to Tennessee Bureau of Investigation officers that he riddled his own car with bullets and tried to put the blame on the strikers.

Said Nelles: "They just didn't know what to do about the women on the picket line. They couldn't compete with them."

The next step for the union may be to take court action seeking to compel Roane Electric to correct safety hazards found by state inspectors two years ago, and perhaps to charge the company with locking out its workers.

Local Pres. Daugherty wrapped up the strike story in this statement about what caused it:

"The truth about the walkout is that the hazardous working conditions in the plant endanger the lives and limbs of our men. The company continues to refuse to take proper corrective measures. . . .

"As a result of this unreasonable, unrealistic and inhuman attitude, three of our fellow workers have been killed in accidents at the plant. There has been a continuous occurrence of severe injuries—loss of sight, loss of limbs, men burned to the waist are a few examples.

"The company continues to refuse to cooperate with our Safety Committee in working out a reasonable and effective safety program, and has forced us to protect ourselves in the only manner we can.

"We want to work; we need to work; we are fighting for our jobs and our safety. We intend to do everything legally possible to protect our jobs and our lives."

CWA for Private Space Network

Continuation of plans for a privately sponsored space communications network has been urged on Pres. Kennedy by Pres. Joseph A. Beirne of the Communications Workers.

The union's position differs from that of a group of 35 members of Congress who have urged public development of the network and whose opinions, Bierne wrote, "we always respect and frequently share."

"Only through continuation of the privately sponsored plans to encircle our globe with a unique system of communication satellites can we hope to win for the United States a sorely-needed 'first' in the crucial area of space," Beirne wrote the President. "The prestige value for us abroad would be immense."

Joblessness Declines Seasonally in Canada

Ottawa, Ont.—Unemployment in Canada dropped seasonally by 15,000 to 308,000, or 4.7 percent of the labor force, in September, the Dominion Bureau of Statistics has reported.

THE LETTER CARRIERS are helping the "Keep Detroit Beautiful" campaign by donating the funds for billboards like this one. The money comes from the Detroit Letter Carriers Benevolent Fund, financed through an annual field day and picnic.

World Tension, Domestic Needs Absorb Stone Workers' Sessions

Cincinnati—The problems of automation, the threat of communism, and the need for political action by unions continued as major topics during closing sessions of the Stone & Allied Products Workers convention here.

Delegates to the 10th triennial gathering also heard Sen. Stephen M. Young (D.-Ohio) declare that if he "were a working man instead of a lawyer and a senator of the United States, I would belong to the union of my craft and sit in the front row."

Lashing out at "the moguls of the U. S. Chamber of Commerce and the National Association of Manufacturers," Young said business can be no stronger than the men and women who work for it.

"Trade unions," he said, "stand for mankind's loftiest aspirations. Through unions, working men and women have won hard-earned victories, the fruits of which will continue to be reaped by generations yet unborn."

The senator also took issue with "fascist-minded people who some years ago began applying the term 'monopolistic labor boss' to dedicated labor leaders."

Young said he knew hundreds of labor leaders personally and found "honest responsible men who over the years have helped raise the standards of workers—both organized and unorganized."

School Needs Cited

Commenting on a recent visit to Europe, he said that we must have federal legislation to catch up with Russian education, and that he heard "less talk of war in Western Europe in a month than I do here in a single day." He predicted that there will be no war because Russia realizes that the Soviet Union and the United States would annihilate each other, leaving Red China as the winner.

The coming session of Congress, Young predicted, would pass a law granting medical care for the aged under social security and railroad retirement. He said the "propaganda of the American Medical Association" delayed such a bill this year, but that passage is inevitable to remedy the "tragic situation" of elderly people unable to afford medical care.

He called on business to forge programs to deal intelligently and fairly with the problems posed by automation, stating that displaced workers should have first crack at new jobs and business should bear the cost of retraining programs.

One of the major convention resolutions charged that a serious problem in automation is the lack of understanding and concern by workers being retrained do not a lack of information about new opportunities by state employment services.

Delegates commended the Kennedy Administration's plans in this field, but urged revision of unemployment compensation policies so workers being retrained do not suffer financially.

They also urged better information on job opportunities through the U. S. Employment Service, earlier retirement with higher benefits, lower taxes for low-income families, higher unemployment compensation for longer periods, broader seniority units, and severance pay.

The delegates also voted to increase dues from $4 to not less than $5 a month, with the additional $1 split between the international and local unions. Some locals already have higher dues, which will be the "regular dues" under the constitution.

To Explore Unity

The convention passed a resolution directing the officers to look into the possibilities of affiliation with unions in the same general field.

Going further than medical care for the aged, although a resolution also backed that, delegates asked passage of a federal health plan which would give care to "all Americans," plus additional funds for medical research, medical schools, scholarships, and hospital construction.

The delegates reaffirmed their willingness "to continue to cooperate with all persons and organizations working for the political action principles established by the AFL-CIO."

They called on all local unions of the Stone Workers to "affiliate with local and state central bodies and participate fully in the work of these councils in political action and community services," to support the AFL-CIO COPE "through voluntary individual contributions during its annual campaign," and to make sure that all local members and their families "are and remain registered voters."

Screen Actors Voting In Annual Election

Hollywood—More than 14,000 members of the Screen Actors Guild are voting by mail ballot in the union's annual election, with returns due by Nov. 3.

Twenty-seven candidates are competing for 21 offices. George Chandler, proposed for re-election as president by the union's nominating committee, is opposed by Patrick James Hawley, nominated by petition.

Canadian Church Body Urges Drive for Jobs

Ottawa, Ont.—"Disturbing" unemployment must be "diminished by close cooperation between all segments of society and all levels of government," the executive council of the Anglican Church of Canada declared at a meeting here.

The Anglican leaders called the present rate of unemployment in Canada "distressingly high."

Opposes NAM View:

Management Group Supports ILO Role

New York—The Commerce & Industry Association of New York has called for "continuing and more aggressive participation in the Intl. Labor Organization by government, by management and by labor."

The association, which represents 3,500 business firms by implication, indicated in a letter to Pres. Kennedy a strong disagreement with the position taken by the National Association of Manufacturers. The NAM recently withdrew from participation in selection of the U.S. employer delegate to the ILO, complaining that supporters of free enterprise are outnumbered in the 100-nation organization.

Edmund F. Wagner, president of the New York business group, said the effort by Communist nations to use the ILO for propaganda purposes "is no reason for the periodic talk of withdrawing from that organization. No fight is ever won by running away."

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany earlier had used almost identical language in denouncing the NAM withdrawal.

The New York business group, which is one of the largest member organizations of the U. S. Chamber of Commerce, declared:

Nation's Stake Cited

"The stake of this nation in the ILO has not been sufficiently recognized and the opportunities it offers us never have been realized fully. We as a nation must strive constantly to take the initiative and achieve a position of genuine leadership in the ILO.

"We must bring to all nations, particularly those new and emerging nations taking their first steps on the road to industrialization, an understanding of how we achieved high productivity and high standards of living without sacrificing human dignity, human values and democratic concepts."

The business group said it felt that the U.S. government had failed to back up the employer delegate on some important issues but added:

"To carry on effectively in the ILO, it is vital that we continue to designate to our delegation persons of the highest stature in labor, management and government service, and that this delegation have both continuity and the support of a full-time competent staff."

The ILO, a specialized agency of the United Nations, has as its goal raising living standards and improving working conditions throughout the world. Each nation is represented by a four-member delegation, two designated as government representatives and one each from labor and management ranks.

Local Action Proposed To Better Health Care

New York—Labor-management councils at the community level are needed to help improve the quality of medical and hospital care while checking rising health costs, the non-profit Foundation on Employe Health, Medical Care & Welfare, Inc., has declared.

The proposal was contained in a recent 166-page book, "How to Get the Most Out of Medical and Hospital Benefit Plans," prepared for the foundation by Ruth and Edward Brecher and published by Prentice-Hall, Inc.

The study stemmed from a three-day conference held last year at Arden House, Harriman, N. Y., under the co-sponsorship of the foundation and Columbia University's School of Public Health & Administrative Medicine. Attending were 42 experts from labor, management, hospitals, medicine, universities, insurance companies and health plans.

The book, noting the growing of labor-management cooperation in the area of medical and hospital insurance plans, which now cost American industry and workers more than $4 billion annually, said creation of the community-level councils would be an "important aspect" of meeting the health needs of the 98 million Americans covered by them.

The book explores the complex problems currently facing health care plans and analyzes the subjects of alleged overcharging by doctors, use and misuse of hospitals, rising costs and other factors "requiring reform."

The foundation was established five years ago to help labor and management cooperatively to obtain maximum medical and hospital benefits for their dollars.

struggle between human freedom and Communist tyranny. In all these bitter tests of strength, the Kremlin's aims and actions have been consistent and continuous—by any and all means to extend Communist rule until Soviet imperialism dominates the entire world."

Meany declared Hungary's achievement of democracy in 1956, "though it lasted but five days," is "as unforgettable as the Soviet butchery of Budapest is unforgivable."

"In this spirit," he added, "the free world must face up to and meet Soviet aggression against democratic Berlin and free Germany as only the next stages in Khrushchev's timetable for Soviet world conquest."

The most constructive and positive course lovers of freedom can pursue, Meany said, "is to close their ranks and act in unity to promote democracy, protect world peace and foster social progress."

"In this light," he went on, "totalitarian communism must be treated as the mortal enemy of human freedom at all times, in all countries, by the people of every race and faith. In Africa no less than in Europe, in Latin America as well as Asia, Soviet imperialism and its Communist agencies are the implacable foes of democracy and national freedom."

Meany derided talk in Moscow and Peiping of peaceful coexistence with the democracies, charging the two governments are actually arming to the teeth "in order to destroy the human rights and independence of all nations as free peoples."

"The free trade unions—as the first target of every totalitarian regime, no matter where it rears its ugly head—have learned this lesson from experience," he asserted. "So have millions of other liberty-loving people on both sides of the Iron Curtain.

"We must never forget Hungary, its courage, its inspiration, its sacrifices for our common cause of freedom and human dignity. We must remember. But we must do more.

UN Steps Urged

"The older countries and the younger nations that have recently won their independence should pool their human forces and natural resources to assure the Hungarian people their right of self-determination.

"The United Nations should strongly urge and work for the immediate release of all political prisoners in Hungary.

"All nations — especially those who have recently won their independence—should demand the removal of all foreign troops from Hungary.

"The UN must strongly call for free elections in Hungary under UN supervision."

From Brussels, Gen. Sec. Omer Becu of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions sent greetings to the Hungarian workers who bore the brunt of the 1956 struggle and assured them their bid for freedom will never be forgotten.

The free trade union movement, he told them, is still fighting to create a better world in which social justice will be achieved and human dignity will be respected. The Hungarian revolution, "brutally crushed as it was," provided "an unforgettable testimony" to the strength of democratic ideals, he said.

At AFL-CIO Conference:

'Rights' Inventory Urged in Wisconsin

Milwaukee—Delegates to the Wisconsin State AFL-CIO's first civil rights conference here have recommended a "community-wide civil rights inventory" by every central body in the state.

The 200 delegates called for a factual survey of discrimination "in labor unions, in employment, in apprenticeship and training, in housing and in every field of community life."

The survey should be followed, the resolution declared, by "programs of education, legislation and other appropriate action designed to eliminate all discrimination."

The resolution also asked the State AFL-CIO to call upon all central bodies and local unions to establish active civil rights committees.

Boris Shishkin, director of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Civil Right, told the delegates that labor's battle against race discrimination is "no less urgent" in the North than in the South. He said organization, education and legislation are needed "to eliminate all discrimination in labor's own ranks and also in employment and housing."

Shishkin said the fight against discrimination can't be won by "letting George do it."

"It's everybody's job," he said, "a job for every Tom, Dick and Harry and—to show there's no discrimination—it is also a job for every Jane, Liz and Mary."

The conference, which included workshop sessions on employment, apprenticeship, housing, legislation and education, also recommended:

- Standard non-discrimination clauses in all union contracts.
- Consideration of a standard apprenticeship application as a means of assuring equal opportunity.
- Enactment of a state fair housing law.

Wisconsin's Gov. Gaylord Nelson told the opening session of the conference that he welcomes labor's initiative in furthering civil rights. Nelson called for an end to "discrimination as usual" in the state.

Rep. Henry S. Reuss (D-Wis.) told the delegates that under the Kennedy Administration "Washington Civil rights action has finally become vigorous." He added:

"The Administration believes that it can't just leave the field to Gov. Orval Faubus of Arkansas and the demagogues. It's better to intervene in the courts than in the streets."

Nicaragua's Labor Policies Hit by Unions

Kingston, Jamaica — Pres. Joseph Curran of the Maritime Union has asked Pres. John F. Kennedy to investigate worker complaints of repression by the Nicaraguan government and to exclude Nicaragua from Kennedy's "Alliance for Progress" as long as the rights of trade unions, and other democratic rights of the Nicaraguan people, are "violated by their government."

Curran was authorized to act on behalf of the NMU and eight unions of maritime workers in the Caribbean area who held a two-day meeting here to discuss common problems. Other participants were from Jamaica, Trinidad, the Netherlands Antilles, Panama, Honduras and Nicaragua.

The meeting protested to Kennedy after hearing a report by a Nicaraguan delegate. Also it called on the Intl. Transportworkers Federation and the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions to "protect the rightful interests of Nicaraguan workers" and to "end the oppressive policies of the Nicaraguan government" and employers.

The meeting was told about "anti-union and anti-democratic actions" of the government in collusion with employers and said the situation in Nicaragua compares with "the worst of the Trujillo regime in the Dominican Republic."

"It is the feeling of this conference," Curran wired Kennedy, "that the policies enforced by the Nicaraguan government against unions and people there do more to advance the program of international communism in the area than any actions by communist agents" and that such policies are in conflict with the aims and principles of the Alliance for Progress.

100 Pharmacies Ban Chicago Newspapers

Chicago—Some 100 Chicago area drug stores refused to carry the Sunday, Oct. 15, issue of the Chicago American.

The reason: an article by the paper's science writer reporting a sharp growth in cut-rate drug discount firms in the area and a reference to markups "ranging from 1,350 percent for items sold in small quantities to 100 percent for those sold in original containers or in 100 lots."

Some of the stores also declined to sell copies of the Chicago Sun-Times carrying an Associated Press report from Washington on Senate drug hearings.

The American reprinted the story in its Monday editions along with a front page statement defending the story as "true and in the public interest."

Alert Sounded Against Abuses in Shelter Sales

Americans planning to build fallout shelters have been warned against unscrupulous builders by Frank Ellis, director of the Office of Emergency Planning, formerly the Office of Civil & Defense Mobilization.

In an interview on As We See It, AFL-CIO public service program heard on the ABC radio network, Ellis advised persons planning to build shelters to write to the Dept. of Defense, Washington 25, D. C., or to obtain minimum shelter specifications from local, county or state civil defense offices.

FRANK ELLIS

"Do not be misled by people who would take advantage of any massive construction program," he cautioned.

Ellis said information is also available on food, medicine and other items that should be stocked in the shelters. The Dept. of Defense will mail soon to every family in America, he said, a form of calendar which will give minimum information on protection against fall-out.

Interest in civil defense has increased greatly, the director of the emergency planning office, asserted.

"Until about eight months ago the public viewed civil defense with a considerable amount of levity," he declared. "Today, under the leadership of Pres. Kennedy and the Office of Civil & Defense Mobilization, the attitude has changed. Mail received by this office in January was about 3,000 letters. After the President's speech last July, we began to get 5,000 to 6,000 letters a day."

Ellis said that medical supplies have been diffused over the nation for use in an emergency, and that 2,000 hospitals have been "pre-positioned," as he termed it.

"There will be approximately 1,000 additional pre-positioned hospitals available in the event of emergency," Ellis said.

He said his office is working with the Dept. of Agriculture to diffuse wheat surpluses and other supplies throughout the nation for an emergency.

"Congress did not see fit to vote the necessary money to perform this operation, but we hope to go back with valid arguments when it reassembles in January," Ellis declared.

Wide Discussion Urged On Health Care Issue

Louisville, Ky.—Delegates to the Kentucky State AFL-CIO convention here were urged to promote "all the public debate we can get" on the issue of health care for the aged through the social security system.

Nelson H. Cruikshank, director of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Social Security, told them that if the American people are informed, "if they know the difference between an insurance approach and a means test approach, there is no question which one they will choose." He added:

"Let's have full discussion of it in all local meeting halls, union halls, church study groups, Parent-Teacher Associations, League of Women Voters groups, everywhere all over the country, and I say let it be in an election year.

"Let the American people decide whether older people are to be cared for with dignity and self-respect or to be continually submitted to the indignity of the pauper's oath."

Cruikshank reminded the delegates that Kentucky was one of the first states to enact health care legislation for the needy under the Kerr-Mills Act which was backed by the American Medical Association as a substitute for the social security approach. During the first year of its operation, he said, payments were made to only 40 persons in the entire state—out of 292,000 persons in Kentucky aged 65 or more.

Challenging the AMA contention that help should go only to the "needy," Cruikshank said:

"This approach leaves out the important fact that a very large proportion of the 'needy' who can't afford to pay for medical care were forced into that unhappy position by the medical bills they have already paid."

Delegates also heard Gov. Bert T. Combs (D) voice his continued opposition to enactment of "right-to-work" legislation and predict that no "work" bill will even come out of committee in the legislature.

Other speakers included Lt. Gov. Wilson Wyatt; R. J. Thomas, assistant to AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, and Sec.-Treas. J. W. Holder of the North Carolina State AFL-CIO.

TV Strikers Firm After First Year

Sacramento, Calif.—The Broadcast Employes marked the first-year anniversary of their strike against Station KXTV here with a declaration that "we've hung tough for a year, and we mean to carry on."

The NABET members walked out when new management of the station, following its sale to a group that included John Hay Whitney, former U.S. ambassador to Great Britain, repudiated an oral agreement on a new contract and demanded that the union take several steps backward.

"With but a single exception, we have had no defections," the strikers said in a statement which also thanked other unions for their help. "Nor have we had any cases of loss of courage, disillusionment or disgust with the cause for which we're fighting."

Javits Addresses Stewards' Session

New York—How organized labor can contribute to the foreign aid program and U.S. domestic economic policy was spelled out by Sen. Jacob K. Javits (R-N. Y.) at the 2d annual shop stewards' conference of Meat Cutters & Retail Food Employes Local 342.

He also called on trade unions to "provide equal opportunity for all union members and avoid segregation, discrimination, or denial of opportunity because of race, creed, color, national origin, sex or age."

Equity for the Voters

ONE OF THE MOST significant and under-reported stories of 1961 is the continuing battle in a dozen or more states to give every voter a full and equal voice in the selection of the United States Congress and the state legislatures.

The struggle for fair representation has been going on for half a century, but the sharp trend to urbanization in recent years has accentuated the stacked situation in the House of Representatives and the legislatures whereby representatives from sparsely-populated rural areas dominate and control the legislative machinery.

The 1960 census threw this rotten-borough system into sharp relief as some states lost population and others gained over the 10-year period, changing the basis of their representation in Congress. The census also portrayed the shift to urban areas, necessitating a change in representation within the states.

The process of realigning congressional and state legislative districts in the past year has been a major disgrace. Instead of drawing new district lines on the basis of fair representation for all geographical areas in a state, many legislatures have deadlocked in a greedy struggle to retain unfair control.

WHEN ONE VOTER'S BALLOT counts for less than another in a system of representative government a serious malignancy is present that must be removed before it destroys the system itself.

On the congressional level this calls for legislation requiring the states to apportion their House of Representatives districts fairly on the basis of the state's population. On the state legislature level some method—perhaps judicial—must be enacted to assure fair districting.

To allow the present rotten-borough system to continue unremedied and unchecked will sap the strength of our democratic system and allow a small minority to impose its will until there is a major upheaval. This need not happen if urban voters will realize that they are being "done in" and will take effective action to secure corrective legislation.

The Board Takes A New Look

THE AFL-CIO'S STRONG and unequivocal support of civil rights, its fight for fair employment practices legislation and its unyielding position in support of the Supreme Court's decision on desegregation of public schools has called forth a poisonous, race-baiting attack by southern employers.

Union after union has been the victim of a racist attack by employers intent on using any weapon at hand in preventing unionization of low-paid ill-treated workers. A common tactic has been to inject the racial issue on the eve of a critical National Labor Relations Board election.

Over the years the NLRB has ruled that injection of the racial issue by employers into representation elections is not of itself grounds for setting aside such elections lost by the union. These decisions have come down in a consistent series despite the readily demonstrable facts that the use of racial poison has been instrumental in turning workers against the union.

NOW THE NLRB HAS agreed to take a second look to determine whether an employer's use of labor's civil rights position to foment racial discord is a legal weapon against unionization.

We hope that the NLRB will revise its position so that it no longer will be "in splendid isolation among the various agencies, departments and branches of the federal government" in refusing to limit racist expressions and appeals to race prejudice.

We hope, also, that come what may of the NLRB review, southern employers will channel into constructive community efforts their energies expended on fanning race hatred.

The Frost Is Still on the Pumpkin

Illinois Industrialist Observes:

Firms Dodging Union Wages Often Run by Incompetents

The following is excerpted from an address to the recent Illinois AFL-CIO Convention by Arnold H. Maremont, president of Maremont Corp. of Chicago and chairman of the board or the executive committee of four other companies:

BUSINESS—AS I SEE IT—is 50-50 good management and good labor relations. Each one works to the advantage of the other. I think I could do a pretty fair job as an officer of a labor union, and I know scores of union officers that would be good members of any board of directors.

As a matter of fact, we are all of us together on the board of directors of a great big concern that we want to see succeed, more than any other company or concern—and it is the State of Illinois in all of its parts.

The other day I noticed an item in the daily press which reported that a manufacturing company in Dixon, Ill., had notified its employes that, unless they agreed to a substantial reduction in wages, the company would cease operating. I have no details of their operations, but I was delighted to read subsequently that the union representing the employes had refused to make this concession. It may surprise you that, as an industrialist whose several businesses involve the employment of around 8,000, I should take such a position.

The point of the Dixon story is that I believe profoundly that any industry in Illinois that cannot pay a fair wage for the work being performed is no asset to the state. Whatever slight contribution it makes through employment is only temporary.

Any industry that needs substandard wages to exist competitively will not endure. It is marginal and undoubtedly it is attempting to substitute low wages for inadequate mechanization, or lack of marketing ability or planning ability in its managers, or some other economic disadvantage which sooner or later will sink it.

The union was right in Dixon because what the company wanted was a stop gap, and as such, how long could it have maintained employment at any level? The company that has to be carried along on substandard wages is bound to lose out. One of the beneficial effects of good wages is that they compel good management operations.

Nine times out of 10, the company that is trying to run away from good wages, that is, fishing around for a place where it can pay the very least in wages and taxes, and can work its employes the longest, is actually trying to get away from incompetent management—and it will never be able to do it.

A company that has live-wire managers—men that know how to operate efficiently, who watch the changing demands of the consumer market, who know how to give the public what it wants and the way it wants the goods packaged and marketed—has no trouble paying good wages, making a good profit, and staying in business.

WE HAVE TO GIVE the strongest possible support to a national policy of economic expansion. I urge that labor makes such support a first item of business. We cannot stagger along on a 2.5 percent annual growth when, just to absorb the 1,250,000 annual increase in the labor force, we must increase our gross national product by $15 billion per year.

If this takes investment in the public sector, then I say for Heaven's sake let us not be afraid to invest in needful public improvements. I am not afraid of more schools, more hospitals, more science laboratories, better housing, medical care for the aged, or building better cities.

We have been building up, even in periods of high industrial activity, two armies of hard-core unemployed, and unless we find more useful policies both armies will continue to increase. One is the army of workers who have been displaced by automation, changing markets for job skills, or the decline of an entire industry as in the case of coal mining. The other is the army of youths under 25, who have dropped out of school before finishing their education, and who do not possess skills or educational equipment for which there is a market.

Expansion of our economic growth may be of some help to them. But it won't be enough. And we don't have to be prophets or the sons of prophets to foretell that a continuance of this trend will produce economic and social strains dangerous in the extreme.

I am not a theorist. I live in the world of business and industry, not in an ivory tower making big plans for an impossible utopia. It is my firm conviction that what will be good for America, for labor, for our country's position as a world power, will be just fine for the Maremont Corporation, too.

Morgan Says:

Military, Economic Strengths Of West Help Keep Reds at Bay

By Edward P. Morgan

(This column is excerpted from the nightly broadcasts of Edward P. Morgan, ABC commentator sponsored by the AFL-CIO. Listen to Morgan over the ABC network Monday through Friday at 7 p. m EST.)

WHILE KHRUSHCHEV STOOD in a great Kremlin hall and painted as rosy a picture as he dared of the future for communism, there were stirrings in the West to indicate that the picture for us need not be so black as some fear. While the Soviet premier punctuated his marathon remarks with the ghastly promise to hoist before the world a hideously-sized jack 'o' lantern on or about Halloween in the form of an explosion of a nuclear bomb equal to 50 million tons of TNT, there was reason to believe that even as he spoke he was impressed with and therefore concerned by the strength of the Western alliance.

Morgan

After Paul Henri Spaak, the foreign minister of Belgium, returned from his recent trip to the Soviet Union he told friends that Khrushchev had made a large point of enumerating the western European capitals he could so easily destroy in a trice with middle range rockets. (Out of a kind of sardonic deference to his guest, he did not mention Brussels by name.) Then he added he could wreck vast destruction on the United States but could not knock us out or prevent us from damaging the USSR very badly too. So, Khrushchev concluded to Spaak, "why have a war?"

Now this exchange itself would be too flimsy to hang all our hopes on, let alone a policy. But there are indications that Khrushchev is impressed with more than our military strength —NATO's and ours alone. The great, powerful Communist empire is held together more by force than ideology. And as the delegates to the 22nd party congress deal with its stresses and strains privately in Moscow, they must be acutely aware of the increasing economic strength of western Europe as represented, for example, by the almost fantastic growth of the Common Market.

This six-nation trading area embracing Italy, France, West Germany, Belgium, Holland and Luxembourg is the creature of that remarkable Frenchman, Jean Monnet. So far ahead of its timetable is it in lowering tariffs, increasing trade and mobilizing the European labor force that Britain is already negotiating to join and officials are looking ahead to participating agreements with the United States.

It foreshadows, really substantially this time, the age-old dream of a United States of Europe, a free, voluntary viable alliance in contrast to the power of force holding the Communist domain together.

Monnet and his emissaries are constantly reminding us—and we need reminding—of the near miracle, abetted by the Marshall Plan, of European recovery since 1945. One of them recalled that little more than 15 years ago Dutchmen were eating tulip bulbs to stay alive, Germans were crawling through ruins, and less than 15 years ago the Communists were strong enough to threaten the governments of both Italy and France. Today, western Europe is enjoying its highest productivity and living standards in history. "Today the limit is the sky," Monnet's man said.

BETWEEN THE TWO WARS, he observed, nothing hopeful happened in Europe with the transitory exception of the Locarno pact guiding a supposedly non-aggressive Germany into the League of Nations. Today West Germany and France are bound through NATO and the Economic Community as working allies and Britain is ending her historic isolation from the continent, and becoming a European rather than a commonwealth power. The day cannot be far off, according to informed officials, when the European community and the United States make common policy to dispose of their agricultural surpluses in an orderly way to other continents needing them.

Such cohesive cooperation won't come overnight but it will come, Monnet and his men are convinced, because allied governments now realize it has to. Still not quite sure of the strength and consistency of the Kennedy Administration, the Monnet people are heartened by the fact that Sec. of Treasury Dillon, Sec. of State Rusk, Under Sec. George Ball, Agriculture Sec. Freeman and others are all looking at these problems with what might be called the wide-horizon approach.

Ironically, Pres. Kennedy himself has had little to say publicly on these matters since his inaugural address when he saluted our old allies by saying "united, there is little we cannot do in a host of new cooperative ventures. Divided, there is little we can do—for we dare not meet a powerful challenge at odds and split asunder."

One of Khrushchev's basic objectives is to split the western allies asunder, especially by squeezing West Germany out of the alliance. One of our counters to this threat is the strengthening of our military forces as an earnest of our determination. But another counter, which some western European leaders may see more clearly than we do, is the growing economic health and strength of the Atlantic community. We ought to dwell on this carefully but with hopeful enthusiasm. Khrushchev is dwelling on it, more, probably, than he is on the fate of Berlin.

Texas Labor Asks State to Prod Insurance Firms on Storm Damage

Austin, Tex.—The Texas AFL-CIO has called upon Gov. Price Daniel (D) and the State Board of Insurance to intervene in the effort of many insurance companies to avoid paying off for damages caused when Hurricane Carla flayed the Texas Gulf Coast.

Daniel and the commission "should bring every possible pressure to hold these insurance companies to strict compliance with their legal and moral responsibilities," Pres. Hank Brown and Sec.-Treas. Roy Evans said in a statement.

In addition, the state AFL-CIO office is preparing case histories of insurers' efforts to avoid paying Carla-caused damages and will send copies to the governor and the commission with a plea for an investigation.

"Policyholders are being told by insurance company adjusters that they must settle their claims for 50 cents on the dollar, or else," Brown and Evans charged.

"In some areas, policyholders are being told that they cannot collect anything at all on policies on which they have paid in good faith for many years."

The situation has grown "so ugly" in some areas, they said, that adjusters are making their rounds under the protection of bodyguards.

Some 250,000 Texans fled coastal areas under the lash of the hurricane and found their property badly damaged when they were able to return. Insurance company representatives have often told them, they have reported to the State AFL-CIO, that the "something" that caused the damage in their absence was water, and have pointed to high-water marks as evidence.

The insurance, the adjusters claim, does not protect against water damage, and the offer of settlement covers only damage above the high-water mark, according to the victims. The owners claim the damaging water was "pushed" by Carla.

Other hurricane sufferers have told the state office they have been given a "fast deal" of checks for $500 "to tide you over" while the adjuster obtains authorization from his company to pay more. Too late, usually, the insured person finds the small print says the $500 is in "full settlement" of the claim.

Total estimated hurricane damage was $500 million, about two-thirds to private property. State AFL-CIO spokesmen say it is estimated insurance companies have paid $18 million in claims and may pay only another $18 million, or about $300 per claim.

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

THE KENNEDY ADMINISTRATION is suffering from a species of disgruntlement in what is called the business community and official spokesmen are doing their best to reassure the businessmen that the President has no intention of disemboweling the free enterprise system. It may never be possible for the Administration to give sufficient assurances, any more than it was for Franklin D. Roosevelt and Harry S. Truman.

The Administration's consciousness of suspicion in the business community is revealed in many incidents.

Although the Business Advisory Council was unhorsed by Commerce Sec. Luther H. Hodges, it was felt necessary a few months later to placate the corporation leaders and bankers making up this blue-ribbon, self-perpetuating group by taking them to the White House to hear friendly words from the President himself.

Atty. Gen. Robert F. Kennedy in an interview expressed amazement that government policies to enforce the anti-trust laws and ease the impact of joblessness should be interpreted as "anti-business."

Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg, addressing the Illinois State Chamber of Commerce, flatly denied that the Administration is "anti-business" any more than it is "anti-labor,"

Goldberg, although citing Administration steps in the minimum wage, surplus food, unemployment compensation and housing fields, also gave details of proposals or actions presumably welcome to business. These included steps to protect the integrity of the dollar, appeals to labor and management to exercise restraint in both price and wage fields, proposed tax incentives for investment in new machinery, actual new tax incentives through a revision of depreciation allowances in the textile industry.

EVERY AMERICAN ADMINISTRATION necessarily seeks an appeal to the broadest possible cross-section of the people. Such an appeal, indeed, is necessary to govern effectively, because the nation is diverse and continental, with many groups and pressures. Our Presidents are elected as a result of pulling together a coalition that forms a majority, for no class or interest is sufficient to elect alone.

Nevertheless, it is not possible to foresee any great response in the professional businessmen trade associations, in which so many are gathered, to the common sense facts of life an activist Administration must consider.

What many businessmen want, or are told that they are supposed to want, is a balanced budget, and we are not likely to have such a budget soon. They want the anti-trust laws to be forgotten and left unenforced. They want the dropping of "spending" programs. They want revision of the tax system so as to cut down its graduations, under which the family with a high income pays a higher rate than the low-income family.

THESE ARE SYMPTOMS of the thinking of American businessmen making the Republican Party, which most of them support, so much more rightist in its doctrine than the Conservative Party in Great Britain.

The list of British political and social reforms launched by the Tories—over many decades—reveals a grasp of the needs of modern industrialized democracies far more comprehensive than that of most American conservatives. Health insurance is such a success that no British government would consider for a moment its abolition, but American conservatives scarcely permit themselves to recognize its success.

Winston Churchill's father, Randolph, called himself, proudly, a "Tory Democrat," and fought to liberalize his party. The bright young man now appearing as a possible successor to Prime Minister MacMillan, Iain Macleod, labels himself a "radical Tory" and has been made party leader in the House of Commons.

The Conservative Party in Britain, indeed, regularly campaigns on a program that if anything is slightly more liberal than Democratic Fair Deal and New Frontier programs—but most American businessmen find repugnant moderate proposals for improved jobless compensation, health, social security and other service systems.

"Now if everybody will be seated, we'll get on with the reading of the will."

Retail Giants Join Battle of Discount Department Stores

By Sidney Margolius

A REVOLUTION IN THE WAY you shop is taking place as some of the nation's biggest retailers join the trend to discount department stores and as present discount stores open up new branches.

Discount department stores are being opened by such retail giants as Woolworth's, Kresge, the May and City Stores chains and Montgomery Ward.

Some of the other big department stores around the country, while not opening separate discount branches, are changing some departments to discount operation. Even consumer co-ops are opening up discount stores. Greenbelt Co-op has opened its first in Alexandria, Va.

At the same time the already established discount department stores are feverishly opening up more branches.

In general, this keen competition is tending to reduce the prices you pay and make discounts available on more types of merchandise, such as furniture and drugs. But this also means you may have to do more comparison shopping, watch out for exaggerated list prices and realize that because a store sells one item very reasonably, not all its values may be equally good.

Discount department stores are taking two forms: "closed-door" stores, which cater to a particular group, and "open-door" stores, which sell to anybody.

For example, the GEX and GEM stores located in a number of cities in the West and South, sell only to government employes.

Another group of closed-door stores, spreading throughout the West especially, caters only to union members.

One leading appliance merchandiser, Samuel S. Wurtzel, says the reason for the growth of membership discount stores is that they have certain operating economies. Their selection of merchandise is narrower because they don't try to cater to all income brackets.

However, one dissenter—Earl Lifshey, Home Furnishings Daily columnist—argues that the chief appeal of the membership stores is "status seeking." He asks, "Who isn't a discount store these days?"

Our advice is to shop both types and also to keep an eye out for bargains in department store sales and among local independent stores. It is a fact that discount department stores generally operate on a lower profit margin, generally 16-20 percent of the price you pay, by virtue of faster turnover of goods and reduced expenses. This compares with the approximately 35-40 percent margin that traditional retailers get.

BUT WHEN IT COMES TO SALES, traditional retailers cut their prices close to the level of the discounters. For example, one discounter reports that he sells rugs generally 15-20 percent below the department store level. However, department store special sales often match his prices.

The most dependable bargains in discount department stores are brand-named appliances, toys and other recognizable branded goods. The discounters really cut prices on this type of merchandise, often selling at 25-30 percent below list. Of course, practically all stores now give some discount off list prices,

But on non-branded goods, you really have to do comparison shopping. Here is where cut-rate stores generally get a larger margin to make up for their drastic price cuts on branded appliances and other recognizable merchandise. This is not to say that the modern discount department stores may not have reasonable values in such goods, too. They often do. But you can't take the values for granted.

Soup to Nonsense:

Housekeeping's a Cinch, But Don't Drop in, We'll Call You

By Jane Goodsell

HOUSEKEEPING IS A CINCH these days. Thanks to all the modern conveniences, any woman can manage her home with smooth and effortless efficiency. I, myself, keep my house in perfect order at all times. Any day you drop in, you'll find the brass polished, the table tops gleaming, the kitchen spick and span, and the house filled with fresh flowers.

Except, of course, in summer. Naturally, you can't expect the house to look its best in the summer because the children are home from school. You know how it is. They drop popsicle sticks and bubble-gum wrappers all over the place, and they leave wet footprints on their way to the bathroom. And, of course, they throw their wet bathing suits and towels on the sofa. The kitchen isn't exactly immaculate either, because they're constantly fixing themselves snacks.

Nothing is normal in the summer. Any other time of year, though, I'd be happy to have you inspect my house. You can run your fingers across my window sills and you won't find a speck of dust. Any time at all—except in the fall.

Fall is such a busy time of year that there isn't much time for housework. All those nine o'clock meetings, for one thing. When I have to be out and dressed by nine, I don't have time to do much except empty the ash trays. I have to take the children shopping for school clothes, too, so the ironing piles up.

Then, too, there are the dead leaves that people track into the house, and the children leave their books on the stairs, and drape their sweaters over chairs. Things are in a bit of a mess in the fall, I'll admit it. But fall is an unusual season.

The rest of the year, though, our household runs on schedule. I defrost the refrigerator and change the beds every Monday morning, regular as clockwork.

Oh, not in the winter, naturally. Goodness, you can't expect me to stick to a schedule in the winter. I have to get ready for Christmas, and you know how much work that is. And the mess! The tinsel and paper and ribbons and cards, the tree dripping needles on the floor, and the holly berries crushed into the rugs. And there are cookies to bake and packages to wrap and gifts to shop for.

IT'S IMPOSSIBLE to keep a house clean at Christmas time. Or after Christmas, either, for that matter. The weather's so terrible, it's hardly worthwhile trying to keep the house clean. You'd better not drop in on us unexpectedly in the winter. But do feel free to come any other time. Any time at all.

Naturally, I'm assuming you wouldn't come in the spring. Surely you'd know better than that. Our household is at sixes and sevens in the spring. I have to plant all those petunias, and that keeps me so busy that I don't have much time to polish silver. To tell you the truth, I don't always make the beds until late in the day. Besides, three of us have birthdays in the spring, and you know how messy birthday parties are.

Then, too, it rains a lot in the spring so the house is filled with little children, coloring and cutting out paper dolls. I'll be frank and admit that you wouldn't want to eat off my kitchen floor in the spring. Not unless you like to eat crumbled crayons and scraps of paper.

Barring the aforementioned exceptions, our house always looks perfectly lovely.

New Anthology:

Labor's Story Wins Praise in Reviews

LABOR'S STORY, the new anthology portraying the union movement of today through a cross-section of the labor press, has drawn wide praise from reviewers, librarians, government officials and educators.

Edited by Gordon H. Cole of the Machinist, Leon Stein of the Ladies' Garment Workers' Justice, and Norman L. Sobol of Local 1-S News, Retail, Wholesale & Department Store Workers, the book provides a picture of the trade unions in action, of their contribution to the family and public issues," drawn from "the vast storehouse" of the labor press, comments a review in the Library Journal, twice-monthly publication for librarians.

"At total of 89 union periodicals is represented in the anthology, which reprints more than 300 selections," notes the reviewer, William Gibelman, assistant director of the New York State Dept. of Labor.

"For the general public who has not been exposed to these publications, the material presents an orientation and a viewpoint that does much to explain current controversies. It is particularly revealing of the goals and motivation of the trade union movement in many areas of American life.

"A first in this particular field, the book will appeal to community leaders, to teachers, and to thoughtful citizens interested in public issues."

Dorothy Kuhn Oko, veteran labor librarian and workers' education specialist, describes Labor's Story as "a bird's-eye view of the modern labor movement" and notes its suitability as a textbook for high school and beginning college students and as a teaching tool in classes for workers.

"Reading through these selections will open new vistas to anyone who sincerely wants to get behind the public steorotypes of labor monopoly, racketeering and violence," observes Mrs. Oko.

WRITING IN THE MACHINIST, Sen. Hubert Humphrey (D-Minn.) commends Labor's Story for its "wealth of valuable source material for both the general public and the union man."

"With this book," Humphrey continues, "the public can learn what it is to be a union man. They can feel the pride of the man on strike—losing money for an ideal. They can sense the responsibilities of the shop steward; rise indignantly at bias in the press; sit with the negotiators as they prepare a contract and report back to the union; feel the effects of a move by a large firm to an area where employes aren't organized, and labor is cheaper. In short, the reader will stand with a union man, and see things from his point of view."

Sen. Jacob K. Javits (R-N. Y.) calls the book "a valuable contribution to the history of the labor movement. As an anthology of the labor press, it certainly dramatizes the important role which the labor press plays in our society in keeping the working man fully informed of the issues affecting his welfare. As a self-portrait of the labor movement, it will be welcomed by all serious-minded students of labor affairs."

Prof. Colston E. Warne of the Economics Dept. of Amherst College and president of Consumers Union cites the book's effectiveness in pointing up the "real contribution which is made by the often-neglected labor press in counteracting many of the stories of business journalists."

Prof. George G. Dawson of New York University's Social Studies Dept. describes Labor's Story as "a beautiful job—a superb collection of writings," and adds: "I am also glad that it is in the paperbound edition, and I will list it for the college and economic education councils, etc. . . ."

The book may be obtained in the paperbound edition at $2.50 and in hard covers at $5.50, both postpaid, from Community Publishers, Glen Cove, N. Y., with quantity rates available to unions.

Propaganda Drive Seen:

Anti-Trust 'Slogan' Hit as Anti-Union

An AFL-CIO spokesman has described proposals to bring unions under anti-trust laws as "a propaganda drive" by anti-labor groups.

Tilford E. Dudley, director of the AFL-CIO Speakers Bureau, said there is no real support or demand for such legislation but "it sounds like a good slogan" to use against the trade union movement.

Dudley was interviewed on the Mutual Broadcasting network's Labor News Conference, an AFL-CIO public affairs program. The issue of making anti-trust laws applicable to unions is the college debate topic for this year.

Dudley pointed out that many of the isolated incidents cited as demonstrating the need for extension of anti-trust laws are 10 or 15 years old and have since been dealt with through amendments to labor laws.

Management Alliances Cited

He said other claims, such as the contention that a law is needed to prevent industrywide strikes, overlook the fact that it usually has been management which has formed a common front to prevent unions from striking only a single company.

Dudley said the steel companies, not the union, got together in 1959 to negotiate as a group.

He pointed out also that newspaper publishers in New York have taken the position that a strike against one is a strike against all and have suspended publication and locked out union members even when their own newspapers were not struck.

Dudley said it didn't make sense to equate competition in sales with competition in employment by stating that both should be governed by anti-trust laws.

"When you have workers competing with each other," he said, "they would be competing to see how low they could make the price of their labor—their wages."

Competition for Misery

This, he declared, would be "a competition to see who can produce the most human misery."

Dudley pointed out that unions are already covered by anti-trust laws if they engage in a conspiracy to fix prices—as contrasted with setting wage scales. He said if this is the area advocates of anti-trust laws for unions are concerned with, "we already have these laws."

He said there has been considerable demand by college students for the AFL-CIO's college debate kit, containing material giving labor's position. But, he added, "a number of debating professors have said the trouble with the topic is that there isn't any affirmative."

Fire Fighters Urged to Use Rights Under Law

New Brunswick, N. J.—Delegates from 28 locals of the Fire Fighters in New Jersey were advised at their first collective bargaining institute here to take advantage of a state law giving them the right to organize and to petition for the correction of grievances.

Speakers at the two-day seminar told what firemen's unions should do in achieving recognition, negotiating contracts and getting exclusive representation and recognition of the right to arbitration as a substitute for the right to strike.

Dr. Eric Taylor, Toronto economist and consultant, advised the delegates that all bargaining aims must be based on legal defensibility, moral soundness and reasonableness. He said each local should establish a planning committee to draw up goals, that the goals should be presented to members for their approval and that negotiators should keep these points in mind:

Never lose your temper or your sense of humor, tell the truth without quibbling, know thoroughly the impact of your demands, treat counterproposals respectfully, and separate facts from opinions.

Raymond Diana, deputy New York City labor commissioner, said the right of public employes to organize was written into the New Jersey constitution 14 years ago. Others on the program, arranged by the Institute of Management & Labor at Rutgers State University, were Chairman Herbert A. Levine of Rutgers, Sec-Treas. John C. Kabachus of the Fire Fighters, Pres. James Asher of the Fire Fighters Association of New Jersey, and Joseph F. Talarico, Rutgers assistant economics professor.

Senior Citizens Body Enrolls 300,000

The National Council of Senior Citizens, formed two months ago to work for the cause of health care through social security, has passed the 300,000 membership mark.

Former Rep. Aime J. Forand (D-R. I.), council chairman, has announced the appointment as executive secretary of Dr. Blue Carstenson, former assistant to the Under Secretary of Health, Education & Welfare and former chairman of the technical directors of the White House Conference on Aging.

The council has members in 36 states. All AFL-CIO affiliates have been asked by the federation's Executive Council to cooperate with the new senior citizens' organization, whose officers are at 200 C Street, S. E., Washington 3, D. C.

Jay Krane Dies, IUD Staff Aide

Jay B. Krane, international affairs representative of the AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept., died while undergoing a heart operation in Georgetown University Hospital, Washington. He was 38.

A veteran of the international labor movement and allied fields, he was in the organization department of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions in Brussels from its establishment until joining the IUD a few weeks ago. A graduate of Columbia in his native New York, he previously had worked for the United Nations Relief & Rehabilitation Agency and in the European office of the former CIO in Paris.

He is survived by his widow, Mrs. Margaret Patricia Krane, three small children and his parents. Burial was in Washington.

Hillman Foundation Joins Memorial to Kestnbaum

Cambridge, Mass.—Labor and management have joined in a three-way gift to Harvard University to honor the memory of the late Meyer Kestnbaum, president of Hart, Schaffner & Marx, by establishing a $100,000 endowment fund in the field of industrial relations.

The gift came from the Sidney Hillman Foundation, a memorial to the first president of the Clothing Workers; the Meyer Kestnbaum Fund, established on the industralist's 60th birthday; and Hart, Schaffner & Marx, with which he was associated for 39 years.

Hillman, when he began organizing the union, was a cutter at Hart, Schaffner & Marx. The union and the company recently marked 50 years of contractual relations without a strike.

The new fund will support the bringing to Harvard of mature labor, management or government representatives to write of their experiences and to participate in seminars; the setting up of conferences among policy-making labor leaders, or among labor, management and government representatives dealing with labor-management matters; and the establishing of a series of lectures by labor, management and government spokesmen to be known as the Meyer Kestnbaum Lectures and to be published under that name.

Grant to Health Center Aids Disability Study

New York—A three-year study of disability and rehabilitation services will be undertaken by the Sidney Hillman Health Center here with the aid of a grant from the Office of Vocational Rehabilitation in the Dept. of Health, Education & Welfare.

The study will seek to determine the prevalence of disabling conditions among patients at the center and to develop patterns for rehabilitation services. The federal government agency has made a $60,000 grant for the first year. The center will contribute about $250,000 in services.

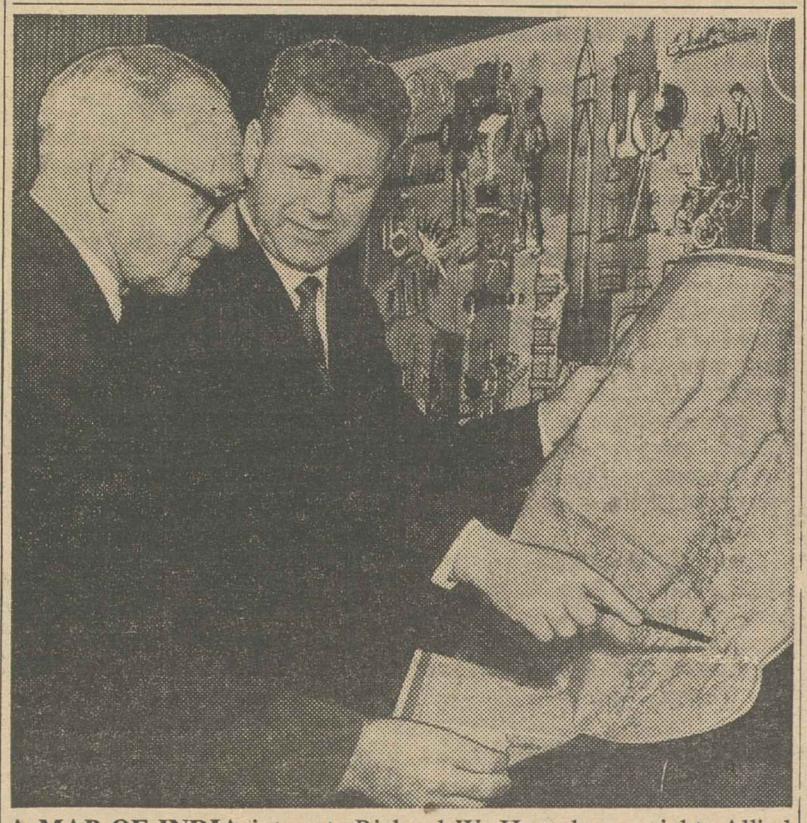
The center serves about 40,000 members of the Clothing Workers and their families. It was set up in 1951 by the union's New York Joint Board and the New York Clothing Manufacturer's Exchange, and is named in honor of the late first president of the union.

Louis Hollander, a vice president of the international union, co-manager of the joint board and president of the health center, predicted that information and experience gained from the study "will be of great value in developing future policies at the center and will serve as a guide to other labor and consumer sponsored group practice programs."

The full range of medical, physical, occupational therapy and diagnostic services offered by the center will be made available to complete the study, he said. Labor's concern with the needs of the disabled, he pointed out, "takes on special significance because labor represents the largest single body of consumers who are in a position to do something about it."

Hyman J. Weiner, formerly a member of the faculties of the Albert Einstein College of Medicine and the New York School of Social Work of Columbia University, will be project director. The medical coordinator will be Dr. Bruce Grynbaum, director of physical medicine and rehabilitation of the City Dept. of Hospitals and consultant to the center's department of physical medicine and rehabilitation.

Dr. Morris Brand, director of the center, was instrumental in obtaining the federal grant in cooperation with the National Institute on Rehabilitation and Labor Health Services.



A MAP OF INDIA interests Richard W. Humphreys, right, Allied Industrial Workers' education director, and AIW Pres. Carl W. Griepentrog. Humphreys has been given a six-week leave to conduct seminars for senior industry and labor officials in Bombay, Calcutta, Madras and New Delhi, India, on productivity. An instructor on wage incentives and time study at the AFL-CIO's annual industrial engineering institute, Humphreys is on the first technical assistance team sent abroad under the new U.S. foreign aid program for India.

Seafarers Add Affiliate In Trinidad

Port-of-Spain, Trinidad — The Seafarers have approved the affiliation with SIU of the 6,000-member Seamen's & Waterfront Workers Trade Union of Trinidad.

After several months of discussion between the two groups, SIU issued a charter and presented it through Jose M. Perez, SIU international representative for the Caribbean and Latin-American areas, at a membership meeting here.

SIU Pres. Paul Hall said the action indicates that the common problems Caribbean workers share with U. S. maritime and waterfront workers can best be approached by the joint efforts of their unions.

Hall cited the problem of "runaway" ships and shops, noting that many of the Trinidad union's seamen are employed aboard Panamanian-flag ships and many of its shoreside workers help on U. S.-controlled operations such as the handling of bauxite.

Trade union education courses for officers and members of the Trinidad union will be given at SIU's Puerto Rico division at Santurce, P. R. The division has more than 5,000 members, which with the 1,700-member Virgin Islands affiliate brings SIU membership in the Caribbean area near the 13,000 mark and total SIU membership to more than 80,000.

At the last SIU convention, held last March in Puerto Rico, the delegates voted to participate in a Caribbean maritime federation.

Daniel W. Helt Dies; Headed Rail Signalmen

Pres. Emeritus Daniel W. Helt of the Railroad Signalmen, a member of the brotherhood for 51 years, died at his home in Arlington Heights, Ill., after a long illness. He was 78.

He was president of the Signalmen from 1917 to 1934, being on leave for much of the time to serve on the National Railroad Adjustment Board in Chicago. After his tenure as president, he was elected vice president and continued on leave with the adjustment board, retiring from both offices in 1948. He joined the union as a member of Reading Co. Lodge 26 in 1910.

His loss was mourned by AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany and Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler in a telegram to his successor as president of the brotherhood, Jesse Clark.

"A man whose leadership has contributed so much to the well-being of American workers will be greatly missed by the countless thousands he helped," they said. "His dedication to the principles that represent the highest ideals of the labor movement will be remembered by all."

His survivors asked that instead of flowers, contributions be sent to the Eleanor Roosevelt Cancer Foundation through Meany.

CORRECTION

A story in the AFL-CIO News of Oct. 21 incorrectly stated that the board of the Tennessee State Labor Council had named Pres. Steve A. Para as director of political and legislative activities, with Charles M. Houk as his assistant in the political education field and Earl W. Burnett as assistant in legislative activities.

Para was named by the board as legislative representative and director of programs for the state council, with Houk and Council Sec. Matthew Lynch as assistants to the president.

UAW Recreation Goals Keyed to 'New Values'

Detroit—The goal of the Auto Workers Recreation Dept. is a "strategy for living in the age of automation—not just new activities but new values," UAW Vice Pres. Leonard Woodcock told the 43d National Recreational Congress at a meeting here.

"We want to foster the growth of the human person—young, old and in the prime of life—in all his dimensions and possibilities," he said.

"We want our own members and our fellow-Americans generally to be more, ultimately, than consumers of leisure activity created for them by others; we want them to become creators of leisure activity for themselves."

Woodcock said the union's retired worker centers are offering older citizens opportunities "for life in the present" which they are quick to grasp. The growing centers themselves and their expanding programs, he maintained, "offer the most dramatic evidence" that to be retired from work is not to be retired from "active life and creative participation in the life of one's time and the community."

"The administration of these centers," he pointed out, "is very largely the responsibility of committees made up of the retired members themselves."

Through the centers, Woodcock told the delegates, UAW members in increasing numbers "are coming, so to speak, out of retirement and are finding a new and honorable place" in community affairs.

Labor Press Group to Note 50th Year

The 50th anniversary of the organization of the labor press will be celebrated at this year's convention of the Intl. Labor Press Association, to be held Dec. 4-6 at the Carillon Hotel in Miami Beach.

Workshops, panel discussions and speakers have been asked to note the anniversary by addressing themselves to this theme: "Is Anybody Reading?"

Delegates will hear a report on an expanded activity program made possible by a recent hike in ILPA dues; consider resolutions and constitutional amendments, and elect a president, secretary-treasurer and 15 vice presidents.

The convention program includes workshops on photojournalism, public relations, advertising and postal problems, evaluating readership, and journalistic awards.

Irwin Klass heads the convention planning committee. Other members are Al Herrington, Marie Caylor and Jim Clarke. Fred Sweet, Bernard R. Mullady, Richard A. Estep and James W. Gedling are in charge of arrangements. ILPA officers are Pres. Richard C. Howard and Mullady, who is secretary-treasurer.

John Lyons Dies; Headed Ironworkers

St. Louis—Pres. John H. Lyons of the Bridge & Structural Ironworkers, who died here Oct. 26, was one of the most respected union leaders in the nation, AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany and Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler said in a message of sympathy.

'He was a dedicated, conscientious, hard-working union official, and the gains that he won for the members of his union stand as the greatest monument to his memory," they said.

Lyons died in his sleep at Barnes Hospital while convalescing after a lung operation performed two weeks earlier. Survivors include a son, John Lyons, Jr. of the union's Washington, D. C., office, three daughters, a sister and a brother, Wilfred.

A member of the Ironworkers since 1916, Lyons was the only member in the union's 65-year history to have held all three of its top offices.

Born in 1891 in South Norwalk, Conn., he was initiated into Local 9 at Niagara Falls, N. Y., and transferred in 1917 to Local 17 in Cleveland, of which he was a member continuously since then. He became a general organizer in 1928 and was elected treasurer that year, was named secretary in 1939, and had served as president since 1948 by election.

Lyons held several other important labor offices, including the vice presidency of two AFL-CIO departments — the Metal Trades Dept. and the Building & Construction Trades Dept.

Colleges Schedule Morgan Appearances

Edward P. Morgan, ABC news commentator whose broadcasts are sponsored by the AFL-CIO, was scheduled for two college appearances on a two-week, late October visit to the West Coast. One was a speech at the homecoming ceremonies of his alma mater, Whitman College in Walla Walla, Wash.

At New York State Convention:

Four-Point Program to Ease Impact of Automation Urged

Buffalo, N. Y.—Pres. Harold C. Hanover of the New York State AFL-CIO has proposed a four-point action program to ease the effects of automation on workers and the economy.

Labor does not oppose labor saving devices as such, Hanover told nearly 2,000 delegates to the fourth annual convention of the 2-million member state labor federation in Memorial Auditorium here.

But, he continued, "whenever shortsighted management puts production goals ahead of everything else, we of labor insist that human rights of workers be placed ahead of the property and profit rights of industry."

Hanover said the time for talks and studies and conferences about automation is over, and the time for action is at hand. He called for immediate action in these areas:

- A greatly accelerated retraining program to provide workers the chance to learn new skills and adapt old skills to related crafts and processes to prepare workers for technological change.
- A permanent full-time government-labor-management committee at the state level to set up and follow through on industrial programs under the federal Area Redevelopment Act and New York's proposed job development authority.
- An increase in New York's minimum wage, and acceleration of all public works projects so they can get under way when the first indication of an economic downturn appears, instead of waiting until a recession is well advanced.
- A substantial shoring up of the state's unemployment insurance system so it will help withstand the pressure of the adverse effects of a business slowdown.

Hanover listed the administration of workmen's compensation in New York State as another area of grave concern to labor. He charged that the state "knowingly or not is administering an insurance co-compensation law and a broker compensation law" rather than a compensation law for workmen.

He said studies have shown that more than 50 cents out of every dollar paid out in premiums never gets to the injured worker or his family, but instead is eaten up by overhead, commissions, administrative expenses and exhorbitant profits of private insurance carriers. Labor expects an answer, he said, as to why "such a large part of the insurance premium dollar goes into the pocket of somebody besides the injured worker and the doctor who treats him, and an answer to why all kinds of obstacles are put in the task of a worker seeking the help he needs."

Gov. Nelson Rockefeller (R) who followed Hanover to the rostrum used the convention as a forum to announce the appointment of a 10-member committee to study the workmen's compensation law and its administration.

The committee, headed by Victor Borella of New York City, who is Rockefeller's chief labor adviser and also executive vice president of Rockefeller Center, consists of three representatives from labor, three from industry and three from the state government.

Unionists Named

The labor representatives are Hanover, Pres. Peter J. Brennan of New York State Building & Construction Trades Council, and Joseph P. Molony, district director of the Steelworkers.

Rockefeller told the delegates he expects the committee "to canvass the entire field, fully and fairly to evaluate the complaints, to seek areas of agreement and recommend action deemed necessary."

Many delegates credited the pressure exerted during the last two years by leaders of the State AFL-CIO with bringing about the new study of workmen's compensation.

Rockefeller, who described himself to the delegates as an outspoken friend of organized labor for the last 30 years, had that label challenged by Raymond R. Corbett, legislative chairman of the State AFL-CIO.

Corbett in his annual review of legislative activities reported that "the governor's conservative actions speak louder than his liberal words."

Federal Pressure Cited

Among other things, the legislative chairman accused Rockefeller of taking credit for social legislation that was forced on him by federal pressure.

He referred to the state legislature's authorization for New York to accept federal aid to dependent children of unemployed workers, extension of temporary unemployment insurance benefits from 26 to 39 weeks and provision for medical care for the needy aged under the Kerr-Mills Act of 1960.

"These bills came about as the result of action by Congress," he explained. "They were not motivated by any original thought or dedication on the part of the legislature or the state administration."

AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler urged the delegates from some 3,400 local unions in the state to build a new image of the American labor movement by stressing labor's contribution to the community and the high morality of its officials.

Charging that anti-labor forces have spread exposures of wrongdoing by a few unionists to damage labor's image, Schnitzler said:

"We can and we must present to America a new image of the labor movement. And we should start by talking about the great and dedicated day-in-and-day-out contributions of labor to the entire national community."

Schnitzler Calls For Fight on Reactionaries

Buffalo, N. Y.—AFL-CIO Sec. Treas. William F. Schnitzler sounded a call here for an active "off-year" program of political education to break the power of congressional reactionaries in the 1962 elections.

Schnitzler told delegates to the New York State AFL-CIO convention that "when the chips are down, the reactionaries have been and still are able to veto progressive measures in Congress by means of a two-party coalition." He added:

"When all the anti-labor, anti-Negro, anti-Administration and anti-progress elements gang up, they can command a majority of the votes in the House of Representatives."

Schnitzler warned against underestimating the strength of reaction in the United States but declared:

"The real spirit of America is not defeatist . . . We have the know-how and the determination to move forward and to keep moving forward. In the months and years ahead, America has the greatest opportunity in its history to build lasting economic prosperity."

Despite obstacles including bitter anti-union campaigns and "jurisdictional frustrations," many AFL-CIO unions "have done a remarkably fine job of organizing," Schnitzler declared.

The federation official said that even in an off-year for national elections "we must underline this fact in our political education programs."

Some May Escape

Otherwise, he added, "the workers and voters of our country will not be able to pin down those responsible. Otherwise a number of those in the coalition who can be defeated when they come up for re-election next year will get re-elected."

He said the gain in new members is "not reflected in AFL-CIO membership totals only "because heavy unemployment in the mass production industries and the rapid spread of automation have cost us just about as many members as we have gained." He added:

"We have the opportunity now to consolidate our forces and prepare plans for real headway when the tide turns and brings with it a period of industrial revival."

Noting that he was addressing the convention on United Nations Day, Schnitzler said labor is dedicated to the UN "because it stands for peace with freedom and human justice."

Declaring that "the only threat of war today comes from Soviet Russia and her satellites," Schnitzler called for workers throughout the free world "to stand firm with us against capitulation to Russia's aggressive demands."

New AFL-CIO Department Slates Parley

The Food & Beverage Trades Dept. will hold its founding convention at the Carillon Hotel in Miami Beach on Dec. 2.

The convention arrangements are being handled by Harry Poole, president pro tem, and Daniel E. Conway, secretary-treasurer pro tem, who were named to their posts at a recent meeting of the nine AFL-CIO unions that applied for the department's charter.

The AFL-CIO Executive Council chartered the group at its June meeting at Unity House. The nine unions represent an estimated 1 million members engaged in the manufacture, production, processing, sale and distribution of food and beverage products.

The December convention will elect a president and a secretary-treasurer. The affiliated unions will each name a vice president. Poole is executive vice president of the Meat Cutters and Butcher Workmen; Conway is president of the American Bakery & Confectionery Workers.

By AFL-CIO Attorney:

'Work' Law Backers Hear Views Blasted

Chicago—An AFL-CIO attorney debated so-called right-to-work laws before an audience made up of supporters of legislation to ban the union shop and told them that what they were really trying to do was to wipe out collective bargaining.

Thomas E. Harris, associate general counsel of the AFL-CIO, crossed verbal swords with Reed Larson, executive vice president of the National Right-to-Work Committee, and Lafayette A. Hooser, the committee's director of employe membership. The debate took place during a two-day seminar sponsored by the "right-to-work" committee.

In a prepared address — not given in its entirety because of a mixup over the time scheduled for each side—Harris said that union security is necessary for "more stable, more responsible and more constructive labor-management relationships."

A union lacking membership security, he said, "must service even the poorest grievance, for it must prove its militancy day in and day out."

Support 'Overwhelming'

He bluntly told his audience that "what you call 'compulsory unionism' is a fair, reasonable, democratic and indispensable element in achieving sound labor-management relations and is overwhelmingly supported by the very workers you sometimes describe as 'captives.'

"You may not like to admit it, but a very great many wage earners have a deep and abiding distaste for working side by side with non-union employes, whether they are company stooges or just free riders."

Harris quoted a "right-to-work" spokesman who, he said, told an Oklahoma legislative committee last spring that a "right-to-work" law should be enacted because "it puts more obstacles in the way of those who wish to organize and bargain collectively."

'Twisted' Quotes Cited

The AFL-CIO attorney said he wished all "right-to-workers" would speak so frankly instead of trying to misquote or twist quotations to make it appear that Samuel Gompers, Franklin D. Roosevelt and Harry S. Truman were opposed to the union shop.

Despite his sharp criticism, Harris was courteously received by the conference.

Larson's keynote was a charge that unions "are taking over prerogatives which probably belong only to the government" by trying to "force the will of the majority on a minority by compulsion."

Hooser asserted that "thousands of workers have been fired" because of union shop agreements. He also said the union shop fosters "violence and racketeering."

Mexican 'Commuter' Job Curbs Pressed

The Texas State AFL-CIO has asked a federal court to order the Immigration & Naturalization Service to withdraw permanent residence status from Mexican nationals who commute each day to jobs in the United States and to restrict their employment to work which will not "undermine the job security and standards of workers who live in the United States."

State AFL-CIO Pres. H. S. Hank Brown estimated that more than 50,000 Mexican nationals cross the Rio Grande River—the border—each morning and return to their homes in Mexico each night. He charged that the Justice Dept. has acted illegally in according these commuters residence status.

The suit, filed in the U.S. District Court in Washington, D. C., was brought in the name of the state labor federation and 189 residents of Texas border cities, mostly Americans of Mexican descent, who say they have suffered unemployment and have been forced to work for substandard wages because of job competition from underpaid Mexican commuters.

A decision by U.S. District Judge Luther W. Youngdahl in a 1960 case brought by the Meat Cutters in an effort to block the importation of commuting Mexican strikebreakers by an El Paso packing plant was cited by the Texas AFL-CIO as supporting its contention.

Youngdahl at the time held that the immigration service had engaged in an "amiable fiction" by classifying the commuters as resident aliens and thus evading a finding by the Secretary of Labor that their employment at the struck plant would "adversely affect" wages and conditions of workers in the U.S.

Asking the court to direct Atty. Gen. Robert F. Kennedy and Immigration Commissioner Joseph M. Swing to withdraw permanent residence status from commuters, the state federation declared:

"Commuting aliens have provided employers with a virtually endless supply of employes who are willing to work for low wages and, because of their precarious status . . . are almost guaranteed to be non-union."

The federation added that "thousands of bone fide United States residents have been forced into unemployment."

The state federation pointed out in a statement that a border pact has been ratified by the Joint U.S.-Mexico Trade Union Committee and that Mexican unions are opposed to practices which would adversely affect wages, working conditions or employment of U.S. workers.

Christmas Seal Drive Supported

The annual Christmas Seal campaign of the National Tuberculosis Association "has produced enormous benefits for all the American people," AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany has declared in an endorsement of the 1961 campaign.

In a letter to Dr. H. Stuart Willis, president of the TB association, Meany declared:

"The AFL-CIO is proud of its members whose voluntary work and contributions in the annual Christmas Seal sale have aided the National Tuberculosis Association in the fight against tuberculosis . . . I know union members will carry on the fight against tuberculosis by buying and using Christmas Seals."

Hoffa Faces Fraud Charge In Court

Orlando, Fla.—A new round of court action opened for Teamsters Pres. James R. Hoffa when he answered a second indictment on charges of fraud in connection with a real estate promotion called Sun Valley near here. Hoffa, head of the AFL-CIO-ousted union, pleaded not guilty before U. S. District Judge Dozier Devane.

Also indicted and pleading not guilty was Robert E. McCarthy, Jr., described by the Dept. of Justice as a Detroit banking executive. Named but not indicted was the late Henry Lower of Detroit, formerly an official of Teamsters Local 376, who died last summer.

An earlier indictment against Hoffa, McCarthy and Lower was dismissed because the federal grand jury that returned the charges was held to have been improperly impaneled.

The new indictment alleges that the Sun Valley housing project was falsely represented as a model city for retired Teamsters members but that in reality the project was a "scheme and artifice," financed through misuse of union funds, "and operated for the personal profit of the defendants."

The indictment charges that Hoffa had an undisclosed option to buy 45 percent of Sun Valley stock, that funds of four Teamsters locals were misused, that lots were brought for $18 and sold for from $150 to $1,090 each. The indictment includes 11 counts of mail fraud, four counts of telephone fraud or conspiracy, one count of fraud by telegraph.

Ontario Labor Spurs Probe of Beach Bias

Windsor, Ont.—The Ontario Labor Dept. has ordered a public hearing on charges of racial discrimination filed against the owners of two Windsor area bathing beaches by the Ontario Labor Committee for Human Rights.

The charges were filed under the provincial Fair Accommodations Practices Act on behalf of Dr. Howard McCurdy, a lecturer at Assumption University here, and Lee Sloan of Detroit, both Negroes. They said they were denied admission on the ground that the beaches were private property.

Atomic Energy Safety Topic of IBEW Course

A training course for instructors in the uses, hazards and control of industrial atomic energy is under way for a selected class of electric utility and construction employes at the headquarters building of the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers.

After two weeks of training by experts from the Atomic Energy Commission, the Trade & Industrial Vocational Education section of the Health, Education & Welfare Dept., and the IBEW, members of the pilot class will return to the atomic energy plants where they work and train fellow employes in the use and control of atomic energy, with special emphasis on safety.

The institute grew out of a conference called by IBEW Pres. Gordon M. Freeman in 1959 for representatives of eight power companies planning to operate nuclear reactors, along with personnel of the AEC and the IBEW.

In Washington, D. C., for the opening session of the training program were the vice presidents of all 12 IBEW districts in the U.S. and Canada, and officials of the Commonwealth Edison Co., Chicago; Duquesne Light Co., Pittsburgh; Northern States Power Co., Minneapolis; and Detroit Edison Co.

Co-chairmen of the training committee are Carl E. Parker, Commonwealth Edison industrial relations manager, and IBEW Vice Pres. John J. Regan.

Freeman said the committee plans to extend training to all branches of the electrical industry in which radioactive isotopes and other radiation sources are employed.

"I am keenly interested," he said, "in the promotion of atomic energy for peaceful industrial use, and I am concerned for the welfare of the public and the safety of the thousands of IBEW members in the nuclear power field."

Unions Protest Dogs On Police Picket Duty

Cincinnati—The labor movement here is protesting the use of police dogs on the picket line.

Al Bilik, president of the Cincinnati AFL-CIO Council, has also protested an editorial over WKRC radio commending the use of the dogs by local policemen.

Trouble started during a strike of 120 members of the Electrical Radio & Machine Workers at Queen City Dinettes, Inc. Police dogs and handlers were sent to the picket lines where, said the WKRC editorial, a psychological effect was created "by the mere sight of one of these large creatures tensely waiting for a command from his policeman-handler."

Bilik, in a reply which was also broadcast by the local radio station, said: "There has been good cooperation between the police department and organized labor in the past, without the aid of a canine corps. In the interest of maintaining future harmony, we feel certain that Police Chief Stanley Schrotel will agree when we say to him, 'Call off the dogs'."

Bilik, and other officers of the council disagreed sharply with a report issued by City Manager C. O. Harrell's office which said that the use of dogs "is very much like the use of any other tool, such as the nightstick, tear gas or firearms.

They pointed out that reports from St. Louis, Philadelphia, St. Paul and Minneapolis, where dogs are also part of the police force, show they have never been used as strike-breakers.

"If the dogs are just another tool of the policeman's trade, such as tear gas and other weapons," the AFL-CIO Council asked, "are we to assume that the dogs may actually be unleashed to attack striking workers on a picket line?

"If not, and the animals are present for show purposes only, what assurance does anyone have that a dog will not go berserk?"

The strike at Dinette has been settled, but the fight over the use of dogs on the picket line goes on, the latest move being a motion in City Council by Democratic Councilman Jack Gilligan for clarification on the city manager's and police chief's stands.

'New Pattern Emerging:'

NLRB Head Predicts Bargaining Changes

Duluth, Minn.—Collective bargaining, far from being static, is likely to see major changes in both the issues involved and the techniques used, Chairman Frank W. McCulloch of the National Labor Relations Board told the Northern Minnesota Conference on Industrial Relations here.

A new bargaining pattern which involves social questions broader than the bread-and-butter issues—important as these are—seems to be emerging, he said. A lot of pioneering will have to be done in the bargaining process, he declared, as a result of new problems that arise in the labor-management relationship growing out of industrial change.

But even more basic, McCulloch said, the foundations of bargaining still need strengthening 24 years after the Supreme Court upheld the Wagner Act.

"We are daily confronted at the labor board," he explained, "with a rising load of unfair labor practice cases and bitterly-fought representation elections. The major part of our business is still the processing of unfair labor charges against employers who refuse to recognize, or otherwise strongly oppose, the rights of self-organization guaranteed by Sec. 7 (of the National Labor Relations Act).

"When the law's obligations are more universally honored and the very existence of the bargaining relation ceases to remain the center of bitter conflict, collective bargaining in new industries and areas will be able to start its progress to the levels of maturity and responsibility that prevail elsewhere."

The board chairman said he disagreed with those who suggest that the era of pioneering in industrial relations has ended, and that with principles and rules established, only administration remains.

"Originality, ingenuity and adaptability to a changing environment," he said, "are the hallmarks of collective bargaining as practiced in America."

Bargaining issues in which McCulloch foresaw possible new developments include:

● The impact of job security; "Bargaining has been profoundly affected and will be in the future by the recurrent shortages of jobs and the fear that this situation may periodically return."

He predicted contract provisions "designed to cushion the impact of job security and job displacement," including better retirement programs at an earlier age; tighter seniority provisions; a more fully-developed guaranteed annual wage program including a guaranteed weekly pay check; "sharing the work" through a shorter workweek; longer vacations; retraining workers displaced by automated machines, and increasing emphasis on work rules.

In many of the areas, he added, government aid will be required. He also asserted that "the concept that a working man has some form of property interest in his job seems to be coming more and more to the fore."

● The impact of changing techniques: "The blue collar worker yields to the white as an ever-greater percentage of our national productivity shifts from production to service operations."

New organizational techniques will be needed to overcome the traditional resistance of white collar workers to unionism, he said, especially in areas where the "nature of the operations" themselves also changes.

● The impact of public sentiment: "I foresee possibilities of a change in collective bargaining techniques" in response to the public's "growing impatience" with "all-out economic warfare or trial by combat."

One possibility McCulloch held out was that "the existing technique of sitting down at spaced intervals for short periods of time under strike deadlines may be supplanted by other procedures more conductive to serious discussion and adjustment of serious problems."

● The impact of international competition: "If the President's appeal for voluntary self-restraints on inflationary price and wage movements is not successful, pressure for some additional forms of public intervention at this point also is likely to mount" if the government is to secure the adjustments that reduce the impact of foreign imports.

● Wages: "It is doubtful that an ever-onward increas in price and wage structures is any longer possible. Wage increases will and should match the cost-of-living index and productivity gains, and they are necessary above and beyond that to make life worth living . . . But I do foresee a change in emphasis."

McCulloch also said:

"Civil rights, equality of opportunity, full employment, low-cost housing, improved medical care, better education at all levels, enriched leisure opportunities, a safe and satisfying life between retirement and death, a voice in one's own destiny—these, too, are the problems of the labor union and of the employer."

Locals Held Key to Job Rights Fight

Philadelphia — Labor's ultimate responsibility in achieving equal opportunity lies with the local union, Auto Workers Sec.-Treas. Emil Mazey told an all-day Labor Conference on Human Rights here.

Mazey, a member of the AFL-CIO Civil Rights Committee, was keynote speaker at the conference, which was sponsored by the Philadelphia AFL-CIO Human Rights Committee and the Labor Education Conference, the local council's educational arm.

To carry out its responsibilities in the battle for equal rights and civil liberties, Mazey told delegates, the local union must work with employers, legislative bodies and community groups. Despite the progress that has been made, he warned, many problems remain not only in communities but in the labor movement.

George Schermer, executive director of the Philadelphia Commission on Human Relations, challenged members of minority groups to take the initiative in the fight for desegregation by exercising their rights under existing laws. Pennsylvania has a fair employment practices law and other legislation banning discrimination in employment, housing, education and public accommodation.

Philadelphia area community and public agencies and educational institutions helped to plan the conference, which laid plans for the establishment of human rights committees in local unions.

It was announced that the AFL-CIO citywide committee, headed by James Jones of the Steelworkers, will be consulted by the city Commission of Human Relations in complaints involving unions.

NLRB Policy Review Set on Race Appeals

protest by the Clothing Workers of an election lost at the Sewell Mfg. Co. at Breman, Ga.

The union documented its objections to the election in this case with copies of employer-circulated material, including pictures of racially "mixed" dancing and a racist publication called The Militant Truth, which the ACWA said portrayed unions as "a Communist conspiracy which can benefit only the Negro."

Also used by the company was a reproduction of the front page of the Jackson, Miss., Daily News of June 4, 1957 — a reproduction which has cropped up repeatedly in anti-union campaigns in the South—showing a union official and the wife of a Nigerian government official, the latter identified in the caption as "a lady friend," at a social occasion.

In the TWUA election at Lynchburg, an employer letter said that the workers would not have "any say-so as to whether their money should be spent to mix the white and colored people in schools, plants and elsewhere."

Law Silent

In asking the NLRB to reverse its policy, the TWUA declared "there are no constitutional or statutory provisions that compel the board to accept representation election results based on campaigns steeped in race hate and bias."

The TWUA pointed out that the labor board requires unions to represent workers without racial discrimination. "Yet, at the same time, the board's rulings have encouraged employers to use these non-discriminatory policies—and their logical concomitants, such as general opposition to segregation — as a means of preventing unions from winning certification," it added.

The union asked the NLRB to set aside the election and "promulgate the rule that all future elections in which either side injects campaign issues grounded on race hate and bias will be set aside."

The Clothing Workers' petition declared that in "refusing to limit racist expressions and appeals to race prejudice . . . the National Labor Relations Board finds itself in splendid isolation among the various agencies, departments and branches of the federal government."

It said the NLRB's decision in the Sharnay case, which declared that the labor board's policy is not to limit campaigning but to rely "on the good sense of the voters to evaluate the statements of the parties," was an example of "naivete at its extreme in its evaluation of the race problem in the South."

Technical Group Elects Flight Engineers' Head

London, England — Pres. Ron Brown of the Flight Engineers has been elected president of the Intl. Technical Institute of Flight Engineers at its third general assembly here.

Hosiery Union Will Appeal Fining of Aide

Ellijay, Ga.—The Hosiery Workers have announced they will appeal the conviction here of Second Vice Pres. Ted Benton on charges of "disorderly conduct" growing out of a beating he suffered during an organizing drive.

At a hearing in Ellijay Recorder's Court, Benton was fined $15. Similar charges against William W. Rainey, an AFHW organizer, were dismissed. Four of Benton's assailants, who claimed he had provoked the attack, also were fined $15 and a fifth was fined $25.

First Vice Pres. Adolph Benet, at the union's district headquarters in Chattanooga, said Benton's conviction would be appealed to Superior Court. He denied there had been any provocation of the assault and noted that Benton had been hospitalized for more than a week for treatment of injuries.

Meanwhile, Benet reported, the Hosiery Workers have filed unfair practice charges with the National Labor Relations Board accusing the Chadbourne-Gotham Hosiery Mill here of interrogating and intimidating employes and with surveillance of union meetings.

An NLRB hearing had been set on the union's petition.

Election Contests Head for Nov. 7 Showdown

A battle for governor of New Jersey, another for mayor of New York City and a fiercely contested special congressional election in San Antonio, Tex., head the political races that will be settled by voters on Nov. 7.

Pres. Kennedy scheduled a speech in San Antonio on Oct. 30 in behalf of Henry B. Gonzalez, Democratic candidate for Congress, who is sharply challenged in a normally Democratic district by conservative Republican John Goode, Jr. The election will fill the House seat vacated by former Rep. Paul J. Kilday, who was appointed a judge on the U.S. Court of Military Appeals.

Kennedy has sent a letter endorsing Richard J. Hughes, who is running for governor of New Jersey against former Labor Sec. James P. Mitchell for the Republicans. Former Pres. Truman is scheduled to visit New Jersey in support of Hughes on Nov. 3.

Former Pres. Eisenhower has already spoken in New Jersey in behalf of Mitchell and is scheduled for a San Antonio speech to assist Goode.

Labor Backing Wagner

Eisenhower also spoke in New York City, where Mayor Robert F. Wagner is running for a third term against Republican nominee Louis J. Lefkowitz. Wagner beat the old-line Democratic city organization in winning the party's nomination and is also backed by the Liberal Party and the Brotherhood Party recently organized by unions in the New York Central Labor Council.

The Gonzalez-Goode contest in San Antonio, although technically a nonpartisan one, pits a Democrat with a reputation for liberalism in the State Senate against a Republican calling himself a "militant conservative." The GOP is hoping to pick up another seat in the Texas congressional delegation to add to those now held by Rep. Bruce Alger of Dallas and Sen. John Tower. Gonzalez has been endorsed strongly by Vice Pres. Lyndon Johnson and by Sen. Ralph Yarborough.

There are two other congressional races—in Detroit, where Democrat Lucien N. Nedzi is opposed by Republican Walter Czarnecki, and in Louisiana, where the Republicans have nominated Charlton H. Lyons, an oilman, and the Democrats were slated to choose their nominee in a party primary Oct. 28.

The Michigan seat opened when former Rep. Thaddeus M. Machrowicz was named a federal judge. The Louisiana race is to fill the vacancy caused by the death by Rep. Overton Brooks.

Virginia will elect a governor, with Democrat Albertis Harrison considered a certain victor.

Voters in more than 700 municipalities scattered over 45 states will pick local officials on Nov. 7 and there are isolated races in several states for judges and state legislatures.

'61 Profits Approach Peak Level

By Saul Miller

Corporate profits are zooming toward the second highest year on record in 1961 and may come very close to matching the all-time record of $46.4 billion set in 1959.

Leading business publications and government reports show a booming profits picture for the year, a marked contrast to the continuing high level of unemployment which has remained at nearly 7 percent of the labor force for the past 10 months.

Profit reports covering the July-September period reveal that profits before taxes are running at an annual seasonally adjusted rate of about $46 billion. In the second quarter of the year the rate was about $45 billion.

Business Week magazine declares that the outlook for the current quarter, if the trend continues, is for an annual rate of "$49 billion or better" which should make 1961 profits "at least the second best year on record, slightly topping last year's $45 billion."

The Wall Street Journal profits scorecard covering 444 corporations in 30 industrial groups showed a third quarter gain of 9.3 percent over the same period a year ago. The paper said that "prospects are that the current quarter will show a larger gain from the like period of 1960."

14 Percent Rise

The Commerce Dept. has reported that for the first half of 1961 profits jumped 14 percent between the first and second quarters of the year.

The profits boom appeared to be based on a number of factors including a sharp rise in productivity as the economy moved out

THE AFL-CIO drive to raise $1 million for the Eleanor Roosevelt Cancer Foundation gets a big boost forward as three affiliated unions—the Maritime Union, Retail Clerks and Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers—surpass their quotas of a proposed 10 cents per member. Here NMU Pres. Joseph Curran (left), Retail Clerks Pres. James A. Suffridge (second) and IBEW Pres. Gordon M. Surcharge Found Excessive:

Union Bonding Costs Cut After Record of 'No Claims'

The nation's surety companies have lowered the cost to unions of "faithful discharge of duties" bonds required by the Landrum-Griffin Act, AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany has announced.

A 50 percent surcharge, imposed to meet broadened bonding requirements of Landrum-Griffin, has been reduced to 25 percent. Meany said the reduction "demonstrates beyond any possible question the honesty and integrity of the overwhelming majority of trade union officials."

Meany sent presidents of all AFL-CIO affiliates a report by Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler which showed:

- Replies to a survey from 122 AFL-CIO unions and six affiliated departments revealed that "not a single claim had been filed" under the "faithful discharge" bonding provision.
- The Surety Association of America, after negotiations with

Cincinnati Unit Wins NLRB Vote

An AFL-CIO federal local union charter has been issued for the Cincinnati Dairy Employes Union, a 2,200-member former unit of the unaffiliated Teamsters, following a National Labor Relations Board election in which members of the local voted 1,664-12 to leave the Teamsters.

The charter, issued in the name of James T. Luken and other officers of the local was presented by AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany in ceremonies at federation headquarters in Washington, D. C.

Meany gave the charter to William L. Kircher, AFL-CIO regional representative in Cincinnati, with authority to install the charter formally at the first meeting of the local after the NLRB certifies the results of the Oct. 31 election.

"I am very happy," said Meany, "to turn over to our representative in Cincinnati a local charter for this group of workers."

Said Luken at the ceremonies: "Speaking for the workers I represent, we are very happy and grateful to be back in the AFL-CIO."

Earlier he had commented after the NLRB election:

"This clear decisive victory will probably be repeated elsewhere in the country if Teamster members are given an opportunity to vote."

Luken said that petitions for NLRB elections by other Teamster groups in Cincinnati were pending and that petitions also had been filed on behalf of groups in Dayton and Columbus, O. At least 10 locals or major portions thereof within a 100-mile radius of Cincinnati, he said, had indicated interest in breaking away from the Teamsters.

In reply to questions from reporters, Meany said that inquiries

Rail Telegraphers Win Job, Pay Guarantees

By David L. Perlman

The Railroad Telegraphers have negotiated a job security agreement with the Southern Pacific Railroad guaranteeing all present employes 40 hours of pay each week for the remainder of their working careers.

It sets sharp limitations on future abolition of jobs through attrition and provides partial back pay for a number of employes laid off during the past three years.

Telegraphers Pres. G. E. Leighty said the contract, which averted a strike, "goes far beyond" any previous job stabilization agreement in the railroad industry and sets "a goal to shoot at" in future labor negotiations with railroads.

High Bank Theft Rate Alarms Auditors Group

The nation's banks are worried—and with reason—about the honesty of their officers and employes.

An officer of a bank auditors' association has sounded a warning that, on the basis of recent experience, "an average of one out of eight banks will report a bank fraud this year."

The auditors' association official, Executive Dir. F. Byers Miller, said FBI reports of 1,771 bank embezzlement cases during the 1960 fiscal year show that 8.6 percent of the internal fraud was done by bank presidents. Bank managers and vice presidents accounted for 18.7 percent of the frauds, cashiers were involved in 30 percent, and tellers and other employes in the remainder.

This record of banks was described as "shocking" by AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler in a report to Pres. George Meany. He noted that "responsible union financial officers and employes have a record incomparably superior to the record of responsible officers and employes of banks."

Meany sent copies of the report and of the speech by Miller, director of the Association for Bank Audit, Control & Operations, to presidents of affiliated unions. The Miller speech has also been distributed to all banks by the auditors' trade association with a warning that unless bankers solve "the entire problem of embezzlements facing banks . . . as independent members of a free enterprise society," the government will move toward additional "regulation and interference."

Miller, in his speech given before bankers' associations in Ohio and Arkansas, pointed out that bank of-

CofC Spurs 'Work' Drive In Oklahoma

Oklahoma City—The U.S. Chamber of Commerce drive to outlaw the union shop has moved into Oklahoma to help set the stage for a petition campaign aimed at forcing a so-called "right-to-work" proposal to a statewide referendum next year.

The CofC's recently-formed Committee for Voluntary Unionism, headed by Californian W. B. Camp, picked Oklahoma City as the

IBEW Locals Urge New Law On RLA Model

Delegates from 41 telephone-worker locals of the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers have agreed to seek passage of a Communications Labor Act patterned after the Railway Labor Act.

Meeting in Washington, D. C., under the direction of Morris D. Murphy, director of telephone operations for the IBEW, officers of local telephone unions voted unanimously for a resolution introduced by Pres. John Curtin of Local Union 827, representing New Jersey plant and clerical employes, and supported vigorously by Pres. Sperl Wenzel of Local Union 1011, Los Angeles.

IBEW Pres. Gordon M. Freeman, addressing the delegation, pledged the support of the 770,000-member union to the telephone workers who have, he said, "formed an integral part of our union since its founding in 1891."

"I can think of no better way," Freeman said, "of celebrating the 70th anniversary of our founding than by pressing for the same type of constructive legislation that has been of so much benefit to railroad members of our brotherhood for many years."

He assured the delegates also that the IBEW will continue its fight for better wages and working conditions for its telephone members "across the bargaining table from 'Ma Bell' and the other companies, as it has always done."

Another speaker was IBEW Sec. Joseph D. Keenan, who told the delegates they could help solve their problems by contributing to COPE, getting members and their families registered, and getting out the vote on election day. When you talk politics, Keenan advised, "talk labor politics, not party politics."

New Pamphlet Reviews 87th Congress Record

A new 32-page booklet reviewing in detail the record of the first session of the 87th Congress and the unfinished business facing the second session in January is now available from the AFL-CIO.

The new publication, "Labor Looks at Congress 1961," prepared by the AFL-CIO Dept. of Legislation, contains the recent statement of the federation's Executive Council terming the first session a "qualified success" and calling for grass roots action to spur Congress to surpass the achievements of the first session.

The booklet provides summaries of key roll call votes and brief legislative histories on 17 "accomplishments" of the first session and it backgrounds the case for 15 items of "unfinished business" facing the second session.

Copies of the booklet, Publication 77c, are available from the Pamphlet Division of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Publications. Single copies are free; up to 100 copies the price is 15 cents each; over 100 the price is $13.50 per hundred.

Arms, Recession Add To '62 Budget Deficit

The Kennedy Administration has estimated a 6.9 billion budget deficit for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1962 but declared that with "the economy still short of full employment" the deficit "is not inflationary."

A stepped-up defense program, a higher outlay for farm price supports and anti-recession programs all helped build up the deficit, the Administration said.

The basic outlines of the budget were prepared by the outgoing Eisenhower Administration and estimated a surplus of $1.5 billion. New developments and the Kennedy Administration's programs, especially in the defense areas, account for the change.

Economists point out that estimating a budget situation 18 months away is always difficult. They note that in the preceding fiscal year former Pres. Eisenhower's January 1960 estimate of a balanced budget turned into a $3.9 billion deficit.

Pres. Kennedy has issued orders to all government agencies to tighten up spending and has announced that some funds appropriated by Congress for bomber-building programs would not be spent.

Summarizing the economic impact of the budget, the mid-year review declared that "with the economy now gathering steam but still short of full employment," the deficit could not be characterized as inflationary. The review noted that there was "considerable" unused capacity in most industries, rising competition from foreign products, continued high unemployment and a general stability in prices.

The budget figures involved show expenditures of $88.9 billion and revenues of $82.1 billion—the expenditures $8 billion more than the Eisenhower estimates and revenues $200 million below the former estimate.

The Kennedy Administration has increased defense spending by $4 million. Higher farm payments account for $800 million and anti-recession measures for $900 million. The space program will cost an additional $400 million and debt payments have increased $500 million.

10 Show Improvement:

Joblessness Tops 6% In 68 Labor Areas

By Robert B. Cooney

The job picture showed improvement in October in 10 of the nation's 150 major labor market areas, the Labor Dept. has reported. Despite the pickup, 45 percent of the major areas still reported "substantial" joblessness.

Four major areas—Baltimore, St. Louis, Seattle and Flint—were moved from "substantial unemployment" Group D—with a jobless range of 6 to 8.9 percent—to "moderate unemployment" Group C—a jobless range of 3 to 5.9 percent.

The improvement in these four areas dropped to 68 the number of major areas with "substantial unemployment" of 6 percent or over. This group totaled 72 in September and has been dropping gradually from the record highs of 101 last spring.

The low point in recent years was the total of 31 in January 1960.

Other Signs

Another sign of improvement, the report noted, was the shifting of Washington, D. C., Madison, Wis., and Richmond, Va., from "moderate" Group C to "low unemployment" Group B. This meant an improvement from the 3 to 5.9 percent jobless range to the 1.5 to 2.9 percent range.

This was the first time any major labor market area has dropped to a joblessness rate as low as the Group B range since January 1961, when the recession was nearing its low point, the report said.

The major areas of South Bend, Ind., Muskegon-Muskegon Heights, Mich. and Buffalo, N. Y. completed the group of 10 showing improvement. These three were moved from Group E—with unemployment of 9 to 11.9 percent—to Group D—the jobless range of 6 to 8.9 percent.

The Labor Dept.'s list of "smaller areas" suffering substantial unemployment of 6 percent and over declined from 217 in September to 206 in October. This group was at a low for recent years of 107 in January 1960.

Thirteen smaller areas were removed from the list while two—Traverse City, Mich. and Waterloo, Iowa—were added. The report said unemployment tripled over the year in Waterloo, partly because automation cut down jobs in non-electrical machinery and meat packing. Traverse City was hit by cutbacks in several industries.

Twelve smaller areas dropping below the 6 to 8.9 percent list were Fort Smith, Ark., Panama City, Fla., Anderson, Ind., Ashland, O., Chillicothe, O., Lancaster, O., Mansfield, O., Marietta, O., Marion, O., Springfield, O., Oshkosh, Wis. and West Bend, Wis. In addition, another city was removed from the list after redefinition based on changing patterns.

The Labor Dept. also maintains a listing of areas of all sizes with "substantial and persistent" unemployment.

On this list for October were 20 of the 68 major areas of labor surplus, 97 of the 206 smaller areas and an additional 273 "very small areas."

While areas classified as "areas of substantial unemployment"—those with 6 percent or over jobless—have preference in bidding on federal contracts, first preference is granted to firms in areas on the "substantial and persistent" unemployment list.

Vote Upheld for Alien Crews of Runaway Ships

Crews of "runaway" ships that sail under a foreign flag but are owned by Americans are entitled to the protection of U.S. laws, even when they are members of a foreign union, the National Labor Relations Board has ruled in the third of a series of related decisions.

The board by a 4-1 vote upheld an NLRB hearing officer's ruling that crews of eight ships owned by Hamilton Bros. Inc. of Tampa, Fla., are entitled to vote in an NLRB election for or against a union called the National Maritime Syndicate of Honduras, affiliated with the Latin American Maritime Federation.

The union, called "Sindimar" for short, petitioned under the labor law for an election among separate units of employes on the motor vessels Tropic Wind and Tropic Breeze, sailing between Tampa and ports in Costa Rica, Nicaragua and Honduras with imports such as bananas and coconuts, and U.S. exports of various kinds. Seven of the ships fly foreign flags, one is an American-flag vessel.

The shipping company admitted it is a domestic corporation, wholly owned by citizens of the U.S., but denied the NLRB has jurisdiction in cases involving vessels, registered under a foreign flag or involving non-resident alien seamen and a foreign union.

The board majority, with Member Philip Ray Rodgers dissenting, approved an election for these reasons:

- The employer's maritime operations are an integral part of his American-owned and operated business.
- The fact that the union is organized under the laws of Honduras does not alter the fact that American shipping is involved.
- The company's operations "clearly possess those substantial U.S. contacts which bring them within the jurisdiction" of the labor law.

The board majority said it found no merit in the argument that the union is a "nebulous organization formed in a foreign country" and not a labor organization within the meaning of the American law simply because it admits captains, mates and other supervisors into membership.

The board directed that an election be held before Nov. 13 if the union can show it has enough prospective members on all ships, instead of the two petitioned for, to justify a vote. Otherwise its petition may be withdrawn.

In two previous rulings, the board upheld the claim of maritime unions for jurisdiction over American-owned ships seeking to avoid U.S. laws and taxes by "runaway" registry. Sea unions have lost many jobs because of such registry, they have said.

Ship Union Wins Pension Guarantee

New York—The Masters, Mates & Pilots have announced a liberalized pension rule under which members with 15 or more years of pension credits may retire or leave the industry and still retain pension rights.

The "vesting" guarantee has been approved by MM&P pension plan trustees. It will permit deck officers to keep pension credits even though they leave the industry and stop paying union dues, Capt. Charles M. Crooks, union president, said.

Crooks pointed out that the median age of MM&P members is "quite high." The new plan will make the industry more attractive to younger officers and make more berths available through a "voluntary attrition" process, he said.

Other benefits secured in joint talks with employer trustees include an optical plan for members and their dependents; the inclusion of harbor tug captains under the MM&P plans, and elimination of a minimum age restriction on disability pensions.

1961 Profits Climb Toward Near-Record of the recession, an increase in the volume of sales and a reduction in overhead costs per unit as production increased.

Economists noted also that the sharp increase for the year so far includes the first quarter when the economy was still in the grip of the recession.

As to the rest of the year, the Wall Street Journal reported "the hope that net income in the fourth quarter will exceed that of a year earlier by a greater margin than in the third is based on expectations of at least five major industries—autos and equipment, chemicals, electrical equipment, copper companies and railroads."

Steel Leads Rise

The Journal's breakdown of 30 industry groups for the third quarter showed 19 scoring earnings gains over 1960 and 11 showing declines. Steel led the increase over the 1960 quarter with a profits gain of 144 percent. Railroads were next with an 85 percent increase, followed by farm equipment, 46.9 percent, and office equipment 27.2 percent.

Business Week reported that the third quarter increases in profits "reflect the spotty business recovery," and that "earnings were hampered by a slowdown in industrial production and the existence of excess capacity, which meant a continued squeeze on profit margins."

The past three months, the magazine says, "were an obvious disappointment to businessmen who expected earnings to maintain the momentum of the vigorous pickup in the second quarter."

However, the magazine sums up the current situation with a prediction of the second best profit year on record, adding "the prospect is for new peaks in earnings in 1962."

Otto Pragan Joins Education Staff

Otto Pragan has been appointed an assistant director of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Education.

Pragan had served as research and education director of the Chemical Workers since 1949 and previously directed the business and labor service of the Akron Public Library.

Pragan, who holds a doctorate in law and economics from the University of Vienna and a library science degree from Western Reserve University, has been a member of the AFL-CIO Committee on Education, an AFL-CIO representative on the board of directors of the National Institute of Labor Education and an adviser to labor education programs at Ohio State University, Rutgers, University of Chicago and Roosevelt University.

AFL-CIO Education Dir. Lawrence Rogin said Pragan replaces John Cosgrove, who was appointed by Pres. Kennedy earlier this year as assistant director of the Office of Civil & Defense Mobilization.

In Auto Negotiations:

UAW, Chrysler at Showdown Stage

Detroit—The Auto Workers and the Chrysler Corp. went to the edge of a strike deadline locked in negotiations seeking a settlement that would make a walkout of 60,000 Chrysler workers unnecessary.

Still unsettled as the AFL-CIO News went to press were two national non-economic matters described as stubbornly-bargained issues—production standards and the number of company-paid union stewards and committeemen representating the UAW inside the plant to process grievances.

Other major issues were setleted in principle—the question of insurance, pensions and supplemental unemployment benefits, but subcommittees worked at drafting language to fit the tentative agreement.

As the climax of lengthy negotiations approached, the union made a new counterproposal on economic issues and served notice on management of contract expiration as of midnight Nov. 2. The counterproposal, UAW Pres. Walter P. Reuther said, covered wages, pensions, insurance and jobless benefits.

Local Agreements Pending

Also up for decision in the hours before the strike deadline were local supplemental agreements at several Chrysler locations. More than 80 locals at the company's 88 locations had settled earlier.

Other developments:

- UAW workers in seven Caterpillar Tractor Co. plants went on strike for a new contract, but workers at eight Allis-Chalmers plants agreed to contract extension.
- Ford Motor Co. workers have "overwhelmingly" ratified the new contract between UAW and the company, the union announced. It said new wage rates will take effect in the pay period ending Nov. 12.
- A new contract similar to the recent Ford and General Motors settlements was reached with UAW and the Eaton Mfg. Co. for 3,500 workers at six Michigan and Ohio plants, including Eaton's recently acquired Cleveland, O., plant.

UNION NEGOTIATORS credited Under Sec. of Labor W. Willard Wirtz and National Mediation Board Chairman Francis C. O'Neill, Jr., with a major role in the settlement of a three-year job security dispute between the Railroad Telegraphers and the Southern Pacific Railroad. Pictured outside the Labor Dept., where the sessions were held, are: A. O. Olsen, Telegraphers vice president; Wirtz; Telegraphers Pres. G. E. Leighty; O'Neill; Lester P. Lima Dailies Hit for Veto Of Boycott Ads

Lima, Peru — The refusal of four daily newspaper publishers here to accept advertising about labor's boycott of Sears, Roebuck & Co. has been protested by the Inter-American Federation of Working Newspapermen's Organizations.

Roberto Martinez Merizalde of the IAFWNO's Commission on Freedom of the Press told the publishers of LaPrensa, Ultima Hora, La Cronica and El Comercio that their refusal to publish advertisements submitted by the Intl. Federation of Commercial, Clerical & Technical Employes is contrary to freedom of expression.

The boycott involved picketing of the Sears exhibit at the Intl. Trade Fair of the Pacific in Lima. Sears was chosen as a U.S. government representative despite a "Don't Buy Sears" drive launched in May 1960 by the Retail Clerks and supported by the AFL-CIO Executive Council. The choice of Sears for the fair was denounced specifically by the Executive Council.

The exhibit has been picketed by the IFCC & TE, which said in a message to Pres. Kennedy, three members of his cabinet and to news media: "We have no argument with the people of the United States" and "we like the fair and the U.S. exhibition but we protest the choice of anti-labor Sears. The U.S. could have sent us a company that has a better labor record."

Faster NLRB Action Noted In Vote Cases

General Counsel Stuart Rothman of the National Labor Relations Board has reported a speedup in NLRB action on election appeals and predicted a "sharp decrease" in the time required to conduct representation elections.

Studies by the 28 NLRB regional directors, Rothman said, show that:

- Regional offices have cut the time required for producing reports on election challenges or objections from 63.5 days in 1958 to 30.3 days in fiscal 1961.
- Objections to the conduct of elections have been filed in only 8 percent of all elections held. Of these less than one-fourth involved allegations of error against board agents conducting the elections—the lowest number in NLRB history.
- The number of elections climbed from 4,524 in 1958 to 6,613 in 1961. Of the latter, approximately 73 percent resulted from voluntary agreements between labor and management to proceed to an immediate election without waiting for hearings and a decision.

Rothman's prediction of a further decrease in the time required for elections was based, he said, on the "increased willingness of parties to proceed" to an immediate election and the recent delegation of decision-making powers to the regional directors.

Jr., of the National Mediation Board hailed what they described as "a landmark settlement of difficult issues." Goldberg, O'Neill and Under Sec. of Labor W. Willard Wirtz personally served as mediators in settling the three-year dispute.

Cutbacks Limited

The trail-blazing settlement specifies that the railroads may not abolish more than 2 percent of telegraphers' positions in any year and under no conditions may they abolish jobs in excess of the number of vacancies resulting from retirement, resignation, death, dismissal or promotion. No more than five stations or "agencies" may be discontinued in any year without agreement of the union.

Besides guaranteeing full employment to all employes on the present seniority list, the agreement guarantees future employes at least 60 percent of their regular pay for a five-year period if their jobs are abolished for any reason. The same pay guarantee will apply retroactively to most employes terminated since April 25, 1958.

The 2 percent annual reduction of jobs allowed under the agreement will not begin to take effect for several years, since the job base on the railroad is set at 1,000 positions and there are presently only 946 telegraphers employed.

Job reductions resulting from installation of centralized traffic control systems are not governed by the 2 percent ceiling, but only about 14 positions are expected to be affected by pending automation plans. Telegraphers in these jobs are guaranteed equivalent employment elsewhere on the railroad.

A special arbitration board was set up under the agreement to rule on union charges that a number of layoffs since 1958 violated the existing work scope rule by transferring duties of discontinued telegrapher jobs to other employes.

Job security has been a key issue in the railroad industry, which has seen a sharp, continuing drop in employment during the post-war era. The Telegraphers and the Railway Labor Executives' Association have battled through the courts to establish the right to strike, if necessary, over the issue of job protection. A Supreme Court decision in 1960 established this right by holding that a lower court erred in enjoining the Telegraphers from striking the Chicago & North Western Railway. The high court reversed the lower court's ruling that the railroad was not required to bargain with the union over abolition of jobs.

Senator Republican Leader Everett McKinley Dirksen (Ill.) introduced legislation which would have the effect of reversing the court decision and ban all unions from striking for job security, but the bill has never been reported out of committee.

City-Wide Vote Backed By New York Teachers

New York—The United Federation of Teachers has given approval of a City Labor Dept. proposal that a single collective bargaining unit be voted on by all teaching employes and has filed for a place on the ballot.

Two other organizations have announced their intent to seek exclusive bargaining rights for the city's 43,000 teaching employes—an unaffiliated local union and the Teachers Bargaining Organization, representing nine non-union groups.

"We're going in to win," said UFT Pres. Charles Cogen. "This is what we've been working for—a chance to put New York City teachers solidly in the ranks of organized labor."

City Labor Commissioner Harold A. Felix made the proposal for an election to choose one teachers' bargaining agent. He named Prof. Nathan P. Feinsinger to preside, with Board of Education approval, at a public hearing Nov. 3 on the proposed election.

Feinsinger, professor of law at the University of Wisconsin, is to report back to Felix and the School Board on whether any valid objection has been voiced. Procedures then will be announced for an election, probably in December, to be conducted by secret ballot under the supervision of the Honest Ballot Association and the city.

The UFT—Local 2 of the Teachers—staged a short strike a year ago this month in protest against the former school board's delay in ordering an election. In June a majority of teachers voted in a school board referendum in favor of collective bargaining. The State Legislature in a separate action later dismissed the old board and ordered Mayor Wagner to appoint a new one.

Automation's Woes Cited by Vatican

Halifax, Nova Scotia—The upsets and disruption caused by automation should not be borne exclusively by workers, the Vatican secretary of state, Amleto Cardinal Cicognani, said in a message to the Canadian Social Life Conference here.

The letter, quoting from Pope John XXII's recent encyclical, Mater et Magistra, said that the negative effects of automation should weigh equally, or even more heavily, upon the investors of capital and upon all members of the political community, since all these groups benefit from automation. It declared that this can be brought about more easily if organized workers have a voice in implementing the changes.

Cardinal Cicognani called for a re-examination of labor-management relations in the light of such principles as these: working conditions must safeguard the physical health of workers and their moral integrity; wages should be sufficient to allow workers to live a truly human life.

At Last, the Facts

THE SURETY COMPANIES that write bonds protecting organizations from loss of funds because of dishonesty, theft or embezzlement by officials and employes are tough-minded, emotionless organizations that set fees on the basis of claim experience.

But when the Landrum-Griffin Act became law in 1959 and included a new concept of providing bonds for "faithful discharge" of duty by union officials, the surety companies had no claim basis to fall back on. So they slapped a 50 percent surtax on existing bond rates.

The vicious propaganda campaign triggered by anti-union forces that led to passage of Landrum-Griffin apparently had some effect on the tough-minded surety companies. The surtax rate reflected the companies' "concern" with an unknown factor —"faithful discharge"—and the existing anti-union climate.

Now the surety companies have substituted claim experience for unsupported propaganda claims and have reduced the surtax rate from 50 to 25 percent. The evidence was ample: not one claim under the faithful discharge provision had been filed by the AFL-CIO, 122 of its affiliates or its trade and industrial departments.

Here, then, is the hard, dollars-and-cents evidence to support the AFL-CIO's oft-repeated declaration that only a tiny minority of the tens of thousands of officials and employes of the trade union movement are tainted by corruption or dishonesty, and that the federation has moved swiftly to eradicate these small traces.

The documented facts always have great difficulty in catching up with the sensationally hurled charges. But here and now is an opportunity for the press, radio and TV to help set the record straight.

Who, Us?

THE NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF MANUFACTURERS has developed a new technique for reducing friction between labor and management—publication of an article declaring that "news and propaganda" published in the labor press "is comparable to that appearing in Socialist and Communist publications."

In the presumed interests of industrial peace, the article published in the NAM News declares that the role of the labor press is to "play class against class. Create, emphasize and expand friction between employer and employe." The major themes of the labor press, says the article, are "to agitate and denounce" and especially to "denounce the U. S. economic system and all management personnel."

The AFL-CIO News, included in this enlightened analysis of the labor press, can only express its condolences to the readers of the NAM News for their waste of time and money. They deserve a better guide to the second half of the Twentieth Century.

New Record Year

THE YEAR 1961 may go down in the record books as the year when corporate profits came close to the all-time recorded high while about 7 percent of the labor force was unemployed.

It is likely to be the year when corporate profits before taxes will hit about $46 billion amid cries that wage rates must be restrained because business is in a "profits squeeze."

It will go down in the books also as the year in which business and industry clamored for lower corporate taxes and other devices to lower their tax payments as "incentive" for investment.

All in all it will be quite a year, except, of course, for the millions of American workers searching for nonexistent jobs or the millions more barely eking out a living on substandard wages.

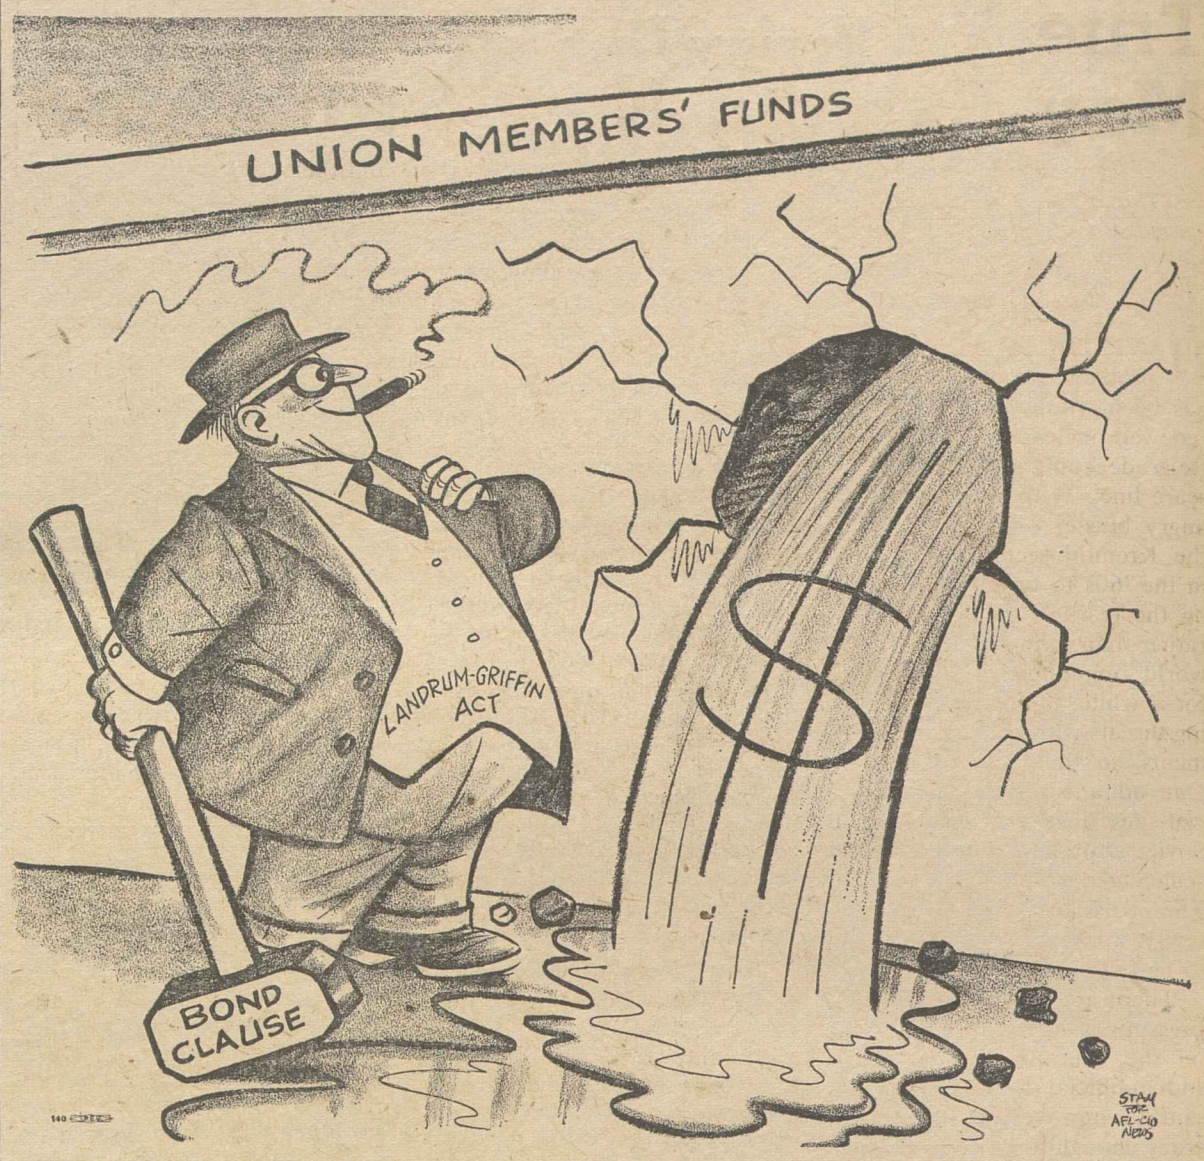
Wrong Boy at the Dike



'Investment in Nation's Future':

Sen. Metcalf Urges Separate Budget for Capital Projects

The following is excerpted from an address by Sen. Lee Metcalf (D-Mont.) to the National Reclamation Association at Billings, Mont.

OUR FEDERAL BUDGET is the most important and pervasive influence in the economic life of our nation. For the year which began last July 1, it includes expenditures of well over $83 billion, which will be collected in taxes, or borrowed. All of us—through our federal government—make up the biggest customer of American business. Likewise, we are the biggest employer. We either make—or stimulate—more investment than any other source. Public expenditure of public funds develops more research and results in more discoveries than any other efforts.

The federal government owes more money to more people than any corporation in the country. Our budget for this year includes interest payments totaling almost $9 billion. And the activities of our federal treasury determine the interest rates all of us will pay for the use of money.

Most of the budget spending of our federal government is to cover the cost of current operations —such as national defense and general government, including the legislative, judicial and executive functions, or for services to special groups.

These expenditures are properly a charge against current income—most of which comes from our taxes. But there are two other groups of expenditures which are really investments.

One is money spent on research—medical, technological and military—for example, to conquer disease—to develop a better trained and skilled labor force—to reduce evaporation which takes more water from Western stock-water ponds than we use—to better health and increase the productivity of our workers, and the efficiency of our business.

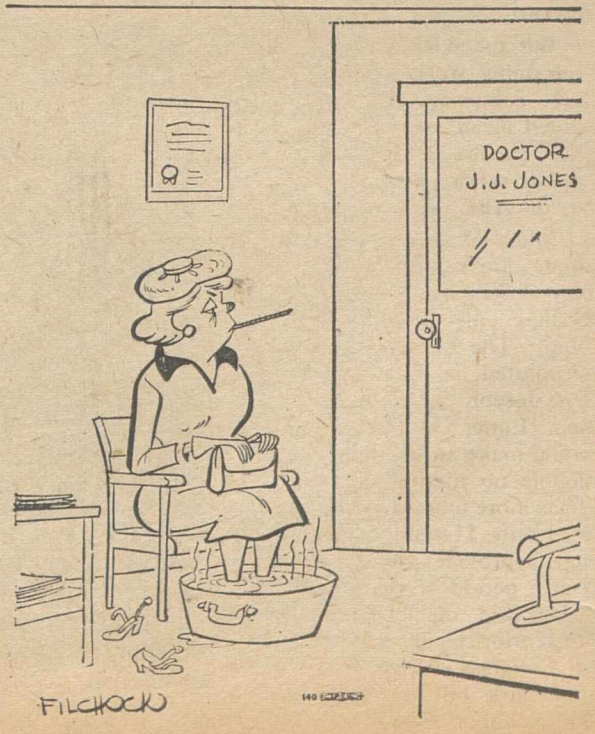
The other class of spending which is really investment includes the money spent on the proper management and wise development of our natural resources. Among these are the multipurpose water resource developments, the national parks and forests. These are projects—the cost of which can be fixed—and which return a profit over their lifetime.

We hear so many charges today that we are saddling our children and grandchildren with a monumental debt. When I turn over to my son the insurance policy I took out for him many years ago, I am not handing him a debt, although he will pick up the premiums. I am handing him an asset. And Yellowtail and Hoover Dams also will be assets to our children and grandchildren. I'm not looking for a free ride at my grandfather's expense—and my grandchildren can't expect one at mine.

SO I SUPPORT a separate—or capital—budget which would include investment in our nation's future. Experts tell me that one-third of today's budget total is investment. Adoption of a capital budget would thus reduce the $83 billion levy on our present taxable wealth to its true level of $60 billion. The capital—or long-range investment—budget would include $23 billion worth of projects more than paying for themselves—and which our people through their elected representatives had determined to be wise, desirable, and in the public interest.

In addition, we should work out some modern way to finance federal investments which return a profit to us taxpayers. An answer may be revenue bonds together with a share of earnings —or an interest rate which repays the federal government's cost of borrowing money, as in the case of REA loans.

Such a proposal is equitable. It offers a tax reduction of at least one-fourth. It would enable us to get on with the big job of development for the future.



Morgan Says:

True View from the Kremlin May Explain New Scare Line

By Edward P. Morgan

(This column is excerpted from the nightly broadcasts of Edward P. Morgan, ABC commentator sponsored by the AFL-CIO. Listen to Morgan over the ABC network Monday through Friday at 7 p. m. EST.)

HAVE THE RUSSIANS really gone mad? The probable answer is no, that what the world has been witnessing since Khrushchev arrogantly renewed nuclear testing right in the middle of the Belgrade conference of neutrals, is a shift to a scare line. With super-bomb bursts following the angry bluster on Berlin, the Kremlin seems now in the '60s to be playing on the fears of mankind rather than trying to woo world opinion as it did for a while, though mixing threats with blandishments, in the late '50s. One administration official describes this new Soviet attitude as one of "calculated irrationality." The Russians are not really crazy, he believes, but they probably want to be felt capable of doing anything.

Morgan

There are some disturbing indications that this pressure is having precisely the calculated effect on the neutrals. In Europe the other day an Indian official drew an American official aside and said to him very earnestly: "The Russians are crazy enough to blow us all up. Something has to be done to stop them; you Americans are just going to have to make concessions."

This Casper Milquetoast approach abroad does not make life for the Kennedy Administration any easier. On the other extreme, the aggressively radical right here at home continues to make matters equally difficult, with demands for no concessions under virtually any circumstances. This does not leave the White House and the State Dept. very much room.

The latest ammunition furnished the domestic right-wing came from Gen. James Van Fleet, a courageous veteran of field and guerrilla warfare against the Communists in Greece and Korea, but who sometimes shows more impetuousness than wise restraint in doing battle with official policy.

At a small gathering of state officials and business leaders in Lakeland, Fla., Van Fleet dispatched his prepared remarks in 10 minutes and then volunteered the judgment that Laos was lost, Berlin was lost and Adlai Stevenson should have been fired as our U.N. ambassador because he allegedly persuaded the President to withdraw air cover for last April's Cuban invasion, which ended in such tragic and humiliating disaster. (Both Stevenson's office and the White House have previously denied that he had any such hand in those operations.)

Van Fleet asked not to be quoted on these matters but he did not put them off the record and a reporter for the Tampa Tribune present picked them up.

So far the administration hasn't concerned itself enough publicly with the task of immobilizing such charges, but in a recent speech at Binghamton, N. Y., the Assistant Sec. of State for Intl. Organization Affairs, Harlan Cleveland, who works closely with Adlai Stevenson at the UN, made a brilliant stab at it.

TO PUT IN SHARPER perspective the lopsided view that the Communists are implacably pursuing, with one uninterrupted success after another, a "master plan" of world domination, Cleveland said that a "true view from the Kremlin would show: troubles with China . . . a 'cancer' in the satellites . . . no sale on ideology . . . Communist parties doing less business . . . neutrals refusing to be bought by arms and dams . . . capitalism not behaving according to the Communist book . . . the western alliance refusing to crumble . . . western Europe getting together . . . regional associations popping up elsewhere . . . the United Nations acquiring a capacity to act in the name of a world community . . . and the hard-line boys right in the Kremlin muttering about people who are 'soft on capitalism'." It's enough, Cleveland observed wryly, to make a Communist try terror as a policy.

As for our side, he asked Americans to remember that the U.S. manages the hard business of living in free alliance with other sovereign states, which the Soviet Union cannot; that we can submit to disarmament in a world in which the rule of force is subjected to the rule of law, which the Soviet Union cannot; that we can live with the Charter of the United Nations, which the Soviet Union cannot; that we can cooperate and accomodate and compromise and identify our own national interests with the interests of most other countries, which the Soviet Union cannot do either.

This picture is a far cry from that reflected by the softies of the far left or the non-convertible hardtops of the radical right, and since, with some qualifications, it is a balanced picture. It is more than a pity that Pres. Kennedy himself has not so far given more personal attention to projecting it.

Area Redevelopment Chief Supports Broad Vocational Retraining Plan

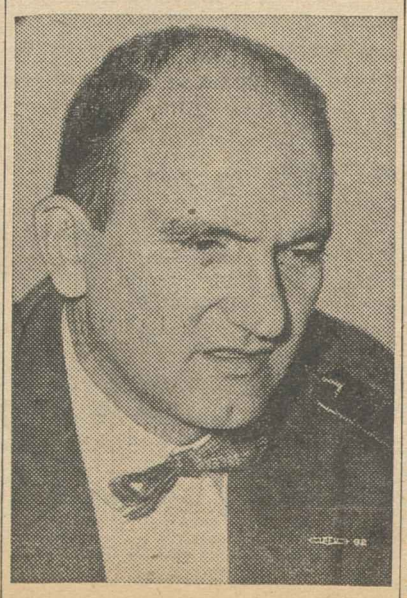
Enactment of the Kennedy Administration's broad program for vocational retraining of jobless workers would be "an enormous contribution" to the reduction of chronic unemployment, the head of the Area Redevelopment Administration has declared.

William L. Batt, Jr., ARA administrator, said the ARA itself has provided "a tool" to help create new jobs, and thus reduce joblessness, by enlisting the resources of communities, states and private enterprise.

But the ARA's provisions for retraining workers in new skills are comparatively limited, he noted in an interview on As We See It, the AFL-CIO's weekly public service program broadcast by the ABC radio network.

"Many of these workers, for example, are located in large cities," Batt observed, "and our program touches only three or four large cities. The Kennedy program [incorporated in bills sponsored by Sen. Joseph S. Clark (D-Pa.) and Rep. Elmer J. Holland (D-Pa.)] would make an unemployed worker eligible no matter where he lives. It has more muscle in it. Where we have only $14 million (for retraining), it provides some $600 million over a period of years."

He said the program deserves "top priority" in the next session of Congress. The Senate passed the Clark bill this year and the house Labor Committee reported out the Holland bill, but further action was delayed by the House Rules Committee.



WILLIAM L. BATT, JR.

As for Sen. Clark's bill calling for an emergency program of aid for public works, Batt said: "I am a great believer in being set up and ready to go in the acceleration of public works."

In answer to criticism that the Area Redevelopment Administration was set up by Congress five months ago but so far has had little effect on unemployment, the ARA administrator pointed out that the first appropriations under the act did not become available until Sept. 30 and that development plans must originate with local communities.

"We are nevertheless amazed that of the 660 areas designated as eligible because of heavy and long-standing unemployment, 43 percent have taken steps to organize themselves into representative community committees and have submitted through their states overall economic development plans," Batt said.

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

THE ELECTIONS Nov. 7 will give political observers their first indication since the presidential election last year of the comparative strength of the Democratic and Republican parties.

There are major tests in New York, New Jersey and Texas—all of them key states. There is also a handful of statewide contests elsewhere and local officials will be chosen by some 700 municipalities scattered over 45 states. The results of such municipal elections, if one party shows general gains, frequently forecast a trend that may be repeated at congressional elections thereafter.

The general observation in advance is that Democrats in New York, New Jersey and Texas are very sharply challenged. The polls indicate that Pres. Kennedy's personal charm for the voters is strong and that his popularity has steadily risen, but this is by no means the same as saying that party strength has risen.

There are local and personal factors in each of the major races that make the results unpredictable. They will undoubtedly effect the future of both the Republican and Democratic parties.

IN NEW YORK CITY, the Republicans have not yet come to the place of anticipating that their candidate for mayor, State Atty. Gen. Louis J. Lefkowitz, will actually beat Democrat Robert F. Wagner, who is seeking re-election to a third term. But they do not consider it impossible that the Wagner vote will be so sharply cut by the independent candidacy of City Controller Lawrence E. Gerosa that Lefkowitz might squeeze in.

The Republican objective, in any case, is to slash any Wagner plurality far below the usual overwhelming margin Democratic candidates have in the city. This, they consider, would further dim Democratic prestige—already badly sullied by school and construction scandals and by a bitter feud between Wagner and the old-line party leaders.

For Gov. Nelson Rockefeller, the Republican who plans to win re-election next year and use the strong New York State base in a major drive for the GOP presidential nomination in 1964, the situation could not have developed more happily.

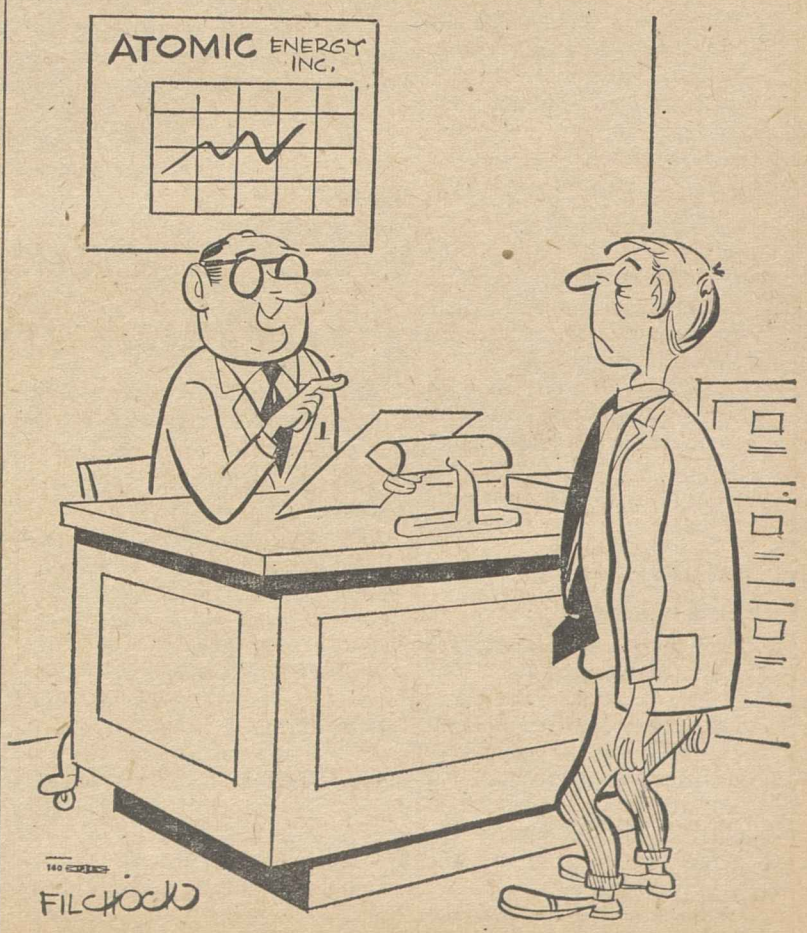
IN JERSEY, former Labor Sec. James P. Mitchell is hoping to take over the state for the Republicans by winning the governorship in a race against Democrat Richard P. Hughes. Mitchell has the advantage of national stature and the support of a party apparently unified after a bitter primary. Democrats say the "gap" is closing and they called in Pres. Kennedy to speak in behalf of Hughes.

Mitchell in the past has been a supporter of Richard M. Nixon in Republican presidential politics but if he becomes governor it would not be hard to think of him as shifting to Rockefeller.

In Texas, the real question is whether anti-liberal elements of the state Democratic Party will continue their trend toward the Republican Party.

The Democratic candidate for Congress in a special election in the San Antonio district, State Sen. Henry B. Gonzales, is a liberal who normally carries his county by large majorities. He ise hotly challenged now by a conservative Republican, John Goode, who is getting the full support of national GOP conservative leaders. A victory for Goode would give impetus to the Republican effort to build a strong base in the state.

There is a special congressional election in Louisiana, too. It pits two announced conservatives against each other—Republican Charlton H. Lyons and Democrat Joseph D. Waggoner. Lyons is an oilman who says he thinks like Sen. Barry Goldwater. Waggoner is a former president of his local Citizens Council, a segregationist group.



"I understand you got a fatal dose of radiation, Endrow, and I want you to know I'm putting you in for a raise!"

Schnitzler Bids Rutgers Probe Automation Field

New Brunswick, N. J.—Rutgers University, which pioneered 30 years ago by establishing an Institute of Management and Labor Relations, could take the lead again by studying the problems brought by automation, AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler said here at a cornerstone laying for the labor unit of the institute.

Saying that labor has consistently supported a broad program of federal aid to education and will urge Congress to enact an aid to education bill as its first order of business next January, Schnitzler said education should be a civilizing process.

"We believe that in general the schools should teach our children that there is no virtue in poverty, no morality in oppression of the weak by the strong, no justice in segregation, no comfort in piling up surpluses" while the people of other nations suffer, he said.

Schnitzler told his audience that Rutgers could "devote itself to a special project which is becoming of increasing concern to both employers and workers—the problems of automation, the wholesale displacement of human beings by machines."

The notion that an employer has no responsibility to workers left high and dry by automation will not bear analysis, he said.

"With education and understanding of the problem, I am positive that the transition can be worked out in an orderly way without needless suffering" and by giving displaced workers an opportunity for training for other jobs.

Answers Needed

Schnitzler advised workers and businessmen to stop blaming their troubles on government, and to help find the answers to educational shortcomings such as these:

Half of the top third of high school graduates do not go to college because their families cannot afford to send them; classrooms are in short supply, teachers' salaries are inadequate, and there is a shortage of scientists, engineers and money for creative research.

Funds for the erection of the institute's new labor unit were contributed, the speaker said, by the William Green Memorial Fund, the AFL-CIO, its affiliated international unions and their New Jersey subordinate bodies.

Among others who participated in the program were Vice Pres. Lewis M. Herrman of the New Jersey State AFL-CIO, and Pres. Frank Williams of the Stonecutters' New Jersey local.

Sayen to Leave ALPA Presidency

C. N. Sayen, who has headed the Air Line Pilots since 1951, has notified the union's board of directors that he desires to be relieved of the presidency of the union.

Sayen, asked to be relieved "in the near future" but not later than November, 1962, the date of the next scheduled meeting of the union's governing body. He said his decision was due to "personal reasons." He was re-elected last year to a term of office expiring in 1964.

Major Health Insurance Gains in URW Pact

Akron—The Rubber Workers have hailed as a "major breakthrough" for the union a new agreement between URW Local 76 and A. Schulman, Inc., providing up to 730 days of hospital care in a semi-private room for employes, retirees and their dependents.

A $450 maximum surgical fee schedule also is provided. During hospitalization $15 is paid for the first day visit of the doctor and $5 per day for each visit up to 119 days. The previous contract had lesser benefits.

URW Renews College Program for Members

Akron, O.—Seven special courses designed to meet the needs of Rubber Workers are being offered in the fourth "Chance to Learn" series set up by the international union and the University of Akron.

The series opens the week of Nov. 6 with each class meeting once a week for six weeks.

Six classes are offered between 3 and 5 p. m.—basic economic ideas, improved English, practical politics, social psychology, parliamentary procedure and "America in Crisis." A basic speech course will be held both afternoon and evenings.

The courses, which have University of Akron faculty members among the instructors, are designed to give union members the chance to improve themselves as individuals and as active members of their locals.

"We are happy to continue this joint URW-Akron University education program which is fast becoming a tradition in the Akron area," said URW Pres. George Burdon. "This type of program helps to build better citizens and better-informed leaders in both the union and the community."

Dr. Norman P. Auburn, president of the university, said the school is "very pleased at this evidence of cooperative educational planning."

"We hope that this current effort will prove to be the forerunner of additional and more extensive programs which will prove valuable to the working men and women of our community," he said.

Against Conservative Attack:

MSU President Upholds Role Of Labor Relations Center

East Lansing, Mich.—The Labor & Industrial Relations Center of Michigan State University here has apparently emerged unharmed from a Republican-sponsored hostile legislative investigation.

State Sen. Lynn O. Francis (R), a member of the John Birch Society, has concluded public hearings on his contention that the center is being operated improperly because it is serving labor as well as management and industry. He gained only repudiations of his thesis. Francis has given no indication of when the committee he heads might be expected to report.

The probe was touched off when the Booth newspapers, a conservative Michigan chain, printed a series of articles in which it cited charges of "imbalance" at the center in favor of organized labor and against business. Francis was quoted as charging a film the center produced on the organization and purpose of the AFL-CIO was "propaganda" in favor of unionism and against industry.

The film was in essence the story of the Michigan State AFL-CIO, according to August Scholle, president of the state body, and Jack Stieber, director of the center. The State AFL-CIO paid half the $7,000 cost.

Origin of Charges

Charles P. Rogers, management representative at the center, called the film "unnecessary" and said the center's program was "unrealistic" because it "tries to limit services to management" while "labor is completely free to do what it wants."

The major defense of the center came from John A. Hannah, MSU president and a Republican. He emphasized that the testimony he and members of the center staff gave was on a voluntary basis, since the Michigan constitution gives an elected board of trustees authority over the university—not the legislature.

Hannah, who was forced to wait through two days before being allowed to give his testimony, called the establishment of the center in 1955 a "natural if belated development" of the university in line with the original intent of the Morrill Act designating the former Michigan Agricultural College as a land grant college under the federal act signed by Pres. Abraham Lincoln.

The trustees who authorized the center did not include a single labor man. Yet they acted, the MSU president said, because they realized that "our activities in the industrial field were not properly coordinated and that we should expand those activities in view of the history of industrial development in Michigan and our obligation to contribute . . . to the improvement of labor-management relations."

"If your committee is interested," he said, "in learning whether MSU as a whole has balanced its services to labor unions with comparable services to industrial management, then I most respectfully submit that it must look at the entire university, and not just at the Labor & Industrial Relations Center.

"The finding, I am confident, would be that services to management far outnumber and outweigh services to labor unions."

Serves People

He maintained the center was "wisely conceived" in keeping with the university's relations to all the people of Michigan, reminding Francis and his committee that the people established the university itself "to serve their needs as they developed and were identified."

"It is supported by the tax dollars of all of the people of Michigan, rich and poor alike—farmers, factory workers, businessmen, shopkeepers, teachers—all of those who go to make up our complex society," Hannah said.

"Its obligation is to all of them, not to one segment or another. It is faithful to that obligation. I have confidence that this committee will come to the same conclusion."

Rogers, whose replacement in the center's management post had been talked about for some time, was relieved before the hearings opened and has been reassigned by the university, where he has tenure. Meantime he began touring Michigan with the controversial film and lecturing to conservative groups about what he continues to term is the labor-management center's "unbalance."

Delaware Labor Asks Better State Laws

Wilmington—The Delaware State AFL-CIO, pressing the legislature hard for reapportionment and other law reforms, has adopted a 10-point legislative program at its annual convention here, and has set up finance and policy committees to recommend a plan for raising funds needed to support the program.

The convention voted support for 25 resolutions and instructed committees to study a proposal that all affiliated locals contribute $1 per member per year either by the donation of individual members or upon authorization by the local.

The delegates elected 19 executive board members for a two-year term, and gave a standing ovation to Sen. J. Caleb Boggs (R-Del.), who was elected with labor support last year over former Sen. J. Allen Frear, Jr., conservative Democrat.

Council Pres. Clement J. Lemon introduced Boggs as "one who has supported more progressive legislation in a few months than his predecessor had in 12 years."

Boggs told the delegates that he was "happy to be classified as a friend of organized labor" and said that, as a man with a long memory, he would remember that he would not have been elected except for the hard work of his labor supporters.

The convention called on the legislature, at an expected special session this year or the regular session next year, to achieve some or all of the following objectives:

- Establish a state Dept. of Labor.
- Reapportion the legislative districts to provide fairer representation than the present act of 1897 under which 17 percent of the voters can elect a majority in the state House and about 21 percent in the Senate.
- Improve the workmen's compensation law for injured workers, their wives, and children under 18.
- Extend unemployment insurance benefits from 26 weeks to a 39-week maximum and repeal unfair disqualifications.
- Amend the state constitution to provide for initiative and referendum procedures, and call for a constitutional convention.
- Enact a fair labor standards law with a state minimum wage, and overtime after a specified number of hours.

The program also calls for enactment of a state Davis-Bacon prevailing wage law to prohibit substandard wages on public construction projects, comprehensive consumer protection laws, a state civil service law protecting state employes, and an increase in state assistance to the aged, the disabled, and dependent children.

Delegates urged that the State AFL-CIO appeal to the courts for a fair reapportionment law if the legislature does not act soon.

MCA Accepts Actors' Policy On Agency

Hollywood, Calif.—Music Corporation of America has agreed with the Screen Actors Guild to end either its agency business or its film production before the 1962 fall television season.

The agreement is in keeping with a recent announcement by SAG that after next Jan. 1 it would no longer grant or renew any waivers of its regulations barring an agency from functioning as a producer. The regulations were designed to avoid a conflict between an agent's interests as a producer (the employer) and his interests as an agent representing actors (the employes).

SAG waived the regulations in a number of cases starting in 1952 to encourage and promote television film production and thus create employment opportunities for its members at a time when motion picture production had fallen off.

The Guild now finds that the waivers have accomplished their purpose and are no longer justified.

SAG's board of directors, in a special letter to all members, said it "believes it to be a foregone conclusion that MCA will surrender the agency franchise and maintain and probably expand production activities."

The board said MCA would be permitted to prepare for theatrical production during the transition period, although no actual production may take place. When MCA terminates its agency business, all agency contracts it then has in effect will be automatically cancelled, the board said.

Is Thinking Dangerous?

'Rational' Consumer Disturbs Marketers

The trouble with price-conscious housewives and consumer representatives seeking legislation against deceptive packages and labels on foods and household products is that they are trying to be rational.

At least that's what one industry witness asserted as a Senate subcommittee resumed hearings on packaging and labeling.

Louis Cheskin, head of a Chicago marketing research firm, warned that the "dangerous thinking" exhibited by consumer spokesmen could give modern society a collective nervous breakdown and push civilization back to the 11th Century.

He explained patiently to the subcommittee, with Sen. Philip A. Hart (D-Mich.) presiding, that "emotional, irrational factors play major roles in the buying of consumer products." Some 90 percent of all purchases, Cheskin estimated, "are for the purpose of meeting psychological needs."

All in the Mind?

Such "psychological satisfactions," he declared, are "necessary for the individual to maintain emotional stability and mental health in a highly-developed industrial society. Our entire social structure," he warned, "depends on the mass production of psychologically satisfying products."

Warning Congress not to meddle in esoteric fields, Cheskin indicated that to require such suggested measures as printing the weight of a product on the front of a soap carton or food can would "mutilate the psychological appeal of the package."

Although none of the consumer witnesses at an earlier hearing in June had suggested eliminating refrigators or motor cars, Cheskin spoke out strongly against any such idea.

'Chaos Would Reign'

"What would happen to the American people if automobiles and refrigerators suddenly disappeared?" he asked. Answering his own question, he declared:

"Our men and women would not be as rational as they are now. Most would behave in an antisocial manner . . . Chaos would reign."

Another packaging researcher, W. J. Faison, told the subcommittee that the problem "is not that the consumer is being cheated," but mostly "one of communication." He said his studies have shown that consumers would prefer to have the quantity of food in a package decreased rather than have the price raised, that they are more concerned with convenience than with price. If people really wanted to save money, he suggested they could make their own bread and cakes instead of buying pre-baked breads and cake mixes.

Don Lefever, merchandising manager for the consumer-owned Greenbelt Co-Op stores, said the problem was one of deception and not psychology.

He cited two packages of cake mixes, one 20 percent larger in size than the other. The smaller package, he said, actually contains more cake mix than the larger.

Looks Deceive

While the standard size for catsup has been for many years a 14-ounce bottle, "recently we have noticed bottles which look approximately the same but contain two ounces less."

A cookie package, reduced in content but in the same-sized carton, has a label that "could well come equipped with a magnifying glass so that the consumer could note the new weight," Lefever declared.

Dog food, he added, traditionally comes in 16-ounce cans but "upon checking recently, we noticed that some of these cans are becoming 15.5, 15 and even 14.5 ounce cans." Two "giant" size package of detergents are in identical size boxes, the co-op official said, but one contains 33 percent less net weight.

He urged an amendment to the Food & Drug Act to permit the Secretary of Health, Education & Welfare to issue regulations standardizing the size of containers.

Meanwhile several agencies have called for an amendment to give workers the right to engage in a lawful strike. These include officers of the New Democratic Party, Pres. David Archer of the Ontario Federation of Labor, Pres. William Jenoves of the Toronto Labor Council, Assistant Director Eamon Park of the Steelworkers, and Chairman J. Sidney Midanik of the Toronto Civil Liberties Committee.

A. R. Johnstone, Canadian vice president of the striking union, said the ruling had made the strikers more determined than ever to win their fight.

'THE METHOD' was brought from Broadway to the union hall when a group of Office Employes enacted a typical white collar organizing situation before the OEIU's Northeastern Organizational Conference in New York. Here the cast discusses the scenario of its 35-minute playlet with Dick Moore, right, actor-director and editor of Equity Magazine, who provided professional guidanee and direction.

Civic Leaders Assail Ontario Strike Ruling

Toronto—Civic and political leaders have added their voices to those of labor in a surge of protests against a magistrate's ruling that Ontario laws contain no guarantee of labor's right to strike.

The ruling came from Magistrate Thomas Elmore, who dismissed two charges brought by Local 299, Hotel & Restaurant Employes, against the Royal York Hotel. Elmore acknowledged that the union had complied wtih every pre-strike step required in the Ontario Labor Act but held that the act contains no specific section giving workers a protected right to strike after completion of such procedures.

Local 299 suffered another jolt, and cries of protest were renewed when an Unemployment Insurance Commission claims officer turned down a union test application for jobless benefits. The case will be appealed to a board of referees and, if necessary, to an umpire in Ottawa.

The workers have been on strike at the Royal York, owned by the Canadian Pacific Railroad, for six months. The hotel management ordered the strikers to return to work on the hotel's terms or be discharged. It later fired them and it was this firing that the union carried to magistrate's court.

The ruling will be appealed.

Prof. Commager Joins UAW Review Board

Detroit—Henry Steele Commager, professor of history and American studies at Amherst College, has accepted appointment to the Auto Workers' Public Review Board, UAW Pres. Walter P. Reuther has announced.

NMU Pension, Severance Benefits Up

New York—Two benefits for seamen growing out of 1961 contract negotiations between the Maritime Union and deep sea shipping companies—a new severance pay plan and increased pension payments—have been put into effect here.

The severance pay plan, giving seamen wages of from 15 to 80 days if their ship is laid up more than 90 days, the complement is reduced or the ship is lost, sold or transferred, was approved by trustees of the jointly-administered NMU Employment Security Plan. It is financed by an employer contribution of 25 cents per man per day.

NMU Pres. Joseph Curran and Pres. Ralph E. Casey of the American Merchant Marine Institute also announced changes in the NMU pension and welfare programs:

- Effective Nov. 1, 1961, retired seamen receive a 25 percent increase in pension benefits to bring their normal monthly pension to $125 plus social security payments.
- Effective Oct. 1, 1961, surgical hospitalization benefits for dependents of seamen were increased.

The higher benefits were approved by 12 union-management trustees on the basis of an increase of 50 cents per man per day in employer contributions effective last June 16. The agreement was reached by the 40,000-member union and 74 companies operating 590 deep sea vessels.

'61 Raises Won by 2.4 Million to Date

About 2.4 million workers are slated to get wage increases under major union contracts negotiated in the first nine months of 1961, the U.S. Dept. of Labor has reported.

Not included, however, were settlements in construction, the service trades, finance, or those involving fewer than 1,000 workers.

The settlements left rates unchanged for an additional 200,000 workers and reduced for about 17,000. Most workers whose rates were not raised gained benefits from pension and insurance improvements and other supplemental benefits.

The most common wage increases were between 1.5 and 3 percent, the department's Bureau of Labor Statistics said.

Oklahoma Labor Fights 'Work' Petition Drive

site for its first meeting. The committee then joined with a group called Oklahomans for Right-to-Work to lay plans for an initiative petition drive announced to begin Jan. 15.

Len Yarborough, executive vice president of the State AFL-CIO, blasted the drive as "a disruptive effort by people who are not residents of Oklahoma to destroy 54 years of good labor-management relations" in the state.

Yarborough pointed out that only one of the CofC committee members is from Oklahoma. He is Robert H. Spahn, production manager of the company which publishes Oklahoma City's only daily newspapers and which forced out the Typographers and other printing trade unions.

The State AFL-CIO, denouncing the "importation of union busters," also pointed out that the two key speakers at the statewide "right-to-work" conference were both Texans —Howard Jensen, vice president of the Lone Star Steel Co. and a member of the Chamber of Commerce committee, and Desmond A. Barry, president of Galveston Truck Lines.

The petition drive followed a sharp defeat for the "work" forces earlier this year in the state legislature, where proponents failed in repeated attempts to force bills prohibiting union shop agreements out of committee.

The "right to work" group will have 90 days after filing an initiative petition with the Secretary of State to collect approximately 136,000 signatures required by law to get the proposal on the ballot. The group announced that it will seek 250,000 signatures during the period beginning Jan. 15.

Meanwhile the State AFL-CIO has filed a $100,000 damage suit and injunction petition against Oklahomans for Right-to-Work, Inc.

The libel suit, filed in Oklahoma County District Court, charged the "right-to-work" group with falsely stating in its newsletter that all union members in the state had been ordered to pay an extra $1 a month to fight "right-to-work" legislation.

State AFL-CIO Pres. Roy Tillman charged that the statement was "calculated to arouse the prejudice, hatred and misunderstanding of citizens of Oklahoma." The State AFL-CIO also asked the court to enjoin the "'right-to-work" promoters from circulating "slanderous" literature and from "intimidating" business in money-raising efforts.

A drumfire of editorial support for "right-to-work" has already begun from the state's traditionally conservative and anti-labor newspapers.

The "right-to-work" group's newsletter says its efforts have "been blessed with a favorable press. Our files bulge with news clippings, letters to the editor and trenchant editorial comment from the grassroots press."

NLRB Upholds Bethlehem in Shipyard Case

The National Labor Relations Board has ruled that Bethlehem Steel's Shipbuilding Division was not guilty of unfair labor practices except on one minor point, when it repudiated long-standing contract terms in negotiating a new contract with two unions in 1959 and unilaterally instituted new work rules.

The company a year later withdrew its unilateral rules and the workers returned to their jobs with wage improvements and other protections.

In the meantime, the company's attitude had resulted in a 152-day strike by 17,000 members of the Shipbuilding Workers and 1,000 members of Technical Engineers Local 151. There was no evidence of "anti-union animus" in the company's refusal to yield, however, the board said in upholding the rulings of a trial examiner who said both the company and the union bargained stubbornly.

The board found that the management of Bethlehem's eight East Coast shipyards did commit an unfair practice when it insisted on a contract clause requiring the signature of employes on grievances, and ordered it to desist.

Shipbuilders Pres. John J. Grogan said the decision was "startling" and lawyers will review it.

Rally Hears Messages:

Berlin Labor Hailed By Kennedy, Meany

Berlin, Germany—Warm expressions of support from Pres. John F. Kennedy and AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany for the trade unionists of West Germany were carried by Pres. James B. Carey of the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers to a labor rally here Oct. 27 in Free Berlin.

Carey represented the AFL-CIO at a mass meeting sponsored by the Federation of German Trade Unions in connection with a visit of 20 executive board members of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions. The ICFTU board members came to show their support of West German labor in the face of the Soviet wall that cuts the city in half, and to gather first-hand information on the dangers the wall creates.

Meany said in his message that Berlin is the focal point of a worldwide crisis because here "the Soviet enemy of human freedom and peace is concentrating his heaviest forces of assault and aggression." More than ever before, he declared, "American labor stands solidly with free Berlin and the Federal German Republic devoted to democracy, human well-being and peace."

U.S. workers have "the warmest sympathy with the people of the Soviet Zone of Germany and with all the other peoples behind the Iron Curtain in their common aspiration to fredom," the federation president also said.

'Great Demonstration'

Kennedy's message called the rally a "great demonstration for the cause of fredom," pointing out that free union movements are "focal points for the aspirations of millions who hope for a better life and a freer voice."

Man should not have to depend upon "the largesse of an aloof state for the satisfaction of what is his by right," the President said, concluding: "For this reason, unions in the free world are the very bulwark of individual right, the voice of conscience, the living examples that free men can control their own destinies.

"These are some of the reasons why you gather today. The American people support you in your resolution and commend your determination."

Meany's message said that when the Kremlin and its East German puppets built the wall, "they demonstrated before the world the utter inhumanity of the Soviet system." The wall, like those the Nazis built around the ghettoes of Warsaw and the concentration camps of Hitler, he said, is a "challenge to all lovers of freedom and a grave threat to world peace and liberty."

"To the workers of West and East Berlin," the federation spokesman declared, "I give the solemnest assurance" in behalf of the AFL-CIO and all U.S. workers "that this wall will never divide us from them."

Meany re-emphasized that American labor prizes the principle of self-determination for all captive peoples no less than for the people of Africa and Asia. He wrote:

"We of American labor do not underestimate thet brute power or aggressive design of the Soviet imperialist megaton-maniacs. Only fanatics, devoid of all consideration for life and human dignity, could seek to terrorize mankind as they are now doing with the horrible thermonuclear fallout and political blackmail. But the American people and American labor are not over-awed by their bluster and threats."

Recalls 1948 Blockade

"As in the days of the 1948 blockade," he declared, "American labor realizes what is at stake in Berlin. We are confident that the Berliners with their indomitable spirit will meet their test under fire in a manner worthy of the finest fighters for freedom.

"For our part, we will do our all to rally our country and all other freedom-loving nations for the defense of Berlin. We know that if the freedom of Berlin were sacrificed, the freedom of the entire German people, of all free Europe, and of our own country would be jeopardized.

"When we fight for and together with fredom-loving Berlin, we are fighting for a free America and a free world—for freedom on both sides of the Iron Curtain."

Carey also represented the AFL-CIO at a Brussels, Belgium, ICFTU board meeting where he read another Kennedy message of good wishes and greetings to the world's free trade unions which, he said, are again "demonstrating their force as spokesmen for freedom and opponents of tyranny."

Union Bonding Costs Cut—No Claims Filed

Schnitzler and a committee of AFL-CIO secretary-treasurers, agreed that the heavy charge imposed had not been justified on the basis of experience and should be reduced. The reduction was effective as of Oct. 4 (Oct. 8 in Texas) and proportional refunds will be made at the next premium anniversary date of coverage.

Schnitzler said in his report that the reduction in rates is added evidence that "there is no justification for the continued imposition of exceptionally strict and expensive bonding requirements for trade union officers and employes."

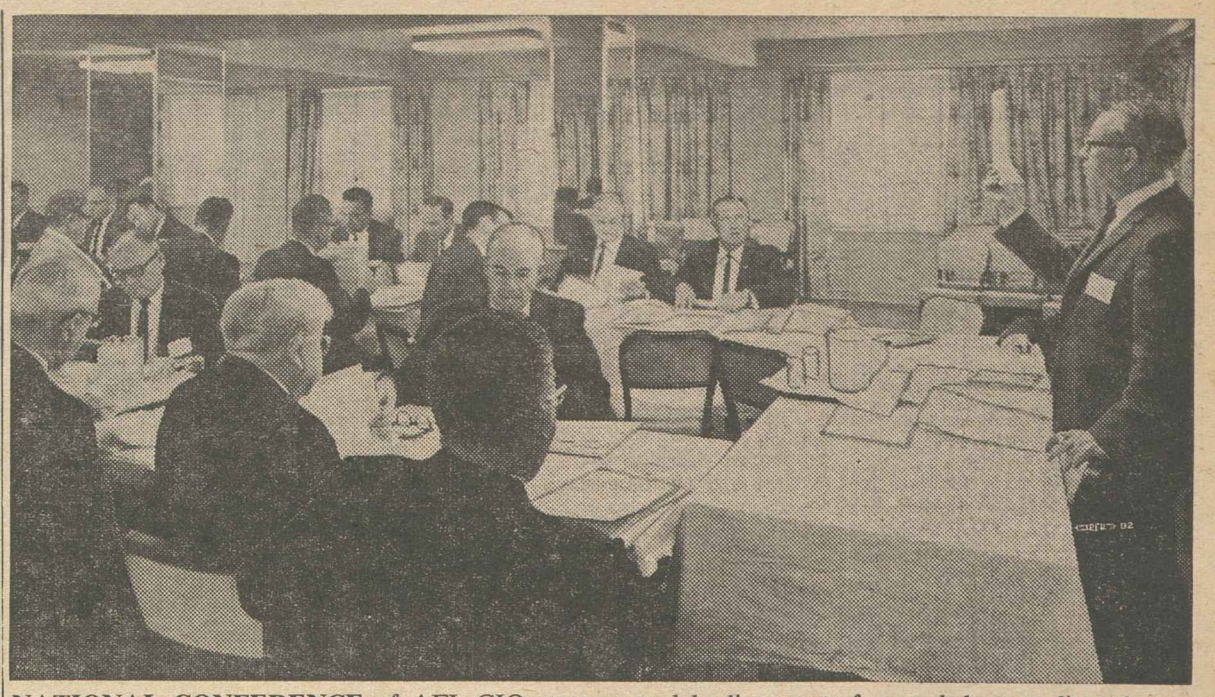
The "faithful discharge of duties" bonds, he said, resulted from "an obscure clause in the Landrum-Griffin Act" and represented "a new concept" in bonding.

Higher Costs Resulted

Declaring that the higher cost of bonds since Landrum-Griffin has had to be met from "union assets that could be used to promote the well-being of union members," Schnitzler added:

"If unions were allowed to develop in cooperation with the surety companies a schedule of rates for commercial blanket fidelity bonds . . . they could obtain greater coverage for a lesser rate and the assets of the trade union movement would be conserved . . . for the benefit of the members."

Union officials who participated with Schnitzler and AFL-CIO General Counsel J. Albert Woll in negotiations with the bonding companies were Secretary-Treasurers Toney Gallo, Cement Workers; William A. Smallwood, Communications Workers; Hunter P. Wharton, Operating Engineers; Arthur P. Gildea, Brewery Workers; Frank L. Noakes, Maintenance of Way Employes; and Sec. Joseph D. Keenan of the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers.



NATIONAL CONFERENCE of AFL-CIO state central bodies meets for workshop studies of state social security laws. Here Clinton M. Fair, an assistant director of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Social Security, presides over sessions analyzing widely-varying workmen's compensation laws and planning to seek improvements.

Meany Hits 'Confused Patchwork' Of State Social Security Laws

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany has ripped into the "confused patchwork" of social security laws in the 50 states and called for a coordinated legislative drive to improve protection of workers against the hazards of injury, unemployment, illness and old age.

The federation president's remarks came as the AFL-CIO Dept. of Social Security convened the first of two conferences of officials from state labor central bodies on state security laws. The conference, held in Washington with delegates present from 22 states east of the Mississippi, was to be followed by a second meeting in Denver, beginning Nov. 6.

Declaring that "the well-being of our country can be no greater than the well-being of its individual citizens," Meany said the nation has "come a long way" from the time when "cradle to the grave" security was looked upon as "a harebrained theory."

"I am convinced," he said, "that a great majority of the American people accept the desirability and the need for that kind of security and I think most Americans are aware that it would not weaken our free society, but rather would make us far stronger."

The three-day conference, featuring closed workshop discussions on workmen's compensation, unemployment compensation and health insurance, concluded with a luncheon session at which discussion leaders reviewed the workshop programs.

Nelson H. Cruikshank, director of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Social Security, termed the sessions "fruitful and instructive" and said the recommendations of the state federations would be "extremely helpful" to the AFL-CIO's social security committee.

Conference discussion leaders and speakers included Dr. Earl T. Cheit of the University of California Institute of Industrial Relations; Philip Booth, U.S. Dept. of Labor's Bureau of Employment Security; and Clinton M. Fair, Ray Munts and Lisbeth Bamberger of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Social Security.

Meany told the delegates that although old age medical care required federal rather than state legislation "we will need the help of every one of you" to assure passage of the Anderson-King bill.

On the state level, Meany pointed to the wide differences among workmen's compensation laws.

"If you lost an arm in New Mexico," he said, "you might collect $6,840. Step across the border into Arizona, and the same arm would be worth $33,000."

Few Achieve Goal

Only a few states, he noted, pay an injured worker two-thirds of his weekly wage "even though almost all these laws set that percentage as an intended goal."

If the "states rights people" don't want a uniform federal program, Meany declared, the solution is for them "to do a better job in the states themselves."

In unemployment insurance, the AFL-CIO president noted, "there are incredible differences from state to state." He called for minimum federal standards of benefits and added that "it makes no sense" to "wholly isolate" funds from one state to another since some labor markets spread across state lines.

Scheduled to address the first session of the western conference are Assistant Sec. of Labor Jerry R. Holleman and Colorado Gov. Stephen L. R. McNichols.

First Charter Issued for Bolting Teamster Local

had come to the AFL-CIO from various Teamster locals on the question of seeking federal local union charters, and that he was "quite sure" that more charters would be issued.

Each of the locals, he pointed out, operates under contract and has to work out its own legal issues.

"We are investigating various situations and will move as the opportunity presents itself," he said. "We will cooperate at the proper time, if they wish."

The situation, he said, "indicates to me that there is a considerable number of workers who will vote for a clean, decent union if they are given the opportunity."

Meany's action followed the recent Executive Council meeting in New York authorizing issuance of charters to Teamster locals "not happy" with the leadership of Teamster Pres. James R. Hoffa and indicating "a desire to join the ranks" of the AFL-CIO.

Luken, a long-time foe of Teamster Pres. James R. Hoffa, led a mass revolt against the IBT that culminated last August in four Cincinnati locals voting to disaffiliate. The vote on membership in Luken's own local of dairy drivers was 1,798 to 2.

Luken has traced the split between the Cincinnati Teamsters and the international back to 1953 when Hoffa's lieutenant in Ohio, William Presser, sent in his brother-in-law Harry Friedman to "take over." Opposition built up quickly to the move to impose direction from outside, with Luken leading the anti-Hoffa elements.

Auditors Rap High Rate of Bank Thefts

ficers were involved proportionately in more frauds than bank employes since there are four times as many non-officer employes. He added:

"If one were to place the final responsibility for bank defalcations, it would have to be placed upon the board of directors. Too frequently, directors of banks are selected for window dressing or for the impact they might have upon building deposit balances."

The audit association official also urged all banks to make "mandatory" a two-week vacation for every employe.

He did not indicate employe welfare as a reason, but rather the opportunity it gave to uncover possible fraud in the regular employe's absence.

Commenting on the high rate of bank fraud, Schnitzler noted in his report:

"If you put the record of the officers and employes of banks against the record of trade union financial officers and employes, the balance is shockingly against the banks—and should be shocking to the country."

Unemployment Rate Stuck Near 7% for 11th Month

AFL-CIO PRES. GEORGE MEANY signs a Federal local union charter to be presented to the Cincinnati Dairy Employes Union, whose 2,200 members have voted overwhelmingly both at a local meeting and in a National Labor Relations Board election to break with the unaffiliated Teamsters. Looking on, left to right, are AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler, James T. Luken, president of the dairy drivers' local, and William L. Kircher, AFL-CIO regional representative in Cincinnati who will formally install the charter.

'Hurts Labor Movement':

Meany Hits Hoffa As 'Bad Image'

Teamster Pres. James R. Hoffa has hurt the labor movement through "the very bad image" he presents to the public, AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany declared in a network television and radio interview.

"The type of conduct that is tolerated . . . even encouraged" by Teamster officials "is certainly hurting labor," Meany said. But he made it clear that he has no fears that Teamster organizational competition will harm the AFL-CIO.

"The AFL-CIO is not going to break up" nor will its affiliates "cave in and surrender" at the threat of Teamster raids, Meany declared. He said Hoffa was indulging "in a little wishful thinking" when he predicted that the AFL-CIO will fall apart if it doesn't readmit the expelled union.

Meany labeled Hoffa's declaration of a major organizing campaign "just loud talk" and pointed out that "the biggest campaign he has been engaged in"—an effort to prevent Cincinnati dairy drivers from bolting the Teamsters—resulted in a 1664 to 12 defeat for the Teamsters in a National Labor Relations Board election.

Raps Retrenchment

Questioned on the American Broadcasting Co. program, Issues and Answers, Meany warned that expansion, not retrenchment, of government programs is necessary to stimulate the nation's economic growth.

Pres. Kennedy's decision to cut back on spending to avoid a budget deficit he called "a mistake," declaring that a "healthy economy is just as much a weapon in the cold

Goldberg Sees Rift in Teamsters

Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg has pointed to the revolt of Cincinnati truck drivers as evidence of "general dissatisfaction" within the Teamsters. It shows, he said, that I.B.T. Pres. James R. Hoffa does not have the support "that his propaganda would lead us to believe."

Citing the 1,664-to-12 vote by which the Cincinnati local voted "to rejoin the main body of American labor," Goldberg declared:

"I feel that this is not the end of a single revolt, but the beginning of a general dissatisfaction."

Goldberg's prediction was made in an address to the graduating class of the FBI National Academy, where local law enforcement officers from throughout the nation have been receiving advanced training from FBI instructors.

The Secretary of Labor charged the graduates to use the power of law to protect unions and workers in "the right to strike, the right to

Contrasts With Signs Of Upturn

By John Barry

The nation's unemployment rate hit the second highest October level in 10 years as it stuck near 7 percent for the 11th straight month.

The October rate of 6.8 percent was unchanged from September, the Labor Dept. reported, in contrast with signs of recovery in other sectors of the economy.

Over a 10-year span, the level for the month was topped only in October 1958, when a jobless rate of 6.9 percent was recorded. The lowest October rate during the period was 3 percent in 1952.

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, interviewed on the program Issues and Answers over the ABC radio and television network, said labor is "not very happy" with the October job report and added that he saw no indications the picture would improve.

"In fact," Meany said, "we feel it will be just as bad in January and February of this coming year as it was in the past January and February."

4 Million-Mark Breached

The Bureau of Labor Statistics' summary report for October showed a seasonal decline of 151,000 in the number of persons out of work, bringing the total to 3,934,000. It was the first time in a year that the figure had dipped under the 4 million mark.

This, plus an October record of 67.8 million jobholders, brought expressions of gratification from Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg, who commented on the report in a

Strategy Upset for '62:

Democratic Sweep Blow to GOP Hopes

By Willard Shelton

A Democratic sweep of major elections in New Jersey, New York City and San Antonio, Tex., gave a sharp setback to Republican political strategists hoping to lay a foundation for an all-out drive next year to win control of the House of Representatives.

In state and municipal elections in various areas, the GOP scored scattering gains but there was no solid trend of the kind which in earlier years has forecast substantial future victories for the winning party.

With the Republican national campaign machinery wholly in the hands of conservatives—National Committee Chairman William E. Miller, Senate Campaign Committee Chairman Barry Goldwater, House Campaign Committee Chairman Bob Wilson—the GOP lost in Texas, New Jersey and New York City with candidates ranging widely across the political spectrum.

The most stunning result was the victory of Democrat Richard J. Hughes over James P. Mitchell for governor of New Jersey. Mitchell, former secretary of labor in the Eisenhower cabinet, was given a substantial edge in advance speculation, and he had the campaign help both of Eisenhower and of

Kennedy to Address AFL-CIO Convention

Pres. Kennedy has accepted an invitation to address the AFL-CIO convention in Miami Beach in December, AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany has announced.

The President was invited to speak at the opening session Dec. 7, Meany said, but a final decision on the date will be made later. The convention is scheduled to run until Dec. 14.

New Yardsticks Urged for BLS For More Accurate Tally of Idle

"No amount of statistical manipulation can alter the fact that unemployment is our major economic problem" and "has been getting progressively worse for the last decade."

Economic Trends & Outlook, a feature of the November issue of the AFL-CIO American Federationist, makes this point in a sharp counter-attack on right-wing charges that government statistics overestimate the number of unemployed workers in the labor force.

If anything, the Federationist article points out, the monthly job survey tends to "understate the unemployment problem."

The AFL-CIO analysis, prepared by the Dept. of Research, declares that the Reader's Digest and other critics of the Bureau of Labor Statistics advocate "a sleight-of-hand approach which would reduce the unemployment figure—but not the number of people unemployed." The article notes:

"Continued high levels of unemployment in the face of mounting economic recovery would indicate the need for governmental economic policies and programs which would stimulate the creation of additional job opportunities. It serves the purposes of opponents of such governmental activity to promote the idea that our unemployment problem isn't as bad as it appears."

Describing the present procedures for estimating employment and unemployment, based on a carefully selected sampling of 35,000 households throughout the nation, the article states:

"The AFL-CIO believes the present figures are sound. But we also believe improvements can be made to enable the data to provide more information on the degree of employment and unemployment."

Counted in the labor force, the AFL-CIO analysis notes, are

TWUA Files NLRB Charge:

Threat to Close Mill Laid to Textile Giant

By David L. Perlman

The Textile Workers Union of America has accused giant Burlington Industries of threatening to close its Cleveland, Tenn., mill if workers there vote for union representation.

The Tennessee mill is only a short distance from Rossville, Ga., where Burlington's only organized mill is scheduled to be liquidated next month—unless the Allied Industrial Workers are able to get the National Labor Relations Board to obtain an injunction blocking the shutdown. The AIW has charged that the Georgia plant is being closed to avoid bargaining with the union, which won representation rights last August.

Unfair labor practice charges filed by the TWUA—which has been conducting an organizing drive at the Tennessee plant—allege that a notice to employes by Burlington Board Chairman J. Spencer Love is an attempt to "coerce" workers into voting against a union. An NLRB election has been scheduled for Nov. 20.

Both plants are part of the Peerless Woolen Mills division of Burlington Industries, the nation's largest textile chain.

Love, in a bulletin board notice, warned employes of the Tennessee plant that the mill has been losing money and may have to be closed unless workers show "an understanding of what is required of you" and give management "fullest cooperation in every way."

Rossville Closing Cited

Love specifically mentioned the liquidation of the Rossville plant.

In a letter to the NLRB charging Burlington with unfair labor practices, TWUA Assistant Gen. Counsel Edward Wynne declared:

"It is our contention that Mr. Love's demand for all possible 'cooperation'—when viewed in the light of our pending election, the closing of the Rossville, Ga., Peerless plant, and the whole background of Burlington's plant closing practice in the face of unionization—amounts to an attempt to coerce the employes into voting against our union in the pending election."

The TWUA said it still wants the NLRB vote to proceed as scheduled at the Tennessee plant but it considered that the evidence it presented to the NLRB would help substantiate the AIW case for an injunction.

The notice to employes conceded that "no doubt there have been some management and supervisory failures" but said management's "doors are open for the airing of any genuine, legitimate grievances."

He said the purpose of his letter was "to impress on all employes of this plant the gravity of the situation" and the need for "cooperation" if the plant is to continue operations.

The NLRB general counsel's office was expected to act shortly on the AIW request that it seek an injunction to bar the closedown of the Rossville plant before the labor board has acted on the unfair labor charge.

The AIW pointed out that a Burlington spokesman was quoted in the Chattanooga Times as declaring that the vote for union representation "was a consideration" in the decision to close the Rossville mill.

NLRB Sets Record Pace In Decisions

The National Labor Relations Board has reported that it issued a record-breaking 82 decisions in contested unfair labor practices cases in October, and that it has reduced pending cases from the all-time high of 466 on Aug. 1 to 402 on Nov. 1.

The five-member board, or its three-man panels, broke the previous record of 57 decisions in one month on disputes in which employers or unions or both were accused of violating the labor law.

Chairman Frank W. McCulloch congratulated board members and the NLRB staff for their "intensive efforts" to handle the upsurge in case filings, which in the last five years have almost doubled the NLRB workload.

The board chairman and members Philip Ray Rodgers, Boyd Leedom, John H. Fanning and Gerald A. Brown also have reduced the backlog of representation election cases to 148 from a peak of 695 on May 1.

McCulloch said that occurred as a result of a change, authorized by Congress, in which the board has delegated its decision-making powers to NLRB regional directors in election cases filed after May 15, 1961. A year ago, 90 days were required to process such cases as against 44 days at present, according to the chairman.

Maine Shoe Union Seeks Merger Talks

Boston—The Boot & Shoe Workers have been notified that an unaffiliated Maine union with 2,800 members has authorized merger talks.

The union is the Lewiston-Auburn Shoe Workers Protective Association (LASPA). If merger terms are approved by both groups, Boot & Shoe will charter the Lewiston, Me., group as an autonomous local.

BSWU Pres. John E. Mara said the LASPA local, unaffiliated for 25 years, will be one of the largest in the AFL-CIO union.

TV Play to Focus On 'Young Gompers'

"Young Sam Gompers" a portrayal of the early life of Samuel Gompers, first president of the AFL, will be carried on the NBC-TV nationwide network Sunday, Nov. 19 at 1:30 p.m. EST.

The play, written by Morton Wishengrad, will be presented on the Eternal Light program produced by the Jewish Theological Seminary of America and NBC.

The play tells of Gompers' job as a cigar maker, the role he played in the struggles of the Cigar Makers Union and the dramatic events of his first strike. Donald Davis will portray Gompers in the TV play.

Idle Tally By BLS Held Understated

nearly 11 million persons who are self-employed or employed as unpaid workers in family businesses.

No matter how poor business is, the self-employed are seldom actively seeking outside jobs. Therefore, by including them in the labor force as employed, the actual level of unemployment among wage and salaried workers is partially concealed.

The Federationist article also notes that no attempt is made to translate statistics on part-time employment "into terms which would show how much full-time unemployment they represent. For example, two people employed for only half a week equal one person unemployed full time. And the 2.5 million part-time workers who wanted full-time work in September were equal to 1.1 million workers totally unemployed."

During recessions, the analysis points out, "there is a tendency to understate the unemployment problem because people who would otherwise take jobs are not seeking work." Thus the actual number of people counted in the work force at present is 500,000 below an earlier Bureau of Labor Statistics projection.

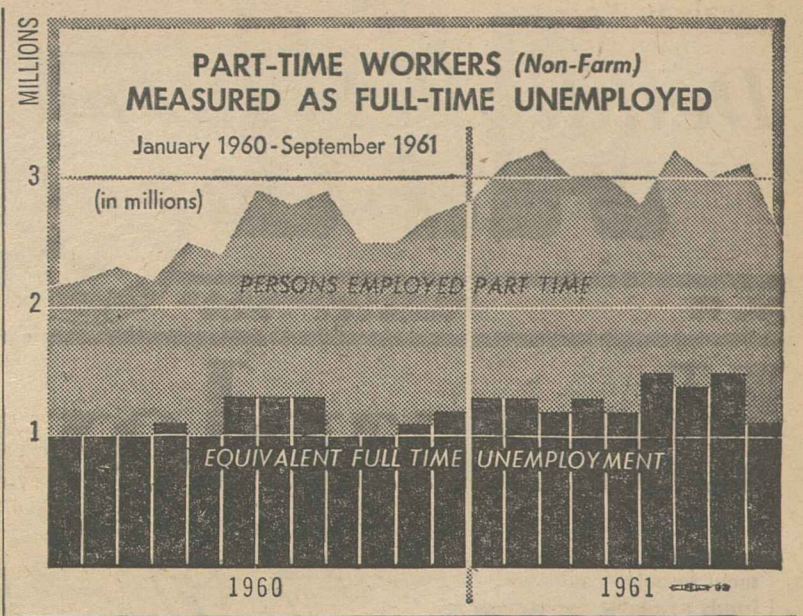
The reason, the AFL-CIO researchers say, is because these people are not job hunting "simply because they feel there are no jobs to be had" and therefore are not counted as part of the labor force.

NLRB Asks Court To Enjoin Employer

Anderson, S. C.—The National Labor Relations Board has invoked a rarely used injunction provision of the Taft-Hartley Act to ask a federal court here to order the immediate reinstatement of three workers fired during an organizing campaign of the Textile Workers Union of America at a mill owned by the West Point Mfg. Co.

A hearing has been set for Nov. 29 on the request for a temporary injunction restraining the company from a long list of alleged unfair labor practices until the NLRB has had an opportunity to rule on the charges.

In requesting the labor board to seek an injunction, the TWUA said only "prompt and decisive action" by the board and the courts could make it possible for a representation election to be held in an atmosphere free of intimidation.



October Jobless Rate Shows No Improvement

cable from Japan. But Goldberg added:

"It is disturbing, however, that the seasonally adjusted unemployment rate remains at 6.8 percent. This underscores that we have a stubborn and continuing unemployment problem.

"I wish to reaffirm the determination of the Kennedy Administration to reduce this unemployment problem to manageable proportions."

Goldberg said the Administration would "continue vigorously to pursue our objectives of a higher rate of economic growth, which is the best job insurance."

He also pledged that the Administration would renew its call for speedy congressional enactment of its manpower and retraining bill "so that hundreds of thousands of long-term unemployed can be retrained with upgraded skills for useful jobs."

'One-Two Punch' Needed

Seymour Wolfbein, the Labor Dept.'s manpower expert, declared that a "one-two punch" of a high level of economic activity and a "meaningful" training and retraining program is needed to combat joblessness.

The unemployment problem, he said, "is characterized by a significant number of long-term unemployed made up largely of unskilled and semi-skilled workers."

Enactment of the manpower and retraining bill, he said, would provide the means for training such persons in the skills that today's jobs demand.

In the ABC network interview, Meany noted that the nation's labor force is expected to increase in the 1960s by an average of 1,350,000 a year, against a growth of 820,000 new workers a year in the 1950s.

"Under our present system, we could not assimilate the 820,000," he observed. "And unless we do something about it, we certainly will not be able to assimilate this 1,350,000 coming in each year for 10 years."

Meany repeated the AFL-CIO's call for early enactment of the bill sponsored by Sen. Joseph S. Clark (D-Pa.) to provide an emergency program of aid for local public works programs. This, the federation president asserted, would "result in immediate employment for tens of thousands of people throughout the country," would "stimulate business," and would "give the economy a real shot in the arm."

Tax Forgiveness Again Urged

He noted, too, that the AFL-CIO has urged forgiveness of $100 in the income taxes of every taxpayer, which "would be translated into purchasing power" as an additional stimulus to the economy.

The October report showed 1.2 million persons classified as long-term unemployed—out of work 15 weks or longer—reflecting little change over the month. The number of workers idle for more than half a year was 723,000, an improvement of 37,000 over the month and 300,000 since July, but still nearly a quarter-million higher than a year ago.

Wolfbein acknowledged that the October job figures provided no evidence of basic improvement in the economy, despite a "better than seasonal" advance of 786,000 in total employment. Much of this gain he attributed to a "catch-up" in agricultural employment from September, when bad weather delayed harvests.

The weather in the October survey week, he observed, "was just fine."

Total non-farm employment—61.9 million—was at a new peak for October, but the gain of 500,000 jobs in this category was described as seasonal.

If month-to-month fluctuations in unemployment continue to be seasonal, Wolfbein said, the number of jobless will hit 4.4 million in November, 4.5 million in December and 5.5 million in January.

The only favorable signs he cited were an increase of 500,000 jobs since last February in excess of seasonal expectations and an increase of about one hour in the length of the factory workweek since the recession low point.

The October preliminary report also showed 2.3 million workers on part-time for economic reasons, a drop of 150,000 from September.

LABOR COOPERATION and participation in civil defense emergency welfare programs is formalized in a national agreement signed by Leo Perlis, director of AFL-CIO Community Services activities, and Kathryn D. Goodwin, director of the Bureau of Public Assistance of the Dept. of Health, Education & Welfare. AFL-CIO resources and trained manpower are made available to the government during any civil defense emergency.

Goldberg Names Legislative Aide

Samuel V. Merrick has been named by Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg to head the Labor Dept.'s Office of Legislative Liaison. Merrick, since 1959 a staff member of the Senate Labor Committee, will be responsible for presenting Labor Dept. views and legislative programs to Congress.

Building Trades Score 3rd Quarter Pay Gains

Average hourly pay of union workers in the building trades advanced 0.4 percent in third quarter 1961, the Labor Dept. reports.

The rise matched the gain recorded in the corresponding quarter of 1960 and brought the average hourly rate for seven major trades to $3.83.

Locals to Vote by Nov. 20:

Deadline Settlement Gives UAW Contract at Chrysler

Detroit—The Auto Workers all but wrapped up this year's auto industry negotiations with the signing of a new three-year agreement at the Chrysler Corp., subject to ratification by some 60,000 workers in 88 Chrysler plants.

After negotiations to the edge of a strike deadline, the union's Chrysler Council voted by a 3-1 margin to recommend approval of an agreement containing the same benefits as those provided earlier in the "pattern" settlements with General Motors and Ford.

Chrysler locals have until Nov. 20 to vote on the new contract, which the union said was notable mainly for management's agreement to bolster substantially trust funds available for commitments under supplementary unemployment benefit (SUB) agreements.

In return the agreement provides that Chrysler workers will get 1 cent less an hour in wage increases as of Dec. 4, 1961, and up to 2 cents less on Sept. 4, 1962, and Sept. 4, 1963, unless smaller amounts are needed in the two latter years. The money waived in wages will go in to the SUB fund.

Meanwhile there were these other developments:

- A strike by 13,000 UAW members at three Caterpillar Tractor plants in Peoria, Ill., ended with a new agreement comparable to those in the auto industry. Similar agreements were expected for 5,000 other Caterpillar workers on strike in Decatur, Ill., Aurora, Ill., Davenport, Ia., and York, Pa.
- The UAW served notice of contract termination on the Bendix Corp. and set a strike deadline for contracts covering 15,000 workers in Michigan, Indiana, New York, New Jersey and California.
- UAW has one more contract to go in the auto industry, and one more in farm equipment—for 7,500 workers at the Studebaker-Packard Corp., and for 15,000 at the Allis-Chalmers Co.

In the Chrysler settlement, management agreed to give employes the same economic and job security improvements that Ford and GM had accepted—an increase in the hourly wage rate of 2.5 percent or 6 cents an hour, whichever is greater, each year; additional wage increases for living-cost increases, improvements in pensions, health care, life insurance and separation pay; protection against time lost during short workweeks, and improved working conditions.

In the SUB and separation pay plan, the union agreed that new benefit provisions shall become effective Jan. 1, 1962, and Chrysler agreed to this method of financing the SUB plan, now reduced to 28.94 percent of normal by continued unemployment:

- The corporation will contribute $2 million to the SUB trust fund, in addition to its regular contribution of 5 cents an hour per worker, on the day following ratification of the contract, plus an additional amount early in 1962.
- A reserve trust fund will be established by the corporation but will not be used unless the regular SUB fund is exhausted. Moneys remaining, subject to negotiation at the end of three years, will be used to pay for other types of benefits for Chrysler workers and their families.
- The corporation will assume a "contingent liability" to pay up to $2 millon in SUB benefits if the regular fund and reserve fund should be exhausted.

Chrysler also agreed, the union said, to make other SUB improvements. Productivity factor wage increases for clerical and engineering workers covered by the UAW contract will follow this new formula:

Retroactive to Sept. 4, 1961, base weekly salaries were to rise by $2.53 or 3 percent, whichever is larger; on Sept. 3, 1962, salaries will rise by $2.40 a week or 2.75 percent; on Sept. 2, 1963, by $2.40 or 2.5 percent.

The new Caterpillar contract follows the "big auto" pattern but for the first time provides for a companywide SUB fund. Also it establishes new grievance procedures, guaranteeing arbitration of at least 60 pending grievances a year, according to UAW Vice Pres. Pat Greathouse.

NLRB Allows Picketing Of Remote Broadcasts

The National Labor Relations Board has ruled that Local 662 of the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers did not break the law when it picketed "remote" broadcasts of a Chattanooga radio station and issued "Do Not Patronize" lists of station advertisers.

Three NLRB members reversed the findings of a trial examiner and dismissed an unfair labor practice complaint in a decision hailed by IBEW Pres. Gordon M. Freeman as "the first definitive guide we have had concerning the right of a union to publicize its dispute with an employer" in the communications industry.

The decision brought an announcement from the Broadcast Employes & Technicians that it is considering an appeal to the board in a similar case, a strike against Station KXTV in Sacramento—now more than a year old—where the NLRB regional director obtained a federal court injunction which has prevented the strikers from publishing or reporting the names of station advertisers.

In the latest case, the NLRB members — Chairman Frank W. McCulloch, John H. Fanning and Gerald A. Brown—voted to dismiss the complaint, finding that:

- The picketing was lawful because the union picketed the site of the broadcasts—the studios of Station WOGA, "remote" broadcasts from an auto sales room and a mobile transmitter called a "Music-mobile."
- The publicity proviso of the National Labor Relations Act covers the kind of leaflet distribution the union engaged in because, the majority said, the station helped distribute a product when it advertised automobiles—a point which the examiner had denied.

The IBEW local has represented Station WOGA engineers and announcers since 1946. It went on strike Jan. 11, 1960, when new owners failed to agree on terms of a new contract.

NLRB Member Philip Ray Rodgers dissented and voted to uphold the opinion of Trial Examiner Louis Libbin. Member Boyd Leedom, former chairman, agreed that the leaflet distribution was lawful but held that the union should not have picketed "remote" broadcasts.

In the Sacramento case, Trial Examiner Howard Myers found that NABET and the Television & Radio Artists committed an unfair labor practice when they issued "Do Not Patronize" lists against Station KXTV. At the request of the NLRB regional director, a federal judge issued an order restraining the union from giving any publicity whatever to "unfair" lists.

NABET Pres. George W. Smith said his union may ask the NLRB and the courts to lift the injunction. Since the strike started more than a year ago, strikebreakers have petitioned for an NLRB election and NABET has filed unfair labor practice charges against the station for interference with pickets.

In the IBEW case, Freeman said the latest board decision "upholds the right of a union to publicize the names of advertisers" on struck stations and makes it lawful to picket remote broadcasts as a form of legal primary picketing.

Kennedy Lauds Foreign Labor Attaches Here

Pres. Kennedy has expressed his personal appreciation of the work of embassy labor attachés of foreign nations and their cooperation with the Secretary of State, the Secretary of Labor and the American labor movement.

Kennedy's views were read by Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg at a reception held for resident foreign labor attaches at the State Dept.

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany spoke briefly on the American trade union movement's belief and dedication to the need for "freedom and decency for workers all over the world." Among the countries represented at the reception by their labor attachés were Austria, Canada, West Germany, Great Britain, the Philippines, Sweden, Switzerland, Morocco, France and the Netherlands.

The President's letter to Goldberg said that the "work of the labor attaché is central to the resolution of the grave problems that confront so many millions of the world's people." This work, he added, is of the greatest importance for the peace and well-being of future generations."

AMC Pact Ratified As Local Shifts Vote

Kenosha, Wis.—A second vote by a local on the new contract between American Motors and the Auto Workers has resulted in this tally: 6,738 in favor, 3,264 opposed.

When the first vote was taken Oct. 8, UAW Local 72 rejected contract ratification by a margin of 63 votes. The UAW ordered a new vote after contract terms were carefully explained to all members at the AMC plant here.

The vote completed ratification of the new pact, only one in this year's union-management negotiations to set up a profit-sharing and stock-sharing plan for workers. The plan gives workers 10 percent of profits before taxes after deduction of 10 percent for stockholders, plus dividends from stock purchases.

JOHN H. LYONS, JR.

Iron Workers Pick Lyons, Jr. As New Chief

St. Louis—The general council of the Bridge, Structural & Ornamental Iron Workers has elected John H. Lyons, Jr., to finish the term of his late father, who died Oct. 26, as president of the union.

The younger Lyons, who is 42, has been a general vice president since 1958 and executive assistant to the president since last April. He has headed the union's office in Washington since 1955.

The new president joined Cleveland Local 17 as an apprentice in 1937 and later transferred to East St. Louis, Ill., Local 392, continuing to work at the trade while studying for a bachelor of science degree in mechanical engineering, which he received from the University of Missouri in 1942. After service with the Air Force in World War II, he continued to work at the trade until he was named an organizer in 1954. He is now a member of Washington Local 5.

The senior Lyons, who was 70, died of complications following lung surgery. He was the only man in the 65-year history of the union to serve as president, treasurer and secretary.

Timetable Set For New York Teachers Vote

New York—The timetable for a mid-December election in which 43,000 teachers will choose one bargaining agent has been announced by Prof. Nathan P. Feinsinger, University of Wisconsin legal expert.

Chosen by the City Labor Dept. with the approval of the city Board of Education, Feinsinger set these dates for organizations planning to participate in the election, scheduled tentatively for Dec. 15:

Nov. 8, file documents establishing proof of ability to serve as a bona fide bargaining agent.

Nov. 15, release final recommendations by Feinsinger on election details.

Nov. 27, file proof that the organization represents 10 percent or more of the city's teaching employes.

Principal rivals for bargaining rights are the United Federation of Teachers and a group that calls itself the Teachers Bargaining Organization. UFT says the latter group is sponsored by the National Education Association, which was branded a "company union" by the 1957 convention of the AFL-CIO because of its domination by superintendents, principals and supervisors.

UFT is Local 2 of the Teachers. Said its Pres. Charles Cogen: "This is the largest single unit election held within the last 10 years. Victory for the AFL-CIO union, the UFT, will be a major breakthrough into the field of white collar organizing."

Local Transit Pay Up 8.9 Cents in Year

Wage scales of unionized local transit operating employes advanced an average of 8.9 cents an hour, or 3.8 percent, for the year ended last July 1, the U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics has reported. New averages are $2.57 for elevated and subway operators, $2.45 for surface cars and busses.

Eavesdropping Firm Hit With Order to Rehire 6

A Baltimore trailer company which admitted having "bugged" its plant with hidden microphones in order to eavesdrop on its workers has been ordered to bargain with the Machinists and to reinstate six fired employes with back pay.

A three-member panel of the National Labor Relations Board found that both the Intl. Trailer Co. and Gibraltar Industries, Inc., which has taken over its operations, had committed unfair labor practices.

The two companies, the board held, were so entwined that they were equally responsible for violating the law.

The NLRB panel upheld a trial examiner's findings that the six employes had been dismissed for union activities. The examiner had cited testimony by James W. Fyle, president of Intl. Trailer, who described how workers were selected for dismissal in these words:

"We began literally to clean house . . . anybody that had ever worked at a place that had a union—or we thought by their wages they had at one time been union members, we set up a list and proceeded to go to work . . . we felt that anybody that had been involved in it before probably would be hooked up in it again."

The case was complicated by the confusion over the employer—during one period workers didn't know whether they were employed by Intl. Trailer, which is now in bankruptcy, or by Gibraltar, the former sales agency for the firm, which took over the production of the trailers.

The NLRB said in effect that it didn't matter—both firms were responsible for the unfair practices and both firms are responsible for correcting them.

1961 Strike Activity At Post-War Low

Strike activity in the first nine months of 1961 was below the levels of all corresponding periods since the end of World War II despite a flurry of walkouts in September.

Strike idleness in September totaled 3.15 million man-days, or 0.35 percent of all working time. For all of the year to date the loss was 0.15 percent of working time, according to the U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics.

Most of the September idleness was due to strikes by 250,000 General Motors workers, 5,000 truckers on Michigan roadbuilding projects, and 7,000 Kennecott Copper employes in Utah, BLS reported.

Joblessness—Still Stuck

THE RECORD 67.8 MILLION PERSONS holding jobs in October and the drop in unemployment to a shade below 4 million have been interpreted as a brightening in the job outlook by those who take a fast, superficial look at the monthly report.

A somewhat slower and more penetrating analysis of the figures reveals sharply that there has been no real change in the past 11 months—that nearly 70 out of every 1,000 persons ready and willing to work cannot secure employment.

Not only does the job report, in the words of Labor Sec. Goldberg, underscore the "stubborn and continuing unemployment problem," but it forecasts a worsening situation if the monthly fluctuations in joblessness continue on a seasonal basis.

If the unemployment rate in November remains unchanged at 6.8 percent, the number of jobless will be in the vicinity of 4.4 million; if the rate is unchanged in January there will be 5.5 million unemployed.

The lack of any real improvement in the unemployment situation might be understandable if the rest of the economy also were in a rut. But all government reports show income, production, sales and profits registering from moderate to sharp gains as the economy gathers speed on the upswing from the recession.

An economy cannot long retain any semblance of strength or vigor if it is based on chronic unemployment. The prospect of 5.5 million unemployed in January 1962 should spur the necessary legislative and administrative action that will provide jobs for those able and willing to work who are presently reduced to the sufferings and indignities of joblessness.

Shadow of the Past

THE KENNEDY ADMINISTRATION'S decision to avoid a budget deficit by cutting back on expenditures for the Public Health Service, the Food & Drug Administration and other HEW programs, as well as curbing Defense Dept. spending, evokes memories of the previous Administration and its economic policies.

The need at the moment is expansion of government programs to stimulate economic growth. Retrenchment, curbs on spending and other policies designed to produce a balanced budget will slow down the growth needed to absorb the high, chronic rate of unemployment.

The decision to retrench, in the words of AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, is a "mistake." In the current state of the cold war the need is for a healthy, growing, expanding economy, one of the key weapons in the continuing struggle with totalitarian forces.

Election Rebuff

THE 1961 "OFF-YEAR" ELECTIONS were dominated by an attempted conservative Republican assault on a handful of Democratic-held offices. In the major fights the GOP was rebuffed; in the numerous municipal elections there were a number of changes on both sides, but the general result was a standoff.

The basic lesson appears to be that articulate, liberal Democrats supporting the programs and policies of the 1960 Democratic Party platform were able successfully to stave off the conservative GOP contenders. Where the Republicans fielded more liberal candidates they fared better, especially where the Democrats nominated conservative or old-line candidates.

Next year will provide a more meaningful test, but in 1961 the conservatives and the "radical right" made little if any impression on the American electorate.

Suppose It Had Been the U. S.:

The Neutrals' Roar of Silence Rivals Boom of Reds' Bombs

The following is reprinted from the Oct. 20, 1961 edition of the London Evening News, prior to the explosion of the 50 megaton-plus H-bomb by the Soviet Union. The article, written by Charles Curran, a Conservative Member of Parliament, is entitled "The Roar of Silence."

By Charles Curran

FOR SEVERAL WEEKS NOW, two tremendous sounds have been deafening the world. Every man and woman on this planet is listening to them.

One is the roar of the H-bombs going off at Novaya Zemlya in Siberia. This is Russia's nuclear testing ground in the Arctic Circle. Up there every day is doomsday.

The fellows who work at Novaya Zemlya must be piling up overtime. There are no teabreaks. Nobody mentions redundancy. Nobody stops for bingo, either.

How are they getting on? Well, you measure the force of a blast, it seems, by using TNT as the yardstick. TNT is short for tri-nitro-toluene, an explosive that became fashionable in the 1914 war.

Now the atom bomb that was dropped on Hiroshima had an explosive force equal to 20,000 tons of TNT. A quaint trifle by Novaya Zemlya standards. No more than a fire-cracker.

For, so far, the Russians have exploded 20 H-bombs. These explosions add up to no less than 35 million tons of TNT.

This is enough (if my arithmetic is right) to wipe out 1,700 Hiroshimas—and still leave Mr. K with a million tons of explosive going to spare.

Is that the lot? Not a bit. It is merely the soup course. The knife-and-fork stuff is still to come.

Next Tuesday week the fellows at Novaya Zemlya will explode a real bomb—50 megatons. And a megaton (in case your Greek is rusty) means a million tons.

Fifty million tons of TNT will explode in mid-air at once. It will be the biggest heard on this planet since Adam and Eve walked out of Eden.

But the noise of Mr. K's bombs is not the only sound you hear in the world just now. I want to draw your attention to the rival roar. It is the roar of silence.

Just imagine. Suppose that it was the Americans, not the Russians, who were firing these bombs. Suppose it was the Americans, not the Russians, who had torn up that scrap of paper signed in 1958 pledging both of them to a nuclear test moratorium.

WHAT THEN? You need no wizard to answer that.

At this moment the globe would be ringing with yells from all those dear neutral nations in Asia and Africa about the wickedness of those wicked Yanks.

Every Communist and every fellow-traveler from Pekin to Ponders End would be in full cry.

The atom maniacs in Washington; the germ generals in the Pentagon; the "Coke" cannibals making war on mankind. Why, the phrases simply write themselves.

The respectable newspapers of Britain would be flooded with letters beginning: "I am not anti-American. Some of my best friends are Americans. But . . ."

For the Yanks are a wicked lot. Every neutral knows that, and so does every fellow-traveler.

They are brash. They are reckless. They positively like hot dogs, and chewing gum, and juke boxes, and commercial TV.

They are warmongers led by super-monopoly finance capitalists—scoundrels with cigars in their mouths, sin in their hearts and adding-machines in their offices.

If the wicked Yanks had broken their word, fired off 35 million tons of H-bomb and planned to fire off another 50 million tons next Tuesday week—well, nobody would be surprised. Would they?

But since it is the Russians who have done all this, the bangs evoke hardly a whimper from the neutrals. Look back at that great get-together of the neutral nations in Belgrade the other day.

Did they view with alarm the doomsday blasts in Siberia?

Did they compete in matching adjectives about Soviet fall-out?

Of course not. For Russia, after all, is not in the same class as America. You must look indulgently at Russia.

If you criticize her at all you must do it more in sorrow than in anger.

Now here I want to pay a compliment to some people in this country. I never expected to find myself doing this. Still, fair is fair.

I am delighted to see that some of our ban-the-bomb crusaders are speaking out plainly against the Russian tests. I applaud their honesty.

They sent a protest deputation the other night to the Soviet Embassy in Kensington Palace-gardens. One member of it said that if the 50 megaton bomb was exploded on Tuesday week it would be "a murderous act of terrorism."

Quite right. Between now and Tuesday week, I hope, the Soviet Embassy will be flooded with protests in the same sort of language.

For if the Russians go on testing in mid-air they will compel the Americans to follow suit—or else sink to the bottom of the nuclear see-saw.

Anyone who wants to know the right words to use to the Soviet Embassy can find out easily. Let him (or her) imagine that this Embassy is in Grosvenor Square.

Morgan Says:

Pomposity, Pretense, Humbug Lose a Foe in Thurber's Death

By Edward P. Morgan

I HAVE BEEN CONDUCTING a sort of wake—you might call it a wide-a-wake—over the body of literary works of James Thurber whom I have rather idolized for more than a quarter of a century. I laughed a good deal. This was both inevitable and, I maintain, appropriate.

Morgan

Thurber, who died the other day, would not have tolerated a soggy, morbid wake. Furthermore it is fortunately impossible to mourn a man who is not really gone but who constantly reappears—over the bedstead as a barking seal; in the drawing room as a lancer of pretense and a spiller of drinks; among the daisies as a wistfully troubled dog; on the ingenious and heroic routes of escape from a nagging wife and commonplace reality as the intrepid Walter Mitty, and between the covers of more than two dozen imperishable books as the angry, impatient, brave and hiliariously brilliant defender of the hapless human being.

Thurber had the matchless talent of injecting you into the most absurdly impossible situations and making you feel at home because you instantly recognized the plight as similar to one of your own experiences and it didn't matter whether you extricated yourself or not because you were silently splitting your sides with laughter.

Take, for instance, a book which he wrote in 1937 called Let Your Mind Alone. In it at one point he was spoofing a manual entitled Wake Up and Live by a Mrs. Dorothea Brande in which she had outlined a dozen disciplines for sharper minds. Thurber was particularly incensed with discipline No. 3: "Write a letter without using the first person singular."

"What for?" Thurber demanded to know. "To whom? About what? All I could possibly think of to write would be a letter to a little boy telling him how to build a rabbit hutch, and I don't know how to build a rabbit hutch very well. . . .I remember the time that my father offered to help me and my two brothers build a rabbit hutch out of planks and close-meshed chicken wire. Somehow or other he got inside the cage after the wire had been put up around the sides and over the top. . . . I don't know exactly what happened, but he shut the door and it latched securely and he was locked in with the rabbits. The place was a shambles before he got out, because nobody was home at the time and he couldn't get his hand through the wire to unlatch the door. He had his derby on in the hutch all during his captivity and that added to his discomfiture."

IF THURBER HAD DONE nothing else he would be revered down through time as the man who destroyed, or at least made bedlam of, that hideosity on the American social landscape, the cocktail party. Take, this time for example, a conversation in his last book, Lanterns and Lances, between him and a Mrs. Groper who wanted to know what he thought was the matter with humor in 1951.

"It was suffering from acute hysteria, pernicious fission, recurring nightmare, loose talk, false witness, undulant panic, ingrown suspicion, and occlusion of perception—quite a syndrome," Thurber said. "When reason totters and imagination reels, humor loses its balance too."

Presently a man with a highball glass in his hand wavered over and said to Thurber, "You guys give me a pain in the neck. On the other hand, the pain in Twain stays mainly in the brain."

"For such crude intruders," Thurber wrote, setting a beartrap of a pun, "I always carry a piece of complicated academic drollery, and I gave it to him: 'If you prefer "I think, therefore I am" to "Non sum qualis eram," you are putting Descartes before Horace.' "

For me the party ended right there in a delicious shambles. Thurber, who lived in a milky blindness for more than a third of his life, cut through with sharp humor and acid satire the fatty flesh and vapid foolishness of our times. He has been compared to Mark Twain but to me he stands alone with a sorrowing anger flowing from his pen like life's blood but with nevertheless a twinkle in his mind's eye.

Last July I got a letter from Thurber, mourning with me the tragic, violent death of Ernest Hemingway. "To paraphrase Gen. Pickett at Gettysburg," Thurber wrote, "I could say, 'My noble generation has been swept away,' I, too, have been through the deep depression afflicting so many people during the past two years or so. I keep fighting it, though, and I have no shotgun, thank God. . . . Ernest, by the way, had read a piece of mine, circa 1932, called Suli Suli, in which I wrote, 'I do not intend to be dragged from Jacksonville to Key West and back by an enormous fish.' But he (Hemingway) regarded me as a man, in spite of the fact that I never shot anything bigger than a sparrow, or caught anything larger than a lake trout."

Ah, but James Thurber could bring down pomposity, pretense and utter humbug with a peashooter and for that he will be remembered as one of the biggest big game hunters of them all.

Illinois Labor's Fight for FEPC Hailed at Civil Rights Conference

Chicago—Organized labor's role in the long but successful fight to get Illinois' Fair Employment Practices Act on the statute books was hailed by State Atty. Gen. William G. Clark at the 7th Labor Conference on Civil Rights.

Clark, who as a member of the legislature sought action on FEPC in four different sessions, charged that public officials for too long have given only lip service to civil rights enforcement.

"We have civil rights laws on the books," he declared. "All we need is enforcement."

Sec. Joseph D. Keenan of the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers said "labor in its own way will be the leading force against segregation."

The trade unions are in the fight for equal rights, said Pres. William A. Lee of the Chicago Federation of Labor, because it is "right," and because labor has always been a leader in the struggle for human dignity.

The 500 delegates to the conference, which was sponsored by the Jewish Labor Committee and endorsed by the CFL and the Cook County Industrial Union Council, urged Pres. Kennedy to issue an executive order directing all federal agencies to make their services and funds available only where they are used without discrimination based on race, color or creed.

The resolution was introduced at the concluding session by a panel on health and housing which stressed open occupancy in federal, state and local housing projects. Conference Chairman Morris Bialis, a vice president of the Ladies' Garment Workers, had called for it at the opening session.

The progress and problems in specific areas were studied by other panels on local union programs, public safety and public accommodations, and employment and vocational education.

Civil rights trophy awards were presented John E. Cullerton, manager of the Chicago Joint Board of the Hotel & Restaurant Employes; Vice Pres. Xavier Smykowski and Civil Rights Chairman Walter Griffin of Steelworkers Local 1033, and Irwin T. Klass, editor of the CFL's Federation News.

Honor award certificates were bestowed on Sec.-Treas. Victor Reysa of Retail Clerks Local 1550; Civil Rights Chairman Russell Buckner of Auto Workers Local 719, and Stanley Johnson, editor of the Illinois AFL-CIO Weekly Newsletter.

Dir. Boris Shishkin of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Civil Rights urged the Chicago labor movement to conduct a complete inventory of human relations, covering all aspects of city life, and to take action where needed.

He stressed the need of working toward the prevention and elimination of discrimination within the labor movement, in employment, in apprenticeship and training, in housing, schools and public services, and in voting and all the other prerogatives of citizenship.

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

PRES. KENNEDY MADE AN UNDENIABLE POINT when he said that the election results in San Antonio, New Jersey and New York City would have been labeled a setback for the Administration if Republicans, instead of Democrats, had been victorious. The GOP National Committee chairman, Rep. William E. Miller, insisted a couple of days later that his party was not disturbed by the returns, although it might have been more realistically undisturbed if former Labor Sec. Mitchell had won the governorship in New Jersey, for example.

On specific campaigns, some observations can be offered.

Mayor Wagner's re-election for a third term in New York City does not leave the Democratic Party with an outstanding candidate for governor next year, unless Wagner himself should choose to make the race against Nelson Rockefeller.

Wagner scored a brilliant success when he beat the old-line Democratic machine bosses to capture the party's renomination and went on to re-election. He has promised that he will force a rejuvenation of the party machinery. It is clear, however, that Rockefeller stands a very good chance of winning a second term, especially since his running-mate in 1962 will be Sen. Jacob K. Javits, a Republican liberal with strong appeal to the voters.

IN NEW JERSEY, A MAJOR MYSTERY to some observers is, and was, why Mitchell did not choose to identify himself strongly and unmistakably with the kind of Republicanism for which Javits stands and, for that matter, for which Sen. Clifford Case stands. Case was Mitchell's sponsor in the race, and in 1960 the senator won a tremendous personal victory even while Pres. Kennedy carried the state.

The theme of fiscal prudence stressed by Mitchell still goes well in Harry Byrd's Virginia, but in a northern state with enormous urban problems—a state such as New Jersey—winning candidates usually base their appeal to the voters more broadly.

The Eisenhower "middle-road" approach lacks pungency except when the general himself is running, and Republicans close to both Mitchell and Case felt strongly that Eisenhower's entrance to campaign for his former secretary of labor was no help.

IF THERE WERE ANY AREAS where the Republican Party showed clear signs of growing strength, they were Pennsylvania and Texas.

The huge Democratic pluralities built up in Philadelphia beginning in 1948 and reaching a peak of 325,000 last year in the presidential race dropped to below 60,000. The GOP also won municipal elections in various outstate cities where Democrats had been successful in recent years. It is always dangerous to jump to conclusions from single elections, but the Democratic organization that was freshened and given vitality under the leadership of Sen. Joseph S. Clark and Philadelphia's Mayor Richardson Dilworth has revealed signs of fraying.

Liberal Democrats won the special congressional election in San Antonio by electing Henry B. Gonzalez against a Republican, John Goode, who openly said he was a "Goldwater Republican." But GOP strength in Texas is growing as the Democratic Party remains split between conservative and liberal forces.

Nevertheless the GOP, firmly held in the grip of conservative leadership, let a big one get away in New Jersey. Its campaigners showed no evidence that in the big city and suburban areas they are ready to change the policy of acting as if it is un-American for the federal government to invest in school aid, slum clearance, urban redevelopment and water purification.

RICHARD J. HUGHES

HENRY B. GONZALEZ

Three Democrats won nationally significant elections in offyear voting in states which Pres. Kennedy carried last year but where the GOP hoped for major gains. Hughes, a former New Jersey judge who was otherwise almost a political unknown, beat former Pres. Eisenhower's secretary of labor, James P. Mitchell, for governor of New Jersey; Wagner capped his victory over New York organization Democrats in the September party primary by overwhelming Republican Louis J. Lefkowitz for mayor of New York City; Gonzalez, campaigning as a New Frontier candidate, defeated a self-proclaimed "Goldwater conservative," John Goode, in a special congressional election in San Antonio.

Democratic Sweep of Key Races Sets Back GOP Hopes for 1962

New York's Republican Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller.

Only in the last two weeks was Hughes, a former judge without broad political experience, given credit for "closing the gap" Mitchell was conceded. Both Pres. Kennedy and former Pres. Truman campaigned for him.

Hughes Blunt on Taxes

Mitchell ran as a "middle-road" Republican pledging no increase in taxes for state social services, while Hughes bluntly said that improved services were necessary and that he would seek to provide them, if forced, by either a state income tax or sales tax. Nearly complete returns showed Hughes the winner by about 38,000 votes, 1,080,535 to Mitchell's 1,042,026.

In New York City, Mayor Robert F. Wagner capped a long and bruising campaign by scoring a decisive personal victory over Republican State Atty. Gen. Louis J. Lefkowitz and an independent Democrat, City Controller Lawrence E. Gerosa.

Wagner won a total of about 52 percent of the vote, with 14 percent going to Gerosa and 34 percent to Lefkowitz. Rockefeller in a post-election statement said that the Lefkowitz campaign had "restored two-party government" to the city, but the results were not what the Republicans anticipated before Wagner smashed old-line Democratic Party leaders in the September primary.

Wagner had a total of 1.2 million votes with more than 214,000 going to him on the Liberal Party voting-machine line and another 59,000 on the line of the new Brotherhood Party, organized by unions in the AFL-CIO Central Labor Council, and with additional backing from unions cooperating in the Labor Committee for Wagner.

Wagner also carried to victory his running-mates, Paul R. Screvane for City Council president and Abraham D. Beame for controller. The Liberal and Brotherhood Parties helped complete the routs of old-line Democratic organization leaders by endorsing and helping elect a Republican, Joseph F. Peroni, for borough president of the Bronx over Democrat John J. Sullivan. Sullivan's backer, Rep. Charles A. Buckley, was among the once-dominant organization men who, with National Committeeman Carmine De Sapio, had tried to break Wagner's career in the party primary.

In the San Antonio race, Democrat Henry B. Gonzalez, running as a Kennedy liberal in a special congressional election, beat off a major Republican drive to defeat John Goode, a self-styled "Goldwater conservative," by 52,000 to 42,000 votes. Gonzalez promptly was called into New York City and New Jersey to aid Wagner and Hughes in their campaigns.

Eisenhower, Tower Campaign

Republicans had thrown both Eisenhower and the new GOP senator from the state, John G. Tower, into the campaign to elect another conservative Republican from Texas. Vice Pres. Johnson campaigned extensively for Gonzalez, who was officially backed by the state AFL-CIO Committee on Political Education.

In voting across the country, Republicans found their chief cause for rejoicing in Pennsylvania, where normal Democratic pluralities in Philadelphia were sharply reduced and State Supreme Court Justice Anne X. Alpern lost to Henry X. O'Brien, Republican, in a statewide race. The GOP ousted Democratic mayors in half a dozen Pennsylvania towns although Democrat Joseph M. Barr won re-election in Pittsburgh.

In other states, the results were mixed. Republicans won for mayor in Buffalo, Louisville and Youngstown, O., but a Democrat, Eugene Nickerson, was elected county executive in Nassau, Long Island, for the first time in history, and Democrats held control of three of New York's five largest cities and re-elected Mayor Anthony J. Celebrezze in Cleveland for a fifth term.

A Republican, Woodrow W. Mathna, beat Democrat James S. Parobek for mayor of Youngstown, O., but the GOP candidate, Ed Garrigan, was beaten by Democrat Edward Erickson, an advance-prediction "underdog," for mayor of Akron, a long-time Republican stronghold which has also sent GOP Rep. William H. Ayres to Congress repeatedly. The Akron race was marked for the first time by the entrance of the Rubber Workers into municipal affairs, and Erickson was publicly backed by the URW's national officers.

Lucien N. Nedzi, Democrat, won election to the House over Republican Walter Czarnecki in Michigan's normally Democratic 1st District.

Brotherhood Party To Remain Active

New York—The new Brotherhood Party, running candidates for the first time in this city's municipal election this year, intends to continue operation, Acting Sec. Morris Iushewitz said in a statement.

The party, organized by a number of unions from the AFL-CIO Central Labor Council, nominated Mayor Wagner and his Democratic running-mates, giving them another party line on the city's voting machines. Wagner and his ticket also were nominated by the long-established Liberal Party.

"We have learned a great deal in the first campaign," said Iushewitz, "and we will continue our assembly district organizations where we are in direct touch not only with our own rank and file on a daily basis but with all the people of the city. This is where our political work must be done."

Meany Calls for Support Of Radio Free Europe

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany has hailed "the vital service" of Radio Free Europe in its fight against "Communist propaganda in one of the world's most strategic areas—the Iron Curtain countries of East Europe."

Saying that RFE's "truth broadcasts" were essential "in the defense of the entire free world," the AFL-CIO president called for labor's support of the network, which is privately financed with contributions.

The full text of Meany's statement follows:

Because it fights Communist propaganda in one of the world's most strategic areas—the Iron Curtain countries of East Europe—Radio Free Europe performs a vital service in the defense of the entire free world.

RFE's truth broadcasts to Poland, Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Romania and Bulgaria help keep 80 million captive people informed. As long as the captive people continue to resist the pressures of communism, Khrushchev's bluff can be called.

But RFE—a private, non-profit network supported by contributions from the American people—needs help in holding the line. It provides us with a personal opportunity to aid our country, the free world, and 80 million helpless people under Communist domination.

I urge all members of the American labor movement to support RFE, the free world's strongest and most influential network broadcast to East Europe. Since all of RFE's fund-raising expenses are separately financed, you know that every penny of your contribution will be used in sending undistorted news and information behind the Iron Curtain.

AFL-CIO Lawyer Declares:

Labor Will Continue 'Work' Clause Fight

Labor will continue to fight for repeal of Sec. 14B of the Taft-Hartley Act, which permits states to ban the union shop through so-called "right-to-work" laws, an AFL-CIO attorney declared in a nationally broadcast interview.

Thomas E. Harris, associate general counsel of the AFL-CIO, described Sec. 14B as both "anti-union" and "wholly inconsistent with the conception of a National Labor Relations Act."

Questioned on the Mutual Broadcasting network's Labor News Conference, he said the Taft-Hartley provision "invites states to pass anti-union legislation as a way of trying to get industry from other states."

"We can never withdraw our objection to a provision of that sort," he emphasized.

In practice, Harris indicated, "right-to-work" laws have backfired on the states which have enacted them, "mostly the backward agricultural states."

Instead of getting industries which boost the economy and add to purchasing power, the "right-to-work" states have been getting low-paying, marginal industries, Harris pointed out.

"High-wage industries are unionized industries," he noted.

"Right-to-work" laws are an attempt to "undercut collective bargaining," Harris charged.

He said some "right-to-work" supporters are apparently sincere "and not simply professional anti-union publicists" but he mentioned that these people have an "antiquated conception" of society.

The only alternative to effective collective bargaining in 20th Century America, Harris declared, is for the employer to "decide by himself whom he will hire, what he will pay them, when he will lay them off, whether and why he will fire them, whether he will give them pensions."

He sharply challenged the claim of "right-to-work" supporters that such laws also prevent employers from discriminating against union members.

Anti-union employers can and do discriminate in hiring against union members, Harris declared, "but it is almost impossible to prove" such discrimination under "right-to-work" laws.

To meet the threat of "work" laws, Harris said, "union people and those who agree that unions and collective bargaining are a good thing" should "continue to work for a liberal Congress which will repeal Sec. 14B of the Taft-Hartley law."

"Whether or not that succeeds," he added, "we must also continue to work in each of the 50 states for legislatures that are sympathetic with the needs and aspirations of working people."

Merger Plan Agreed on for Chicago Area

Chicago—The Chicago Federation of Labor and the Cook County Industrial Union Council have agreed on terms for merging the labor bodies in the county.

The final question on the merger was resolved when AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany and AFL-CIO Vice Presidents Joseph D. Keenan and Joseph Beirne held a special hearing and decided to set up two central labor bodies in Cook County.

The territory now represented by the Chicago Heights Trade & Labor Assembly and the Blue Island Central Labor Union will be combined and extended with all local unions affiliated with these bodies and with the Cook County IUC eligible for membership.

The rest of Cook County, which includes the Chicago Federation of Labor, the South Chicago Trades & Labor Assembly and the Calumet Joint Labor Council, in addition to that part of the IUC membership in the area, will be merged into one organization.

The groups had previously resolved all other questions and issues and are planning the necessary conventions to effect the mergers set out in the decision on geographical boundaries.

Central Bodies' Advisors Named

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany has announced the appointment of three new members to the AFL-CIO's Advisory Committee on State and Local Central Bodies.

Named were Thomas L. Pitts, secretary-treasurer of the California Labor Federation; Joseph M. Rourke, secretary-treasurer of the Connecticut State Labor Council, and Miles C. Stanley, president of the West Virginia Labor Federation.

Other committee members are Meany; Stanton Smith, AFL-CIO coordinator of state and local central bodies; Pres. John Rollings of the Missouri State Labor Council; Pres. August Scholle of the Michigan State AFL-CIO; Pres. Harry Van Arsdale of the New York City Central Labor Council; Sec. Fred. A. Erchul of the Milwaukee County Labor Council; AFL-CIO Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller; Organization Dir. John W. Livingston and COPE Dir. James L. McDevitt.

Second BLS Survey:

Wide Range Found In White Collar Pay

Average monthly pay in selected white-collar jobs ranges from $252 for beginning file clerks to $1,726 for top-level attorneys, according to a new Labor Dept. Survey of private industry in metropolitan areas.

The Bureau of Labor Statistics survey represented the second annual nationwide study of salaries in selected professional, administrative, technical and clerical occupations.

The survey covered 68 job categories in these fields: accounting, legal, engineering and chemistry, drafting, personnel management, office services and clerical.

Of the 68 job categories—covering salary levels in the winter of 1960-61—monthly salaries averaged less than $500 in 23; $500 and under $1,000 in 32 and $1,000 or more in 13 groups.

"General stenographers, the largest group of clerical workers studied," the report noted, "averaged $341 a month, nationally, which was slightly above the midpoint in the range of average monthly salaries for the 17 clerical work levels included in the survey.

"Among these clerical levels, monthly salaries ranged from $252 for file clerks I to $457 for tabulating-machine operators III," the latter working by machine without close supervision, the study continued.

The study showed that increases in average salaries during the year preceding the survey amounted to 3 percent for the drafting and clerical occupations as a group. The rises ranged from 1.9 percent to 7.7 percent.

The price of the 53-page bulletin is 40 cents. Identified as BLS Bulletin 1310, it is available from the Supt. of Documents, Washington 25, D. C., or from BLS regional offices.

Tyler Fights Depressed Tag —But Not Aid

"Swing the spotlight again to Tyler, Tex.," urged the U.S. Chamber of Commerce in a recent issue of its newsletter, Washington Report.

Tyler deserves fame, the chamber decided, because "its leading citizens gave out a cry of anguish in July when their community was designated by the federal government as a depressed area." The chamber said Tyler was "bustling" and it promised a full study to provide other cities with a model of how to keep out federal "intervention."

Now the facts. The Labor Dept., which classifies depressed areas, said it has never had Tyler so listed. The Area Redevelopment Administration of the Commerce Dept. said Tyler was in a bloc of 43 east Texas counties covered by its rural redevelopment program.

Tyler has been an agricultural "redevelopment area" for five years under the rural program set up by the Eisenhower Administration. It was put there on the recommendation of the Texas Agricultural Extension Service and, observers have noted, this former Agriculture Dept. program was shifted to the new Kennedy Area Redevelopment Administration because rural congressmen made that the price of support for the ARA legislation passed this year.

4 More Units Bolt Teamsters In Cincinnati

Cincinnati—Mopping up operations continued here this week as four more former Teamster groups voted to join the AFL-CIO.

Employes of three small units of the Pepsi-Cola Co., in Blanchester, Ripley, and Hamilton, voted 37-14 to affiliate with Local 152-B of the Brewery Workers, and employes of the Beatrice Food Co. here voted 32-0 to affiliate with AFL-CIO Dairy Employes Local 98.

The latter join 2,200 other Cincinnati dairy workers for whom AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany issued a charter after they voted 1,664 to 12 to leave the Teamsters.

James Luken, leader of the exodus from the Teamsters, said that at least 10 other locals in this area have indicated a desire to break away from the Teamsters and that NLRB elections are already scheduled for employes of Kroger Co., here, and the Cooperative Pure Milk Association, Middletown.

Unions Remodel Education Station

Sacramento, Calif. — Central California's educational television station, KVIE, got a face-lifting when members of the Sacramento Building Trades Council joined contractors and suppliers in a housecleaning project.

John C. Crabbe, manager of KVIE, said that, "Labor's contribution was of great help to the station, but what is really important is the interest and enthusiasm manifested by so many members and officers of the building trades unions who volunteered their skill and time."

Carpenters, electricians and plumbers cooperated with contractors and suppliers of lumber, paint and other materials in remodeling that provided the Community Award TV station with more efficient use of a building formerly

IBEW Local Leader Elected as Mayor

Hamilton, O.—This industrial town of 75,000 has elected the leader of the AFL-CIO in this area as mayor.

Robert E. Westfall, 35, a business manager for the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers and President of the AFL-CIO Council for Butler, Warren, and Clinton Counties, made it in his second try for political office.

Westfall, father of three daughters, has long been active in political and community affairs. He has also been an active member of his union, heading up its apprentice training program locally until becoming business manager five years ago.

Born and raised here, he is a member of IBEW Local 648 and started as a journeyman electrician. He attributes his victory to "an awful lot of people who got out and worked for me."

'Bad Image' of Hoffa Harms Labor: Meany war as the military things that we must have."

Emphasizing that "we can't have prosperity just at the top," Meany added:

"Whatever happens to the people at the lower end of the economic ladder eventually reflects itself throughout the entire structure of our economy."

Businessmen, he said, "should understand that they have a stake in the welfare of those at the bottom of the economic ladder."

To give an immediate spurt to the economy, Meany said, the AFL-CIO program calls for a large-scale federally aided public works program and a $100 income tax forgiveness which "would be translated into purchasing power."

On other problems, Meany said:

- The impact of automation has been uneven, with some industires and unions hard hit, while other fields have been expanding. The chief area of expansion, however, has been in the lower-paid service fields. The effect of automation plus the expanding labor force points up the need for a greater rate of economic growth.
- Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg "is a terrifically hard worker . . . He is doing a very good job."
- Labor's success, reflected in higher living standards which have enabled workers to enjoy automobiles, television sets and other recreation opportunities, is coupled with a lack of identification of some younger workers with the early struggles of unions and has resulted in "far too low" a level of participation in union activities.

"The percentage of members who attend union meetings is certainly a great deal lower than it was a good many years ago when the unions were really struggling for their existence," Meany said.

- Trade unionists "have a responsibility as citizens that comes ahead of their responsibility as trade union members, and I have always thought that. That is the reason we have stressed the importance of trade uinons taking a very active part in community life."

Human Relations Award Given Walsh

New York — Pres. Richard F. Walsh of the Theatrical Stage Employes has been awarded the annual human relations award of the motion picture and amusement division of the Joint Defense Appeal of the American Jewish Committee and the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith.

Walsh is an AFL-CIO vice president. The citation said of him:

"An ardent champion of the interests of his fellow unionists, he has captured and retained the friendly good will of management and has always succeeded in establishing an atmosphere of harmony and cooperation which has immeasurably benefited the industry as a whole and all of the individuals associated with it."

Goldberg Sees Teamsters as 'Dissatisfied' organize, the right to build a strong and free organization."

He noted that there have been times "when the local police power has been used, not to protect the rights of organizers, but to get them out of town. There have been occasions, he said, "when the police power has been used, not to protect individual rights, but to break a strike." He added:

"These things are, I hope, a part of the fading past in America."

Pointing to the success of the labor movement in ousting Communists wherever they had infiltrated into unions, Goldberg said this was accomplished with the help of the FBI "without smear against the great body of Americans who belong to honest unions, and with the result that the labor movement cast these parasites off and emerged stronger."

Declaring that Hoffa does not meet labor's standards, Goldberg said:

"My belief in the ability of the labor movement to rid itself of leadership that does not measure up to the ethical standards required for such leadership is a very deep one—and a very patient one."

West Virginia Labor Backs Rep. Bailey

Clarksburg, W. Va. — A continued program of legislative and educational activity by the West Virginia State AFL-CIO was approved by delegates from 200 affiliated organizations meeting here at the third constitutional convention of the state federation.

The delegates adopted a program calling for improvements in state laws affecting the welfare of workers, and empowered the executive board to increase the per capita tax for affiliated unions by a maximum of 5 cents per member per month, if that should become necessary.

They also:

- Directed that all present federation services be continued or expanded.
- Revised the constitution and bylaws.
- Re-elected Pres. Miles C. Stanley, Steelworkers, and Sec.-Treas. Benjamin W. Skeen, both without opposition.

A recommendation by the state COPE for endorsement of Rep. Cleveland M. Bailey (D) as a candidate for Congress in the new First District was accepted without a dissenting vote after a caucus report of delegates from that district who endorsed the dean of the West Virginia congressional delegation unanimously.

COPE reported that, on 12 important issues in the 1961 session of Congress, Bailey had 10 "right" votes, 1 "wrong" and was absent once.

On the same issues, COPE reported this record for Rep. Arch Moore (R), present First District congressman: 3 "right" votes, 9 "wrong" votes.

Among the 38 resolutions adopted was one calling for support of an amendment to the state constitution, up for a vote next November, which would revise the present state liquor control system; and another calling for all-out support by locals of state and area COPEs.

State COPE Dir. Glen Armstrong presented pins and scrolls to 10 members of the AFL-CIO Women's Auxiliary Div. for 100 hours or more of service.

Midway in the convention Steelworker delegates withdrew and held a caucus which recommended that USWA locals disaffiliate from the state body.

Fallout Hazard Seen For Jet Mechanics

A warning that airline mechanics who work on the engines of jet planes may require special protection against contamination was voiced by Frank Heisler, airline coordinator of the Machinists, as the IAM opened a continentwide conference of U.S. and Canadian airline mechanics and service personnel in Washington.

Jet liners traveling at 30,000 feet and higher, Heisler explained, draw in substantial amounts of radioactive material floating in the stratosphere as a result of the recent Soviet atomic bomb tests. Some foreign airlines have recognized the danger to ground crews and have issued special equipment as well as limiting the time they may work on such engines, he said.

The conference in addition to discussing radioactive fallout was to review bargaining proposals and air transport legislative and technical problems.

At Second AFL-CIO Parley:

Expansion of Social Insurance Urged at Federal, State Levels

Denver—Delegates to the western section of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Social Security conference here heard two speakers call for expansion of social insurance legislation at both federal and state levels.

Jerry R. Holleman, assistant secretary of labor, said "it is obvious that states as a whole have not and will not measure up to acceptable standards" in their laws on workmen's compensation, health insurance and unemployment insurance. The federal government must establish such standards, he maintained, and he urged officers of state AFL-CIO central bodies to support legislation establishing them.

Gov. Stephen L. R. McNichols of Colorado acknowledged the state government's obligation to take care of "these bread and butter issues."

"We have moved far in trying to provide educational facilities, rehabilitate delinquent children, improve the care of our mentally ill and liberalize other social legislation," he said, "but these western states are tough states. It's not easy to explain that a small tax increase is often a big bargain."

Both Holleman and McNichols said automation and population growth create severe problems that have to be worked out at every level of government. Holleman said many area redevelopment plans received by the government have to be bounced back to communities.

"They take the Chamber of Commerce approach," he said. "No one looks first at the manpower that is available in his community and tries to build a program around it. This has caused long delays in getting the provisions of the area redevelopment bill into action."

He called on state delegates to participate in planning these redevelopment projects.

McNichols had a word for the Chamber of Commerce. Concerning social legislation, he said "the chamber keeps looking down instead of trying to go ahead."

"We're patient, though," he added. "We hope they'll see the light."

He praised the labor movement in Colorado with these words: "They've helped me. They don't ask me to do anything impossible."

Holleman cautioned delegates that "this is no time to relax" in achieving legislative goals because of a friendlier Administration in Washington.

"There were times last year when it got downright lonely up there and we wondered if we really had popular support," he told them. "This is the time to move. Don't relax now."

Thirty-nine officers of central labor bodies in 19 western states attended the conference here. A similar parley for officials of eastern AFL-CIO state central bodies was held last week in Washington.

3 Had Died of Cancer— 'We Want to Help Now'

"I am sure there are times," Pres. H. C. Crotty of the Maintenance of Way Employes started his letter to AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, "when the trials and tribulations that weigh heavily upon you, and for which there are no nice, neat, tidy answers, make you wonder what will be next. I know this is true insofar as I am concerned. Then something happens that brightens your day and restores your confidence in mankind. I had such an experience today, and I would like to share it with you."

This is what happened:

When the AFL-CIO drive to raise $1 million for the Eleanor Roosevelt Cancer Foundation got under way, the brotherhood asked its local lodges to contribute 10 cents per member. Lodge 1175, part of the brotherhood's Missouri Pacific Federation with headquarters in Wichita, Kan., sent in a check for $117. Since most lodges have 100 to 200 members and would contribute from $10 to $20, the matter was bought to Crotty's attention.

"I concluded that in all probability the lodge had made a mistake in issuing the check," he wrote Meany, "since our records indicated there were 117 members in the lodge. Based on our request, their contribution would have been $11.70."

So, Crotty explained, he wrote Reece A. Story, secretary-treasurer of the lodge. Here is the reply:

"Before writing the check I talked the matter over with the president, the local chairman and a majority of the members of the lodge. Since I received your letter, I have talked to as many other members of the lodge as I could contact.

"They all agreed that the check for $117 is a good idea, because we have the money in the bank, and it is not doing any good lying there. We have had three lodge brothers die of cancer, and we have two brothers now who have it. One is still able to work some, and the other is dying the death of the damned. So you see, Brother Crotty, we want to help now, and as every cent will go to the fund, so much the better.

"If you meet the VERY YOUNG Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt, please say hello for us and thank her for letting us help."

Safety Drive Spurred By Los Angeles Labor

Los Angeles—Three accident prevention institutes, under way here in scattered parts of the county, are bringing the latest in safety techniques to union members.

Sponsored by the Los Angeles County AFL-CIO, the institutes are being held once a week for labor unionists in the San Fernando Valley, Long Beach-San Pedro Harbor areas, and the Pasadena-Pomona areas.

The programs were requested, Executive Sec.-Treas. W. J. Bassett said, by delegates to an AFL-CIO conference last June on safety and workmen's compensation. They wanted similar sessions brought closer to members in this far-flung county. Planning was done by the State Div. of Industrial Safety and the federation's own Safety & Industrial Accident Committee headed by Leo Vie.

Instructors come from the state safety division, National Safety Council, Los Angeles City Fire Dept., State Dept. of Public Health, County Optometric Society, Mine Safety Appliances Co. and the Employers Mutual Insurance Co.

Vie said that in 1960 almost 2 million American workers were injured on the job, of whom 17,400 died and another 83,600 suffered permanent, disabling injury. Wage losses exceed $1 billion.

These union members are on Vie's committee: Albert Arismendi, Sheet Metal Workers; Harry A. Baele, Machinists; Albert J. Coughlin, Leroy Devereaux, Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers; Roland E. Flott, Fire Fighters; R. H. Fox, Jr., Operating Engineers; John R. Ladika, Sprinkler Fitters; W. A. Paterson, Carpenters; James H. Reed, Steelworkers; Bert O. Simmonds, Butchers; Daniel A. Streeter, Photo Engravers, and McKay Mitchell, district engineer.

New Syrian Nation 101st Member of ILO

Geneva—The Syrian Arab Republic became the 101st member of the Intl. Labor Organization immediately following its readmission to the United Nations after its split from the United Arab Republic.

WORLD-WIDE SEARCH for weapons against cancer is advanced by a contribution of $250,000 from the Eleanor Roosevelt Cancer Foundation for the research fellowship program of the Intl. Union Against Cancer. Here Mrs. Roosevelt presents the check on behalf of the foundation to Dr. Harold F. Dorn, secretary-general of the international body. Labor's $1 million March on Cancer, in which the AFL-CIO seeks contributions of a dime a member for the Eleanor Roosevelt Foundation, will help advance this program of cancer research and training, both here and abroad.

New Cancer Institute To Honor Mrs. FDR

Denver—Ground has been broken here for a new cancer research project—the Eleanor Roosevelt Institute for Cancer Research—at the University of Colorado Medical Center.

Sec. of Health, Education and Welfare Abraham Ribicoff hailed the ground breaking as new evidence of the "grand partnership" of state and federal government with voluntary organizations such as the Eleanor Roosevelt Cancer Foundation which is making the university's new hospital and clinical research wing a reality.

Ribicoff recalled the words of Benjamin Franklin dedicating the cornerstone of the Pennsylvania Hospital, when he praised the "bounty of the government and of many private persons" who sought "relief of the sick and miserable." He said of the huge new additions to the University Medical Center:

"This building, like that earlier one, is founded by the bounty of the state and federal governments and of many private persons. It is, in fact, the result of a grand partnership. I am proud that our department, through the National Institutes of Health, has been able to participate generously in the building of your research programs. You may well be proud that your state—its governor and legislators—has had the vision necessary to underwrite the great expansion on which you are now embarked. And all of us owe a debt of gratitude to those private persons who, through such organizations as the Eleanor Roosevelt Cancer Foundation, are contributing so much to the forward thrust of medical knowledge both here and elsewhere."

Participating in the ceremonies were Pres. George A. Cavender of the Colorado Labor Council, and Pres. O. A. Knight of the Oil, Chemical & Atomic Workers.

Greetings from the foundation were presented in an address by Matthew B. Rosenhaus, its vice president and chairman. Rosenhaus noted that this institute is being built in fulfillment of the foundation's two-point program: construction of new cancer research facilities at outstanding hospitals and medical centers in various parts of the coutnry and sponsoring of an international fellowship program for cancer research and training both in this country and abroad.

Labor's March on Cancer, sponsored by the AFL-CIO, aims to present $1 million to Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt at the AFL-CIO convention in Miami Beach on Dec. 8. With labor paying all administrative costs, the entire sum will go for the foundation's two-point program.

Ohio Labor Adds Protest Against WLW

Columbus, O.—The Ohio State AFL-CIO has asked the Federal Communications Commission to investigate the refusal of radio station WLW in Cincinnati to carry a series of legislative broadcasts sponsored by the state federation last spring.

The FCC is currently investigating a similar complaint brought by the Auto Workers after WLW refused to renew the union's Eye Opener news program.

Ohio AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. Elmer F. Cope said the state body's experience backs up the UAW complaint that the station has refused to allow time for programs expressing liberal views.

The Ohio federation said the weekly legislative program was carried on 32 Ohio stations for 18 weeks. Only WLW rejected it.

Cope wrote FCC Chairman Newton Minow that the issue involved "is whether a particular viewpoint . . . is going to be denied access to channels of communications."

Kennedy Order Urged on Housing Bias

Bar Funds, Meany Bids President

New York—An executive order blocking federal funds and guarantees from builders or lenders who discriminate in their housing was urged by AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany in a speech recorded for delivery to the second Conference on Civil Rights of the New York City Central Labor Council.

Meany called for an order "just as explicit" as Executive Order 10925, which bars both discrimination on government contracts and in the federal establishment.

It should apply, he added, "to every lending institution or builder, public or private, that gets any direct or indirect help from the federal government."

Meany's address was heard by about 500 delegates to the one-day conference. He keyed it to "the practical approach," noting that "we need more than moralists" in the struggle against discrimination, segregation and bigotry.

"Some of us may be inspired in this struggle by high moral purpose," he said. "That's fine. Some of us may be overcome, at times, by moral indignation. There's a place for that, too, and it's often justifiable.

"Yet the real issue, it seems to me, is not our moral righteousness. The real issue is what we are doing, in a practical, hard-headed way, to translate this moral righteousness into the form of material justice for those who are now denied it.

"I am sure the most victimized of our fellow-citizens, the Negroes, are encouraged by the increasing number of eloquent voices that cry out against racial discrimination. I am even more certain that the middle-income head of a Harlem family would trade any number of speeches for a chance to live somewhere else.

"We want to get him that chance. And that's what I mean by the practical approach."

Housing the Key

The key to school desegregation at least in the North, Meany said, is housing desegregation—"and the key to housing desegregation is in the hands of the federal government."

"What is the practical approach?" he asked. "The practical approach is to insist that no federal money, no federal guarantee, no federal insurance can be enjoyed by builders or lenders who discriminate.

"And I am happy to say that the Kennedy Administration has made a start in that direction by

Hits Talk Of 'Freeze' On Wages

By David L. Perlman

Labor's battle against the "massive" unresolved problem of growing technological unemployment must be fought and won in legislative halls as well as the bargaining table, Pres. Walter P. Reuther declared in a keynote address to the Industrial Union Dept. convention.

If the private sector of the economy can't provide full employment, it is up to the federal government to make up the "deficit" in jobs, Reuther told more than 400 delegates meeting in Washington, D. C.

He called for a "new national planning approach" to make full use of the nation's manpower resources, declaring that the United States can no longer rely "on the blind forces of the market place to solve the problem of unemployment."

Asks Shorter Workweek

Warning that the problem of displaced workers will "get worse," Reuther called for a drive "by the whole labor movement" to bring about a shorter workweek through both collective bargaining and legislation.

He urged labor to fight both "a balanced budget philosophy" and proposals for a wage freeze as a supposed solution to the nation's dollar deficit.

So-called "wage restraint," he said, would put the economy "in deeper trouble" by curtailing purchasing power. "Millions of families," he said, "have need but not the purchasing power to create consumer demand."

'Balanced Economy' Needed

A balanced budget in a time of high unemployment, he warned, would result in "unbalancing the economy."

"You can balance the federal budget in Washington only when you balance the family budget of the American people by giving them full employment," Reuther declared.

The vision of the National Association of Manufacturers is "blurred by large dollar signs," he said, and the John Birch Society—"these ugly native fascists"—is "doing everything possible to exploit fear and frustration." Reuther called for labor to provide a "counter-thrust" and "arouse decent Americans to a greater effort."

"No one can win a nuclear war," he declared, but the United States

Threat Seen to Job Pickup:

AFL-CIO Warns of Danger In U. S. Budget Hold-Down

The AFL-CIO has warned the Kennedy Administration that a rigid commitment now to a balanced budget for the next fiscal year may thwart attempts to reduce continuing high unemployment.

In a letter to Pres. Kennedy, AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany declared there is a "dangerous possibility" that the level of joblessness in late 1962 and early 1963 "may be no lower than 5.5 percent of the labor force," and in that event a continued deficit would be needed to reduce unemployment to minimum levels.

Meany urged the President to "clarify the Administration's views" on the budget with "emphasis on flexibility," tied to unforeseen defense requirements and the economic situation.

The federation president said the AFL-CIO has become "increasingly concerned in recent months" over Administration statements on the budget for the fiscal year starting July 1, 1962. "It is our hope," wrote Meany, "that these statements and press stories have not placed you and the Administration in a committed position for a balanced budget . . . with very little room for the flexibility that actual conditions may require."

Budget deficits may be needed, Meany continued, when "unemployment is high and considerable amounts of productive capacity are idle." He pointed to the swing from deficit to surplus that was a "major cause" of the 1960-61 recession and added that the country cannot tolerate another "aborted recovery."

The Meany letter cited Pres. Kennedy's statement in the budget review last month that it was his intention to propose a balanced budget for fiscal 1963 "barring extraordinary and unforeseen defense requirements." It pointed to statements by Treasury Sec. Dillion constituting a "rather rigid commitment" and by other Administration spokesmen in the same vein.

Pointing out the hazards of attempting to predict the course of economic events for the next 20 months—to the end of the fiscal year beginning next July—Meany wrote that "unemployment may decline sharply, in which case we would certainly agree that a wise and prudent budget policy should attempt to attain an early budget balance."

But in the opinion of the AFL-CIO, said Meany, the "unfortunately high unemployment of the past 11 months will not drop to a minimum level sharply and quickly." The start of fiscal 1963, he said, may find a rate of unemployment near 5.5 percent.

"In the light of these uncertainties about the course of economic developments in the next 20 months," Meany concluded, "and the need to achieve low levels of unemployment, we urge you to clarify the Administration's views on the budget for fiscal 1963 . . ."

NLRB Seeks to Enjoin Mill Shutdown, Firings

The National Labor Relations Board has petitioned federal courts to issue injunctions blocking the shutdown of a Georgia textile mill and compelling the immediate reinstatement of three workers fired during a union organizing drive in South Carolina.

In a sharp departure from past practices, the board acted in both cases under the rarely-used Sec. 10J of the Taft-Hartley Act.

This provision allows the NLRB to direct General Counsel Stuart Rothman to seek an injunction giving workers immediate protection against alleged unfair labor practices by employers. The effect would be to restore the status quo during the period required for the NLRB to hold hearings and issue a decision on the unfair labor practice complaints.

The labor board has asked federal district judges to:

- Enjoin Burlington Industries—the nation's largest textile chain—from "taking any further steps" to close its Peerless Woolen Mills

Grain Millers Beat Off Raid By Teamsters

Gering, Neb.—Employes of the Great Western Sugar Co. here have defeated an attempted raid by the unaffiliated Teamsters in voting emphatically in a National Labor Relations Board election for the Grain Millers as their bargaining agent.

The Grain Millers, successors to the Intl. Council of Sugar & Allied Workers, the bargaining agent at this location since 1938, got 156 votes to the Teamsters' 28.

It was the third time in less than a year that the millers' union routed the truckers in NLRB elections. Last December the Grain Millers won at Burley and Caldwell, Ida.

AFGM Pres. Roy O. Wellborn said his union is prepared to resume negotiations on a new contract for Great Western refinery workers, interrupted by the Teamsters' intervention.

One aspect of the raid was a legal dispute which has not been settled. In the NLRB hearing last spring on the Teamsters' petition for an election, Great Western Sugar management raised a point which will be argued at a hearing Dec. 14 in Washington, D. C. The issue is a 1955 board decision that employes who perform supervisory duties, even on a part-time or seasonal basis, are barred from the bargaining unit.

This board doctrine, according to AFGM Sec.-Treas. H. A. Schneider, hurt AFL-CIO efforts to organize plants whose seasonal operations require employes to assume supervisory duties part of the year.

On a motion by Counsel Alfred Kamin of the Grain Millers the board has agreed, Schneider said, to hear arguments on whether it should end the rule barring such part-time supervisors from union contract protection.

Public Health Body Backs Anderson-King Approach

Detroit—The governing council of the American Public Health Association has in effect endorsed the principle of the Anderson-King bill, which would finance health care for the aged under the social security system without a means test.

In a resolution passed at the annual APHA convention here, delegates voted to support "appropriate proposals, including social insurance mechanisms" for the financing of "adequate health services" for the aged without a means test and on a paid-up basis "without additional fees or payments" for services in institutions, out-patient departments and organized home care programs.

The resolution is directly in contrast to the position of the American Medical Association, which advocates a means test for public health care and has opposed the Anderson-King bill in public hearings.

The APHA membership includes public health officials, doctors, nurses, technicians and other specialists.

Goldberg Finds Sharp Gains in Japanese Pay

Wages and labor conditions of workers in Japan—second only to Canada as a buyer of this country's products—have improved to the point where they lead those in all Asian nations, Sec. of Labor Arthur J. Goldberg said on his return from participating in the recent U.S.-Japanese discussions.

"This is true in both absolute levels and in rate of improvement," he said. "Japan has now embarked on a program to double its national income. This program includes an effort to further improve labor standards and the level of living."

This country sold $1.3 billion in exports to Japan last year, and in 1961 the figure is running at an annual rate of $1.8 billion, Goldberg said. Imports from Japan were $1.1 billion last year and are running close to $1 billion this year, he added. He issued his statement at a press conference in Washington.

"I am aware of the hardships," Goldberg said, "which are caused to some workers in the U.S. because of competition with Japanese imports, but restrictive trade measures and limiting imports are not adequate answers.

Exports Mean Jobs

"At the same time, we must recognize that many jobs of Americans depend on exports. We in the U.S. and the American workers as a whole have much more to gain from liberalized trade with Japan than from restrictions.

"We must use all measures or methods available to us to work out satisfactory trade relationships. This should include working together both through direct contacts and through our common membership in such multilateral forums as the Intl. Labor Organization and the General Agreement on Tariffs & Trade (GATT)."

Goldberg said that for workers in particular areas or industries adversely affected by imports, the Administration is weighing proposals designed to help find "other suitable and productive employment and to train workers for such employment."

"A most important factor in dealing with the problems of international trade is that both countries have healthy and expanding economies," he said. "This will increase markets for the products of both countries, and will increase job opportunities in both countries."

Goldberg added that it was agreed there should be a greater exchange between the two countries of persons concerned with labor matters so that those from each country may better know the conditions under which the other lives and works.

Number of Jobless Held 'Understated'

Government unemployment statistics tend to understate, not exaggerate, the nation's jobless problem, AFL-CIO Research Dir. Stanley Ruttenberg declared in a nationally-broadcast interview.

Ruttenberg said bluntly that if people working part-time because no full-time jobs are available were included in the unemployment count, the jobless percentage would rise from the present 6.8 to 8 percent or higher.

He also suggested the existence of a "conspiracy" to conceal the seriousness of persistent high unemployment.

The Readers Digest, Ruttenberg said, is "traveling the low road" by charging that the government is deliberately "engineering" high unemployment figures to justify "spending" programs. Dr. Arthur Burns, once chairman of Pres. Eisenhower's Council of Economic Advisers, is taking "the high road" by using "very technical language" to cast doubts on the reliability of the unemployment count, he declared.

Method Unchanged

Ruttenberg, interviewed on the Mutual Broadcasting network's Labor News Conference, noted that the method of compiling the statistics "hasn't been changed at all since Arthur Burns was here in Washington as the chairman of the President's Council of Economics Advisers."

The nation's serious economic problems, Ruttenberg emphasized, arise from unemployment and not from unemployment statistics. He added:

"The people that are unable to do anything about bringing the level of unemployment down through actual economic programs of putting people to work want to hide the high levels by removing these people from the statistics. Well, yes, you can reduce the statistics but you're still going to have the unemployed person. It seems to me this is one of the big problems confronting this Administration."

Ruttenberg disputed statements that U.S. unemployment statistics would be greatly reduced if the United States adopted the British method of computing joblessness. He said studies show that the result would be "substantially the same, one percentage point difference either way."

He expressed concern that the Administration, although acknowledging that the present level of unemployment is too high, "doesn't seem to be engaging in any economic programs that are designed to put these people back to work." He declared:

"We have to do something about providing job opportunities for the people that are unemployed. Only in this way can we demonstrate to the Communist world that the free world . . . can and will handle its unemployment problem."

Ruttenberg Named For Job Data Study

Pres. Kennedy has named a six-member committee, including AFL-CIO Research Dir. Stanley Ruttenberg, to study the government's emplyoment and unemployment statistics and to recommend any changes they may consider desirable.

The President acted at the request of Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg, who said there has been both misunderstanding and "much misrepresentation" of how the government gets its statistics and what they mean.

Dr. Robert A. Gordon, chairman of the Economics Dept. of the University of California, was named to head the blue ribbon committee of experts.

UAW Accuses Ford of Dodging Canadian Duty

Windsor, Ont.—The Auto Workers, having stopped the Ford Motor Co. from shipping British-made Fords into Canada duty-free through Jamaica, are now protesting the entry of U.S. Ford products through the same channel.

George Burt, UAW Canadian director, charged the company with "bringing in via Jamaica thousands of past model service parts from the U.S. on which it is not paying proper duty" because it has established a three-man office in Kingston, Jamaica.

Bankers Report Jump In Embezzlement Rate

New York—Bank embezzlements are running at a higher rate than last year's record total, a committee of the American Bankers Association has reported.

For the first six months of 1961, bank officers and employes were guilty of thefts totaling more than $8.5 million, counting thefts over $10,000 each, according to the annual report of the ABA's insurance and protective committee.

The committee advised all banks to carry $1 million in excess fidelity insurance against internal embezzlement, and said that this year's loss of $8.5 million far exceeds the $1.87 million lost in the last fiscal year to bank robbers and burglars.

Last year the 12-month loss was $10.1 million in 111 separate embezzlements, of which six were not fully covered by insurance. Up to July 1 this year there were 65 embezzlements of which seven exceeded the insurance.

It was the second such indication that bankers are alarmed about "internal" theft. Recently an officer of a bank auditors' association warned that, on the basis of recent experience, "an average of one out of eight banks will report a bank fraud this year."

In a speech to Ohio and Arkansas bankers, Executive Dir. F. Byers Miller of the Association for Bank Audit, Control & Operations said FBI reports of 1,771 bank embezzlements during the 1960 fiscal year showed that 8.6 percent of the loss was due to bank presidents, 18.7 percent to bank managers and vice presidents, 30 percent to cashiers and the balance to other employes. (See Text, Page 4.)

This record was described as "shocking" by AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler in a report to Pres. George Meany and presidents of all unions.

The ABA committee which made the report on this year's bank stealing was headed by Thomas F. Glavey, who said the rise in losses "should not be taken to imply any widespread wave of embezzlements

The discovery of dishonest acts by bankers reflects the effectiveness of internal audits and other protective measures, said Glavey.

Reno Hotel Votes Exclude Shills, Etc.

The National Labor Relations Board has agreed that Reno gambling casino employes—shills, pit bosses, stickmen, boxmen, crap dealers et al—should not be permitted to vote in elections requested by the Hotel & Restaurant Employes among appropriate workers at four Reno hotels. A board panel of three approved an agreement by the union and employers to exclude the casino workers.

In ordering an election by Dec. 15 among room clerks, switchboard operators and other workers, NLRB Chairman Frank McCullough and Member John H. Fanning reversed a board decision of last Apr. 14 declaring the only appropriate bargaining unit would be a multilateral one rather than elections at each hotel as the union asked. Member Boyd Leedom dissented.

Funeral Services Held For John Lax of CWA

Regina, Sask.—Funeral services for John Lax, Canadian director of the Communications Workers, were held in St. Peter's Anglican Church here following his recent death in Cookesville, Ont. He was 50.

A native of Yorkshire, England, who was brought here as a child, he was employed by Saskatchewan Government Telephones for 24 years until he was named a CWA representative for the province in 1951. He was elected director of Dist. 10, which covers all of Canada, in 1959.

Surviving are his widow, Eileen; three children and his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Lax, who still live in Regina.

AFL-CIO Donates Aid To Algerian Refugees

The AFL-CIO has contributed $10,000 to the General Confederation of Algerian Workers (UGTA) for its welfare work among thousands of refugees who have fled into neighboring Tunisia and Morocco during seven years of struggle for Algerian independence.

In advising UGTA Gen. Sec. Ali Yahia of the gift, AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany called it a "demonstration" of the AFL-CIO's "continued solidarity with the Algerian workers."

The AFL-CIO Executive Council at its meeting in Miami Beach in February 1960 had allocated an earlier $10,000 to the Algerian trade union center for its work among refugees, many of whom are children and young people. The program also is supported by the Solidarity Fund of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions.

Thousands of workers have been driven into neighboring countries as a result of the long fight of Algerians for freedom from France, and it is among these refugees that the UGTA is working.

Its program has four main sections—apprenticeship training for young workers, trade union education, homes for orphans and the children of workers and general social welfare work among the refugees regardless of whether or not they are workers.

Marine Officers Win 4 Percent Pay Raise

Hoboken, N. J.—The Maritime Union's Brotherhood of Marine Officers has reached agreement on a new four-year contract covering 300 licensed officers of the United Fruit Co.

Capt. George Foster, vice president, said licensed deck, engineer and staff officers are being polled on contract provisions including a 4 percent wage increase, 90 days annual vacation for masters and chief engineers, and other improvements.

Rail Unit Winds Up Hearings on Rules

The Presidential Railroad Commission has wound up the hearing phase of its study of work rules disputes between rail labor and management as five operating unions submitted a final rebuttal of testimony by railroad officials.

The 15-member tripartite commission had originally been scheduled to submit its recommendations by Dec. 1, but Chairman Simon H. Rifkind announced that the report will be delayed because the time required for fact-gathering has been greater than anticipated.

Rifkind said the commission has compiled a record of 15,503 pages of oral testimony given in 96 days of hearings, more than 300 exhibits and a number of special studies by staff committees and outside experts.

"This record," he said, "together with inspection tours covering all branches of railroad service, constitutes the most extensive and intensive examination of the rules and practices which govern the relations between the railroads and the operating employes ever undertaken in the United States."

'Shoddy Fabrication' Charged

Rail unions, in a final joint statement to the commission, charged that management witnesses had resorted to "brazen, shoddy fabrication" in arguing that smaller crews could safely and efficiently operate trains.

The unions challenged a claim by a Chesapeake & Ohio official, Lloyd W. Burks, that smaller management crews had no trouble taking over during strikes on the New York Central and Clinchfield railroads and at strikebound industrial plants when railroad crews refused to cross picket lines.

Union officials who were on the scene testified that management in almost all cases used at least as many crew members as would normally be employed and that on occasions when they did not, they compiled a heavy accident and derailment rate. In one switching operation which did not have a fireman, the unions said the locomotive struck an auto while switching cars across a public crossing.

"The auto entered the crossing on the fireman's side and was not seen by the supervisor operating the locomotive," the union statement declared.

New York—Six workers, each from a different foreign country, have begun training in U.S. methods of producing and distributing gas and electric power under a joint educational project of Utility Workers Local 1-2 and the Consolidated Edison Co.

The program originated with Business Mgr. Michael Sampson of Local 1-2. A trip to Europe in the summer of 1960 convinced him that one of the best ways to combat Communist infiltration into underdeveloped countries was to show the workers in them how Americans work and live. The company, which employs more than 21,000 Local 1-2 members, endorsed the plan.

The AFL-CIO Dept. of Intl. Affairs helped to unsnarl the red tape, but it was not until the Kennedy Administration took office that the mechanics for bringing the trainees to this country were set in operation.

The visitors are Aloysius Anigbo, Nigeria; Charles Emile Hespel, France; Kahia Lahcen, Morocco; Mustapha Marniche, Algeria; Aleya Mongi, Tunisia, and Morris Mulima, Kenya.

Work at Union Rates

They will work in various Con Ed installations for a minimum of six months, receiving for the jobs they perform the wage rates set forth in the union contract. On completion of their training they will return to their own lands to instruct fellow-workers.

The trainees were welcomed at a reception attended by officers and executive board members of Local 1-2, Con Ed officials, guests from other unions and members of missions to the United Nations representing the visitors' countries.

Introducing the trainees, Sampson said U.S. labor is no stranger to combating communism, "since U.S. trade unionists constantly go into countries where Communists are trying to infiltrate to show them that a democratic labor movement does exist in the U.S. and that American workers enjoy the fruits of this free labor unionism."

"But American industry has not wholeheartedly supported this effort," he added, "and the participation of Con Ed is a landmark occasion that we hope will encourage similar programs on the part of other utilities and industries."

Bernard E. Gallagher, industrial relations vice president of the company, said Con Ed is "all for the idea." He expressed hope that other industries will also do their part in training foreign workers.

Sen. Jacob K. Javits (R-N.Y.) congratulated the union and the company on their joint sponsorship of "such a vital venture in international understanding." Official programs have their part, he asserted, but one in which management and labor cooperate in the national interest is "worthy of cheers and applause."

plant at Rossville, Ga., where workers last summer voted for union representation by the Allied Industrial Workers. The union—and the NLRB regional office in a formal complaint—charged that the mill was being closed because the company didn't want to bargain with a union.

- Direct the reinstatement of three employes of the Wellington Mill division of the West Point Mfg. Co. at Anderson, S. C., who were allegedly fired because they supported organizing efforts of the Textile Workers Union of America. The NLRB also asked that the company be enjoined from "threatening employes with discharge or other reprisals or promising them benefits to discourage their union activities."

Pollock Hails Action

TWUA Pres. William Pollock hailed the labor board's action in South Carolina as "historic and long overdue."

Pointing out that under past practices many NLRB decisions have turned out to be "post-mortems" because employers have long since killed off organizing drives through firings and threats, Pollock declared:

"If the NLRB follows the precedent it is setting here and establishes a pattern of seeking injunctions in ordinary discharge cases, it will be taking an historic step forward in restoring the right of southern workers to join unions."

In the Burlington-Peerless case, the NLRB asked that the company be required to bargain in good faith with the Allied Industrial Workers on matters including "any economic or other necessity for liquidation."

Speech Presages Shift

The labor board's new policy was presaged by a recent blunt speech in regard to anti-union employers by NLRB Chairman Frank W. McCulloch and by a sharply-worded report by a House Labor subcommittee citing "unconscionable delay" in processing of unfair practice cases.

McCulloch told the Federal Bar Association that the labor board needs "a bigger stick" to deal with wilful violations of the law. Acknowledging union complaints that an order reinstating fired workers long after the event is "no more than a license fee for union busting," McCulloch added:

"The employer willingly pays such fees if it assures him of an operation free from unionism."

He said at the time that the NLRB was studying "various ways of taking the profit out of unfair labor practices," including a greater use of the board's injunctive powers.

The report of the House subcommittee, headed by Rep. Roman C. Pucinski (D-Ill.), specifically called on the NLRB to make greater use of its powers to seek court injunctions against flagrant and continuing unfair practices, declaring:

"Injunctions are now utilized extensively against union activities and to an almost nonexistent extent against employer unfair practices."

In the South Carolina case, U.S. Dist. Judge Robert Martin, Jr., has set Nov. 29 as the date for a "show-cause" hearing on the injunction request. Dist. Judge Frank Hooper has taken under advisement the request in the Rossville, Ga., case.

OCAW Says Thanks For Strike Support

Kansas City, Mo.—The Sinclair Nation Wide Council of Union Employes of the Oil, Chemical & Atomic Workers at its quarterly meeting here formally thanked three unions for backing given during the OCAW strike against the Sinclair Oil Corp. in June and July.

Letters expressing gratitude and appreciation for "support and cooperation" which "helped to bring this strike to a successful conclusion" were sent the Maritime Union, the Marine Engineers and the Masters, Mates & Pilots.

Labor Health Care Pamphlet Available

Labor's case for health care for the aged through social security is presented in a new pamphlet, Health Care with Dignity, based on AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany's testimony before the House Ways & Means Committee.

The pamphlet, Publication No. 125, is available at 10 cents a copy or $7.50 per hundred from the Pamphlet Div., AFL-CIO Dept. of Publications, 815 16th St., N.W., Washington 6, D. C.

NLRB Upholds Unions In Vote, Picketing Cases

The National Labor Relations Board in three recent decisions has overruled two regional directors and modified a board decision that had been in effect for five years.

With Chairman Frank McCulloch participating in each case on the majority side, board panels have upheld the union position by:

- Setting aside two elections lost by unions and ordering new representation elections on the ground that the employer misused his "free speech" rights.
- Deciding that picketing to obtain the reinstatement of a discharged employe is lawful when a union is not trying to compel the employer to recognize it as the bargaining agent for employes.

The facts in each case are as follows:

At the R. D. Cole Mfg. Co. in Newnan, Ga., Pres. E. D. Cole, Jr., was found to have made a speech to employes which "generated fear of economic loss" if the Boiler Makers won an election and "interfered with the election atmosphere." Members Gerald A. Brown, John H. Fanning and McCulloch directed another election within 30 days. Member Philip Ray Rodgers dissented.

In his speech Cole told employes that after the same union lost a 1959 election at the plant, business improved because customers "had confidence" there would be no "interference" from a union. The same business improvement could be accomplished if the company "won the election" again, Cole was quoted as saying.

At the plant of Somismo, Inc., in Chicago, the employer made a speech found by the board to imply that the company would go out of business if the union won. The Teamsters lost, 26 to 28, and filed objections. Board Members Boyd Leedom, Brown and McCulloch ordered a new vote within 30 days, Rodgers dissenting.

In the third case, involving Fanelli Ford Sales, Inc., of New York City, and Local 259 of the Auto Workers, Members Brown, Fanning and McCulloch voted to overrule a 1956 decision in the Lewis Food case and to dismiss a complaint against the union. Rodgers voted not to dismiss it.

This case involved the firing of Michael Marrone, employe of the firm's service department, who had signed a UAW membership form and was seeking to organize at the Bronx auto shop. The union maintained a picket line for two months in 1960 until it was enjoined by a U.S. District Court.

The company charged the picket line was illegal and the NLRB general counsel issued a complaint alleging the union was seeking to force the company to recognize it. The UAW denied it, and the NLRB majority upheld the union. The picketing was directed only at getting Marrone reinstated, the majority ruled.

Government Must Help

THE CONTINUING STRUGGLE to secure equal rights for all Americans is moving forward on many fronts—education, public places, voting, transportation—with reports of new successes.

But as each of these yields to the new pressures for real civil rights, it becomes increasingly clear that two areas that shape and mould the character of discrimination must become first-line targets in the struggle—housing and employment.

Given the overriding power of employers to discriminate in their hiring policies and their refusal in many cases to enter into anti-discrimination agreements with unions—given also the few remaining pockets of discrimination in the labor movement—the need is for a national fair employment practices law applicable to all.

The second need is a firm, unyielding policy by the government that no federal money, guarantees or insurance will be made available to builders or lenders who discriminate in sales or rentals.

A breakthrough in housing and employment discrimination based on national government action is basic to ending all discrimination.

Cynicism on Democracy

THE POLITICAL COMPLEXION of the 88th Congress may well be decided in a half dozen state legislatures where political operators are intent on maintaining power by geographical trickery.

The reshuffling of congressional district lines necessitated by the 1960 census has produced, especially in the states losing congressional seats, a cynical disregard for fair representation.

The first prerequisite of a democracy is that all voters be equally represented in the legislative process on the local, state and national levels. Each citizen's vote must have the same weight in the legislative assemblies or representative democracy becomes a mockery.

The redistricting of congressional seats, on the basis of actions to date, reflects the power drive of political groups concerned only with maintaining their present unfair representation in the state legislatures and Congress. The national effect will be to give more weight in many areas to district lines than to the electorate.

Action by the NLRB

THE NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD is attempting to restore a semblance of justice in the administration of the Taft-Hartley Act and the outcome may revitalize union organizing efforts, especially in the South.

The board is presently involved in attempting to correct a procedural approach that in the past has constituted a union-busting method for employers willing to pay the small price of a slap on the wrist years after an organizing drive has been smashed.

The board is now moving to secure injunctions in federal court in two cases where unions have filed unfair labor practices, charging in one case that a firm is planning to close down a plant to prevent bargaining after the union won an election, and in another that workers have been fired for leading a unionization campaign. In past years the charges would have been heard in due course—a period of several years in many cases—and a board decision would have been forthcoming after either the plant had been closed or the organizing drive smashed.

The move to secure injunctions to stop violations of the federal labor law while there is still a sense of immediacy and pertinancy is a step to restore fair play and justice.

1,771 Frauds in 1960:

Strict Internal Audits Urged To Curb High Bank Theft Rate

The following is excerpted from an address by F. Byers Miller, executive director of The Association for Bank Audit, Control and Operation, before members of the Ohio Bankers Association and the Arkansas Bankers Association. The address is entitled "Let's Put Out the Fire."

ACCORDING TO THE Federal Bureau of Investigation, during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1960, there were 1,771 individual cases of bank fraud, with the reported violations totaling $7.4, million for an average defalcation of about $4,200.

It does not take a higher degree in mathematics to figure out that on the basis of these figures, an average of one out of every eight banks in the United States will report a bank fraud this year. While I recognize the weakness of applying United States' averages to an individaul state, nevertheless, if Ohio (or Arkansas) are just average, about 75 Ohio banks (29 Arkansas banks) will report violations to the FBI this year. In fact, it is not beyond the realm of reality to say that while some of you are sitting here listening to me an embezzlement can be taking place in your bank back home.

We should examine the facts to see who perpetrate the embezzlements. Although non-officer cases outnumber the officer embezzlements two to one, keep in mind that there are four times as many non-officer employees. Twenty percent of the officers involved were presidents of the bank.

An FBI survey classifies persons involved in embezzlements as follows:

- 42.7 percent by tellers, clerks and other operating personnel.
- 30.0 percent by cashiers.
- 12.7 percent by managers
- 8.6 percent by presidents
- 6.0 percent by vice presidents.

In looking at the whole problem of loss prevention through internal auditing and control, I think it is necessary to recognize that most of the larger banks of $10 million or over do a fairly adequate job in this area. The area of greatest danger lies in the smaller banks, those under $10 million,

Some say, "We are too small to have an auditor." One leading authority in the field has stated that any bank of $5 million or over in total assets, including trust funds, loan collateral, collections and temporary safekeeping, is of sufficient size to warrant a full-time auditor.

Another excuse for lack of a sound program is the fact that management knows all of the employees, has known them most of their lives, and is sure that they are honest.

Let's face it: no one has ever hired an embezzler. Unless a person is thought to be honest, he is never put in a position where he can steal.

If one were to place the final responsibility for bank defalcations, it would have to be placed upon the board of directors. Too frequently, directors of banks are selected for window dressing or for the impact they might have upon building deposit balances.

There are several things upon which management and directors, particularly of the smaller banks, rely for the proper operation of the bank. Unfortunately, none of these is worthy of this type of reliance. Included in these things would be: supervisory examinations, directors' examinations and fidelity insurance.

As pointed out previously, the examinations are not audits. Banks are examined primarily for liquidity, solvency, capital, and compliance with the laws and regulations of the particular examining agency.

WHILE MOST BANK by-laws call for directors to examine and audit the affairs of the bank, in too many cases these audits are entirely superficial. Most directors are not qualified to conduct a thorough audit.

The old saying that an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure is pertinent at this point. It is sounder management to prevent the loss than merely being sure that the loss is spread through insurance after it occurs.

The soundest thing upon which directors and management can rely is an adequate internal auditing program whereby an individual within the bank is delegated this responsibility, and in meeting this responsibility he must have access to, and make his reports directly to the Board of Directors.

Secondly, more and more certified public accountants are becoming skilled in conducting audits of commercial banks. If the board of directors feels that the bank is not of sufficient size to have an adequate internal auditing program, then provision should be made for an external program.

There is no question but that the problem of bank embezzlements is serious. The problem can not be wished away, nor will it be solved if bank directors and top management in so many banks continue to ignore it or be indifferent in their attitude.

Morgan Says:

Thunder on the Right Accents Dearth of Clear Liberal Voices

By Edward P. Morgan

(This column is excerpted from the nightly broadcasts of Edward P. Morgan, ABC commentator sponsored by the AFL-CIO. Listen to Morgan over the ABC network Monday through Friday at 7 p. m. EST.)

THE VOICE OF THE TURTLE is heard through the land, in and out of season, but where is the voice of the liberal these days? Lamentably, it is not making the noises of leadership.

An important member of the New Frontier, a distinguished liberal himself, sizes the situation up this way: one of the reasons the radical right is currently getting so much attention is that nobody is speaking with authority for the wide swath of citizens to the left of the political center.

Morgan

Adlai Stevenson is swamped with problems at the United Nations and is not in a position now to be the immediate spokesman for the causes of American liberalism. Chester Bowles is caught up in the administrative meshes of the State Dept. Hubert Humphrey's biting staccato has been muted and mellowed by his heavy and important responsibilities as assistant majority leader of the Senate.

Pres. Kennedy himself has always been much more of a pragmatist than a liberal and in its first year the New Frontier has broken no fresh ground on the left. Indeed in fiscal and some other policies, some of its own members make the case privately that the regime has moved to the right along the paths that that amiable conservative, Dwight D. Eisenhower, had blazed. New and significant emphasis to the trend came in the Wall Street Journal. One of its top political reporters, Alan L. Otten, writes that Nelson Rockefeller's political handlers and the governor of New York himself are now stressing his conservative side in aiming at the 1964 Republican nomination and seeking to allay the fears of the GOP right wing.

"The hearts of the conservatives will always belong to (Sen.) Goldwater," a governor's aide told Otten, "but Nelson's acceptability will improve as the more rounded picture becomes known." Rockefeller men, says the Wall Street Journal dispatch, are happily circulating a series of 13 articles on him and Goldwater in the Chicago Tribune which concludes, among other things, that "the two men aren't as far apart as is supposed."

What is the reason for this increasing accent on the right? Is it that there are no more liberal causes to be championed? Hardly. Is it that the conservatives are proving that they have all the answers? There proof, so far, consists of little more than thundering complaints against "big government," "softness on communism" and demands for "total victory" in the Cold War.

"The right is wrong," a thoughtful New York liberal Democrat and intellectual declares, but confesses worriedly, "I don't know what the right answers are. We mustn't be too hard or too soft. Perhaps we have got to hit the middle line, but what is the middle line?"

CERTAINLY THERE IS no disgrace in trying to find it. I suspect that liberals, whether they will admit it or not, suffer in common with exponents of the right, middle and partisan fringes a disease which might be called hardening of the political arteries. They get locked into positions that are no longer useful. They can fall victim to the slogan approach just as their friends on the radical right can. This is ironic because the liberal, of all people, is supposed to be intellectually supple.

Some liberals can hardly bear to grapple with the crises of the Cold War because of the horrors of nuclear holocaust to which the major ones might lead. But this does not deter the reactionary radicals of the right, as Walter Lippmann calls them. The silence or the soft-pedaling diffident confusion of the liberals leaves a vacuum which the right is filling with frightening thunder.

Never were liberals under heavier responsibility to think clearly, and never were the clear voices of liberalism more urgently needed to be heard. It is not softness to demand that the government clarify and justify its civil defense policy. It is not softness to demand that the government justify resumption of nuclear weapons testing in the atmosphere by more than a mere statement that "we have to do it to keep ahead of the Russians." In a sense the liberal is the keeper of the country's conscience and also the inspirer of boldness. The liberal dare not stand down silently now.

Forand Reports 300,000 Joining National Council of Senior Citizens

Three hundred thousand persons—members of educational, senior citizens, agriculture, labor and medical groups—have joined the National Council of Senior Citizens for Medical Care, Chairman Aime Forand, former Rhode Island member of Congress, announced in an interview at his new home in Bethesda, a suburb of Washington.

Interviewed on As We See It, an AFL-CIO public service program heard on the ABC radio network, Forand said that although the national council has been organized only two months, members of 47 organizations have already joined.

"This is going to be a non-partisan, non-political, very democratic organization," Forand said. "It is now a temporary organization, pending a convention which we hope to hold in the not too far distant future."

Headquarters are in the Coronet Hotel, 200 C St., S. E., in Washington.

"We are getting letters from all parts of the country asking for further information on our organization and what can be done to join or help," Forand reported.

"We are very hopeful that in the next session of Congress my dream (of passage of a bill for health care under social security) will become a realization. I have very great hopes that the legislation will be passed in 1962.

"Our big stumbling block still is the Ways & Means Committee of the House, and I am asking people from every section of the country to tell their congressman to press the members of the committee to report out the bill. The committee has held hearings, and if we can only get the bill out of the committee and on to the floor for a vote, it will pass. And when its gets over to the Senate, I am confident there also, and with the Administration favorable to this type of legislation, we should, before the next election, have a health care system in operation."

AIME FORAND

Forand said that he had taken the temporary chairmanship of the organization because "I believe in taking care of human beings and helping them in every way I can."

"I'll get nothing at all, no benefits whatsoever, because I'm not covered by social security," he added. "But I believe we have a responsibility to take care of our aged."

Two groups of physicians in California, one in Los Angeles and another in the San Francisco area, have joined the Forand organization, the former congressman said.

"We have doctors writing to us asking that their names not be used at this time, but we even have some on our advisory board," he asserted.

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

VICE PRES. JOHNSON in speeches across the country has been speaking bluntly about the spread of right-wing fanaticism fed by the John Birch Society and various other groups. The Roman Catholic bishops of the U.S. have received a report warning against the "extremists" who sow domestic discord by casting doubt on the integrity and patriotism of national leaders.

The reason for their concern is the unmistakable evidence that in the kind of political vacuum the country now suffers, the Birchites and comparable right-wing organizations are flooding Congress, the White House and the newspapers with letters preaching that all the difficulties we face should be blamed on internal treason.

A Michigan letter-writer told the President that he was "indignant" and said "we can no longer stand by while the Communists infiltrate our government." He called for the impeachment of Chief Justice Earl Warren—and for good measure added that Justice Felix Frankfurter and Justice William O. Douglas were also "Reds" who should be impeached.

MEMBERS OF CONGRESS are getting many similar letters—long, single-spaced letters that often come from substantial local businessmen claiming that only they and their few associates really understand the Communist dialectic.

A typical letter—this one from a woman to a newspaper—praised Maj. Gen. Edwin Walker, who was disciplined and who then resigned from the Army after he had been shown to have promoted an indoctrination program for troops using materials that cast doubt on the integrity of former Pres. Truman, former Pres. Eisenhower—and, by extension at least—of Kennedy, too.

Said the woman: "If our people and our troops know the devious enemy they are fighting, the dangers may be minimal—but the many-fronted sham battle which Americans have been waging against the Communist conspiracy is a losing one . . . and everybody except our leaders seems to realize it. . . . The General deserves our everlasting gratitude."

THE REPORT TO the Catholic bishops—submitted by the chairman of the Social Action Dept. of the National Catholic Welfare Conference, Archbishop William E. Cousins of Milwaukee—said that some anti-Communist groups "unwittingly" diverted attention from genuine problems—the penetration of Communist groups in Africa, Asia and Latin America—by their doctrine and tactics.

Often, the report warned, the right-wing fanatics "consider as Communist views and positions what most Americans consider as legitimate, if controversial, political attitudes." They try to infiltrate other groups secretly, and they "tend to harass and persecute" individuals they have arbitrarily labeled Communist or pro-Communist.

These points apply precisely to the John Birch Society, its approach and tactics, though the society was not named.

Johnson in speeches in the Carolinas and in Detroit challenged groups of Americans "who, in the very name of freedom, are urging the people to distrust their own elected leaders, their own long-cherished institutions."

"They are the Americans who spread rumors that the executive branch is loaded with traitors, and that distinguished former Presidents, Democrat and Republican, were either disloyal or dupes," he said.

The nation cannot afford this "blunderbus of allegations," he said, nor can it afford the sowing of "seeds of discord . . . arraying brother against brother, class against class, race against race," so that in the end there is a "war of doubt and disunity" turning the nation into a "house divided against itself."

"I designed and built that electronic brain with my own two hands . . . and now it keeps flashing, 'Get lost' . . . 'Get lost' . . . !"

Labor Accord Speeds Big Missile Base

IAM Parley Hits 'Laxity' In Air Safety

A conference of airline mechanics and ground service workers has criticized companies and government agencies in a charge that economic considerations are put ahead of the safety of passengers and employes, and has adopted programs aimed at correcting what it termed safety hazards on the airlines.

Some 110 delegates representing 43,000 members of the Machinists in the U.S. and Canada drafted safety proposals to be submitted to the airlines during negotiations and urged stricted safety standards on government agencies.

Delegates met with officials of the Federal Aviation Agency and the Civil Aeronautics Board to report some of the safety problems faced by IAM members on the airlines. The conference discussed hazards due to radar exposure, oils, fluids and toxic solutions; test flights and licensing requirements. Among their findings were these:

- Some mechanics have been "pressured" by their supervisors to certify equipment the mechanics considered not airworthy, and some have been discharged for refusing to certify such equipment.
- The FAA has failed to protect mechanics in the performance of their safety duties.
- IAM members should be named to committees investigating air crashes, since equipment failure often is blamed.

The conference urged that the Public Health Service and other agencies make "painstaking studies" of the effect of radioactive fallout on aircraft, and said federal regulations should prohibit the operation of any airfield which lacks minimum medical facilities.

Horseshoers Stress Organizing, Training

Toronto—"Organize the Unorganized" was the theme of the 53rd biennial convention of the Journeymen Horseshoers of the U.S. and Canada, a small but vital affiliate of the AFL-CIO.

Pres. George Miller of Hot Springs, Ark., told the delegates there was a great deal of work to be done among the harness-horse and race-horse industry all over Canada, other than in the central section.

There is only one local in Canada, located in Toronto. It has 10 members. The international has a total membership of about 300.

"How great a goal we will achieve, we will be able to better tell in two years," said Miller.

Miller said the union has done effective organizational work at the major barns and tracks in eastern United States, "without too much opposition from management. We have in fact received quite a bit of co-operation."

He said the union also is interested in developing its training program, a program "to maintain the traditions and standards that have been maintained through the centuries."

The union operates on a minimal budget, without any paid officers, with both Miller and Fred Webb, secretary-treasurer operating out of their homes in Hot Springs, Ark., and Milan, Ind.

The training program is very important, "because since the horses have left the streets, the books on horseshoeing have left the libraries," Miller said. Peculiarly enough, the fashion of shoeing a horse hasn't changed since King Solomon's time.

The horseshoers' union, which once had 17,000 members, was formed in 1874 in Boston. It was one of the earliest unions to become affiliated with the former AFL.

The reason the union has lost so much of its membership is obvious, "for wherever the horse was a work animal, it has passed out of existence," said Miller.

The United States selective service program for the military has affected the apprenticeship program, though it continues to attract younger men, he added.

The trade is learned in a three-to-five-year apprenticeship, during which time members travel about the country and give individual teaching courses to young workers.

The average wage scale is $6,000 a year for five-day, 40-hour workweek. The horseshoer, however, is generally paid by piece work, although some are on a retainer basis plus piece work and others are employed full time with a race track or racing association.

Carla Disputes Spur Flood Insurance Push

Sen. Ralph Yarborough (D-Tex.), joining in a fight started by the Texas AFL-CIO, has announced he will "push with all the resources at my command" for federal insurance against flood damage such as that caused by Hurricane Carla.

Holders of insurance policies in parts of Texas battered by Carla's high winds and flooded by the waters swept into low-lying coastal areas have charged that insurance companies are trying to avoid paying claims on the ground that damages were caused mostly by high water. The insurance policies, they say, for the most part do not cover water damage.

"The damage from this disaster ran into hundreds of millions," Yarborough said, "the victims wait for settlement, but the collectors of insurance premiums are barricaded behind the fine print in long policies."

Congress passed a flood insurance act in 1956. It was signed by then Pres. Eisenhower, but Congress never appropriated the $7.5 billion it authorized for protection.

The measure originated in a Senate Banking subcommittee headed by former Sen. Herbert H. Lehman (D-N.Y.), after disastrous floods caused by cloudbursts in New England, and had a long list of co-sponsors. It provided for both insurance and a loan program for repair of flood-caused damages and specifically included damage resulting from "the water component of any hurricane or other severe storm."

"Where private insurance companies fail and refuse protection," Yarborough said, "government-encouraged insurance should be used to give to Gulf Coast families the protection necessary to encourage them to rebuild their homes and their businesses."

Many of the flood victims in both Texas and New England were union members.

Kansas AFL-CIO Urges 'Work' Repeal

Topeka—Delegates to the Kansas State AFL-CIO convention called for repeal of their state's "right-to-work" constitutional amendment, enactment of a state anti-strikebreaker law, and determined opposition to segregation and discrimination "within or without the labor movement."

The four-day convention in a roll call session re-elected Pres. William S. Holly and Sec.-Treas. F. E. Black without opposition. Vice Pres. H. J. Yount was defeated, 496 to 385, by Merle E. Worman of Topeka, a member of the Plasterers. Yount, an Auto Worker from Kansas City, had served since the merger of the former AFL and CIO state bodies four years ago.

Harmony Marks Work At 165 Montana Sites

By Eugene A. Kelly

Great Falls, Mont.—The biggest construction project in Montana history—the building of 165 Minuteman missile sites on 28,000 mighty acres of mountain and prairie—offers an example of achievement made possible by labor-management cooperation.

Everything about the Minuteman project at Malstrom Air Force Base is vast and spacious, like the Rocky Mountains—the size of the contract, the number of men involved, the distances between sites, the difficulties of moving workers and materials, the importance of the job.

But most interesting of all, to the men involved, is the fact that a large degree of harmony has been established at the conference table to help reach the goal of completion by November 1962.

A recent walkout that lost approximately 150 man-days of labor was considered a test of the machinery set up by Pres. John F. Kennedy and the Dept. of Labor to handle disputes—and the machinery came through undamaged, according to a spokesman for the President's Missile Sites Labor Commission.

"We got them back to work by cooperation of the management and the union involved," said Executive Sec. Julius Kuczma. "The machinery works—not only at Malmstrom, but at 20 other missile sites where construction is going forward."

"Everybody has worked hard to maintain good relations," said James Bottomly, Great Falls lawyer who is contract administrator for the primary contractor and formerly was on the staff of Sen. Lee Metcalf (D-Mont.). For that he credits the "responsible attitude" of union representatives as well as other factors.

Credit Passed Around

Building trades leaders pass the credit back to Bottomly, his superiors, the AFL-CIO Building & Construction Trades Dept. and Col. Harry E. Goldsworthy, Army officer in charge.

"They're living up to the project agreement negotiated by the AFL-CIO and the state building trades," says Pres. Rudy Enquist of the Operating Engineers, who also heads the state Building Trades Council.

The Malmstrom project is considered typical of the progress achieved since the establishment of the President's Missile Sites Labor Commission and the no strike-no lockout pledge by labor and management. When disputes occur, they are talked out at the site and then referred to the commission in Washington, D. C., if they persist, Kuczma has said.

Few Disagreements

Since the construction work started last March at Malmstrom AFB there have been a few disputes which have been resolved at weekly conferences every Wednesday between union spokesman and Bottomly. One dispute has been referred to Washington, and referred back to the union and a subcontractor involved for settlement.

The smooth pace of the far-flung construction job drew the attention of the People's Voice, weekly paper in Helena, Mont., where Managing Editor Harry L. Billings saw the story as an example of the desire of labor and management for mutual understanding, and assigned Associate Editor Gretchen G. Billings—his wife—to visit the jobsites.

Mrs. Billings told how two big contractors joined forces to win the bid—the George A. Fuller Co. and the Del E. Webb Corp., doing business as Fuller-Webb — and the problems they faced.

"The most distinguishing feature of the area in which the sites are being built is space," the reporter observed." "The 28,000 square miles encompassing the project are only 20 percent of the land area of this vast state, yet they are equal to the combined area of the industrial states of New Jersey, Maryland, Massachusetts and Rhode Island."

Pointing out that Montana has an average population of 4.6 persons per square mile as against 545 persons in the industrial states, Mrs. Billings told of the "formidable communications problem" facing labor and management.

Communications by Air

Fuller-Webb uses planes, helicopters and shortwave radio, with the helicopter serving as an ambulance when needed. Construction workers travel as far as 80 miles each way in their own cars.

"Roads, such as they are in many places, have been bulldozed out merely to give access to a site," the reporter continues. "Winter is moving into Montana and, whether by helicopter or automobile, travel is going to be difficult.

"With these built-in handicaps, Fuller-Webb came to Montana to construct a vital defense project. They had the money, they needed the labor force. Montana labor leadership was equal to the task of supplying the manpower with an astounding and commendable lack of confusion and delay."

Prevailing Wage Applies

The contractors work under the prevailing wage contracts of the area, and also have project agreements with most unions.

The magnitude of the project would have been staggering any place in the country, but in Montana no single town could supply the number of workers. Union leadership had to make some changes in standard procedures . . . because efficiency was necessary to orderly progress on the job.

Oddly enough, anti-labor forces are using this efficiency as an example of union "giantism" and have found fault, Mrs. Billings discovered, with travel time allowances, the hiring hall and other businesslike arrangements. She says:

"The fact that Montana unions haven't had a complaint filed against them by the National Labor Relations Board for a single instance of discriminatory hiring, in processing thousands of men under the job referral system, is a situation trade unions can be proud of.

"The referral system has been the key to success in providing manpower for this defense effort. It has not only provided the contractor with qualified workmen, it has protected local citizens against an influx of outside workers. While there have been some skills the Montana labor market could not supply . . . over 80 percent of the jobs are held by local workmen."

Fuller-Webb officials have high praise, Mrs. Billings reported, for the speed and efficiency with which Montana labor adjusted to the requirements of the job.

Kennedy Picks Labor Aides:

Committee to Tackle Youth Job Problem

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany and three other representatives of labor have been named by Pres. John F. Kennedy to a 23-member committee whose duty it will be to "attack vigorously the mounting problems of jobless youth" and to "help put youth into jobs."

The President, emphasizing concern over the plight of nearly 1 million out-of-school and out-of-work youth, and the millions who will enter the labor force in the next few years, announced establishment of the newly formed President's Committee on Youth Employment with Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg as chairman.

Other members include Pres. C. J. (Neil) Haggerty of the AFL-CIO Building & Construction Trades Dept.; Pres. Joseph A. Beirne of the Communication Workers; Mrs. Mildred Jeffrey, Auto Workers' community relations director; Dr. James B. Conant, former Harvard University president; Mrs. Agnes E. Meyer of the Meyer Foundation; Pres. James M. Nabrit, Jr., of Howard University, and four Kennedy Administration officials.

Conant, named committee vice chairman, used the term "social dynamite" in describing the country's unemployed youth in his recent book, "Slums and Suburbs."

Kennedy named his committee as Goldberg announced a comprehensive program to help solve the problem of unemployed young people.

As an important part of the program, the President said in a statement, he established the committee to "bring the nation's attention and resources to bear on this vital national problem."

Citing October employment of 67.8 million as the highest for any October in history, a rise of a full hour in the factory workweek since January and earnings averaging $94 a week, Kennedy said there were bright spots even in the jobless picture—specifically, a decline of 900,000 in the number of long-term jobless who had been out of work four months or more.

But, the President said, "I am not satisfied with an unemployment rate which has remained at about 6.8 percent seasonally adjusted for the last 11 months." Saying he was disturbed about unemployment in general and particularly the "serious plight of the nearly one million out-of-school and out-of-work youth," he said:

"Our youth are our greatest resource, and the social and economic implications of protracted unemployment" among young jobseekers now, and in the years ahead, "demand immediate attention and action."

The committee has been asked to submit recommendations before Congress returns in January. Goldberg outlined its duties in a letter to Kennedy:

Marshal and coordinate all resources for an "all-out attack" on the problem; develop public understanding and generate public support for programs to solve it; encourage establishment of similar state and community committees; act as a clearinghouse for information and research.

To illustrate the size of the problem, Goldberg said that in 1963 there will be a million more boys and girls reaching the age of 16 than in 1962.

Morgan Essay Contest Keyed to Foreign Policy

The 1961 Edward P. Morgan Essay Contest has been announced by the ABC Radio network, which annually sponsors the competition among undergraduates of colleges in the United States.

The subject for this year's essay is "Youth's Role in U.S. Foreign Policy."

The AFL-CIO, which sponsors Morgan's news broadcast each weekday night, has joined ABC radio stations and Furman, Feiner & Co., agency for the sponsor, in establishing a fund from which scholarships for graduate study will be awarded the writers of the best papers by a young man and a young woman.

The winners, who will be picked from the writers of the top 10 essays, in addition will receive three-day all-expense visits to New York and Washington. In New York they will meet with broadcast industry leaders and in Washington with cabinet members, senators and representatives who serve on key congressional committees, the heads of federal agencies and labor leaders.

All 10 of the semi-finalists also will receive 24-volume sets of the Encyclopedia Britannica.

Final judging will be done by a board composed of Under Sec. of State Chester Bowles; Chairman J. W. Fulbright (D-Ark.) of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee; Senate Minority Leader Everett M. Dirksen (R-Ill.); R. Sargent Shriver, director of the Peace Corps, and Morgan.

Contestants may write as many essays as they want. They must be no more than 600 words long, written on one side of the paper, and sent to the Edward P. Morgan Essay Contest, P.O. Box 75, Mt. Vernon 10, N.Y., with postmarks no later than midnight on Dec. 31.

College Students Eligible

All college students are eligible except employes of American Broadcasting-Paramount Theatres, Inc., its advertising agencies, and their families.

The winners will be interviewed on Morgan's radio program, and he will use their essays as a part of subsequent broadcasts.

"With the lethal mess into which their elders have got things," Morgan observed, "young men and women may be pardoned if they don't want, at first, to claim the future.

"And yet, of course, they will. And therein lies the country's hope and strength. For as they claim it, with all the awful responsibilities it involves, they can claim an increasing voice, not tomorrow but now, in the forums of national and world affairs. It is high time, I hope, that some of these voices of leadership will be heard in this contest."

52,278 Union Bodies Report Under L-G

A total of 52,278 labor organizations have filed with the Labor Dept. under provisions of the Labor-Management Reporting & Disclosure Act of 1959 (the Landrum-Griffin Act), Sec. of Labor Arthur J. Goldberg has announced.

U. S. Must Face Job Shortage, Reuther Tells IUD Convention

can lead the world to victory in a "war against poverty, ignorance, social injustice, disease."

Priorities Needed

Reuther called on the delegates to "do a better job back home in the congressional districts" because "there is still a long list of unfinished business over on Capitol Hill."

He listed as priorities a federal aid to education bill, health care for the aged under social security and civil rights legislation in addition to full employment programs.

He called also for legislation setting up federal reinsurance for private pension plans so that workers will not lose their pension rights and benefits if their employers go out of business.

Asking that the labor movement "rise above the little things that divide us," Reuther proposed to the delegates a two-point program to be brought by the IUD to the AFL-CIO convention in Miami in December. He called for:

- A massive program to "organize the unorganized . . . so that every union can move forward together."
- A provision for resolution of internal disputes through final and binding arbitration to be written into the AFL-CIO constitution.

'Encouraging Signs'

There are "new and encouraging signs" that a major organizing program can be successful, Reuther declared. He announced that the IUD executive board had voted a $25,000 grant and manpower assistance to help the New York Teachers win a collective bargaining election involving 40,000 school teachers, "even though they are not affiliated with our department." This, he said, follows an earlier grant of $10,000.

Declaring that the organizing successes of the 1930's were made possible by the financial help of established unions, Reuther said: "Having workers organized is more important than whether my union picks up a few dollars in per capita tax."

At the AFL-CIO convention, Reuther said, "every affiliate ought to be called upon to commit some resources" to a new and cooperative organizing effort.

On internal disputes, Reuther praised the efforts of the AFL-CIO Executive Council committee on union disputes, headed by Vice Pres. A. J. Hayes, to work out a solution following a 1959 AFL-CIO convention mandate. Hayes, he said, "deserves the greatest credit" and has shown "infinite patience."

The divisions, he said, are not primarily between former AFL unions and former CIO unions but between industrial unions—including former AFL affiliates—and the building trades.

Reuther urged building trades unions to help develop "workable mechanisms" to resolve disputes so that "we can get on with the job of organizing the unorganized."

The AFL-CIO convention, he declared, should not adjourn "until it has found an answer to these problems."

C. J. Haggerty, president of the Building & Construction Trades Dept., commenting on Reuther's speech, said: "We've had a jurisdictional agreement between the building trades and the IUD since 1958, known as the Miami Agreement. In recent months, the industrial unions have been ignoring it and openly transgressing it."

At a press conference following his speech, Reuther repeated his feeling that the Building & Construction Trades Dept. should cooperate at the convention to help write into the AFL-CIO constitution an internal disputes plan with final and binding arbitration.

'Everything to Gain'

He told reporters that if this is not done at the convention the labor movement will be in "serious jeopardy," that the federation has "everything to gain" from the adoption of such a plan on a constitutional basis.

Reuther said the industrial union differences were solely with the building trades and that AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany has worked to secure general approval from all groups for the plan.

In reply to a question on the Teamsters, Reuther said he favored issuing charters to Teamster locals seeking to break away but that he opposes creation of a new international union.

There has been no change in the Teamsters since the union's expulsion from the AFL-CIO, he said, and they still do not meet "the standards of trade union morality."

Ahead on the convention agenda as the AFL-CIO News went to press were scheduled speeches by Meany and by Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg, action on resolutions and election of officers.

Jurisdictional problems were emphasized in Reuther's 61-page report to the convention on the IUD's activities of the past two years.

Conflicts on jobs have replaced conflicts on bargaining units as the chief area of jurisdictional conflict, the report said, citing unresolved disputes between industrial and building trades unions over construction and maintenance work at industrial plants. It said that "AFL-CIO unions still boycott the products of other AFL-CIO unions."

In other areas, the convention report declared:

- "In the support of freedom, we are a united people . . . We stand firmly with the President of this nation in the pursuit of peace with freedom . . . Horrible though today's weapons have become, their terror cannot be permitted to paralyze our will to freedom."
- Industrial labor "views with great concern new cries for wage restraint and for tight money . . . With higher output, wage levels must advance if further recession is to be avoided . . ."
- Pres. Kennedy has "taken stronger executive action" in the field of civil rights than any of his predecessors "but there is much that can still be done . . . The promise of legislative action to extend civil rights is still to be realized."
- "With the advent of the present Administration, the nation has at last moved off dead center—although only a beginning has been made. The needs of the nation, neglected for eight long and almost leaderless years, are at last gaining attention."
- There are "signs of a turn in the road" in union growth, previously slowed by recession and "an anti-labor attitude in the past Administration . . . The present NLRB assures a fairer administration of the law, and gives greater opportunity for intensified organizing effort."
- IUD pilot organizing projects, involving cooperative area campaigns by unions, indicate that "successful organizing campaigns can be conducted when they are well planned, carefully developed, and coordinated in a manner that permits union cooperation rather than competition."

Meany Vows Continued Fight on Bias

Says Labor's Record 'Needs No Apology'

The AFL-CIO will continue to press toward its goal of "a really free and equal America," federation Pres. George Meany told an Equal Opportunity Day luncheon in Washington.

In the civil rights field, "the record of the labor movement falls considerably short of perfection but it needs no apology," Meany declared. Conceding the continued existence of discrimination in some unions be rejected "abuse" from those who claim "we are not pressing hard enough."

"No other group in America—educators, clergymen, scientists, lawyers, doctors and certainly not employers—comes within hailing distance of our accomplishments. No other group of national scope, as a whole, works as resolutely, as sincerely or as effectively against discrimination as the AFL-CIO.

"And we're going to keep on with the job."

Meany said that a union which discriminates in any way on grounds of race, color, creed or national origin "is flouting the basic principles of the AFL-CIO."

He ran the record on organized labor's long fight to wipe out race bias, pointing out that in 1894 the convention of the former AFL declared "working people must unite to organize irrespective of creed, color, sex, nationality or politics."

Far Ahead of the Nation

"The federation in this respect was far ahead of the rest of the nation," he said. "It was also far ahead of most of its affiliated national and international unions.

"Under the leadership of Samuel Gompers and William Green, the trade unions gradually but surely began to conform to the principles and standards of the central organization. When I became president of the federation, I took up the challenge and renewed the drive to eliminate discrimination in union ranks. At the same time the CIO was blazing its own trail toward that same objective.

"Thus when the merger of the AFL and CIO was effected in 1955, it became possible to write into the constitution of the united labor movement the strongest position in labor history against racial and religious discrimination. To make certain this language would not become a dead letter, permanent machinery was created to see to it that the civil rights policies of the AFL-CIO would be carried out within the trade union movement."

That machinery, Meany continued, has been working "smoothly and effectively," and with no "fanfare or press releases."

"Prejudice can't be wiped out by publicity," he said.

"I don't think we encourage the reformation of a man by publicly calling attention to his past sins, especially when he has repented."

Meany emphasized that if the labor movement totally abolished "pockets" of discrimination, the problem of job equality would be "only a short step closer to solution," because employers who control most hiring would remain "untouched."

"To cite only one example," he said, "one of the most powerful unions in the AFL-CIO, a union that has been in the forefront of the crusade for civil rights, simply could not get an effective anti-discrimination clause written into its most recent contract with the largest employer in its jurisdiction. The employer—the General Motors Corp.

"I have not yet seen, in any of the newspapers that have attacked trade unions, any comparable denunciation of the General Motors Corp. for its attitude, and that includes the Negro press."

If labor cared only about "silencing its critics," Meany said, individual unions could be expelled on discrimination charges.

"But we have a bigger goal," he declared, "We want to do away with discrimination, not simply avoid contact with it."

Most discrimination in unions can be attributed to the "mistaken but deep-rooted prejudices" of "otherwise worthy" men, he said.

"Would we further our cause by casting out these prisoners of prejudice? Or would we simply free them to carry on their discriminatory practices unmolested?

"Expulsion would be justified only if an affiliated union deliberately persisted in discrimination, with no honest effort to change its ways. I do not know of any such instance among the 133 member unions of the AFL-CIO."

Meany recalled the support the AFL-CIO has given to the federal government's efforts to abolish discrimination in areas in which it is involved.

"The AFL-CIO is against racial discrimination for two basic reasons—first because it is wrong, and second, because it weakens and divides our country at a time when America needs to mobilize her maximum and united strength for survival," Meany said.

"Half-freedom," he maintained, is not an adequate substitute for the slavery that was abolished in American a century ago.

'Patience' of Negroes

"The Negro citizens of our country have displayed tremendous patience and self-restraint," he declared. "They have rejected the dishonest overtures of Communist subverters. They have remained solidly loyal, and they have waited and waited and waited for full emancipation."

It is no "mere coincidence," he said, that the country's last anti-Negro stronghold is likewise the last anti-union stronghold.

"The very same southern congressmen who vote consistently against civil rights legislation," he said, "line up solidly against labor and against labor's program. Thus, labor and the Negroes have not only a common cause—we have a common enemy as well.

Labor refuses to be satisfied with the status quo, Meany declared, but "looks forward to a better day for all Americans" and to a stronger America.

LADIES' GARMENT WORKERS' quota in AFL-CIO campaign to raise $1 million for Eleanor Roosevelt Cancer Foundation was met in full when ILGWU Pres. David Dubinsky (left) presented this check to AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany. Allied Industrial Workers and Broadcast Engineers also have filled their quotas.

3 More Internationals Fill Quotas In Labor's $1 Million Cancer Drive

Three more international unions have fully met their quotas in the AFL-CIO campaign to raise $1 million for the Eleanor Roosevelt Cancer Foundation.

Pres. David Dubinsky of the Ladies' Garment Workers presented a check for his union's full donation to AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany at a meeting in Washington.

Other full-quota contributions were received from the Allied Industrial Workers and the Broadcast Engineers & Technicians.

In addition, Pres. Walter P. Reuther of the Auto Workers announced that the union's international executive board has endorsed the drive and moved to raise approximately $100,000 as its quota. UAW locals are now being solicited for their contributions on a proportional basis, he said.

The AFL-CIO Executive Council pledged to raise the $1 million in 10-cent contributions from its affiliated unions and their members and to present it as a 77th birthday gift to Mrs. Roosevelt during the AFL-CIO convention opening Dec. 7 in Miami Beach.

The foundation, which is affiliated with the American Cancer Society, will use the fund and other contributions it has received to promote worldwide research into the causes and cure of cancer.

Mrs. Roosevelt's own local union, the New York Newspaper Guild, honored the First Lady of the Free World by making a treasury contribution of $1,000 to the AFL-CIO drive and simultaneously starting a drive for individual gifts from its 8,500 members.

Mrs. Roosevelt has been a member of the ANG's New York local since 1945. Earlier, between 1937 and 1945, she belonged to the Washington local. She is a syndicated writer and is not required by any contract provision to belong to the ANG, but joined as soon as she became eligible

In a letter to UAW unions, Reuther pointed out that "special projects specifically designed to bring to workers and their families the benefits of this drive against cancer" will be organized by the foundation.

"A major and intelligent assault upon cancer can result in wiping out the disease, and—God willing—in a relatively short time," he said.

Accepts Foundation Office

Reuther wrote that he had accepted an invitation to serve as a vice president of the foundation because of his deep concern for cancer victims and his eagerness "to help pay tribute to one of the really great citizens of our time, Eleanor Roosevelt, and indirectly also to one of the greatest Americans of all times—the late Franklin D. Roosevelt."

The Eleanor Roosevelt Cancer Foundation has already given $250,000 to the Intl. Union Against Cancer, which unites the scientists of more than 40 countries in the fight against the disease.

Seven fellowships have thus far been awarded citizens of six countries enabling them to do research and study in other nations. Awards went to:

Elsie Ann Burgess, of the University of London, to work in the Cancer Research Div. of Radiumhemmet in Stockholm, Sweden.

Ryo Fukunishi, of the Kagoshima (Japan) University Medical School, to work at the University of Chicago.

S. H. B. Kullander, of Lund (Sweden) University, to work at Yale University.

Yoshiyuki Morimura, of Osaka (Japan) University, to work at the University of Southern California.

R. K. Ralph, an Australian now a post-doctoral fellow at the University of Wisconsin, to work at the Royal Cancer Hospital, Buckinghamshire, England.

B. K. Sinha, from India, now at the New York University School of Medicine, to continue there.

Katherine L. Syndor, now at the University of Chicago, to work at the Chester Beatty Institute, London.

instructing savings and loan associations with membership in the Federal Home Loan Bank that they cannot permit race to be a factor in mortgage loans."

Negroes often "just cannot afford" to buy desegregated housing, where it is available, because of their "disproportionate" numbers in the lowest income groups, he said.

"We cannot avoid the fact that in general, true job opportunity has been denied to a great many Negroes regardless of their education or their qualifications," Meany asserted.

"Here again we have a practical matter. We have pockets of discrimination in our own ranks, and more and bigger pockets of discrimination created by employers covered by union contracts. Yet the leadership of the AFL-CIO is unanimously committed to equal opportunity for all."

The AFL-CIO has made progress, he said, through education of "recalcitrant" locals, and will continue to make progress. But when "it comes to the employers we're against a much tougher job," he said.

"So what's the practical approach?" Meany again queried. "The practical approach is not mutual recriminations but joint action. The practical approach is a national Fair Employment Practices law, applicable to unions and employers alike."

Government Aid Welcomed

Meany insisted that it is no disgrace to say we "need" the full partnership of government to win equal economic opportunity for all workers.

"We needed the government—in the form of the Wagner Act—before we could hope to assure economic justice for any workers," he recalled.

Other speakers included Chairman Stanley H. Lowell of the New York City Commission on Intergroup Relations; Chairman Louis Simon of the city AFL-CIO's Civil Rights Committee; James Farmer, national director of the Congress of Racial Equality (CORE); Whitney M. Young, Jr., executive director of the National Urban League; AFL-CIO Reg. Dir. Michael Mann; Pres. Harry Van Arsdale, Jr., of the city AFL-CIO and Dir. Boris Shishkin of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Civil Rights, who urged the conference to stimulate a community-wide "inventory" showing the status of civil rights in every phase of community life, including unions.

Panel sessions were held on discrimination in education, employment and housing, and on the freedom rides.

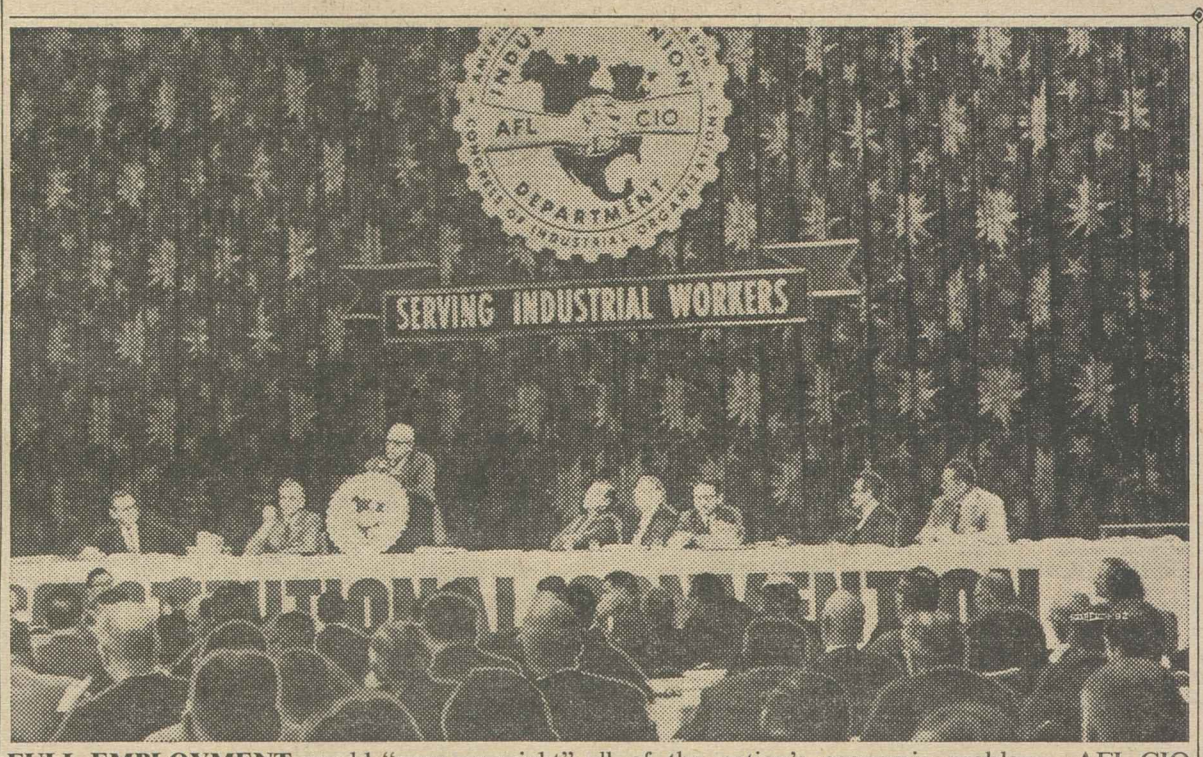
Meany Foresees Unlimited Future for Unified Labor



FULL EMPLOYMENT would "cure overnight" all of the nation's economic problems, AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany told the Industrial Union Dept. convention. Labor unity is essential, he said, "to build up the society in which we live."

President To Open Convention

Pres. Kennedy will address the AFL-CIO convention in Miami Beach at its opening session, to be held on the 20th anniversary of Pearl Harbor, AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany announced in making public the names of eight principal speakers.

Kennedy will give the only major address on the opening day, but on Dec. 8 there will be important speeches by four distinguished visitors.

These are Sec. of Labor Arthur J. Goldberg at 10:30 a.m.; Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt, who is expected to receive the $1 million the AFL-CIO is raising for the Eleanor Roosevelt Cancer Foundation, at 2 p.m.; Frank B. Ellis, director of Civilian Defense, 3 p.m., and Charles L. Bacon, national commander of the American Legion, 3:30 p.m.

Another of America's outstanding citizens will be heard at 2:15 p.m. on Monday, Dec. 11—Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., president of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, co-pastor with his father of Atlanta's Ebenezer Baptist Church and a world-acknowledged leader in the fight for full civil rights and civil liberties in the South.

Also scheduled for addresses, but with no times set thus far, are Pres. Arne Geijer and Gen. Sec. Omer Becu of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions.

Industrialists Invited

Meany in addition announced that he had sent his "most cordial invitation" to six of the country's top industrialists, members of the President's Labor-Management Advisory Committee, to be guests of the AFL-CIO during the convention period.

The bids went to Henry Ford II, chairman of the board of the Ford Motor Co.; Joseph Block, president of Inland Steel; Thomas J. Watson of Intl. Business Machines; Richard S. Reynolds, Jr., of the Reynolds Metals Corp.; Elliott V. Bell, editor and publisher of Business Week, and John Franklin, president of the U.S. Lines.

"Labor-management relations would be considerably improved if more representatives of management knew more about the labor movement," Meany said in his invitations.

One way to start the process of learning, he proposed, would be to "attend a labor convention and observe the character of its deliberations and determinations."

The AFL-CIO Executive Council will hold a one-day meeting in

Tells IUD Unions Can Repel Foes

By David L. Perlman

"There is no limit to what the American labor movement can do for the country and for the people it represents," if it doesn't dissipate its strength in "useless internal bickering," AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany told the Industrial Union Dept. convention here.

Labor unity is essential, Meany said, to repel "those who want to destroy our movement," to provide leadership and direction "to beef up" the American economy, and to "repeat in 1962" the political success achieved in 1960 through "the very simple method of getting our own people to register and vote."

Declaring that there is no "economic problem that would not be cured overnight if we had full employment," Meany said the alternative is recurrent recessions, which could eventually bring about "the dream of Stalin and Khrushchev—economic collapse of the American system." He warned:

"This is our job and don't expect any help from any other segment of private life in America. Don't expect the doctors, don't expect the bankers, don't expect the employers and don't expect the brokers in Wall Street to do anything about this."

Meany told the convention that the AFL-CIO has got to "try to find a solution" to its internal disputes problems, but he emphasized that a trade union is not "an end in itself" but a means "to build up the society in which we live by building up the standards of those we represent . . . at the lower rung of the economic ladder."

"This was the idea behind labor unity," he said.

From the merger in 1955, he

Federal Court Test:

Busmen Challenge Utility Strike Ban

Kansas City, Mo.—The Street Railway Employes have challenged in federal court the constitutionality of Missouri's King-Thompson Act, which has been used to force 800 Kansas City bus drivers back to work without a contract.

U.S. District Court Judge William H. Becker granted the union's request that a three-judge federal court be set up to hear the challenge to the 1947 state law which permits the governor to seize utilities and ban strikes.

The law provides penalties up to $10,000 a day against a union and $1,000 a day against union officers for defiance of a King-Thompson strike ban.

Meanwhile members of Local 1287, who walked out Nov. 14 despite King-Thompson Act seizure of the Kansas City Transit Co. by Gov. John M. Dalton (D), returned to work two days later in compliance with a temporary restraining order issued by Jackson County Circuit Judge Donald J. Murphy. A further hearing was set for Nov. 27.

The attorney for the Street Railway Employes, Bernard Cushman, turned to federal court to seek an order restraining the governor and his agents from using the King-Thompson Act to break the strike and asking the appointment of a three-judge court to hear the case.

While denying the restraining order, Becker agreed to refer the case to a three-judge court, a move which would make possible a direct further appeal to the U.S. Supreme Court. He held that the union had raised "specific and serious constitutional questions as well as the question of preemption by federal law."

Special Court to Sit

The special court, to be named by the chief judge of the Circuit Court of Appeals, will consist of one judge from the Court of Appeals and two district judges.

In challenging the King-Thompson Act, the union made these points, among others:

- The Taft-Hartley Act has preempted the field of peaceful strikes for legitimate objectives. The union cited a Supreme Court ruling declaring unconstitutional a Board Slates Fleet Vote on 'Runaways'

By Eugene A. Kelly

In a decision of major importance to maritime unions, the National Labor Relations Board has ordered the first fleet-wide election among seamen working on ships of a big "runaway flag" operation.

By a 4-1 vote the board decided that U.S. maritime firms may not prevent U.S. unions from organizing their ships by the device of setting up vessel-operating firms on foreign soil, chartering ships from wholly-owned subsidiaries and operating them with foreign crews under a foreign flag.

With Member Philip Ray Rodgers dissenting, the NLRB approved the petition of the Maritime Union for a fleetwide election on 17 United Fruit Co. "banana boats." The 500 unlicensed seamen involved will vote within 30 days for NMU, for Sindimar (the National Maritime Syndicate of Honduras), or for neither.

The decision—fourth in a series of rulings that "runaway flag" vessels are covered by U.S. labor laws when they "possess substantial U.S. contacts" and are a substantial part of U.S. commerce—was hailed by the NMU as "the biggest victory for seamen to date" in the long legal battle to bring American-owned runaways under U.S. laws.

NMU Pres. Joseph N. Curran said the ruling is a landmark for two reasons: United Fruit has the biggest "runaway" operation ever made subject to federal law by an NLRB ruling, and the order is the first affecting a member of the

GOP-Business Tie Seen In Campaign Fund Study

By John M. Barry

Officers of the nation's leading corporations pumped the vast bulk of their 1960 political contributions into Republican campaigns, giving less than 5 percent of the total to Democratic candidates, an analysis by the AFL-CIO Committee on Political Education has found.

Among the executives of 328 corporations, COPE found individual contributions of $500 or more totaling $1,163,310 for the Republican party, $57,963 for the Democratic party, and $1,500 for Americans for Constitutional Action, a relatively new right-wing group now showing signs of expanded political activity.

The findings followed the pattern turned up in the exhaustive listing of 1956 campaign contributions by the Senate Privileges & Elections subcommittee headed by Sen. Albert Gore (D-Tenn.). In that campaign, officers and directors of the same 328 corporations gave $2,325,571 to the Republicans and $124,934 to the Democrats, considering only contributions of $500 or more, the subcommittee reported.

No similar full-scale examination of 1960 political contributions has

Rights Unit Raps Police Role

The U.S. Civil Rights Commission has urged Congress to enact a federal grants-in-aid program to help state and local governments raise the professional quality of their police forces.

In its fifth and final report for the years 1959-61, the commission noted that "police brutality is still a serious and continuing problem" with civil rights implications.

Other recommendations made by the commission in its report dealing with administration of justice were that Congress consider:

- Strengthening existing federal statutes against unlawful violence by state or local officials.
- Legislation making municipal and county governments equally liable with police officers to civil suits based on police misconduct.
- Legislation empowering the Attorney General to bring civil proceedings to prevent jury exclusion because of race or nationality.

the convention hotel, the Americana, on Dec. 6.

In the week prior to the convention, five AFL-CIO trade departments will hold their own conventions in Miami Beach. In addition, the Intl. Labor Press Association will hold its annual meeting in Miami Beach during the same period. The AFL-CIO Auxiliaries will meet Dec. 7-11.

A listing of speakers and a summary of programs for the departmental conventions follows:

BUILDING & CONSTRUCTION TRADES DEPT.

Some 350 delegates and an equal number of visitors are expected at the AFL-CIO Building & Construction Trades Dept. Convention to be held Nov. 29- Dec. 1 in the Balmoral Hotel, Miami Beach.

The convention will be preceded by meetings of the department's executive council Nov. 27.

The session will be opened by Pres. Joe E. Henry of the Miami Building & Construction Trades Council, who as temporary chairman will lead the pledge of allegiance to the flag and will present the Most Rev. Coleman F. Carroll, Catholic Bishop of Miami, for the opening invocation. Permanent chairman is BCTD Pres. C. J. Haggerty.

Opening day speakers will be Mayor Herbert W. White of Bal Harbour, Fla.; Sheriff Thomas J. Kelly of Dade County; Pres. William Owens of the Dade County Federation of Labor; Pres. Robert Y. Mooty of the Florida State Building & Construction Trades Council; Pres. Frank Roche of the Florida AFL-CIO; Pres. James A. Brownlow of the Metal Trades Dept.; Louis Sherman, BCTD general counsel; Edward Kelly, labor relations manager for the Associated General Contractors.

The second-day invocation will be given by Rev. John H. Haldeman, pastor of Allapattah Baptist Church. Scheduled speakers are Sec. of Labor Arthur J. Goldberg; Chairman Richard J. Mitchell of the National Joint Board; Executive Sec. Peter M. McGavin of the Maritime Trades Dept.; National Dir. James L. McDevitt of COPE; James Noe, consultant to the Peace Corps.

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany will speak on the final day following the invocation by Rabbi Eugene Labovitz of Temple Ner Tamid. Also slated to be heard are Solicitor Charles Donahue of the Labor Dept.; H. E. Lore of the National Contractors Association; Paul M. Geary of the Specialty Contractors Association.

FOOD & BEVERAGE TRADES DEPT.

The AFL-CIO's newest trade group, the Food & Beverage Trades Dept., will hold its founding convention at the Carillon Hotel in Miami Beach on Dec. 2. The department was chartered by the AFL-CIO Executive Council at its meeting last June.

Harry Poole, executive vice president of the Meat Cutters, who is president pro tem of the new department, and Daniel E. Conway, president of the American Bakery & Confectionery Workers and department secretary-treasury pro tem, expect about 75 delegates representing some 750,000 members of nine international unions.

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler and the heads of other trade departments have been invited to speak.

MARITIME TRADES DEPT.

About 125 delegates from 29 unions will attend the convention of the AFL-CIO Maritime Trades Dept. scheduled for the Hotel Americana in Miami Beach for Dec. 4-6 and will act on a series of resolutions dealing with the maritime industry and with the labor movement generally.

A long list of speakers headed by AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany will be heard. Others scheduled are Pres. C. J. Haggerty of the Building & Construction Trades Dept.; Pres. James A. Brownlow of the Metal Trades Dept.; National Dir. James L. McDevitt of COPE; Maritime Administrator Donald Alexander; George P. Delaney, special assistant to the assistant secretary of labor for international affairs; H. H. Bookbinder, special assistant to the Secretary of Commerce.

Also Deputy Dir. George Brown of the Labor Dept.'s Bureau of Labor Standards; Pres. John L. Weller of Seatrain Lines, Inc.; Max Harrison of the American Maritime Association; Gordon Chapman, special assistant to the Secretary of State as coordinator of international labor affairs and former secretary-treasurer of the State, County & Municipal Employes; Dir. Nelson Cruikshank of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Social Security, and Donald V. Geoffrion, labor relations advisor in the Office of Naval Materials.

Sec. of Labor Arthur J. Goldberg is tentatively scheduled for an address.

UNION LABEL & SERVICE TRADES DEPT.

Memorial services for two officers who died since the last convention will highlight the 50th convention of the AFL-CIO Union Label & Service Trades Dept., to be held Dec. 4 and 5 in the Medallion Room of the Americana Hotel, Miami Beach.

To be memorialized are John J. Mara, president of both the department and the Boot & Shoe Workers at the time of his death last year, and George L. Googe, department vice president and secretary-treasurer of the Printing Pressmen, who died a few months ago.

The department held its silver anniversary convention in San Francisco in 1959. This is the 50th convention because of the changes between annual and biennial gatherings.

Scheduled as speakers are AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany; Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler; Pres. Paul Hall of the Maritime Trades Dept.; Pres. James A. Brownlow of the Metal Trades Dept.; Pres. C. J. Haggerty of the Building & Construction Trades Dept.; National Dir. James L. McDevitt of COPE; Harry B. Poole, president pro tem of the Food & Beverage Trades Dept.

Also AFL-CIO Organization Dir. John W. Livingston; Mrs. Marcella S. Beatty, special representative, AFL-CIO Auxiliaries; Sec.-Treas. Thomas B. Ward of the Canadian Labor Congress' Union Label Trades Dept.; Pres. Frank G. Roche of the Florida AFL-CIO; Pres. William Owens of the Dade County AFL-CIO; Michael Johnson, director of labor activities for the Eleanor Roosevelt Cancer Foundation; John E. Cosgrove, assistant director in the Office of Emergency Planning, and C. H. Heasley, national sales representative for labor in the Savings Bond Division of the Treasury.

METAL TRADES DEPT.

The AFL-CIO Metal Trades Dept. will hold its convention in Miami's Americana Hotel beginning Dec. 4.

The delegates, expected to number between 100 and 150, will hear 10 speakers headed by AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany.

Other speakers listed include Oscar Smith, director of industrial relations for the Atomic Energy Commission; Adm. M. J. Lawrence, head of the Navy's Office of Industrial Relations; Sec. of Labor Arthur J. Goldberg; Assistant Sec. of Labor Jerry R. Holleman; Edward E. Goshen, director of the Labor Dept.'s Bureau of Apprentice Training; Pres. C. J. Haggerty of the AFL-CIO Building & Construction Trades Dept.; Pres. Paul Hall of the AFL-CIO Maritime Trades Dept.; National Dir. James L. McDevitt of COPE, and Andrew J. Biemiller, director of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Legislation.

AFL-CIO AUXILIARIES

About 100 delegates representing some 50 local units and city and state councils will attend the convention of the AFL-CIO Auxiliaries, to be held Dec. 7-11 in the Americana Hotel.

They will hear addresses by AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler; Sec.-Treas. Joseph Lewis of the Union Label & Service Trades Dept.; Wesley Reedy, assistant to Schnitzler, and three COPE officials—National Dir. James L. McDevitt and Margaret Thornburgh and Esther Murray, regional directors of COPE women's activities.

The Auxiliaries will give a reception for Mr. and Mrs. Meany and Mr. and Mrs. Schnitzler the night of Dec. 8. On the evening of Dec. 11, the delegates will attend a style show.

Several constitutional changes are contemplated and the delegates will act on a series of resolutions.

ILPA

Editors of nearly 200 union publications are scheduled to take part in the golden jubilee convention of the Intl. Labor Press Association, Dec. 4-6 at the Carillon Hotel in Miami Beach.

The labor editors will hear Agriculture Sec. Orville Freeman report on the Food for Peace program at the opening session. They will hear AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany in an address on Dec. 5. That night, at the convention banquet, AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler will present awards to the winners of ILPA's annual journalistic contest.

A. J. Liebling, noted author and critic of the American press, heads a list of professional newsmen who will address the convention, lead workshops and take part in panel discussions. Liebling will speak at the Dec. 6 session.

The program also includes talks by AFL-CIO Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller, Organization Dir. John Livingston and COPE Dir. James L. McDevitt.

Other special features include a photo journalism workshop conducted by Wilson Hicks, former executive editor of Life Magazine; a workshop on readership evaluation techniques by Carl J. Nelson, a leading authority in the field, and an evaluation of the prize-winning labor publications by Joseph Loftus, labor reporter with the New York Times and chairman of the group of 1961 Harvard University Nieman fellows who judged the contest.

ILPA is the official organization of AFL-CIO editors. This year marks the 50th anniversary of the founding of its predecessor organization, the Intl. Labor Press of America.

Judge Rejects NLRB Bid:

Injunction Denied In Peerless Closing

Atlanta, Ga.—A federal district judge here has refused to issue an injunction sought by the National Labor Relations Board to prevent Burlington Industries from closing its Peerless Woolen Mills plant at Rossville, Ga.—the only organized mill in the nation's largest textile chain.

The refusal was a setback to the NLRB's newly-launched effort to "take the profit out of unfair labor practices" by providing immediate protection for workers and their unions.

In requesting an injunction to prevent Burlington from closing the plant before the NLRB has had time to act on pending unfair labor practice charges, the labor board accused the company of "a serious flouting" of the law by refusing to bargain with the Allied Industrial Workers and carrying out a threat to close the plant if the 1,600 workers voted for union representation.

U.S. District Court Judge Frank Hooper, in denying the injunction request, held that "management has the right to liquidate and go out of business without the necessity of bargaining with its employes concerning its liquidation."

AIW Pres. Carl W. Griepentrog said in a statement: "The failure to issue an emergency injunction to protect the long years of loyal service of 1,700 Peerless Woolen workers again shows the double standard in so much of today's labor-management relations.

"Injunctions against unions are issued almost daily at the drop of a company lawyer's hat but here the NLRB, in a commendable attempt to preserve employment in a southern textile town, has been rebuffed by old-fashioned arguments."

Approximately half of the mill's workers have already been terminated and the shutdown is scheduled to be completed by Dec. 31.

The NLRB said it will go ahead as scheduled with a Dec. 11 hearing before a trial examiner on the unfair labor practice charges. The agency said no decision had been made as to whether the denial of an injunction would be appealed.

Meanwhile the Textile Workers Union of America, which had been engaged in an organizing drive at a Burlington-Peerless mill at Cleveland, Tenn., 40 miles from Rossville, issued a strong condemnation of Burlington's labor policies. The Cleveland organizing campaign was sharply affected when Burlington announced its Rossville shutdown.

The TWUA executive council, meeting at Charlotte, N. C., adopted a resolution describing Burlington Industries as "the chief proponent of one of the textile industry's most cruel anti-worker tactics: If you can't stop your employes from organizing, then liquidate the plant or move."

At the Tennessee plant, the TWUA lost an NLRB representation vote on Nov. 17, 399 to 292. Before the election, the company posted references to the closing of the Georgia plant on bulletin boards.

The chairman of the board of Burlington Industries, J. Spencer Love, had warned in a posted notice to employes at the Tennessee plant that the mill had been losing money and might have to be closed unless the workers show "an understanding of what is required of you" and give management "fullest cooperation in every way."

The TWUA council also declared that another Burlington plant at Cincinnati—where the union has been organizing—is being closed down.

Still to be acted on is an NLRB request for a temporary injunction which would require the West Point Mfg. Co. to reinstate three workers fired during a TWUA organizing drive at an Anderson, S. C., mill. District Court Judge Robert Martin, Jr., has set Nov. 29 as the date for a show cause hearing.

Bus Drivers Fight Ban on Utility Strikes

Wisconsin law requiring compulsory arbitration of public utility disputes.

- The Missouri law interferes with the process of collective bargaining.
- Constitutional rights of workers, including freedom of speech, are in effect nullified by the state law.
- In the specific case, where the bus line serves Kansas City, Kan., as well as Kansas City, Mo., a Missouri law is in effect imposed on a neighboring state, thus interfering with its commerce.

While the Missouri Supreme Court has upheld the constitutionality of the King-Thompson Act, this ruling was not reviewed by the U.S. Supreme Court. In the earlier case, involving the Oil Workers and a St. Louis gas-distributing utility, the high court said all issues were moot because a new contract had been signed and the state had ended its seizure of the utility.

The existing contract between the Street Railway Employes and the Kansas City bus company expired Oct. 31 and the local voted to strike after the company refused to boost its wage offer above a one-half cent an hour increase for each year of a three-year contract. Local 1287 had asked a 38-cent raise plus additional benefits in a one-year contract agreement. Drivers were paid $2.27 an hour under the expired contract.

'Ghost Ship' Run to Port By Sea Union

Tampa, Fla.—The Maritime Union finally has run the "ghost ship" Martha Mac to port.

Trial Examiner George A. Downing of the National Labor Relations Board has recommended that the ship stop trying to run away from NMU and that its owners, Gulfcoast Transit Co., be required to bargain collectively with the union. Also, said Downing, the company should cease doing business with a rival private association.

The company claimed NMU, which was the certified bargaining agent for Martha Mac seamen, lost its majority status after a 1960 strike and after the firm "permanently replaced" a majority of the strikers. Loss of majority status, the examiner ruled, does not absolve an employer from bargaining with a union.

During the NMU's pursuit of the Martha Mac it had asked unions and labor central bodies in all Gulf Coast ports to be on the lookout for the "ghost ship" which vanished into sea mist after eluding union pickets.

French Labor Urged to Aid Algerians' Release

Five Algerian nationalist leaders imprisoned in France ended a 20-day hunger strike a few days after the AFL-CIO had asked Force Ouvriere, the free French trade union center, to use its influence to secure their release.

A compromise agreement worked out with the aid of Moroccan authorities ended the hunger strike. The five originally refused food to win political rights for all Algerian prisoners in France, but later broadened their goal to include their own liberation.

The Algerian leaders, all of cabinet rank, were Mohammed Ben Bella, Hocine Ait-Ahmed, Mohammed Khider, Mohammed Boudiaf and Rahab Bitat.

In a cable to FO Gen. Sec. Robert Bothereau, AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany had charged they were "originally kidnaped by the same reactionary forces now seeking to subvert the government of France and impose their dictatorship on the French as well as the Algerian people."

"Freedom for these five and the other unjustly imprisoned Algerian nationalists," Meany said in his cable, "would clear the way for resumption of negotiations to end the tragic war in Algeria, greatly improve prospects for peace and friendship between the French and Algerian peoples, and strengthen the forces dedicated to making democracy and human freedom invincible in France and Algeria."

Some 4,000 other Algerians imprisoned in France ended a 19-day hunger strike 24 hours before their leaders. They acted under an agreement, approved by Ben Bella, which specified they would be regarded as political rather than criminal prisoners, and hence would be held under less confining conditions.

NLRB Vote Ordered In Runaway-Flag Case

shippers' "American Committee for Flags of Necessity."

The NMU petitioned for an election two years ago, following the signing of union cards by 375 of the crewmen on board the ships, operated by Empresa Houdurena de Valpores, a UFCO subsidiary. The NMU represents seamen on 20 United Fruit vessels which fly the U.S. flag.

United Fruit argued that U.S. laws do not extend to its Honduran-flag ships because it does not employ the seamen and charters the ships from Empresa.

Board Chairman Frank W. McCulloch and three NLRB members said the record shows that "Empresa's maritime operations are a part of a single integrated operation under continuous, direct control . . . of United Fruit and are an essential part of a seagoing enterprise located in and directed from the U.S. and engaged in the commerce of this nation."

The board's order recited these facts: UFCO is a New Jersey corporation with headquarters at Boston, with 8.5 million of its 8.7 million shares of stock owned by citizens of the U.S.; the bulk of its trade between U.S. ports and Latin American locations is carried largely on ships owned or chartered by UFCO; the company's import business exceeds $1 million a year.

The issue was not, the majority said, whether the law should "follow U.S. investments abroad" but whether the shipping involved is essentially shipping of this nation—and they ruled that it is.

The NMU and other maritime unions, alarmed by dwindling jobs due to the registration of American ships under foreign flags, have been carrying their fight to the board, which upheld the union position in three recent cases—those of West India Fruit & Steamship Co., Peninsular & Occidental Steamship Co., and Eastern Shipping Corp.

Clause on Job Bias Asked in Contracts

Providence—The Rhode Island AFL-CIO has urged all affiliated local unions to negotiate contract clauses or policy statements outlawing discrimination in hiring. A model contract clause was drafted by a committee headed by state central body officers and Lawrence N. Spitz of the Steelworkers.

Non-Farm Jobs Gain; Idle Rate Still 6.8%

Non-farm employment rose by a more than a seasonal 168,000 to an all-time record of 55.2 million in October, according to the Labor Dept.'s detailed report for the month.

The detailed figures brought no change from the previous announcement that unemployment was at the rate of 6.8 percent of the labor force. Although the job situation has improved over the months, the labor force has also grown.

Normally there is little change in the number of jobs in industries other than agriculture between September and October. The increase in trade, government, finance and other services raised the total beyond the previous monthly high of 55.1 million, set in December 1959, and above the 54,387,000 of May 1960, regarded as the start of the current recession.

Since February, when the recession low point of 52.5 million non-agriculture jobs was reached, payrolls in this category have gone up by 2.7 million workers.

Factory jobs were down by 65,000, which is about seasonal for the September-October period, to 16,598,000.

Factory workers' earnings rose to a record high in October as the average workweek increased by 36 minutes to 40.3 hours and average hourly earnings went up two cents to a record $2.35. The new weekly average, before taxes, is $94.71. This was $1.51 more than the previous record of $93.20 set in July; $2.05 higher than the $92.66 of September, and $4.59 more than in October 1960, when the average was $90.14.

For October the labor force was 71.8 million or nearly 700,000 more than a year earlier.

Workers unemployed 15 weeks or longer totaled 1.2 million, virtually unchanged from September.

Seymour Wolfbein, the department's manpower expert, called the boosts in employment, hours and earnings "significant." He said he was "hopeful" that the rate of unemployment will show a decrease next month.

Auto Workers Set Deadline At Studebaker

The Auto Workers set a strike deadline of Nov. 30 for a new contract with the Studebaker-Packard Corp. after reaching a tentative agreement with the Budd Mfg. Co. on a new national contract, subject to local settlements on or before midnight Nov. 29.

The negotiations in each case followed the pattern set earlier this year in auto industry negotiations—UAW votes to authorize a strike if necessary, the setting of a strike deadline, and national agreements subject to local-level settlements.

Studebaker-Packard, which employs 6,800 UAW members at South Bend, Ind., had made no major concessions before the union took a strike vote and set a deadline. The contract expires Nov. 30.

The union-Budd agreement will give 12,300 workers at four company plants in Indiana, Michigan and Pennsylvania the economic benefits won earlier from auto's Big Three, UAW said. Negotiations on local plant agreements are continuing.

At the Chrysler Corp., last of the Big Three to settle, UAW Vice Pres. Norman Matthews announced that a 2-1 majority of the union's 60,000 Chrysler workers had voted to ratify a new three-year contract. Members in four plants have voted no.

Earlier the union reached agreement on national issues with the Bendix Corp., employing 15,000 in nine California, Indiana, Michigan, New Jersey and New York plants, and settled on an auto-type agreement for 2,200 Maytag Co. workers in Iowa. One new feature is a year-end bonus plan for Maytag workers.

AFL-CIO Joins in Homage to Rayburn

The AFL-CIO was represented at the funeral of House Speaker Sam Rayburn in Bonham, Tex., by Vice Pres. William C. Doherty, president of the Letter Carriers, and Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Legislation, who had served in the House under Rayburn.

America lost "one of her finest citizens and most faithful servants" in Rayburn, AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany said in sending his condolences to Rayburn's sisters, and brother.

"Mr. Sam was a giant of a man who loved his country, and the nation returned that affection a hundredfold," he continued. "The men and women of the trade union movement, like all other Americans, owe Mr. Sam an eternal debt of gratitude."

Thanksgiving 1961

ON THANKSGIVING 1961, as the nation pauses to offer thanks for the world's highest living standards and the blessings of freedom, a new blight is spreading over the land.

This new blight—the revival of the "radical right" can endanger both the living standards and the freedom that we celebrate this Thanksgiving. On the altar of an hysterical and grotesquely distorted anti-communism these reactionary groups are willing to sacrifice democracy itself.

The labor movement is a primary target of the ultra-conservative, radical right as it has been since these groups first formed to thwart organization of workers striving to secure the fundamental rights of industrial democracy.

Labor has fought the reactionaries in the battle of the "open shop" triggered by the National Association of Manufacturers at the turn of the century. It fought them on the union-busting "American Plan" that followed World War I. It has been doing battle with these same groups since World War II, the forces that stimulated and poured millions of dollars into the campaign to secure restrictive and punitive labor legislation in the form of Taft-Hartley and Landrum-Griffin.

AND AT THIS MOMENT these same groups are behind the drive to secure passage of so-called "right-to-work" laws in a dozen states as a further attack on the collective bargaining strength of American unions.

The attack on the labor movement from the radical right encompasses also an attack on labor's support for progressive social and economic programs, the equation of this support with "socialism." In the narrow, know-nothingism of fear without understanding this is translated into "communism."

The American labor movement knows something of communism, for it has long been a prime target for infiltration by the subversive forces of totalitarianism. The free trade unions of America joined the battle from the first and were deeply involved in totally defeating Communist attempts to win footholds in the unions.

The greatest weapon in labor's hands in that struggle was the progress made in coping with the problems of workers. The Communists were defeated within the labor movement because the unions proved that the road to progress and the road to a better life was through freedom and democracy.

THE HISTORICAL LINE of the reactionary right is clearly delineated for the labor movement—the weakening and eventual destruction of free trade unions, the bulwark of democracy and the force most feared by the Communists.

The current revival of the radical right is a threat not only to labor but to the nation. The potential destructiveness of the ultra-conservatives rests on their ability and capacity to poison free and open discussion in a period when this discussion is vital to formulation of policy to meet effectively and roll back the worldwide Communist threat to peace and freedom.

America must be ready to endure the frustrations and the disappointments and the costs of an endless cold war—a war of nerves, dollars and above all ideas; a war to preserve and extend liberty without obliterating mankind in the process. The rise of the radical right is a threat to America's strength in this struggle with tyranny and terror.

Channeled in New Directions:

Idealism, Courage of the '30s Still Found Pervading Labor

The following is excerpted from an article in the November 1961 issue of the Workmen's Circle Call by Shelley Appleton, manager of Local 23, Ladies' Garment Workers, in New York City, entitled "American Labor at 75."

THE "CRISIS OF AMERICAN LABOR" has become a familiar theme to those who follow the writing of labor experts. Now in its 75th year, the labor movement is reportedly past its peak, baffled by its problems, torn by internal tensions, and saddled with leaders who are either stodgy or corrupt. It is a dismaying inventory. Fortunately, it is far from being an accurate one.

The labor movement is no longer, of course, the crusade it was in the Thirties. In the Thirties, it was a vehicle of rebellion against grinding poverty and the harsh, unqualified despotism of the boss. Those who lived through that period remember the $2 pay checks, the company towns, the yellow dog contracts, the Memorial Day massacre in Chicago.

In any event, beginning in the Thirties, the American labor movement achieved an immense success. It acquired millions of members, hundreds of millions of dollars, mainly in health and welfare trust funds, and far-reaching economic and political influence. Naturally, it also acquired some problems. The underdog, when successful, begins to resemble, in the public mind, a dragon.

One result has been Taft-Hartley, Landrum-Griffin, "right-to-work" laws and, in many areas of the country, an aggressively anti-labor attitude by public officials, all of which have made organizing extremely difficult. "Why aren't labor unions growing?" ask the critics. The answer is, "Because it's hard to grow in the face of so much opposition."

But that is only part of the answer. The fact is that unions have changed a great deal with success. Once they were primarily organizing agencies. Now they have become vast institutions beset by all kinds of complex administrative problems. Also, the spirit and demands of their membership have changed. Weekly wages for factory workers are now in the neighborhood of $95. Many workers' families, with more than one income, have earnings of eight or nine thousand a year.

It would be naive to expect the union that represents this worker to have the same tone as the one that represented him, or sought to represent him, years ago. The drive now is not for industrial democracy, but for a few cents more an hour and perhaps some new fringe benefit. Naturally, the techniques have changed, the fervor has abated.

The truth of the matter, however, is that, in many respects, labor leaders today are showing more idealism and more courage than they did in the Thirties. In the Thirties, for example, very little was done to combat racial discrimination in the labor movement. Critics of discrimination in the labor movement were lonely, scorned and, above all, ineffectual. The same was true of critics of racketeering.

How different the situation has been in recent years. There has been a real drive to end racial discrimination. Unions have dropped restrictions against Negro workers. They have become the main supporters of fair employment practice legislation from New York to California. They are now among the most consistent spokesmen for desegregation in schools, housing and other areas of public life.

THE SIGNIFICANT FACT is that labor, although it has been scathingly criticized on this point, has done far more than any comparable group within the American community. It is a matter of record that many employers' groups and individual employers have used racist propaganda to combat union organization. Ironically, unions that have been criticized for not doing enough against discrimination have been savagely denounced in the South for doing too much. Their contributions to the NAACP, for example, have been widely publicized as part of the anti-labor drive in the South. Yet this has not deterred the AFL-CIO from continuing to press for an end to all discrimination.

Labor now possesses at least as much idealism or morality—call it what you will—as it possessed during an earlier period when these qualities were more often attributed to it. In fact, any realistic comparison would clearly come down heavily in favor of today's labor movement.

Labor leadership today is called upon to make a tremendous effort to work out new techniques for dealing with contemporary problems. I think the situation requires it. However, looking back down the road, not to 1886 when the AFL was founded, but to the 1930s when the modern labor movement really originated, we seem to have travelled quite a distance. I, for one, take a great deal of pride in it.

Morgan Says:

Weaknesses of Radical Right Spotlighted in Kennedy Blasts

By Edward P. Morgan

PRES. KENNEDY HAS DONE his administration and, more importantly, the country at large a service by demonstrating on his West Coast trip how the fringe extremists on both sides of the political thoroughfare are left-footing it together.

Morgan

Scoring alike the radical right and the fanatical far left, the President remarked in Seattle that "it is a curious fact that each of these extreme opposites resembles the other. Each believes that we have only two choices: appeasement or war, suicide or surrender, humiliation or holocaust, to be either Red or dead. Each side sees only 'hard' and 'soft' nations, hard and soft policies, hard and soft men . . . ; one group believes that any peaceful solution means appeasement; the other believes that any arms build-up means war. . . . In short, while both extremes profess to be the true realists of our time, neither could be more unrealistic," or, the President added, be doing the country a greater disservice by sowing doubt, confusion and fear with speciously over-simplified solutions to highly complicated problems.

In Los Angeles Kennedy singled out for attack the sacred shibboleth of the radical right that the real Communist menace is not from abroad but from inside the country. Indeed, though the President was picketed by representatives of both left and right, he made it clear his main target was the right-wing extremism which has been flourishing with well-heeled encouragement in Southern California, Texas and some other inland areas from Salt Lake City to St. Louis.

Of course, the right wing will not now cease its flapping. It may flap even more hysterically. But what the President has done is to give more courage and impetus to the efforts of responsible citizens at the grass roots to show up these thrashing flights for the wild and dangerous gyrations they are.

On the whole the information media; press and broadcasting together, are doing an aggressively better job than they did during the scourge of McCarthyism in putting these movements of madness into true perspective. This may account, in part, for the heartening shrinkage of timidity on many college campuses and community centers in discussing controversial issues.

Still, it can get awfully cold and lonely out there on the limb of intelligent dissent. Jobs can be threatened, reputations besmirched—whether in Hollywood or at P-TA meetings—simply by expressing unpopular opinions. But it is amazing and refreshing how much a supporting opinion from a place like the White House can help combat the subversive powers of fanaticism.

THAT BEING SAID, it is double the pity when individuals and institutions of power and influence fail to show the courage of their expressed convictions. In its issue of September 1, Life Magazine sardonically noted the commercial success and far right-wing tendencies of an outfit called the Christian Anti-Communist Crusade whose gatherings it likened to non-religious "revival meetings." Just a month ago the Crusade, headed by a former Australian doctor named Fred C. Schwarz, held a big three-hour rally in the Hollywood Bowl attended by a number of film luminaries and billed as Hollywood's answer to Communism. The whole affair was televised in 33 cities in six western states at a cost approaching, reportedly, $60,000, a tab picked up by three large business sponsors—The Richfield Oil Company, the Schick Safety Razor Company and the Technicolor Corporation.

Who should appear among the movie stars in front of the camera eye but the publisher of Life Magazine, C. D. Jackson. He publicly apologized to Dr. Schwarz for Life's "oversimplified misinterpretation" of the Crusade, a movement which Jackson then, in effect, proceeded to embrace.

After the Life item appeared, the magazine reportedly was besieged with protests from readers and supposedly was threatened with the cancellation of several million dollars worth of advertising. These pressures may have had nothing to do with Jackson's dramatic action but the latter put Life, a foe of extremism in the past, in unusual company—including that of W. Cleo Skousen, ex-FBI agent and former Salt Lake City police chief. Now one of Schwarz's principal lieutenants, Skousen on that same rally program urged breaking diplomatic relations with Moscow, a full-scale investigation of the State Dept. and withdrawal from the UN unless its charter is revised.

The radical right, in one form or another, has always been with us. If we can resist Communist subversion from within, and we can, we ought to be able to thwart the radicals of reaction too. They have money and a musty aura of respectability but their biggest inventory is their capacity to be utterly ridiculous. President Kennedy's even-tempered observations have spotlighted this weakness but we must keep the spotlight on.

Food, Water Contamination Viewed As Chief Danger from Test Fallout

The U.S. Public Health Service will warn the American public if radioactive fallout from the Soviet Union's nuclear bomb tests approaches a danger point, Dr. John D. Porterfield, deputy U.S. surgeon general, declared on As We See It, public service interview program produced by the AFL-CIO over the ABC radio network.

"Fortunately, we have time in two respects," Dr. Porterfield said. "The current tests by the Russians do not result in immediate radiation of our population. The radioactive material goes up into the atmosphere, floats around and then it comes down. I suspect some of it will not come down until next spring. So we have time to study what will happen and where it will happen."

Porterfield said this country is "concerned not so much with the immediate radiation from a hot fallout as we are with its contamination of food supply. In such cases, a person may take into his body more concentration of radioactivity than he should."

Counter measures, he said, would include "such things as changing the water supply from one which is at a very high level of radioactivity to one which is lower" and "conversion of the diet from certain fresh foods to processed or canned foods."

The deputy surgeon general said studies are being made "on methods of replacing the radioactive elements in the human body by diluting them out or overpowering them with some non-radioactive elements." Farmers, for example, might be asked to take their cows out of the fields "and let them eat hay that has been stored in the barns from a previous year when there had not been so much radioactivity, or where the hay has had a chance to cool off."

JOHN D. PORTERFIELD

Porterfield said studies have shown that fallout in the United States "averaged over a period of a week or two," does not tend to be concentrated in any one part of the country more than another.

So far, he observed, the exact harmful limit of radioactivity has not been determined. He pointed out, however, that "the human species has developed and flourished in the presence of radiation from natural resources—from geological formations and various elements in the soil—from solar rays."

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

THE OBITUARIES on Speaker Sam Rayburn did less than justice to the key role he played a quarter of a century ago in the building of the legislative record of Franklin D. Roosevelt's New Deal. It was natural that they emphasized his long service as speaker and as a commanding figure in three Democratic National Conventions. But his earlier work as an architect of reform would have made his career a distinguished one.

Former Sen. Hugo L. Black (now a Supreme Court justice) and former Sen. Burton K. Wheeler were pilloried by Roosevelt's enemies for the leading roles they played in pushing through the Public Utilities Holding Co. Act of 1935. The bill passed, nevertheless, and Rayburn was the House sponsor as powerful chairman of the Interstate Commerce Committee.

Rayburn in 1936 was sponsor with the late Sen. George W. Norris of the Rural Electrification Act, which brought electricity to more than 90 percent of America's farms. The bill was fought bitterly by the utility lobby as sheer socialism, and has remained the target of continuing flank attacks. Rayburn's championship of the law helped keep the REA intact.

The 1934 Rayburn was sponsor of bills creating two major regulatory agencies—the Securities & Exchange Commission and the Federal Communications Commission.

THESE MATTERS should be remembered not only because Mr. Sam deserves to have his services recalled but also for the light they throw upon the role which can be played by a Texas Democrat.

The little community of Bonham, where the speaker lived except when Congress was in session, is by no means a Deep South area. It is not torn and ravaged by conscience over the rights of Negro citizens as Deep South states are. But it is a rural area, and from such rural areas many members of the House approach national affairs with a desperate emotional desire to turn back the forces of change.

Mr. Sam was part of the forces of change. He was preeminently a national Democrat. He found himself in harmony with the tides that were running. And he never lacked support from his constituents.

Many tend to look on the South as monolithic but it is not. The New Deal reforms could never have been put through without southern Democrat support, and there is still a strong strain of populism that gives a potential of support for New Frontier economic programs if Pres. Kennedy can find a way to evoke it. Mr. Sam was its symbol—not doctrinaire, never disloyal to his own section and state, but a Texan and a Southerner who served them better because he gave his overriding devotion to the national interest.

SEN. BARRY GOLDWATER of Arizona is enjoying a vogue in right-wing Republican circles because he has proclaimed and made capital of his conservatism. Mention of the Goldwater name in connection with the 1964 Republican presidential nomination needs to be set in context.

It is not difficult for an articulate, personally attractive conservative to win a following among the hordes of mossback industrialists who have for years financed extremist groups of right-wingers.

Goldwater is also affectionately regarded by veteran Republican partisans who hold most positions of power in the Republican congressional leadership. But these groups do not control the Republican conventions that nominate presidential candidates. Goldwater was in Atlanta the other day, bidding for support from the southern segregationists. The bitter-end segregationists were defeated in Atlanta itself in a recent election. It seems unlikely that Republicans who control national conventions would nominate a candidate, to face voters all over the country, who says he doesn't think the Supreme Court's school desegregation decisions are "necessarily" the law of the land.

"So now we know what La Pompano de Pisces la Ragoo is!"

Government, Labor Officials Hail AFSCME on 25th Anniversary

Hailed by Pres. Kennedy for its "progressive influence" in improving the welfare of state and local government workers and warmed by the plaudits of other notables, the State, County & Municipal Employes started its second quarter-century of existence with a testimonial dinner at which a speaker called it "the fastest-growing union in America."

AFSCME Pres. Arnold Zander was honor guest at a silver anniversary banquet in Washington, D. C., arranged by the union's executive board, and received tributes from Auto Workers Pres. Walter P. Reuther, Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg and Gov. Gaylord Nelson (D) of Wisconsin, former member of the AFSCME staff when headquarters were at Madison, Wis.

Sec. Leo Kramer of the Silver Anniversary Committee said proceeds of the affair will go toward establishing scholarship funds in Zander's name at the Harvard University trade union program and at Ruskin College of Oxford University in England.

Kennedy's message of greeting pointed out that the public service is "an old and honorable profession," and that nearly 9 million men and women in America on all levels of public life are giving their time and effort to government work.

"Your union has exerted a progressive influence toward improving the welfare of state and local government workers," he said.

"It is appropriate on this anniversary that you should honor your founder and president, Arnold Zander, who has exercised such enlightened and responsible leadership."

Sees Increasing Role

Predicting that, as a growing society demands more and better government service, AFSCME will need to play an increasing role in the social process, Kennedy said "I am confident you will perform" with the same devotion and public spirit as in the first 25 years.

Goldberg told the audience: "You have done well," and complimented the union for "outstanding leadership, honesty, integrity and responsibility" in a sensitive field. He announced that a presidential task force on federal employe-management relations, which he heads, will report its findings by the end of November.

Reuther recalled the organizing days of 1936 when the Auto Workers and State, County had about 9,000 members each and were "operating on high-octane inspiration." In the past year, he said, AFSCME has "grown faster than any other union in America."

Saying that labor has two essential jobs—to organize the unorganized and to unionize the organized—Reuther said it can always meet the challenge from without but "the real challenge is within."

Standards Raised

Gov. Nelson said he has "always been impressed by the quality of the leadership" of AFSCME which is helping to "raise standards by trying to improve the quality of public administration."

Kramer recalled that Zander quit a secure state job in 1932 to join a local federally chartered by the former AFL in fighting a bill to take 10,000 Wisconsin state employes out of civil service, and won a charter for a national union of state, county and municipal employes.

Said Zander of the 25 years since the chartering: "They've been good years. It is impossible to do a good job on behalf of public employes without doing a good job for the public."

Federal Aid Held Vital To Save Arts Heritage

obviously are substandard," Kenin told the subcommittee:

"The only practical solution to save our dying musical heritage is help in the form of government subsidy," out of federal, state and local funds.

Kenin contrasted government concern for "two breeds of trumpeters—the whooping crane and the musician"—by concluding that the money the government has spent to preserve the whoopers "would finance a Federal Arts Council for a hundred years."

The Arts Council was proposed in a bill introduced in the last Congress by Rep. Frank Thompson, Jr.. (D-N. J.), chairman of the subcommittee which concluded hearings here and will meet at a later date in Washington, D. C., and San Francisco. The bill was blocked in 1960, Thompson said, by ridicule, such as a suggestion that poker playing should be considered a fine art.

Witnesses told of financial losses suffered by several famous groups whose musicians have rebelled against contract conditions. The Metropolitan Opera, the New York Philharmonic, the Philadelphia Orchestra were mentioned in the subcommittee's call.

Labor Sec. Arthur Goldberg sent a message commending the subcommittee for its study and saying that the cultural arts are important to the nation's image and its international prestige.

Stokowski Asks Aid

The witnesses included Leopold Stokowski, conductor, who said states and cities should cooperate with the federal government in subsidizing the arts, and Sec. Herman Shumlin of the New York League of Theaters who urged elimination of the 10 percent federal admissions tax on theaters, tax easements for performers and a 5 percent tax on television revenues to subsidize the dramatic arts.

Pres. Ralph Bellamy of Actors' Equity said in a statement that only 12 percent of Equity's members earn $5,000 or more per year. Some 55 percent of those employed earned an average of less than $1,000, he wrote.

Exec. Sec. Donald F. Conaway of the Television & Radio Artists filed a statement showing that 14,318 of the union's 20,000 members earned less than $1,000 during 1959 and that the average earnings were $2,937.

Rep. Robert N. Giaimo (D-Conn.), author of a House resolution which created the inquiry, called for "relief from the sources now benefiting handsomely at the musicians' expense"—the juke box and canned music and radio industries.

Furniture Workers End Arkansas Strike

New York—Furniture Workers Local 270 has settled a month-long strike against the Ballman-Cummings Furniture Co., Fort Smith, Ark., with an agreement giving the 300 workers a wage rise in each year of a two-year contract and a contract clause providing mutual agreement or arbitration on job rates.

UFWA Pres. Morris Pizer said Local 270 is continuing a five-month strike against the Fort Smith Chair Co., whose 200 employes walked out on June 1.

Right of Petition Upheld:

Court Restores Job Of Federal Worker

The Government Employes have won a major court test establishing the right of federal civilian employes to petition Congress for redress of grievances.

U.S. Dist. Judge Alexander Holtzoff ordered the government to reinstate Robert Steck, who had been fired from his job at a Marine Corps installation at Barrow, Calif., after he circulated a petition to his congressman asking an investigation of working conditions at the base.

Holtzoff specifically upheld the claim by AFGE General Counsel Edward L. Merrigan that the Navy regulations under which Steck was fired violated a provision of the Civil Service Act guaranteeing federal employes the right to petition Congress or furnish information to members of Congress.

He held that this protection of the right of petition holds even if the government challenges the accuracy of allegations made in the petition. Holtzoff also said that the fact that the petition was circulated during working hours was not cause for disciplinary action "unless it can be shown there was a serious disruption of work and a substantial loss of time."

The AFGE brought the court test under its Legal Rights Fund, set up through voluntary contributions by the union's members to finance court cases involving important matters of principle or affecting large groups of workers.

Steck circulated his petition in August 1958. The following month, he was served with a dismissal notice charging him with having violated a Navy regulation prohibiting "petitions which are designed to influence congressional action" on the ground that such a petition is a violation of the Anti-Lobbying Act.

Reinstated—Fired Again

The AFGE fought the dismissal and it was eventually cancelled on an appeal to the Secretary of the Navy on the ground that the charges were not specific.

Steck was reinstated but almost immediately afterwards was again given a dismissal notice, this time charging him with having:

- Circulated a petition without prior approval of the commanding officer of the base.
- Circulating it during working hours.
- Including false charges against the commanding officer in the petition.
- "Harassing" employes by asking them to sign it.

Steck appealed the second dismissal to the Civil Service Commission, which threw out the charge of "harassing" employes but sustained the dismissal on the other grounds.

The AFGE has a companion suit in the U.S. Court of Claims seeking back pay for Steck in addition to the reinstatement ordered by the federal district court. A summary judgment granting the back pay is anticipated in view of the reinstatement order.

Walsh-HealeyHikes Set in Chemicals

In an amended determination under the Walsh-Healey Act, Sec. of Labor Arthur J. Goldberg has announced increases in minimum wages in the miscellaneous chemical products and preparations industry which will apply to contracts offered by the federal government after Dec. 4.

The industry has had a minimum rate of $1.15 an hour since Sept. 25. For the future it was divided into two sections.

Products Group 1 with a new minimum of $1.42 an hour includes specialty cleaning, polishing and sanitation preparations; surface active agents, finishing agents and sulfonated oils and assistants; and agricultural chemicals.

Products Group 2 with a minimum wage of $1.80 includes adhesives, glues, mucilage, cements and sizes; gelatin; household tints, dyes and bleaches; bluings; writing inks; essential oils; industrial compounds; automotive chemicals, and evaporated salt.

GOP-Business Tie Seen In Campaign Fund Study

been undertaken by any congressional body.

The COPE study for 1960 is incomplete, since it lists only those contributors who also appeared in the report on 1956 campaign spending issued by the Gore subcommittee, COPE National Dir. James L. McDevitt cautioned. The list also is limited to contributions made by individuals in the states where their companies are headquartered, McDevitt noted.

COPE's limited listing breaks down as follows:

- Officials of the 100 largest military prime contractors dealing with the federal government gave $530,720 to the Republicans, $31,700 to the Democrats and $1,000 to Americans for Constitutional Action.
- Officials of 88 corporations participating in atomic energy programs gave $188,075 to the Republicans and $4,500 to the Democrats.
- Officials of the 47 leading underwriters of investment bonds gave $185,340 to the Republicans, $3,000 to the Democrats.
- Officials of the 37 leading advertising agencies gave $17,600 to the Republicans, $3,000 to the Democrats.
- Officials of the 29 largest oil companies gave $157,600 to the Republicans, $6,500 to the Democrats.
- Officials of the 17 leading certified airline companies gave $63,475 to the Republicans, $9,263 to the Democrats and $500 to Americans for Constitutional Action.
- Officials of the 10 leading radio and television license-holders gave $20,500 to the Republicans, nothing to the Democrats.

Largest contribution found by COPE was $22,500 given the Republicans by Mr. and Mrs. Spencer T. Olin of the Olin Mathieson Chemical Corp.

The total listed for Americans for Constitutional Action came from contributions of $500 each by Loyd Wright of Trans World Airlines, who also gave $500 to the Republicans; Frederick V. Geier of Cincinnati Milling Machine Co., who gave $3,500 to the Republicans; and Adm. Lewis L. Straus of Radio Corporation of America, who was chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission under Pres. Eisenhower.

GOP Leads in Redistricting of Congress

Party Gains 4 Seats In New York Shuffle

Republicans moved into the lead in the battle for political advantage in the redistricting of Congress as the New York GOP pushed through a frankly gerrymandered reshuffle which is expected to cost the Democrats six seats and ensure the election of four additional Republican members of the House. The state will lose two seats for the 1962 elections as a result of population changes disclosed in the 1960 census.

As the AFL-CIO News went to press, a special session of the Illinois legislature was making a last ditch effort to break a deadlock on redistricting. A bipartisan legislative committee reportedly had agreed on a compromise setting up 11 districts likely to go Democratic, 11 leaning Republican and two closely-divided districts. The state, which lost one seat, now is represented by 14 Democrats and 11 Republicans.

Three other closely-divided states —Pennsylvania, Massachusetts and Minnesota—have been unable to agree on redistricting and, since all lose seats under the reapportionment of Congress, face the uncertainty of statewide at-large elections. Forty-seven representatives will be elected from the three states, a drop of six from the present total representation of 28 Republicans and 25 Democrats.

Problems Patched Up

Two other states which had apparently faced at-large elections in 1962—Arkansas and Alabama—have patched up redistricting problems.

The Arkansas legislature, in a recent special session, bowed to the protests of three southern counties and amended an earlier redistricting law which would have put them in a district stretching to the far northeast corner of the state. A successful petition campaign had blocked the original redistricting plan from taking effect pending a referendum.

The Alabama legislature failed to redistrict but a special session avoided a wide-open statewide race by setting up a unique double primary. The state's representation will drop from nine to eight in the 88th Congress.

Each of the present nine congressional districts will nominate one candidate in a first Democratic primary next May 1, with a runoff if no candidate gets a majority. The nine candidates will then compete in a statewide primary on May 29, in which each voter will be able to ballot for eight representatives with the low candidate eliminated. That would give the Democrats a single slate of candidates in the November general election in the traditionally one-party state.

At the regular session of the legislature, a redistricting bill which would have carved up the industrialized Birmingham area was vetoed by Gov. John Patterson, who then won agreement for the double primary plan.

In New York, at a two-day special session of the legislature, a Republican-drafted realignment of the state's congressional districts was approved by both houses of the GOP-controlled legislature and signed by Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller, all within four hours. The plan, which abolished three normally Democratic districts in New York City and one district in the upstate Schenectady area, had been publicly unveiled only the day before.

Democrats in debate denounced the Republican plan, which included a reshuffle of most of the state's congressional districts, as a "monstrosity" and "a piece of larceny." A handful of Republicans supported Democratic protests but this was insufficient to defeat the topheavy GOP majority.

Court Challenge Hinted

New York City's Mayor Robert F. Wagner (D) set the stage for a possible court challenge by asking the city's attorney to "look into the constitutionality and legality" of the redistricting "with a view to a lawsuit by the city to invalidate it."

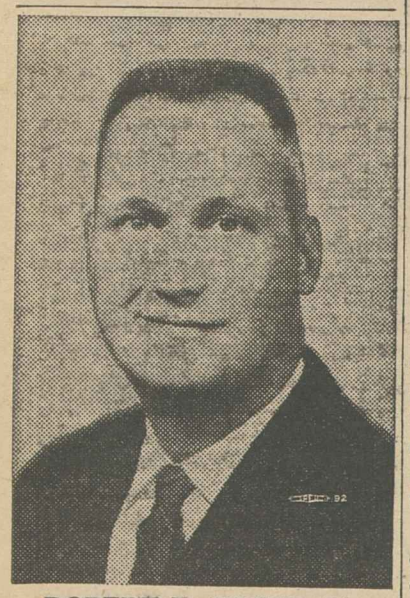
Democratic National Committee Chairman John M. Bailey pointed out that if the new district lines had been in effect in the 1960 congressional elections, the Democrats would have won only 39 percent of the state's congressional representation even though they polled 53.5 percent of the total state vote cast for congressional candidates. As it was, they won 22 seats to the GOP's 21—a percentage of 51.2.

The New York redistricting in effect cancelled out anticipated Democratic gains in California, which gained six additional seats in Congress. In that state, with the Democrats in control of the legislature and the governorship, the realignment of districts was expected to produce a Democratic gain of between six and eight congressmen. Here it was the Republicans who cried gerrymander.

California Democrats have retorted that most of the reshuffling of districts corrected inequitable congressional districts set up by a Republican legislature and adminstration after the 1950 census.

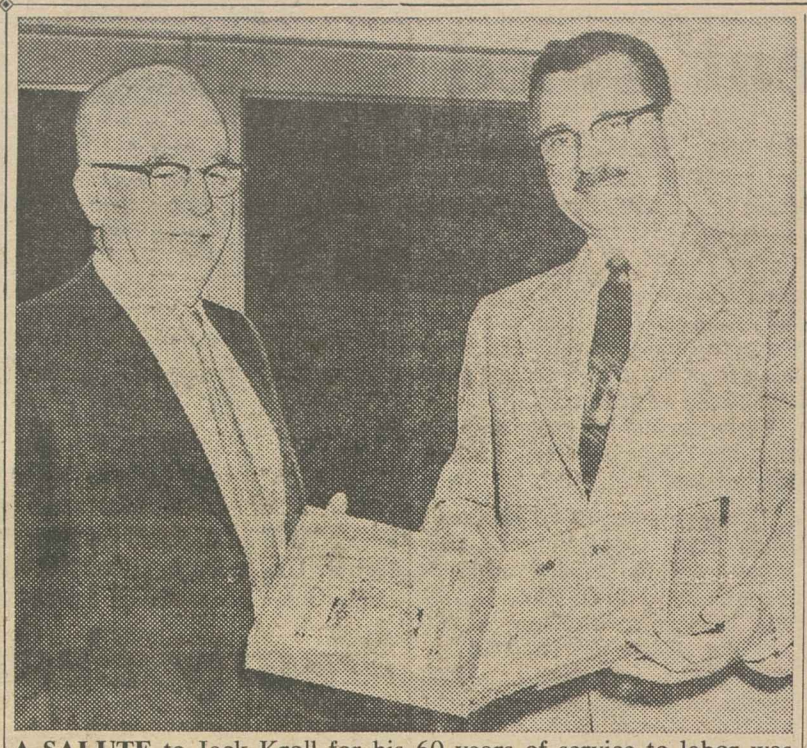
Kentucky and Mississippi, both states which have lost seats, also are faced with at-large elections if they fail to redistrict. However, the legislatures of both states meet early in 1962 and will have an opportunity to act in time for the election deadlines.

The likely overall effect of redistricting is to give the Republicans a head start of perhaps five or six seats in their effort to win control of the House of Representatives. However, if any of the big northern states are forced to elect their entire delegations at large, the pendulum could swing violently either way—to give liberals a solid majority on the House or conversely to give the conservative coalition unchallenged control.



ROBERT E. WESTFALL

The 75,000 citizens of Hamilton, O., have chosen as their mayor, Robert E. Westfall, 35, a business manager of Local 648 of the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers and president of the Butler-Warren-Clinton Counties Labor Council.



A SALUTE to Jack Kroll for his 60 years of service to labor was paid at a testimonial dinner in Cincinnati for Kroll, former co-director of COPE and president emeritus of the Ohio AFL-CIO. In the picture, Kroll (left) receives a memento of the occasion from Pres. Karl Feller of the Brewery Workers.

Tribute to Jack Kroll Cites 60-Year Service

Cincinnati—Sixty years of service to labor and the nation by Jack Kroll of the Clothing Workers were saluted here at a testimonial dinner attended by labor, business and civic leaders.

Kroll, long-time manager of the Cincinnati Joint Board of the Clothing Workers, applied for his first union card in 1901. He rose from a job as apprentice tailor to service as co-director of the AFL-CIO's Committee on Political Education and president-emeritus of the Ohio AFL-CIO. He had previously been director of the former CIO's Political Action Committee.

Now retired from his COPE post, Kroll received the warm thanks of AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, as expressed by Sec.-Treas. Joseph D. Keenan of the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, and other speakers.

Ohio AFL-CIO Pres. Phil Hannah praised Kroll for his "pioneering work in awakening the trade union movement to its political responsibilities" and for his "dedication to the labor movement" in Ohio and the nation.

Other speakers included Pres. Karl Feller of the Brewery Workers, Pres. Al Bilik of the Cincinnati AFL-CIO, and Pres. Henry Seibert of the Kentucky State AFL-CIO.

Proceeds of the dinner were dedicated to aid the Amal Vocational High School in Israel, maintained by Histadrut, the Israeli labor federation. On behalf of Histadrut, Feller presented Kroll with a book, prepared in Israel, that tells the story of the Passover in English and Hebrew.

Keenan expressed his appreciation for the services of the silver-haired trade unionist and noted that Kroll's designation of dinner proceeds to support of Israel and Histadrut was in line with a "very definite part of AFL-CIO policy."

"Nowhere in the world," Keenan said, "is the concept of service by a trade union more completely fulfilled than in Israel by Histadrut," which has not only helped build a nation but also is helping build "strong, free labor movements" in the newly independent nations of Asia and Africa.

Recalling that Histadrut was established in 1920, long before Israel achieved its independence, the IBEW officer said it became both a trade union movement and a vital part of the struggle for Israel's independence.

2nd ARA Training Program Approved

A worker training program for the Providence-Pawtucket redevelopment area has been approved by Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg—the second such program he has provided for under the Area Redevelopment Act.

The program will provide initially for the training or retraining of 180 persons as typists, auto-mechanic helpers, and machine operators.

Relief Scare In Newburgh Called 'Fraud'

Schenectady, N. Y.—Right-wing demagogues and "conservative opportunists" have exaggerated relief problems in Newburgh, N. Y., and have made public welfare a "whipping boy" to attack the idea of social progress through government, an AFL-CIO spokesman has charged.

Dir. Leo Perlis of AFL-CIO Community Service Activities told the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, at a dinner given by IUE Dist. 3 here, that it has been "clearly established" that the Newburgh welfare scare was a "fraud" and that "thorough investigations disclosed no hordes of chiselers, no army of able-bodied men sponging off relief, no wholesale promiscuity."

Important men in public life accepted the "unsubstantiated charges" of Joseph Mitchell, Newburgh city manager, because they provided a "rallying point for certain irrational forces in our society" and were used to win votes in the recent New York elections, Perlis said.

Asserting that "we should not revile public assistance recipients if we will not rehabilitate them," Perlis offered this formula for effective public welfare programs:

- Provide financial help to people in need on the basis of that need, regardless of the cause.
- Determine the need through professionally-trained social workers who have an understanding of people and their problems, and the competence to handle those problems.
- Give assistance in a dignified manner, on a family-oriented basis, while providing recipients with training for employment along with other rehabilitative services—physical, mental and emotional.
- Utilize the "teamwork" approach by social worker, vocational counselor, physician and psychiatrist.

Carolina Labor Makes Its Views Quite Clear

Columbia, S. C.—South Carolina's two senators and six representatives held a meeting in Columbia to find out what the people are thinking and had no trouble in learning what organized labor wants.

One union spokesman after another asked for repeal of the so-called "right-to-work" provision of the Taft-Hartley Act.

"We're against you 100 percent," Sen. Strom Thurmond (D) told John W. Reece, spokesman for the Aiken Central Labor Council.

"We're 100 percent against you," Reece retorted.

Sec. Treas. E. T. Kirkland of the State AFL-CIO told the congressional delegation that all workers want is a little of the good life enjoyed by manufacturers and insurance people. He declared the Deering-Milliken textile empire closed a Darlington plant after Darlington employes voted for representation by the Textile Workers Union of America and said the company should have been prosecuted "for depriving people of the right to work."

Most of the labor representatives also asked for federal aid to education, health care for the aged through social security and curbs on imports that harm U.S. industry.

Wayne L. Dermoncourt of the TWUA in addition asked the delegation to consider strengthening the Labor Dept.'s new Office of Automation to help cut down on job losses through automation. He also proposed aid for disabled workers, improvements in the federal-state employment service, broadcasting of vocational training opportunities and improved unemployment compensation.

Other labor spokesmen included State Dir. T. J. Volk of the Communications Workers, W. E. Taylor, Jr., of the Newberry-Laurens-Fairfield AFL-CIO, and L. B. Knox of the Catawba Central Labor Union.

Bowling Shirt Ban Held Company Foul

Galion, O.—A local firm which ordered employes to stop wearing bowling shirts bearing the initials UAW, on penalty of being fired, was guilty of an unfair labor practice, an examiner for the National Labor Relations Board has held.

Examiner James F. Foley, after a hearing on charges filed by the Auto Workers has recommended that Power Equipment Co., a subsidiary of the North Electric Co., Detroit, be required to stop interfering with UAW organizing.

At California Parley:

New Skills Training Held 'Urgent' Need

Los Angeles—An urgent call for labor, management and the government to cooperate in a broad program of training and retraining was issued here at a California State AFL-CIO conference on job displacement and skill development.

Ewan Clague, director of the Labor Dept.'s Bureau of Labor Statistics, said no single segment of the nation can adequately cope with the wide variety of problems stemming from the rapidly changing nature of the work force.

Technological advancements, he said, are displacing some 1.5 million workers each year.

The problems, he emphasized, stem from the failure of the economy to expand rapidly enough not only to take care of the 1.5 million displaced workers, but also to provide jobs for the 1 million new workers added to the work force each year.

State AFL-CIO Executive Sec.-Treas. Thomas L. Pitts said the labor federation recognized the "vital need for the labor movement to involve itself in retraining and training programs or face losing contact with the future labor force of the country."

Two Conferences

To plan for this, the federation held two conferences, one here and a second in San Francisco, to hear ideas from and offer suggestions to top federal and state governmental officials in the field of employment.

Pitts said a system of "early warning signals must be developed so we can find out where automation and job displacement will hit next, so we can prepare in advance for such situations."

State Department of Employment Dir. John F. Henning praised the California AFL-CIO, saying its conferences on retraining and skill development are "a sign of its leadership in the nation."

Pitts initiated the conferences after getting new statistical evidence of the impact of the changing nature of the work force on California's labor movement.

The percentage of organized workers in the state has dropped 7 percent—from 42 percent to 35 percent of the total work force—in the past decade.

Pitts warned that it makes no sense to try to hide these facts. Labor must, he said, help provide answers to the problems they raise.

Aid Sought For Children Of Diplomat

New York—A committee representing virtually all phases of economic social and political belief—except Communist—has been organized here to raise funds for the education of the five children of the late Danish and United Nations diplomat, Povl Bang-Jensen.

Bang-Jensen was ousted from his UN post in 1958 for refusing to surrender a list of most of the witnesses who testified before the UN Special Committee on Hungary in its inquiry into the 1956 revolt against Soviet domination. He had pledged to protect their identity.

He was found mysteriously dead on Thanksgiving Day 1959. His death is listed as a suicide, but New York police have never marked the case closed. His widow and their children are Americans.

AFL-CIO Special Rep. Lew Johnson of New York is secretary of the committee. Sen. Thomas J. Dodd (D-Conn.) is honorary chairman, with Roy Brewer, formerly an official of the Theatrical & Stage Employes and now a film industry executive, as chairman.

Other labor members include Joseph A. Beirne of the Communications Workers; Sec.-Treas. Patrick Gorman of the Meat Cutters; Pres. Sal B. Hoffmann of the Upholsterers; Pres. A. Philip Randolph of the Sleeping Car Porters, and Arthur G. McDowell of the Upholsterers. Treasurer and counsel is Clifford Forster, Box 3206, Grand Central Station, New York 17, N. Y.

Air Engineers Offer Talks on Flight Crews

The Flight Engineers have wired Pres. Kennedy that they are prepared to accept the recommendations of a presidential commission set up to study a three-way dispute involving the engineers, the nation's major airlines and the pilots as "a basis for settlement."

R. A. Brown, president of the Flight Engineers, said his union's acceptance is "contingent on similar acceptance" by the Air Line Pilots and with the understanding that the proposals "are recommendations and not an arbitration award."

One of the recommendations of the presidential commission, headed by Prof. Nathan P. Feinsinger, was for eventual merger of the Flight Engineers and the Pilots, preceeded by a period of close cooperation. The two unions have been sharply at odds over the composition and jurisdiction of the cockpit crew in jet planes.

The commission also said four-men crews on some jets should be reduced to three men, with one crew member having both flight engineer and pilot qualifications.

A spokesman for the Pilots said the union would have no comment at present on either the Feinsinger report or the Flight Engineers' statement.

Cancer March Passes Quarter-Million Mark

Labor's drive to raise funds for the Eleanor Roosevelt Cancer Foundation passed the quarter-million-dollar mark as three more unions turned in their full quotas, or more, of 10 cents per member.

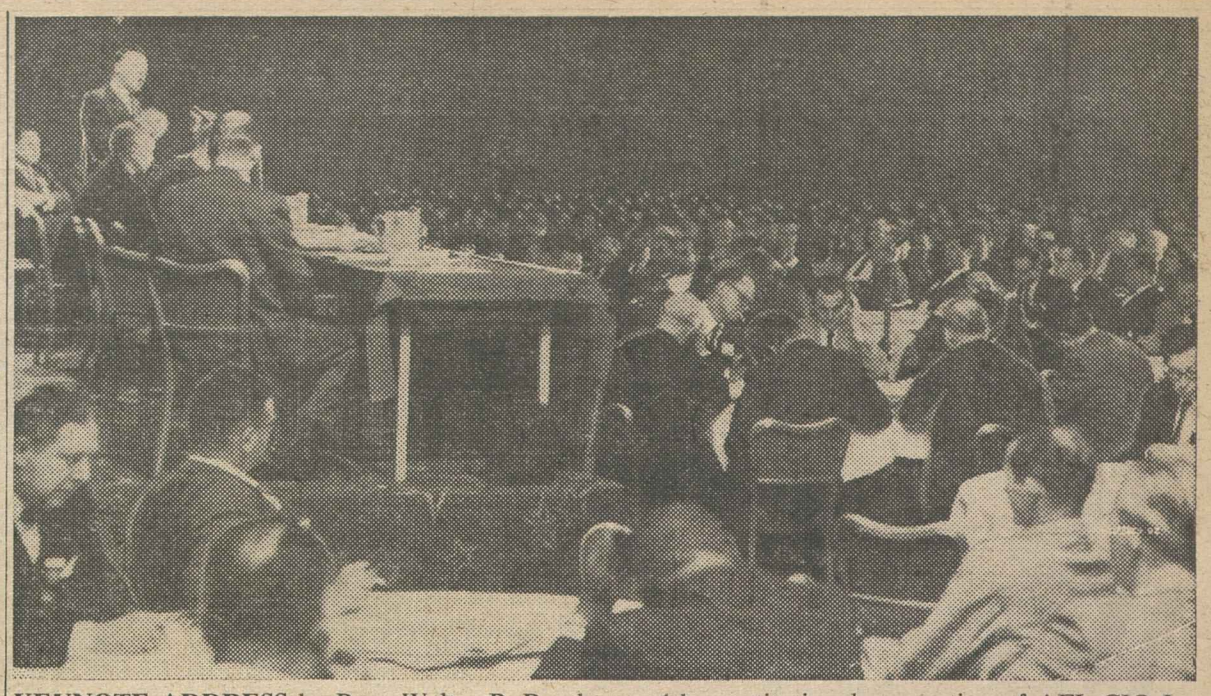
The Bricklayers' 100 percent contribution was contained in approximately 500 separate checks from locals, presented to AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany by the union's officers. The Pulp-Sulphite Workers and the Sleeping Car Porters also turned in their full quotas, as have six other unions previously reported.

Many other international unions have reported that their collections are nearly complete. Meany has asked that all contributions be turned in promptly so that labor's donation can be presented to Mrs. Roosevelt when she addresses the AFL-CIO convention on Dec. 8.

The total being sought in labor's drive for the foundation is $1 million.

In another boost for the campaign, the Industrial Union Dept. convention voted a unanimous endorsement of the $1 million goal, declaring that "union members, even more than most Americans, owe an unpayable debt to Franklin D. Roosevelt and now have the opportunity to honor Mrs. Roosevelt and her own greatness."

The cancer foundation "truly merits the full and wholehearted support of the American labor movement," the resolution said.



KEYNOTE ADDRESS by Pres. Walter P. Reuther to 4th constitutional convention of AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept. called for labor to set up machinery to resolve internal disputes through binding arbitration and mobilize its resources for a major, coordinated organizing effort.

Meany Sees Unlimited Prospects For Unified Labor Movement

said, he has maintained the position "that I don't belong to the AFL and I don't belong to the CIO, but I am a member of the AFL-CIO."

The "real enthusiasm" shown by 3,000 delegates to the recent merger convention of the New Jersey state central body, was evidence, he said, that during the six years of "bickering" over conditions of merger, there was no division among the rank and file union members and delegates.

Praises Missile Sites Body

Praising the operations of the Missile Sites Commission set up under the Secretary of Labor with cooperation by the building trades and industrial unions, Meany declared that during the five months of the commission's operation, loss of time due to work stoppages has been cut to one-twentieth of 1 percent.

The convention, attended by delegates from 58 IUD affiliates, also heard a warning from Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg that unions must do a better organizing job "if the American trade union movement is to remain the force for good it has been in the past."

Citing statistics showing that the percentage of union membership in the work force "has declined each year since 1958" and that half of all union members are concentrated in New York, Pennsylvania, Illinois, Ohio and California, Goldberg declared:

"If you are seeking a challenge, there it is in black and white."

Goldberg brought to the convention a message from Pres. Kennedy declaring that the nation has been "moving forward" since January and reiterating a previous pledge that he has "no intention of learning to live with prolonged and severe unemployment, with all that it means in human misery and economic waste."

Kennedy said he welcomes both labor's "support of progressive policies" and "your criticism and your independent judgment."

In a series of resolutions, the IUD called on the AFL-CIO convention in December to:

- Write into its constitution machinery for final and binding arbitration of internal disputes "on the basis that existing work and inter-union relationships should be preserved and that no union . . . should take action seeking to obtain work for its members which has customarily been performed by the members of another union."
- Compel the Sheet Metal Workers to "remedy its non-compliance" with an order by the AFL-CIO Executive Council to "cease and desist" from activities against the Steelworkers at the Carrier Corp. plant at Syracuse, N. Y.
- Establish a central organizing fund based upon an equal per capita contribution by each affiliated union to be used for "planned organizing programs on a national scale."
- Set up within the AFL-CIO "a Fair Union Practices Board armed with authority and jurisdiction over all matters of racial discrimination and segregation."
- Endorse legislation which would lift restrictions on jobsite picketing by both building trades and industrial unions.

In other resolutions, the IUD endorsed legislation providing federal aid to schools, health insurance under social security, a shorter workweek, retraining of jobless workers and repeal of Sec. 14B of the Taft-Hartley Act, which permits state "right-to-work" laws.

The convention voted strong endorsement of labor's drive to raise $1 million for the Eleanor Roosevelt Cancer Foundation, denounced resumption of Soviet H-bomb testing, called for a federal program of "reinsurance" to protect workers' equity in private pension funds, and called for establishment of a national planning agency.

IUD Pres. Walter P. Reuther and Sec. Treas. James B. Carey were re-elected, as were 12 incumbent vice presidents. Four new vice presidents were added: Pres. George Burdon of the Rubber Workers; Pres. Max Greenberg, Retail, Wholesale & Dept. Store Union; Pres. Ralph Helstein, Packinghouse Workers, and Pres. Karl Feller of the Brewery Workers. Incumbent vice presidents renamed were I. W. Abel, J. A. Beirne, Joseph Curran, Gordon Freeman, A. F. Hartung, A. J. Hayes, O. A. Knight, Paul L. Phillips, William Pollock, Frank Rosenblum, Louis Stulberg and Arnold Zander.

Management, Labor Advisers Named on L-G

Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg has named labor and management spokesmen to independent advisory committees on the Labor-Management Reporting & Disclosure Act (the Landrum-Griffin Act).

Goldberg said they, along with a public advisory committee named in October, will enable the Labor Dept. to "obtain the advice of labor, management and the public."

Members of the labor advisory committee, which held its first meeting Nov. 13, are Pres. Al J. Hayes of the Machinists, Pres. George W. Harrison, Railway Clerks; Pres. Joseph A. Beirne, Communications Workers; AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler; Sec.-Treas. I. W. Abel, Steelworkers, and Sec.-Treas. Toney Gallo, Cement Workers.

Management advisory committee members are Vincent Ahearn, National Sand & Gravel Association, Inc.; William B. Barton, Chamber of Commerce of the USA; Herbert Liebenson, National Small Businessmen's Association; Pres. Daniel P. Loomis, Association of American Railroads; Lambert A. Miller, National Association of Manufacturers, and Pres. Martin E. Segal of Martin E. Segal & Co.

Meany Asks Lower Tariffs With Safeguards for Jobs

Adjustment Needs Stressed at Parley

By Eugene A. Kelly

A broad and liberalized foreign trade program, with trade adjustment features built in to meet the nation's responsibility to workers, firms and communities affected by foreign competition, is both an "economic and political necessity," AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany has declared.

Reviewing proposals that will be presented to the coming AFL-CIO convention in Miami Beach, Meany told delegates to a three-day world trade conference sponsored by the Machinists that "the time has come" for labor to be "practical as well as idealistic" about world trade.

Meany drove home these points:

- The case for foreign trade—for lower trade barriers—is "overwhelming."
- The inclusion of a trade adjustment program in the U.S. reciprocal trade law is necessary if a new, strengthened trade bill is to be passed—and "specifically it is a necessity if such a bill is to have the backing of the AFL-CIO."
- The existing law should be strengthened by giving the President power to act in emergencies, to speed grants, loans and unemployment compensation to adversely affected communities.
- Tax incentives may properly be used by U.S. firms which manufacture goods abroad to be consumed there but no tax concessions are justified for corporations that "deliberately set out, for the sake of extra profits, to rob Americans of their jobs."

Conference Findings Agree

The AFL-CIO president's plea for lowered trade barriers and built-in safeguards for injured workers and industries coincided in its major phases with the findings of the

R-T-W Bid Revived In Maine

Waterville, Me.—A revived drive has developed here to secure enactment of a so-called state "right-to-work" law, and its sponsors have been charged with "irresponsibility" by a leading Baptist clergyman.

The Rev. Ralph Reynolds, pastor of the First Baptist Church here, in a statement distributed by the non-partisan Maine Citizens for Industrial Progress, warned that a state ban on union shop agreements "would reverse years of real progress in labor-management relations" and would depress Maine's economy.

Earlier this year the Maine legislature voted down a "right-to-work" proposal by a vote of 98 to 45 in the House and 18 to 12 in the Senate after Gov. John

Patience, Forbearance Required:

Haggerty Urges Unity Efforts In Keynote to Building Trades

By Saul Miller

Miami Beach—There is too much at stake for the labor movement "for any of us to think or talk in terms of destruction and chaos," C. J. Haggerty, president of the AFL-CIO Building & Construction Trades Dept., declared in his keynote speech opening the department's 51st convention here.

Haggerty told over 250 delegates that "as long as there is any hope left, I am confident that the delegation will authorize and empower the officers of this department never to give up the goal of unity but to keep trying."

To achieve unity and solidarity "and our inherent potential for service to the nation's workers, the representatives of labor will have to exercise patience, forbearance and self-restraint."

In a sober and detailed recital of the differences between the Building & Construction Trades Dept. and the Industrial Union Dept., Haggerty reviewed events of the past two years, declaring, "We have tried to point the right approach toward constructive settlement of our differences. We hope they will take that approach. If they do, we still will meet them halfway."

Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg told the convention that it would be "the height of folly to let jurisdictional disputes split you asunder and disunite the labor movement." The nation today "more than ever before" needs a united labor movement, he said.

Goldberg expressed confidence that all parties to the dispute could reach "a sensible agreement," adding that these differences "can and should be resolved."

He warned that a split labor movement would aid the Communists and "the anti-labor forces in our own country" who would want nothing better "than to have you expending your time, energy and

New York Teachers Vote Dec. 6

New York—The country's largest collective bargaining election in 25 years will get under way Dec. 6 when 45,000 New York City teachers begin long-delayed voting on a representative to act for them in dealings with the Board of Education.

The election, the biggest on record among white collar workers, will be conducted by the Honest Ballot Association. Ballots must be received by mail by Dec. 13, when the HBA expects to start counting. The results will probably be known on Dec. 15.

On the ballot are three contenders for the right to represent the teachers—the United Federation of Teachers, Local 2, an AFL-

Steelworkers Urge Companies to Join Fight Against Discrimination

Pittsburgh—An invitation to join in an attempt to "stamp out the evils of discrimination in employment wherever it may exist" is being sent by the Steelworkers to some 2,900 employers with whom the union has contractual relations.

USWA Pres. David J. McDonald has already sent a letter proposing the move to the chief executive officers of the 11 basic steel producers which compose the Steel Industry Coordinating Committee and to the larger aluminum and can companies that have signed union agreements.

In his letter McDonald said the proposal for a joint drive was based on the union's belief that further steps should be taken to implement Pres. Kennedy's Executive Order No. 10925. This executive order established the President's Committee on Equal Opportunity and entrusted to it the task of ending discrimination in job practices against minority groups.

McDonald specfically proposed that each company and the union sign a two-paragraph agreement reading:

"The (name of company) and the United Steelworkers of America hereby pledge their individual support and joint cooperation to the President of the United States in his request to all management and labor for assistance in implementing the principles of Executive Order No. 10925 which aims to stamp out the evils of discrimination in employment wherever it may exist.

"We take this opportunity to publicly declare our intention to aid the President's Committee on Equal Employment Opportunity in every way possible to attain the objectives for which it was created. In addition, we will have our representatives meet to review the situation at the plant level and determine what steps, if any, may be necesary to implement the principles of the President's program."

McDonald recalled that Kennedy had asked the full cooperation of labor and industry when he signed the executive order last Mar. 6. On May 3, he continued, USWA

At Histadrut Dinner:

Meany Hits Soviets For Anti-Semitism

New York—AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany has condemned anti-Semitic policies pursued by the Soviet government which, he said, are a continuation of the same anti-Semitic policies pursued by Joseph Stalin.

He made the statement at a dinner of the National Committee for Labor Israel at which U.S. Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg received the Histadrut Humanitarian Award.

"We can have no illusions about Khrushchev "when he talks about co-existence or he says he wants peace," said Meany. "We must judge him by the record and by events.

"On the day that they moved Stalin's body out of the mausoleum in Moscow and buried it in the Kremlin's backyard, on that day they sentenced three leaders of the Jewish community of Leningrad. They were given a secret trial and given jail sentences for treasonable activities. This is what the Kremlin dictatorship did while they were preaching peace, respect for human beings and saying they were against Stalinism.

"Why did they convict these men in Leningrad? Because Communist totalitarianism cannot allow any group to exist if it believes in a free society. That is the reason for Moscow's oppression of the Jews or of the trade unions. While they supposedly repudiate Stalin, they are pursuing a policy of anti-Semitism and secret trials. We must fight communism with the instrumentality of a free society."

Israel's Progress 'Impressive'

Because Israel is building a democratic society—"a rare commodity in that part of the Mediterranean world"—it must be supported, he said, against those countries which are ready to destroy Israel.

"We must uphold Israel," said Meany, "as an important bastion of democracy and freedom in the Middle East."

Referring to his trip to Israel last September, he said he had found impressive not merely the great material progress being made in that country and by its labor movement, Histadrut, but also by the progress made "in terms of individual freedom and human brotherhood."

"This is why American labor feels a community of interest with Histadrut," he said. "They have the same attitude towards freedom and communism as we have. When I was in Israel, I couldn't help but think of the comparison between their free society and the depotism of East Germany.

Pres. Kennedy praised both Goldberg and Histadrut in a message read by Harry Van Arsdale, Jr., president of the New York City Center Labor Council and dinner toastmaster:

"You have made a distinguished choice in selecting Sec. Goldberg for the award. I came to the same conclusions some 10 months ago as those which motivated you in your selection.

No Time for Disunity

"It is particularly appropriate that Histadrut, the Israel labor federation, present him with the award in view of his long service to the cause of labor and his deep interest in the State of Israel."

Previous recipients of the Histadrut award have included Meany, David Dubinsky, Jacob S. Potofsky, Walter P. Reuther, former Pres. Truman, Eleanor Roosevelt and Justice William O. Douglas.

Goldberg in his acceptance address said he was "confident that the unity of the American movement will be preserved under the leadership of George Meany."

"This is not the time for disunity in labor to prevail," he said. "Our country needs a united American labor movement because it is beneficial to the country as a whole."

Referring to the presence on the dais of two members of Histadrut now in the Israeli diplomatic service—Mrs. Golda Meir, foreign secretary, and Abraham Harman, Israeli ambassador to the U.S.—Goldberg said, "We could leaven our own diplomacy with the able men of the American labor movement as Israel has done."

He said that the basis of American foreign policy is "to extend the hand of friendship to those who share our common aims and aspirations. Who possesses it in greater measure than Histadrut this symbol of human dignity and freedom?"

"An aspect of American foreign policy," he continued, "is to encourage countries like Israel and labor movements like Histadrut becaues we are allies and friends in a great cause, the cause of peace in freedom.

"We know of the real and the false humanitarianism. We have seen how a totalitarian state, which talks humanitarianism, has created economic injustice, suppression of the individual, denial of inherent human rights, discrimination fostered by the state and in the erection of a superpowerful class of powerful men who dominate all others—in brief, in the very opposite of the ideal it preaches.

"Histadrut represents true humanitarianism and I say that this way of life will not only endure but it will prevail."

USWA Bids Companies Join Fight Against Bias

officials met with Kennedy, Vice Pres. Lyndon B. Johnson, Sec. of Labor Arthur J. Goldberg and members of the committee staff. They pledged the union's full support of the President's program.

On June 27, he continued, "we took the first step to implement this support within the union by formally acquainting all our officers, staff representatives, office personnel, local union officers and members regarding their individual and collective responsibility in helping to fulfill our pledge." Copies of the executive order and of the union's statement of policy were ordered posted in all union facilities.

"We now feel that a second step should be taken to insure a realization of the full intent of the President's program," McDonald wrote.

"Accordingly, we are taking this opportunity to invite the chief executive of each company with which we have collective bargaining agreements to join us in signing the attached statement which forthrightly declares our mutual determination to work together to implement the principles of the President's program within the areas of industry under our jurisdiction."

McDonald expressed the hope that all the companies would sign the agreement and would have their representatives meet with those of the union "to review the situation at your company and determine what steps, if any, may be required to realize our expressed intentions."

"I know that you and all the officers of your company are aware of the gravity of this problem we face in our country," he said, "particularly so in view of present conditions and the position we must maintain among the free and uncommitted nations of the world.

"It is because of this that I look forward hopefully to an early and favorable reply from you signifying that you will join us in what should prove to be an outstanding example of the best in democracy at work."

Executive Sec. Francis C. Shane said the union's Committee on Civil Rights is following up with similar invitations to the other companies which operate under USWA labor agreements.

Minister Hits New Maine R-T-W Drive

H. Reed (R) had expressed his opposition to a "work" law.

At a series of regional meetings sponsored by the Maine Right-to-Work Committee and reportedly attended by representatives of the National Right-to-Work Committee, plans have been announced for a large-scale advertising campaign against the union shop and for support for candidates for the legislature who will vote for a "work" law.

Raps Pressure

Reynolds, rapping the "continuing pressure" for "right-to-work," declared:

"Such a law would result in irresponsible negotiations by employers, who would be able to bargain with workers individually, and hence from a more advantageous position.

"Irresponsibility is the inevitable consequence at the personal level also. The worker who benefits from the advantages gained by union participation in the bargaining process without contributing to the support of the union is without question immoral and irresponsible. . . .

"No union can become an effective baraiging agent if it does not represent the total work force of laboring men. Progessive employers know that without adequate channels of communication through responsible unions, greater chaos and unrest will result. No right-thinking citizen can condone the disruption of our national welfare by such means during these days when our economic health is of such consequence to the whole world."

Illinois Redistricting Measure Ends Deadlock

Springfield, Ill.—A congressional redistricting bill has been passed by the Illinois legislature at a special session, ending a deadlock which had threatened to force the at-large election of 24 congressmen in 1962.

The state, which now has 25 congressmen—14 Democrats and 11 Republicans—will be entitled to only 24 representatives in the 88th Congress as a result of population shifts disclosed by the 1960 census.

Immediate result of the redistricting is expected to be the loss of at least one Democratic seat in the next Congress. A Chicago district, represented by Edward R. Finnegan, has been combined with the district of Rep. Sidney R. Yates, also a Democrat. A new suburban district is expected to go Republican.

In central Illinois, the districts of Rep. Peter F. Mack (D) and Rep. Paul Findley (R) have been combined, making it a marginal district that could go either way.

A second marginal district was created by the addition of normally Republican suburban areas to the northwest Chicago district now represented by Democrat Roman C. Pucinski.

The reshuffle leaves 11 districts that are regarded as likely to re-elect Democrats and the same number considered to be leaning Republican.

The redistricting bill had been written by a bipartisan committee from the Republican-controlled Senate and the Democratic-organized House after a special session of the legislature had gone into its seventh deadlocked week. The Senate approved the last-minute compromise 48 to 5, with all opposition votes cast by Republicans. House passage was 141 to 29, with 26 Republicans and three Democrats opposed.

Hotel Worker Heads Long Island AFL-CIO

Kiamesha Lake, N. J.—The Long Island AFL-CIO elected Charles J. Browne as president at the second biennial convention here and re-elected other officers. Browne, who is president also of Local 164, Hotel & Restaurant Employes, said a new activity program will be launched early next year.

Washington Unions Boycott Drug Fair

Some 25,000 union members in the Washington area have received a brochure from the Greater Washington AFL-CIO urging them not to make purchases at Drug Fair stores throughout the metropolitan area.

In addition the brochures show some of the anti-union materials used by the retail chain during a recent organizing drive. Boycott pamphlets, bumper strips, posters and press materials were made available to union members.

"We intend to use every legal and ethical avenue open to us to inform union members and their friends in government and industry that Drug Fair is anti-union and that they should shop elsewhere," said Pres. J. C. Turner of the Greater Washington central body.

Human Rights Week Slated Dec. 10-17

Human Rights Week, during which all Americans are asked to help build up active support for human rights, will be observed during the week of Dec. 10-17.

Its highlights will be Human Rights Day on Dec. 10, marking adoption of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights by the United Nations General Assembly on Dec. 10, 1948, and U.S. Bill of Rights Day on Dec. 15.

"At the root of almost every international problem today—in every trouble spot the world over—lies a denial of human rights," the U.S. National Commission for UNESCO, which is promoting the observance, has pointed out.

"Food and technical assistance, important as they are, cannot satisfy the hungers of restless millions. They feel that other needs are equally pressing. They want to be recognized as equals in individual dignity, in national independence, in self-government. They want, in brief, to possess the Rights of Man."

October Report:

Living Costs Edge To New Record

By Robert B. Cooney

The nation's cost of living inched to a new high in October, pushed by higher prices for new cars and a continuing small increase for services, the government has reported.

The Consumer Price Index rose by one-tenth percent between September and October to 128.4, the Labor Dept. said. This means a typical market basket of goods which cost $10 in the 1947-49 base period now costs $12.84.

Relative price stability was indicated by the fact that the October CPI was only nine-tenths of 1 percent above a year ago, "marking the smallest October-to-October advance since 1955," the report noted.

A companion report said factory workers' spendable earnings and buying power each rose to all-time highs in October.

Workweek Lengthens

Spendable earnings, representing take-home pay after deduction of social security and federal income taxes, increased by $1.80 over the month to $84.12 per week for a production worker with three dependents and to $76.50 for a production worker without dependents.

The increases resulted, the report said, from a lengthening in the workweek, which had been reduced by September auto strikes, as well as from a hike in average hourly earnings.

Since consumer prices changed very slightly, virtually all the gain in take-home pay was reflected in greater purchasing power, the report added.

Compared to a year earlier, the report said, weekly spendable earnings were up by $3.70 or nearly 5 percent. The buying power of these earnings was up by about 4 percent.

On the basis of the October CPI, some 930,000 workers are scheduled to receive pay hikes, generally one cent per hour, as a result of cost of living clauses in their union contracts. About 825,000 of them are in auto and farm equipment firms and 75,000 are in the air craft-missile industry.

Car Prices Up

The October increase in the CPI came mainly from a rise of six-tenths of 1 percent in the transportation index. This in turn was caused chiefly by a 3.2 percent hike in dealers' selling prices of new cars, the report noted.

The higher prices for new cars reflected reduced price concessions by dealers compared to prices set on end-of-model year prices for 1961 cars. Used car prices were up again due to continuing firm demand and low inventories.

The medical care index continued upward, this time by four-tenths of 1 percent.

Summarzing the over-the-year changes, the report had this to say:

"Approximately 60 percent of the rise in the Consumer Price Index over the past year resulted from higher charges for services, patricularly advances for health insurance and other medical services, movie admissions, rent and public transportation."

Moderating the rise in service prices were lower average mortgage interest rates and stable average gas and electricity rates, the report added.

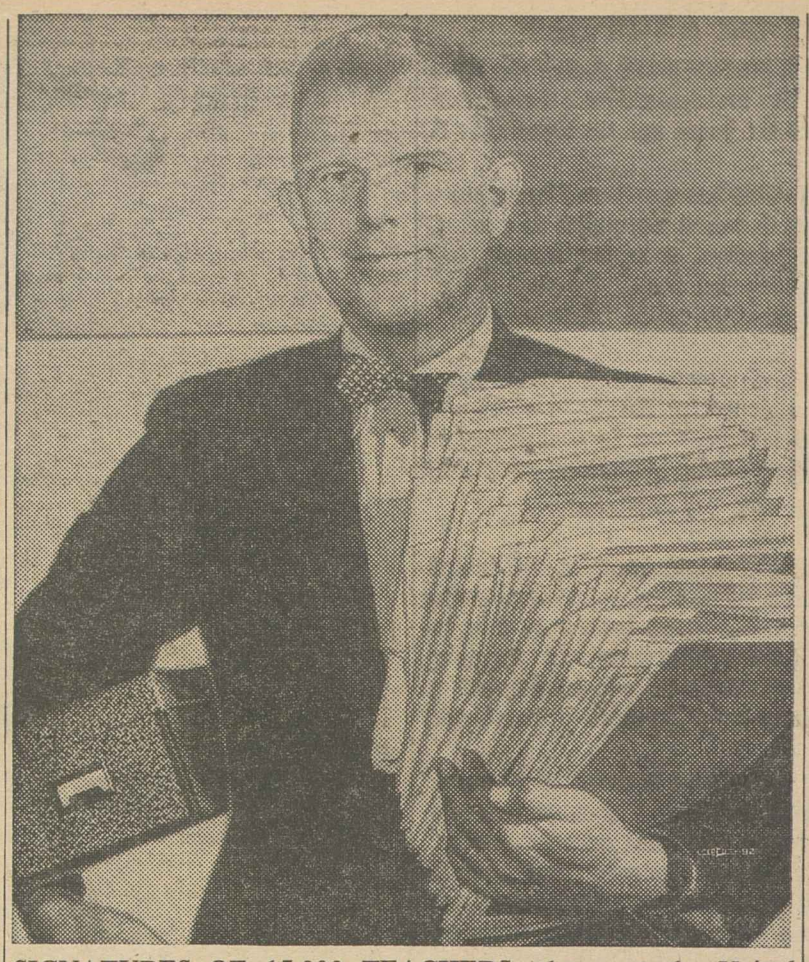
Union Hotels Listed For Miami Area

Miami Beach—The Hotel & Restaurant Employes have listed the following union hotels and motels in the Miami area and suggest their patronage by delegates and visitors to the AFL-CIO convention opening Dec. 7 in Miami Beach:

Miami Beach hotels: Algiers, Allison, Americana, Bal Harbour, Balmoral, Barcelona, Beau Rivage, Biltmore Terrace, Cadillac, Caribbean, Carillon, Casablanca, Crown, Deauville, Delano, Delmonico, di Lido, Eden Roc, Fontainebleau, Kenilworth, Lucerne, Martinique, Monte Carlo, Montmartre, President Madison, Robert Richter, Roney Plaza, Sans Souci, Saxony, Sea Gull, Sea Isle, Seville, Shamrock Isle, Shelbourne, Sherry Frontenac, Shore Club, Singapore and Versailles.

Miami Beach motels: Castaway and Colonial Inn.

Miami hotels: Miami Intl. Airport Hotel, Biscayne Terrace, Dupont Plaza, Everglades and McAllister.



SIGNATURES OF 15,000 TEACHERS who want the United Federation of Teachers, New York, to represent them in collective bargaining are carried to the City Labor Dept. by UFT Special Rep. Dave Selden. The city's 45,000 teachers will make their choice in the country's largest collective bargaining election in 25 years in voting beginning Dec. 6.

CIO affiliate which has the strong backing of organized labor both locally and nationally; the Teachers Bargaining Organization, a hastily put-together combination of so-called professional associations basically opposed to collective bargaining for teachers, including National Education Association affiliates; and the Teachers Union which was expelled in 1941 by the AFL-CIO American Federation of Teachers and barred from official dealings with the Board of Education following charges in 1950 that it was being dominated by Communists.

The Board of Education required each organization seeking a place on the ballot to show by petition that it had the support of at least 10 percent of the teachers eligible to vote, although it was unable to arrive at an official figure for the number of eligibles.

However, the UFT filed with the City Labor Dept. petitions bearing 15,000 signatures including 5,500 on dues checkoff authorization cards. The cards direct the Board of Education to deduct union dues from the teachers' salaries and to turn the money over to the organization under a policy effective Jan. 1, 1962.

The TBO said it submitted petitions with more than 11,000 signatures. The Teachers Union filed 4,000 signatures along with a protest that it had not been notified the deadline for filing was 5 p. m. on Nov. 28 instead of midnight, as it had assumed. It also asked the State Commissioner of Education for a temporary stay of the election.

The AFL-CIO and the Industrial Union Dept. have backed the UFT in the campaign with both money and manpower, as have the Greater New York AFL-CIO and its affiliates. The UFT feels the results of the election in New York may have powerful effect on the salaries, working conditions and professional status of teachers throughout the country.

NLRB Sets 10-Year High In Rulings

The National Labor Relations Board has reported, in a summary of its activities for the quarter-year ended Sept. 30, 1961, that it issued more formal decisions than in any quarter of the last 10 years and cut down the number of cases awaiting board action from 1,009 at the end of the previous quarter to 620.

Despite this record, there were more cases pending disposition at various NLRB levels than on June 31, 1961—7,461 at the end of September, 7,293 at the close of June—because of increased case filings.

The board reported these details of its work:

- NLRB members issued 1,032 formal decisions in the July-September quarter—up 26 percent over the same quarter of 1960.
- Of the 883 decisions in representation cases, 408 were issued by regional directors for the quarter—first full quarter since the board gave directors the power to make such decisions.
- Charges of unfair labor practices, and petitions for representation elections continued at peak rates—up 6 percent over the same quarter of last year.

Unions won 58 percent of elections in which 107,915 workers cast ballots, a slight increase over the preceding quarter and the comparable quarter of 1960. The board said AFL-CIO unions won 653 of 1,218 elections; unaffiliated unions, 378 of 716 elections. "No union" supporters won out in 732 of 1,763 elections.

IUE's John Duffy, Wife, Child Killed

Los Angeles—Intl. Rep. John Duffy of the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, former president of the union's District 6 (Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia), his wife and one of their five children were killed in an auto crash on the Los Angeles Freeway.

Duffy, 49, was killed instantly. His wife, Kathleen, died in less than an hour after the accident while the child, Francis, 2, died about five hours later. Four other children were hospitalized.

Funeral services were conducted by Rev. Charles Owen Rice, Pittsburgh labor priest who had married the Duffys.

Haggerty Stresses Need for Unity of Labor

money fighting each other, while they took care of you one at a time."

Haggerty's opening address to delegate representing 18 AFL-CIO building industry unions with 3.5 million members touched also on the progress made in the missile construction program. The missile site program today, he said, "is either on schedule or ahead of schedule." The unions in the department, he added, "have done a tremendous job for the security of our country."

Taking note of the creation by Pres. Kennedy of the Missile & Space Sites Labor Commission and the fact that time lost by strikes in this area has been reduced "to the vanishing point," Haggerty declared that building trades craftsmen and the unions responsible for the "outstanding record" should be given "a share of the public recognition."

The Building Trades Dept. president also warned in his key address of a "growing tendency in Washington" to substitute some form of "stabilization" of wages and profits for the "normal processes of collective bargaining." He declared that labor and industry are faced with the "approach of an economic straitjacket," but that it would take "a great deal more evidence than has yet been produced to convince me that America stands to gain from freezing wages or profits."

The greatest weakness in the national economy, he added, is not the danger of inflation but the persistence of an "abnormally high rate of unemployment."

Discussing the problem of an internal disputes plan Haggerty said that the building trades unions will take the position at the coming AFL-CIO convention that the "basic jurisdiction of every affiliated union must be recognized and protected in any internal disputes plan. This was the guarantee written into the AFL-CIO Constitution at the time of the merger. It cannot be amputated now. I confidently predict that this position will receive the overwhelming support of the delegates at the AFL-CIO convention."

Discussing in general the "false pictures" drawn of labor by the commercial press, Haggerty called for creation of a "much stronger and more effective labor press." He urged the Building Trades convention to take "an important step in the right direction by approving plans for the publishing of a new and effective monthly magazine, with wide circulation, by this department."

The report of the department's executive council reviewing many areas of the past two years and containing a number of recommendations included one calling for an increase in per capita from 3 cents to 4 cents per member per month.

In his official report to the convention, Haggerty noted with regret that the dispute between building trades and industrial unions had not improved during the past two years, but added, "It must be our policy to sit down and try to work out an agreement that will be both realistic and equitable to both sides."

In reviewing the problems of the past two years, the department's executive council declared it necessary in the common interest of all affiliates to expand the work of the department with special attenion on a program to provide information on the relationship of building trades unions to the "social and economic affairs of the nation and on the substantial and important contributions" made to the national welfare and national defense."

The council report contained also a restatement of the department's position opposing an "artificial limit imposed by race discrimination" in apprenticeship training programs. It again urged all affiliated unions to prevail upon local joint apprenticeship committees to increase their quotas of new apprentices.

Among several score resolutions submitted to the convention by state and local building trades councils were a number urging the B&CTD to invite the AFL-CIO-ousted Teamsters union to reaffiliate with the department and several calling on the department to disaffiliate from the federation. A number of resolutions dealt also with the problem of having locals of building trades union affiliate with state and local councils.

Missile Sites Record Hailed by Goldberg

Miami Beach—Lost time due to work stoppages at missile sites was a minute fifty-five thousandths of 1 percent in the past six months, Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg announced here.

He told the 51st convention of the AFL-CIO Building & Construction Trades Dept. that the President's Missile Sites Labor Commission reported that in the six months period approximately "seven and a quarter million man-days were worked at missile sites. The total number of man-days lost during this period due to labor disputes was a little over 4,000. This means there was a lost-time ratio of .055 percent, which is only one twenty-fifth the average time lost due to work disputes on these bases in the five years before the establishment of the commission."

Goldberg cited this record as an outstanding example of labor's cooperation in the public interest.

The Wisdom of Merger

THE CHALLENGES AND THE PROBLEMS facing the labor movement in 1961 underscore the importance and the wisdom of the merger of the AFL and CIO six years ago on December 5, 1955, in New York City.

In the years since 1955 the AFL-CIO has weathered two recessions, a well-mounted and lavishly-financed campaign to secure punitive and restrictive labor legislation, a major assault on collective bargaining in key industries and a state-by-state drive to weaken trade unionism by passage of so-called "right-to-work" laws.

While these economic setbacks and attacks on trade unionism were occurring, two major trends were taking shape—a change in the nature of the work force and a revolution in technology, a revolution that is making its real impact on American society in the Sixties.

THE STRENGTH OF A UNITED labor movement was instrumental in pulling labor through these years of attack; in mounting an all-out campaign of its own on the corrupt influences that infiltrated a few unions and expelling the tainted groups; in engaging successfully in the 1958 and 1960 elections to help implement on the political front a program to help keep America economically strong and responsible.

The strength of a united labor movement is essential to meet the complex problems of the current decade. The labor force is growing in new directions, with heavy emphasis on white collar and technicians' jobs in government and industry and growth in the retail and service trades. These are areas where organized labor has made limited gains while the more traditional areas of union organization are shrinking as automation and new technologies spread.

The strength of a united labor movement is fundamental to the task of organizing these new unorganized, of bringing them the benefits of collective bargaining, job security and the simple dignity that is due every American worker.

IT IS THIS SAME STRENGTH that is vital to continued political efforts to secure legislation to alleviate and eliminate the chronically high unemployment that has been weakening the nation, to provide the necessary aid to education, civil rights and other programs essential to the country's and labor's welfare and progress.

The united labor movement in the past six years has gained the know-how and the experience to organize to meet the challenges of the Sixties.

In the past six years the acknowledged internal problems that were brought into the merger, with full realization of their difficulties, have yielded to solutions or have been cut down to manageable size. As these problems move toward final solutions, the strength of the labor movement can be brought into full play in meeting the new challenges and problems.

"There is no limit," AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany said recently, "to what the American labor movement can do for the country and for the people it represents."

On its sixth birthday, the AFL-CIO can look back with pride at the battles it has fought, at the progress it has brought to the 12.5 million workers it represents. It faces the coming years with the certain knowledge that the strength of a united labor movement is the bedrock on which to build a better America leading the world to peace and freedom.

Tragic Story of Labor Told:

Study by Expert Shows Cuba Americas' 'First Soviet Satellite'

By Arnold Beichman

OF THE MANY BOOKS on Cuba which have appeared, Daniel James' "Cuba: First Soviet Satellite in the Americas," is the only one to take up the story of what has happened to Cuban labor under Fidel Castro. It is the most authoritative and hard-hitting account of the tragedy of the Cuban revolution yet to appear.

James produces overwhelming evidence to document his main thesis, that Cuba is literally a Soviet satellite. The former managing editor of the New Leader, he relies entirely upon former Fidelistas and does not cite a single Batista source.

James devotes a whole chapter to "The Capture of Labor," aware that "in order to be able to deliver Cuba over to the Communist Party, Fidel Castro had first to deliver over to it the Cuban labor movement." He knows that Castro could not destroy Cuba's free institutions without destroying free trade unionism and, leaning heavily upon information supplied by exiled leaders of the Cuban Confederation of Labor (CTC), he tells the whole shocking story of how Castro systematically wrecked the Cuban unions. It is the first time that that story has been brought together in one place.

During the revolutionary struggle, Castro favored the "democratization of trade-union politics"—as he phrased it in a manifesto—and free union elections. In the first months after taking power, he gave the appearance of fulfilling these promises. Between April and July 1959, James reports, Castro permitted free elections in the CTC's 33 federations, with the result that the July 26th Movement slates won in 28 of them and the Communists in only three (mixed July 26th-Communist tickets were elected in the remaining two). In a free and fair fight, that is to say, the Communists were overwhelmingly repudiated by organized Cuban labor—a complete surprise in view of their superior organization and the backing of Fidel Castro and his younger brother Raul.

The Castro brothers and the Popular Socialist (Communist) Party were chagrined, but quickly recovered from their surprise to launch a drive to take over the CTC by foul means. Raul Castro was named to start a purge of the democratically elected July 26th labor leaders (he had already been selected to purge the July 26th Movement itself), writes James. The old Red labor boss, Lazaro Pena, directed him from behind the scenes. In September and October 1959, the two managed to obtain the removal from their posts—on grounds of "counter-revolutionary activities"—of six top July 26th leaders in four labor federations.

The Castro-Communists had hoped to complete their purge in time for the CTC's 10th congress on Nov. 18, 1959, but they encountered too much resistance from the CTC rank and file. They thereupon decided to combine direct government pressure with the indirect pressure of Raul and Pena, via the Ministry of Labor; for that purpose, they replaced the non-Communist minister with a dedicated Communist, Augusto Martinez Sanchez, on Oct. 16.

Despite this show of power, the Communists could elect only a tiny handful of the 3,000 delegates to the CTC congress. The very first session threatened to end in a riot when the delegates rebelled against a Castro attempt to force them to put three Communists on the 13-man executive committee. Even when Castro himself appeared to restore order and plead for "unity," the delegates reacted overwhelmingly against having Reds on the executive. Castro backed down, only to turn around and order David Salvador, whom he had appointed CTC provisional secretary general, to slip into a new "unity" slate the names of three men who had no known Communist records but were secretly serving the Communist cause.

These three—including incumbent Sec. Gen. Jesus Soto—opened up a real purge of the July 26th labor leaders not three weeks after the CTC congress ended. Backed, of course, by Raul Castro and Labor Minister Martinez Sanchez, by April 1960 they had eliminated more than 20 of the 28 who had been democratically elected the year before to head their respective federations. Even the pliant Salvador was expelled from the CTC on Aug. 2, after a clash with Martinez Sanchez; on Nov. 4, he was arrested trying to flee.

"With Salvador out of the way," writes James, "Communist domination of Cuban labor is complete."

ACTUALLY IT IS PENA, not Soto, who runs the CTC, according to James. Though Pena occupies no official post and only carries the title, "Founder of the CTC," he makes all the decisions from an office in CTC headquarters. Ironically, it was the same Pena who bossed Cuban labor under Batista,

Has this benefited the Cuban worker in any way? On the contrary, reports James, his position is worse than before. "Soviet-like" laws give the labor minister life-and-death control over the worker's every act, and he is not only prohibited from striking but must serve the state as in all Red countries. Worse yet, unlike labor under Batista and even in other Soviet satellites, Cuban labor is militarized.

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

FORMER PRES. EISENHOWER has joined Pres. Kennedy in a denunciation of self-proclaimed "super-patriots" and "extremists" in our political life. It is a welcome comment.

The mark of the right-wing "extremist" today is a claim that nobody understands the nature of communism as well as he and his fellow extremists. It is a claim that he and his fellows—and they alone—have spotted a pro-Communist cancerous growth in our national life that makes this republic vulnerable to conspiracy from within.

It is a claim that citizens high in our national government and in other positions of influence are really crypto-Communists working day and night to undermine our institutions of freedom. It is an assertion that social security and the graduated federal income tax are the work of Lenin and Marx, taking us toward socialism and communism. It is the cry that Chief Justice Earl Warren should be impeached.

To all of these, Gen. Eisenhower bluntly says that this democracy doesn't "need" any "super-patriots." It doesn't need people demanding the elimination of the income tax and the destruction of unions and the advocacy of dictatorship exercised by some man on horseback.

Our strength is honest patriotism exercised in normal ways, accepting the laws passed by the normal processes of a free representative democracy. If we think these laws are badly conceived, we have a full right to seek to change them by normal processes, and this exercise of free speech should not be abused by attributing foul motives to those who disagree.

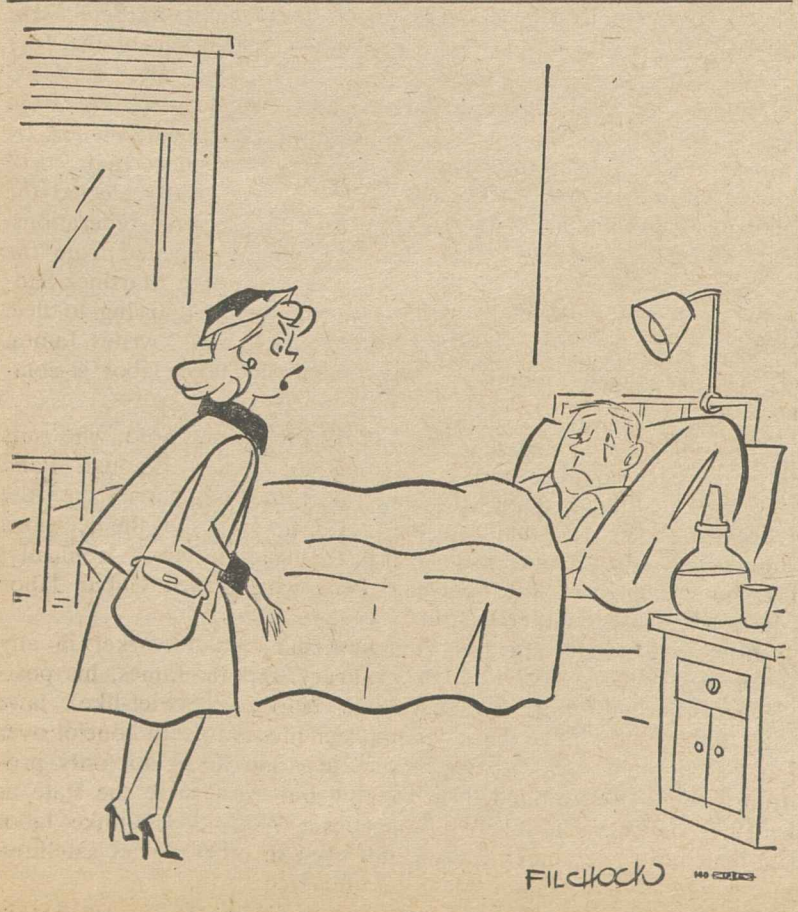
IN A STATEMENT obviously referring to the case of the resigned Maj. Gen. Edwin A. Walker, Gen. Eisenhower also said in his television interview with the CBS commentator, Walter Cronkite, that it was "bad practice—very bad" for a member of the armed services to make public comments "on political matters or economic matters that are contrary to the President's."

Sen. Strom Thurmond of South Carolina is seeking to build a case for Walker as a martyr to Defense Dept. "muzzling" and "censorship" of his political views. But the whole tradition of our country is that the military is subordinate to civilian authority. Its tradition is that the military must be nonpartisan. Gen. Eisenhower himself carried this tradition to the extreme of non-participation in elections for most of his adult life.

It is totally improper for a military officer to seek to indoctrinate troops under his command with a partisan political view to which he himself has become susceptible—and that is exactly what Walker attempted when he was in command of the 24th Division. The indoctrination materials he had presented to his troops intruded directly on issues that were political and current in the United States.

Walker happened to have firm political beliefs of the type that would be called right-wing, and he tried to propagate them. It would have been equally as wrong for him to try to propagate his views if they had been of the type termed left-wing.

Said Gen. Eisenhower: "I believe the Army, Navy, Air officer should not be talking about political matters, particularly domestically and never in the international field, unless he's asked to do so because of some particular position he might hold."



"So, my very first meal as your wife didn't agree with you?"

Southern Workers Trail:

Textile Pay Hike Sought, Organizing Rights Asked

Charlotte, N. C.—A program of substantial wage increases and broader fringe benefits was urged on the southern textile industry by the executive council of the Textile Workers Union of America at its quarterly meeting here.

Wages in the South have risen to the $2 an hour level, the council asserted, but in textiles the average is less than $1.60. Southern textile workers have not shared in the pay hikes granted in American industry generally in 1961, TWUA Pres. William Pollock charged.

A council resolution bluntly said that southern textiles are in a sound position to grant immediate wage increases. Economic conditions are improving, it said, production is 20 percent above the level of early 1961, prices and sales have continued to rise, and the increase in military orders "assures a strong base for the industry's future."

"New equipment and advanced technological methods and innovations are increasing manhour productivity at the rate of 4.5 percent a year," the resolution said. "At the same time the new tax privileges . . . for faster write-offs of investment in equipment assure an even higher rate of increase in manhour productivity because they will enable the industry to install the most modern equipment. . . .

The union's fringe benefit program was spelled out in a separate resolution calling for improved hospitalization, health and life insurance services, supplementary unemployment benefits and pensions.

Freedom of speech, assembly, association and solicitation of union membership are "virtually nonexistent in the rural South," the council charged in a resolution asking the U.S. Dept. of Justice to establish a special enforcement unit to "safeguard the right of trade unions to function freely in the South and to bring reality to the protections provided by law."

Edward P. Morgan is on vacation. His column, which normally appears in this space, will be back in the next issue of the AFL-CIO News.

Cites Beatings

The council cited beatings of union organizers, the tendency of local police to close their eyes to violations of unionists' rights, and "police state" suppression of basic freedoms.

"In town after town," the resolution said, "union organizers are prevented by police from distributing leaflets to factory workers. Police act under the cover of ordinances which, in most cases, are unconstitutional on their very face.

"Union members often are denied the right to rent a meeting hall, or to buy time on the radio, or to take advertising space in the local newspaper. If they substitute the exhausting and tedious method of home visits to convey the union's message, they often are arrested for 'illegal' solicitation."

In a speech during the council meeting to the leaders of three Rock Hill, S. C., locals, Pollock called on southern textile management to "get in step with modern southern industries which are laying the foundation for an expanding economy and a better way of life." Many parts of the South are "moving dramatically toward modernization," he asserted, but while the area's "new face" is growing more and more attractive, "its beauty, so far, is only skin-deep."

"The collective stomach of the South is still underfed and undernourished," he charged, "and all the new industries and booming construction cannot hide the fact that per capita income in the South is still at least 30 percent below that of the rest of the nation, and the average southern industrial worker earns about $800 a year less than the workers in other parts of the country."

CLC Renews Bid for Advisory Body on FEP

Ottawa, Ont.—The Canadian Labor Congress, as it had for the last eight years, has asked Labor Minister Michael Starr for appointment of a citizens' advisory committee to review "in a critical fashion" the operation of the nationwide Fair Employment Practices Act.

The proposal was one of several steps to implement the government's anti-discrimination policies urged on Starr in a presentation by Frank Hall, CLC vice president and chairman of the CLC Human Rights Committee.

The Canada Fair Employment Practices Act outlaws racial and religious discrimination in employment or in trade unions in industries coming under federal jurisdiction. Hall expressed the committee's "deep regret" that Canada is "the only country in the world with nationwide fair employment practices legislation" that has not ratified the Intl. Labor Organization convention on Discrimination in Employment and Occupation.

Hall said that appointment of an advisory committee on which labor, management and community groups would be represented "would be evidence that the strengthening of government anti-discrimination policy, as exemplified by the enactment of the Bill of Rights, is being accompanied by measures designed to implement this policy."

Employer Bias Charged

CLC officers and the Human Rights Committee renewed their charge that many business establishments still practice racial and religious discrimination, and recommended that the Labor Dept. be given the power to initiate FEP investigation and complaints.

They criticized the department for "declining" to do needed basic research into problems of discrimination and pointed out that provincial governments and unions, with much smaller resources, have conducted pioneering surveys on racial restrictions in jobs, housing and public accommodations.

'Besmirch' Societies Denounced by AFL-CIO Aide as Nonsensical

"I don't think we have to organize any besmirch societies," Jay Lovestone, of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Intl. Affairs, declared in an address to the All-American Conference to Combat Communism, broadcast on As We See It, AFL-CIO public service program heard on the ABC radio network.

Lovestone, in an obvious reference to the John Birch Society continued: "I can differ with Mr. Eisenhower and Mr. Kennedy, and I consider myself a very good anti-Communist who has learned the hard way, but the fact that I differ with them doesn't make either one of them a Communist agent. This is nonsense.

"Not every mistake is treason and not everyone who is mistaken is a traitor. Keep that in mind. If we don't keep that in mind, we play right into the hands of the enemy."

Lovestone reminded his audience, which met in Washington, D. C. that communism originates in Moscow.

"If there were no Soviet threat today, there wouldn't be a Communist Party in the world," he asserted. "They all live not only on Communist cash—on Kremlin cash—they live on the very existence and the powerful aggression of the Soviet dictatorship."

The AFL-CIO staff representative urged Americans to improve, not tear down, the nation's democratic institutions.

He said America's first job is defense.

"We must be so strong that even the most neutral of neutrals—with or without quotation marks—will respect us," he asserted. "We must be so strong that even the most loyal of our allies will say America is a good ally to have. We must be so strong that not even Khrushchev in his moment of worst megalomania will fail to realize that it doesn't pay to act against us."

He also called for maintenance of a growing, healthy economy as a bulwark against communism.

"We must prove by deed, as we can prove, that our system and way of life are superior," he declared. "And when we talk to the Russian people, and when we talk to the world about Russia, we must not hesitate to state, on the basis of their own declarations and confessions, that their system is one of gangsterism and murderism. Murder with them is a matter of principle and philosophy."

Lovestone urged that the U.S. do nothing to help either the Russia or the Chinese dictatorships overcome their problems.

"For example, the Chinese are irritated with the Russians because they think the Russians have not done enough to get the Chinese into the United Nations," he commented, asking: "Must we remove this irritation by helping get the Red Chinese into the UN?"

Fireman-Hero Wins Award Of Rail Union

Eugene, Ore.—A locomotive fireman who risked his life to save a two-year-old boy has been honored by his union at a dinner here.

Donald D. Hambleton received the Fireman of the Month award of the Locomotive Firemen & Enginemen. He also received the heartfelt thanks of the parents of Danny Zyback, a youngster who "loves trains" and who was playing on the railroad tracks near Eugene—in the direct path of an oncoming Southern Pacific train.

Hambleton, keeping a lookout from the fireman's side of the locomotive cab, spotted Danny between the rails. He shouted a warning to the engineer who immediately applied the emergency brakes, but it was obvious that the train could not be completely halted in time to save the boy.

Hambleton leaped from the cab, raced ahead of the slowing engine, scooped up the boy and dived for the side of the track seconds before the locomotive ground to a halt some four feet beyond where the boy had been.

As a winner of his union's monthly safety award, Hambleton is eligible for the BLFE's annual Fireman of the Year award. The awards, spotlighting the safety role of locomotive firemen, are one method the union has taken to answer charges by railroad management that locomotive firemen are "featherbedders"—unnecessary to railroad operation.

TWUA Editor Moves To United Fund Post

New York—Burt Beck, managing editor of Textile Labor, official organ of the Textile Workers Union of America, has been appointed labor press representative on the public relations staff of the Greater New York Fund.

A veteran of 20 years in the daily newspaper and labor press field, Beck's function in his new post will be to disseminate Greater New York Fund labor news and to work with labor editors in developing feature articles of interest to union members.

COMMEMORATING the ninth anniverary of the death of Philip Murray, late president of the former CIO, Vice Pres. Charles Copeland of the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers placed a wreath on the grave in a Pittsburgh cemetery. The IUE has paid a tribute to his memory every year since Murray's death in 1952.

Board Shifts Rule on Union Shop Language

The National Labor Relations Board, moving in the direction of a change long urged by the AFL-CIO, has revised its contract-bar rule in the case of a union petitioning for a representation election when another union has a union-shop contract already in effect.

The board by a 3-2 vote has set up this test for deciding when a union-shop contract clause is legal and thus that existence of the contracts bars a new election:

"Contracts containing ambiguous though not clearly unlawful union-security provisions will bar representation proceedings in the absence of a determination of illegality" by the board or a U.S. District Court.

NLRB Chairman Frank W. McCulloch and members John H. Fanning and Gerald A. Brown voted to reverse the Keystone rule which since 1958 has established a "presumption of illegality" in a union-shop contract clause unless it quotes certain "precise language" of the Taft-Hartley Act.

The Supreme Court, the NLRB majority ruled, already has "sharply circumscribed" the area in which the provisions of a contract may be termed illegal under Taft-Hartley.

The new rule is more in accord, the majority said, with the law's "objective of stabilizing labor relations" than was the Keystone rule. NLRB members Philip Ray Rodgers and Boyd Leedom dissented, asserting that the majority had misinterpreted the Supreme Court reasoning.

"We welcome this development," said Thomas E. Harris, AFL-CIO associate general counsel, "because in it the board has moved a considerable distance in the direction we have urged it to move."

Federation briefs have been critical of board decisions in the Keystone and Hager Hinge cases.

McCulloch, Fanning and Brown voted to dismiss a petition filed by Dist. 50 of the unaffiliated Mine Workers at the Newark, N. J., plant of Paragon Products Corp. They said a union-shop contract held by Local 1159, Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, is a bar to an election despite failure of the clause to quote the "precise" T-H language.

In another case, the board voted 5-0 to define the one-year period during which a union may not picket an employer's premises after losing an NLRB election. The year starts when illegal picketing stops, all board members agreed in a case involving Irvins, Inc., Baltimore, Md., department store chain, and Retail Clerks Local 692.

The board found that the union began picketing Irvins for recognition May 31, 1960, and lost a representation election Aug. 18, 1960. The results were certified Aug. 26, 1960, and the picketing was continued until a U.S. District Court enjoined it Oct. 3, 1960. The one-year period began on the latter date, the board decided.

Meanwhile NLRB Gen. Counsel Stuart Rothman notified all NLRB trial attorneys to seek to include interest of 6 percent a year in all future back-pay awards.

5 AFL-CIO Publications Chosen for School List

Five AFL-CIO publications have been selected by a committee of the National Task Force on Economic Education to help give high school students the minimum understanding of economics issues necessary for good citizenship.

They are among 93 publications chosen by leading economists who culled approximately 7,000 books, booklets, pamphlets and studies in a search for materials that could be used for economic education in the high school curriculum.

In addition, one of the five AFL-CIO publications and parts of two others were chosen for inclusion in a kit being distributed to all high schools. The AFL-CIO has made 25,000 copies of each available without charge.

Recommended to high school students and teachers of economics were:

- State and Local Taxes, AFL-CIO Publication No. 80.
- To Meet the American People's Needs, Labor's Economic Review, June-July 1959.
- America's Haves and Have Nots, Labor's Economic Review, August 1960.
- Wage Policy for an Expanding Economy, Labor's Economic Review, November 1960.
- Federal Taxes, AFL-CIO Publication No. 108.

Selected for distribution in the kits were Labor's Economic Review for November 1960 and parts of the two publications on taxes which the AFL-CIO has included in a new pamphlet especially designed for the purpose.

The Task Force was set up by the American Economic Association, which named the members, and the Committee for Economic Development, which financed the study. Labor's Economic Review, produced by the AFL-CIO Dept. of Research, appears monthly in the AFL-CIO American Federationist.

Automation's Impact:

Job Displacement Held Burden of All

Los Angeles—The people of America must all share the burden of aiding workers displaced at the rate of 35,000 a week by advancements in automation.

This was the theme of speeches at a conference on automation called by California's Gov. Edmund G. Brown, who announced plans to establish a special automation advisory board to help anticipate the specific need for skilled workers in this state.

W. Willard Wirtz, undersecretary of Labor, and Dr. Clark Kerr, Pres. of the University of California, joined in urging coordinated labor, management and government efforts to meet the impact of automation.

They suggested Federal, state and industry training and retraining programs, interstate employment placement services, and consideration of government aid to transport unemployed workers to new jobs and help support them during training periods.

Brown heeded a call from California Labor Federation Executive Sec-Treas. Thomas L. Pitts and others in announcing his automation committee composed of management, labor, and public members. The group is expected to spell out in detail the need for more skilled workers and the decline in the need for unskilled labor.

By anticipating the needs of industry long in advance, it was noted, schools will be better able to train students for specific jobs, and individual workers who will be displaced by automation can help themselves and be helped in their efforts to prepare for job losses.

Wirtz decried the failure of the nation to take action in many areas now open to it to increase employment. He noted that if "we would build the 140,000 classrooms we need now, this would directly and indirectly produce nearly 1 million more jobs, in addition to improving the educational system needed to prepare citizens for the job market."

He also attacked the "paradox that some 315,000 workers are being imported this year from other countries for farm labor jobs while 4 million Americans are looking for work."

He called false the response of agricultural growers that American workers are "not available" or "not willing" to perform farm labor jobs.

"The heat in California's Imperial Valley lettuce fields is no hotter than the heat of the blast furnaces in Pennsylvania's steel mills," he said.

"The real answer," he declared, is "that Americans will not do the work the Mexican braceros are doing at the wages growers are paying."

New Program Offers Books For Overseas

State labor bodies and national and international unions have been invited to take part in the Fraternal Bookshelf program, designed to supply people overseas with typical U.S. books.

The program, called by AFL-CIO Intl. Affairs Dir. Michael Ross a "useful device for presenting a more accurate picture of U.S. life to the world," provides a portable library of 99 paperbound books for mailing abroad. The Fraternal Organizations Committee, Box 1960, Washington, D. C., said it can be delivered anywhere in the world for a cost of $40.

A bookplate naming the donor will be attached.

The books include Rachel Carson's The Sea Around Us, de Tocqueville's Democracy in America, the Pocket History of the United States by Henry Steele Commager and Allan Nevins, Walt Rostow's Dynamics of Soviet Society, Charnwood's biography of Lincoln, Emerson's Basic Essays, and John P. Marquand's The Late George Appley.

Horseshoers Launch Harness Track Drive

Toronto, Ont.—The Horseshoers have launched their biggest organizing drive in a bid to gain bargaining rights at harness tracks throughout the eastern United States.

Third Vice Pres. Clayton Thomas of Chicago began the campaign as the union's four-day convention concluded here. His target will be about 100 horseshoers on the harness tracks, and the key to the union's drive is its apprenticeship program.

George Miller, re-elected president, estimated that the two-year campaign could mean a one-third increase in the union's membership, now about 300.

"We will organize first and then we can begin our apprenticeship program in earnest," he said.

The convention approved an assessment of $10 per member per year to finance the organizing campaign. Thomas will continue to work as a horseshoer but the special levy will enable him to change his locale constantly. His one son is an apprentice learning the craft under him.

Organizing in Canada will be handled by James D. Smith of Toronto, newly elected first vice president. He will concentrate on western Canada in the harness field.

Other work accomplished by the convention, in which each of the 30 delegates worked on a committee, included a hospital plan providing coverage of those over 65 coming into the organization.

Sick benefits were stepped up from $10 to $15 a day, not to exceed 10 days for each year.

The union will also put out a quarterly publication for the locals to be read at the meetings.

Although the convention at the Park Plaza Hotel was originally scheduled for three days, the weight of work extended it another day.

The union plans to streamline its constitution. In 13 years it will be 100 years old and there is a desire to bring the constitution up to date.

The Ontario Jockey Club entertained the members at the Woodbine Race Track, with one race named in honor of the horseshoers.

Officers are: Miller, of Hot Springs, Ark., president; Smith, first vice president; Kenneth Wheeler of Baltimore, second vice president; Thomas, third vice president and Fred Webb of Milan, Ind., secretary-treasurer.

Politics in Illinois:

GOP Turns Down FEPC Nominees

Springfield, Ill.—Illinois Republican legislators, most of whom voted against the state's new fair employment law earlier this year, sparked a political uproar by turning down two of Democratic Gov. Otto Kerner's five nominees to the new Fair Employment Practices Commission—a union president and a prominent Negro lawyer.

On a straight party division, the GOP-controlled Senate rejected the nominations of Packinghouse Workers Pres. Ralph Helstein and Earl Dickerson, a 70-year-old Negro civic leader.

For a time it appeared that the commission's Republican chairman, Charles W. Gray, industrial relations director of the Bell & Howell Co., also would be turned down. A Senate committee which had earlier recommended approval of his appointment angrily recalled him after he had sharply criticized its hearing as "a travesty."

Gray, who shares the "modern Republican" views of Bell & Howell Chairman Charles H. Percy—an advocate of the FEPC law—finally won Senate confirmation by a 37-11 vote.

An editorial in the Federation News, weekly newspaper of the Chicago Federation of Labor, charged that Gray was confirmed only because cooler heads among Senate GOP "diehards" realized the party's "hopes of carrying Illinois in 1962 would be dim indeed unless this backward footwork stopped."

The Republican senators, the editorial commented, had "little appetite" for the "modern Republicanism" of Gray and Percy, but "felt it was a choice of swallowing Gray if they wanted sweeteners in the form of campaign contributions."

Rejection of Helstein and Dickerson also drew editorial blasts from Chicago Republican newspapers and from the St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

Dickerson was questioned by the Illinois Senate Executive Committee about past association with allegedly Communist - dominated groups. Helstein was asked about three union staff members charged by the U. S. House Un-American Activities Committee with past Communist associations. Helstein bluntly retorted that the UPWA operates in full compliance with the strict AFL-CIO Ethical Practices codes barring both Communists and corruptionists from elective or appointed office in affiliated unions.

The Chicago Sun-Times said their rejection "lends support to those who suspect that the Republican legislators who voted against FEPC are trying to prevent it from being made operational by crippling it in its launching stage."

The Chicago Daily News pointed out that the election of Helstein in 1946 as UPWA president was an "anti-Red move" and said Communists had been shaken out during his leadership.

A Post-Dispatch editorial denounced the Senate Republicans for "disgraceful obstructionism" of the fair employment law.

The Senate, controlled by the Republicans under an apportionment of districts on the basis of area—assuring rural and small town domination — had been the graveyard of FEPC bills during five previous sessions of the legislature. A compromise bill pushed by Kerner was enacted this year after five GOP members joined Senate Democrats in voting for it.

B & C Locals' Right to Funds Upheld Again

Albany, N. Y. — New York's highest court has upheld the right of former locals of the expelled Bakery & Confectionery Workers to take their treasuries and assets with them when they disaffiliate and join the AFL-CIO American Bakery & Confectionery Workers.

The ABC said the State Court of Appeals action "keeps the record 100 percent clear" in more than a score of court decisions in various states involving secessions from the expelled union.

The appellate court unanimously upheld a lower court's 1958 ruling in the cases of New York City Locals 50 and 51, whose members voted to quit the B&C after its expulsion from the AFL-CIO in 1957 on findings of corrupt leadership.

An attempt by the B&C to enforce a constitutional provision permitting the international to seize the assets of a seceding local had been denied in a decision which upheld the locals' right to "disaffiliate from a corrupt and dishonest association."

Metal Trades Hit Runaway Shipbuilding

The AFL-CIO Metal Trades Dept. has urged a congressional subcommittee to support measures to halt "the deterioration of our U.S. flag merchant fleet and our shipbuilding and ship repair industry."

Pres. James A. Brownlow said the U.S. last year was "a poor eighth" among the world's shipbuilding nations and he warned that it would drop even lower if the trend toward "runaway" shipping continued.

Brownlow filed his department's views in a letter to Rep. John H. Dent (D-Pa.), chairman of a House Labor subcommittee which is holding hearings on the impact of imports and exports on U.S. employment.

Brownlow supported steps to end what he termed "the tax haven device which has made runaway flag operation so profitable." He charged that "U.S. corporate monies are being used to build up foreign flag fleets which bypass our tax laws, our labor laws, our decent working conditions."

U.S. and American-controlled companies, he said, are building some 91 merchant vessels in foreign shipyards, "all scheduled for foreign flag operation."

Housing Project Hailed As Memorial to Green

Chicago—"This is the kind of memorial he would have wanted."

This was the theme of speakers at dedication ceremonies for a public housing project named for the late William Green, president of the former American Federation of Labor from 1924 until his death in 1952.

William L. McFetridge, AFL-CIO vice-president, expressed the gratitude of the federation Executive Council to the Chicago Housing Authority for the 1,099-unit low-cost housing project at Division St. and Ogden Ave.

"We have replaced a terrible slum with a magnificent housing development," McFetridge said.

The $17 million project consists of 15- and 16-story buildings on 20 acres of land. The ceremonies were held on the ninth anniversary of Green's death. A plaque was unveiled by Harry Green, a son of the late AFL president.

Green, a Chicago attorney, recalled that his father had a deep interest in improving the environment of working people, especially their housing and expressed "the thanks of our entire family for the honor paid to his memory."

"This is a tribute in keeping with his life and work," Green said.

Chicago's Mayor Richard Daley pointed out that Pres. Kennedy's program for decent and proper housing for every family had strong support from organized labor and suggested that other housing projects should be named for union officials.

"We have eliminated 60 percent of the dilapidated dwelling units in the city," Mayor Daley said. "This project is a symbol of our determination to remove all blight from our city in the next 10 years."

Contrast with Communism

Pres. William A. Lee of the Chicago Federation of Labor said the ceremonies "speak well for our country and our way of life. Contrast what we do here today with what we see where tyranny prevails. In East Berlin, the Communists erect brutal barriers to freedom.

"In welcome contrast, we dedicate this monument to freedom. We know that the life and work of William Green—who rose from coal miner to spokesman for all labor—will be part of the fabric of our country forever,"

Martin J. Dwyer, president of Elevator Operators Local 66, is chairman of the Chicago Housing Authority board of commissioners, which was responsible for the planning and naming of William Green Homes.

AFL-CIO Aids CARE Relief To Vietnamese

The AFL-CIO has allocated funds for the purchase of 4,000 CARE food crusade packages, at $1 each, for the relief of flood victims in Vietnam, AFL-CIO Vice Pres. Lee W. Minton has announced.

Minton represents the AFL-CIO —a founding member—on the CARE executive board.

The relief organization acted to give assistance in the flood-stricken area upon receiving first-hand reports of the suffering in Kien Tuong province, where 30,000 people were said to be completely destitute.

The AFL-CIO-financed gift, which provides for a total of 34 tons of basic supplies, follows CARE's authorization to its mission chief to provide aid consisting of 24,000 food crusade packages, 10,000 blankets, materials for clothing and other help.

Michael Ross, director of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Intl. Affairs, said AFL-CIO European Rep. Irving Bown, representing Pres. George Meany, will participate in the food distribution.

In addition to disaster relief measures, unions affiliated with the AFL-CIO voluntary support a CARE program of sending food, office equipment and other supplies to free, democratic labor bodies in Africa, Asia and other areas.

Individual and union donations for the flood sufferers may be marked "Vietnam Flood Victims" and sent to the AFL-CIO representatives at CARE, 660 First Avenue, New York 16, N. Y.

Union Volunteers Aid Charity's Convention

Denver—Two local labor unions donated their services to help stage the 1961 convention of the National Society for Crippled Children here—Local 230, Motion Picture Operators, and Musicians Local 20, Music Performance and Trust Funds. Local officers prepared audio visual aids and arranged the music for the five-day meeting.

KEY WORKERS on the Ed Sullivan television program are shown with AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany after show on which Sullivan hailed labor's $1 million fund drive for the Eleanor Roosevelt Cancer Foundation. Meany Calls for Liberalized Trade conference delegates, IAM Pres. Al J. Hayes said in concluding that there should "no longer be any doubt in anyone's mind as to the overriding necessity for a continued national policy of liberal trade."

Urges Broad Program With Job Safeguards

Hayes said the conference, first of its kind sponsored by the Machinists, was called to develop specific ways and means in support of liberal trade policies and to help meet problems created by the exploitation of foreign labor.

Conference Chairman Rudy Faupl said the meeting was mandated by the 1960 IAM convention so that U.S. and Canadian contract negotiators would be familiar with the issues raised by some employers in negotiations.

Pres. Kennedy, in a message to Hayes read at the conference, said the U.S., as "the leading industrial power of the world and its foremost trader" must chart a new course in trade policy because of changes in Europe and Japan and "the emerging challenge in trade and aid posed by the Soviet bloc."

"All these," Kennedy wrote, "are events we must contend with and fashion" if we are to assure ourselves and our partners the benefits of economic growth and the capacity to "contend with Communist economic warfare" in the years ahead.

The conference recommended a program including trade adjustment safeguards; machinery to prevent the "flooding" of U.S. markets with foreign goods or the exploitation of labor abroad; the raising of labor standards in other countries through the Intl. Labor Organization and the General Agreement on Trade & Tariffs (GATT); legal changes to deny tax-deferment to firms producing goods abroad at lower taxes; to require management to compete more freely and to prosecute violations of the anti-trust laws through "administered prices and price-fixing conspiracies."

U.S. policies should aim at reducing unemployment to a maximum of 3 percent of the labor force as quickly as possible, and to produce a rate of economic growth "commensurate with the nation's needs and resources," the conference declared.

Others who discussed foreign trade problems included Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg; Herman Patteet, Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions; Chester Bowles, Pres. Kennedy's special representative and adviser on Asian, African and Latin American Affairs; AFL-CIO Research Dir. Stanley Ruttenberg; Dr. Howard Piquet of the Legislative Reference Service, Library of Congress; Russell Bell of the Canadian Labor Congress, and IAM Pres. Hayes.

Meany in his closing luncheon speech asserted that this country "cannot prosper, or indeed cannot even maintain itself, without imports from foreign countries."

Nevertheless he predicted a "bitter battle in Congress next year," when Pres. Kennedy seeks to revise and broaden the reciprocal trade policy this nation has followed since the days of Franklin Roosevelt and Cordell Hull, and acknowledged "an increasing amount of concern within our own ranks over our continued support of this policy."

The primary reason, Meany said, is the failure of the American economy, apart from the competition of imports, to provide full employment.

"For eight years," he said, "our annual econmic growth was held down to a snail's pace. And while there has been some improvement this year, and more can be anticipated, it has not had any material success in reducing unemployment."

A trade adjustment program, Meany said, would give the President an alternative to raising tariffs on a product hurt by foreign competition. He could attempt to rehabilitate those affected by using some of these proposed remedies:

- For workers, supplementary unemployment benefits, up to two thirds of former weekly earnings, for 52 weeks; job retraining; retirement at age 60 under social security; the relocation of entire families, if necessary, to areas where jobs are available.
- For industries, loans from the Small Business Administration; technical advice and assistance in increasing efficiency or developing new products; accelerated amortization for investments in developing new products and in bringing about a more balanced economy.
- For communities, loans on the same basis as to business firms, and similar technical assistance.

Meany said these are not revolutionary ideas, that most western nations have authorized such programs, that the approach is similar to that in the Area Redevelopment Act here.

FIRST CONFERENCE on world trade policies convened by Machinists adopted a program for liberalized tariffs plus government action to meet needs of communities and workers affected by imports. Shown speaking is Chester Bowles, special adviser to Pres. Kennedy. At his right are Machinists Pres. Al J. Hayes and AFL-CIO Sec.-Treasurer William F. Schnitzler.

Workers Win as ILO Sets Debate On World 40-Hour Week Standard

Geneva, Switzerland—The Governing Body of the Intl. Labor Organization voted at its 150th session here to put the issue of the 40-hour-week before next year's annual conference.

The vote of 34 to 4, with one abstention, was a victory for the worker delegates over the last-ditch obstructionism of the employers.

Another worker-supported action was the decision to forward to the South African government the resolution, adopted at last June's ILO conference, calling on South Africa to withdraw from the organization because of its racial discrimination policies.

South Africa's continued membership "is not consistent with the aims and purposes" of the ILO, the resolution said.

The four-day session of the government, worker and employer representatives on the ILO's executive unit was dominated by the announcement of David A. Morse, the director-general, that he was resigning to return to national life in the U.S.

Delegates pressed on with a long agenda that dealt mainly with the next two ILO annual conferences.

Jean Moeri, Swiss leader of the workers group, delegate Rudy Faupl and Kalmen Kaplansky of the Canadian Labor Congress joined with other trade unionists to push aside the procedural road blocks raised by employers before the 40-hour-week issue.

The workers "are not interested in legal technicalities or parliamentary trickery," Faupl said in calling for the question to be placed on the 1962 conference agenda for final action.

Earlier this year the ILO voted a recommendation setting 40 hours as the goal to be reached as soon as possible everywhere. However, the decision was invalidated because employer delegates stayed away to prevent a quorum.

At the Governing Body session employers argued that the proposed recommendation could not be voted on again at the next conference. But the ILO legal expert ruled that since the recommendation had already gone through the preliminary discussions the conference could skip another first-stage debate.

While the employers served notice that they would continue their fight in the conference, they had to accept the majority decision that a "final vote" on the projected recommendation could be taken.

Health Questions on Agenda

The questions of hygiene in shops and offices and benefits in case of employment accidents and occupational diseases were placed on the agenda of the 1963 conference. Both were endorsed by the workers group.

A special committee set up to investigate Ghana's complaint that forced labor exists in Portugal's African territory of Angola reported that it had completed arrangements to make an on-the-spot check after hearing 31 witnesses at preliminary hearings.

The committee's final report is expected to be ready for the Governing Body's next session in the spring of 1962, when the issue will be publicly aired.

Procedure similar to that set in motion to deal with the Ghana complaint was initiated at this session in connection with a counter-charge by Portugal that the African Republic of Liberia is failing to observe its obligations to ban forced labor.

Morse Quits ILO Post; Meany Expresses Regret

AFL-CIO leaders and members "regret exceedingly" the decision of David A. Morse to resign as director-general of the Intl. Labor Organization, AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany said in a statement hailing the "tremendous record of constructive service" Morse had posted in his 14 years.

Morse unexpectedly presented his resignation to the ILO Governing Body at its regular meeting in Geneva, Switzerland, catching worker, employer and government delegates by surprise. He said he expected to return to American life.

Meany, calling the ILO "one of the most important organizations in the international field," described Morse as a "true international servant."

"The workers of the world, to whose welfare he has contributed with intelligence and devotion, will sorely miss his hand at the helm of the ILO," Meany said.

"We wish him the best of luck in any new undertaking and we want him and the world to know that the workers of the United States deeply appreciate his years of service to the ILO and the cause of humanity."

Morse showed emotion as he announced the decision to the agency he has headed since 1947. He explained he felt the time had come for him "to resume again the duties and responsibilities of normal citizenship in my own country."

The decision had been made easier, he explained, by an offer for service at home where he will engage in activities "kindred to the objects and purposes of the ILO."

The Governing Body had been expecting confidently that Morse would be available next year for another five-year term.

Morse's decision was the cause of "great consternation" for workers, Jean Moeri, Swiss leader, said. Similar praise was expressed from the government and employer benches. George L-P Weaver, U.S. assistant secretary of labor, cited Morse's "single-minded dedication" to the ILO's goal of peace through social progress.

Rudy Faupl, U. S. worker member of the Governing Body, said he was proud "the U.S. has been able to contribute such a dynamic and creative man to the service of the entire world."

"If the ILO today is equipped to advance the aspirations and promote the human welfare of hundred of millions of workers, it is because David Morse has felt in the very fibre of his being the basic material needs and yearning for fundamental freedoms and social progress of great mass of mankind," Faupl added.

The exact date of Morse's resignation is still to be fixed, but he has undertaken to remain to present the 1963 budget at the next spring's session of the Governing Body.

Unions in Louisville Offer Shelter Advice

Louisville, Ky.—The Louisville Building & Construction Trades Council has offered to help advise do-it-yourself fans to build their own family fallout shelters.

The council has named a three-man advisory committee to supply home owners with construction information.

Tax Program Aims for Jobs In Ore Fields

A three-point tax revision program aimed at encouraging the exploitation of low-grade iron ore reserves in the United States has been laid before a House subcommittee by the Steelworkers.

In submitting the statement, Meyer Bernstein, USWA international affairs director, said the proposed tax changes are necessary to solve the problem of shutdowns and unemployment in areas such as the Mesabi Range in Minnesota.

The area abounds in low-grade ores which lie untouched while steel companies that own them import millions of tons of higher-grade ore each year from countries such as Canada, Venezuela and Liberia.

The USWA program provides that foreign subsidiaries of U.S. companies lose their tax advantage and that they be compelled to pay current taxes; proposes five-year amortization for high investment in beneficiation or concentration plants required for the treatment of low-grade ores, and urges removal of the 15 percent depletion allowance enjoyed by firms with subsidiary ore companies operating abroad unless they "undertake significant exploitation" of their low-grade ore in the U.S.

Kennedy Hails Labor's Aid To Get U. S. Moving Again

Unions' Job 'Never Done':

Meany Calls Labor To Serve Nation

By Saul Miller

Miami Beach—The AFL-CIO is in "good shape," ready and willing to play its part in strengthening the nation and defending freedom, AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany declared in a keynote speech to the federation's fourth convention.

He told a cheering audience of 3,600 that the federation is neither "satisfied nor complacent" because "labor's job is never done."

There are internal problems facing the trade union movement and "I do not think we should sort of sweep them under the rug. I think that we should try to do something about them. But I do not think that we should overemphasize them," the federation president said, adding:

"I do not think that we should use these problems and our failure to solve them as a convenient excuse for failure to do something else that we very well could do."

The merger that started six years ago, Meany declared, "is a complete and absolute success in every state in the union."

Every state and local labor group in the federation is merged and with a few exceptions, he noted, the mergers are working well.

Points Emphasized

To the nearly 950 delegates and the thousands of guests and observers gathered for the opening of the convention, Meany stressed that:

- The AFL-CIO will continue its "uncompromising opposition" to any form of corruption in the trade union movement.
- Any union that engages in discrimination on the basis of race in any form "flouts the basic principles of the AFL-CIO" and harms the trade union movement.
- The AFL-CIO is dedicated to the task of organizing the unorganized and will exert its full efforts in this area. The federation recognizes, he said, that "we haven't done as good as we should."
- Labor will use its influence against the "so-called lunatic fringe" because it is completely opposed to "the extreme right as well as those on the extreme left who would lead us to disaster."
- The AFL-CIO does not believe in "coexistence propaganda" nor in the "better Red than dead" approach any more than it supports the thesis of the John Birch Society, "whose only contribution is to tear down the character of the great leaders of the nation" and to take the country back to the 19th century.

Meany posed the problems of the nation and the labor movement against the continuing Communist threat to peace in Berlin, the Soviet Union's testing of 50-megaton nuclear weapons, and the Communist base in Cuba. He called on union members to remember that their first obligation is as "good citizens."

New Fight Pledged In January

By Willard Shelton

Miami Beach—Greeted with tumultuous cheers by an overflow audience of 3,600 AFL-CIO convention delegates and guests, Pres. John F. Kennedy pledged here that he would launch a new battle in January for a sweeping legislative program to keep the country "moving forward."

In a broad-ranging speech thanking labor for its support of policies to keep our country strong and our world defense of freedom vital, the President emphasized especially the role of the AFL-CIO in strengthening "the free union movements of emerging new countries."

"It is no accident that Communists concentrate their efforts among the workers in these nations," he said.

Addressing himself directly to 150 foreign visitors, many from new countries, Kennedy pointed out that in the U.S. with our "strong, free labor movement" workers do not feel "left out."

"I want both sides of the bargaining table here," he declared, to realize that a "strong, free labor movement is vital to our society."

"I don't want workers in the developing nations to be given a

Council Hails Spirit Of United AFL-CIO

Miami Beach—In the face of "vast and varied pressures" during the last two years "the AFL-CIO has maintained unwavering strength of spirit and unity of purpose," the federation's Executive Council reported to the fourth constitutional convention of the AFL-CIO.

The maintenance of that strength and unity "outweighs all other achievements set forth in these pages," the council declared at the conclusion of its 384-page report, "and the credit for it is shared by the leaders of our movement at every level."

The 29-man council, reviewing the two years of "trial and triumph, frustration and accomplishment, disappointment and hope" since the last convention in September 1959, expressed its confidence in "the ultimate triumph of our cause—a better life for Americans and for all mankind."

The council's report covers in 15 major sections a detailed record of the federation in the last two years. It includes a presidential report by Pres. George Meany, a detailed financial report by Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler, developments in the labor movement 1959-1961 and sections on the national economy, international relations, social security, the worker and the community—dealing with education, community services, and safety—civil rights, the campaign against so-called "right-to-work" laws, court

Jobless Rate Drops to 6.1 Percent, First Significant Decline In Year

The nation's unemployment rate dropped sharply to 6.1 percent in November, the first significant decline in a year. The seasonally adjusted joblessrate had been 6.8 percent in October and had stuck close to 7 percent since December 1960.

Pres. Kennedy announced the drop in the jobless rate "with great pleasure" in his address to the AFL-CIO convention in Miami Beach.

"And we're going to have to get it lower," the President told the applauding delegates.

The President also reported that November employment figures showed 67.4 million persons employed—a record for the month. The actual count of unemployed was 3.99 million, an increase of 56,000 but counter to the seasonal trend which normally shows a far sharper rise in the jobless. The unemployment rate is adjusted to take into account seasonal conditions.

The November rate was the lowest since September 1960, when the jobless percentage was 5.7. For previous Novembers, the rate was 6.2 percent in 1960 and 5.8 percent in 1959.

Kennedy hailed the improvement in the unemployment picture as a sign that "the American economy has begun to move, and move strongly out of the lassitudes of re-

BUILDING TRADESMEN listened closely at their 51st convention in Miami Beach as AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany called for greater organizing efforts and laid down the principles for reaching agreement on a plan to settle internal disputes in the federation.

Building Trades Ready to Press Organizing Drive, Haggerty Says

Miami Beach—Delegates to the 51st convention of the AFL-CIO Building & Construction Trades Department are firmly convinced that they want to "step out into the field of organization" and have taken steps "to provide funds and activities" for that purpose, Department Pres. C. J. Haggerty declared here.

Haggerty, in a brief response to AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany's address to the convention in which Meany asserted that labor has not "kept pace" in organizing the unorganized because "we haven't tried," noted the feeling on organizing and added:

"We realize there are many more important things to do than to spend our time in family internal bickering. We want no part of it. We hope we can find ways and means of adjusting it at this coming convention (of the AFL-CIO) . . . so we can get on with our work."

Meany's speech to the department convention at the Balmoral Hotel climaxed the three-day meeting, attended by more than 250 delegates. The delegates adopted resolutions dealing with internal labor affairs, elected Haggerty to his first full term and re-elected Sec.-Treas. Frank Bonadio and 10 vice presidents, including John Lyons, Jr., president of the Iron Workers, recently named to the post by the department's executive council.

Meany pointed out that "we have not organized the same share of the working force today as we had five or 10 years ago," adding that the fault did not lie with internal disputes but was true because "the international unions involved haven't tried, and this applies to the building trades also."

"There are plenty of unorganized workers in this country on new building and I hope the building trades will look into this question and see if they can do something about it," he said.

The AFL-CIO president declared the problem of internal differences in the federation "is certainly not as bad as some people have tried to portray it" and that "it is a disservice to the trade union movement to indicate that the only thing we are concerned with is our internal squabbles and to indicate that the trade union movement is weak and going out of business because of these internal problems. This is just not true."

Approach Must Be Voluntary

In striving for a method to settle and minimize disputes, Meany said, the approach "must be consistent with the tradition of the American trade union movement, based on voluntary agreement, or it will not work." The method also "must provide that we determine this inside the labor movement," he added. Whatever is done, he stressed, "must be directed towards the solution of disputes rather than the allocation of jurisdiction."

He stressed also the problems of automation and high unemployment, the campaign for a so-called "right-to-work" law on the national level, the drive to have labor unions placed under the anti-trust laws and the overriding need to keep America economically strong so that it can lead the free world in the cold war.

The convention adopted a resolution rejecting the proposal for an internal disputes plan adopted at the recent convention of the AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept. It called for an amendment to the federation's constitution setting up machinery under the section dealing with jurisdiction for settlement of disputes in this area by the AFL-CIO Executive Council, with the convention to act on failure to comply with a council decision.

The delegates also adopted a resolution objecting to consideration by the AFL-CIO convention of the IUD internal disputes plan based on the argument that various constitutional problems are involved.

Counter-Arguments Prepared

Haggerty said the department has prepared arguments in opposition to a number of IUD-sponsored resolutions and expects to appear before convention committees and the convention itself to offer them.

The convention adopted a resolution offered as a substitute for a number of proposals to invite the return of the Teamsters, ousted by the 1957 AFL-CIO convention, urging that handling of any bid for reaffiliation be in "complete observance" of all provisions of the AFL-CIO constitution, the codes of ethical practices and the AFL-CIO policies.

The Teamsters were ousted for failure to meet ethical standards in the constitution and the codes.

The convention approved unanimously a resolution to raise the per capita effective Jan. 1, 1962, from 3 to 4 cents per member per month to finance increased activities, including an information program.

The delegates heard a number of speakers from the construction industry including Edward T. Kelly, manager, labor relations, Associated General Contractors of America; Paul M. Geary, Specialty Contractors Association, and H. E. Lore, National Constructors Association.

James L. McDevitt, director of the AFL-CIO Committee on Political Education; Pres. Paul Hall, of the Seafarers; Charles Donahue, solicitor in the Labor Dept., and James Noe of the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers and special consultant to the Peace Corps, also addressed the convention.

November Construction Starts Hit $5.1 Billion

New construction put in place during November had a value estimated at $5.1 billion, according to a preliminary report by the Bureau of the Census.

The total was 5 percent under the revised estimate for October but 6 percent above the level of November 1960.

Uniform Design Suggested:

Label Called 'Potent' Weapon of Workers

Miami Beach—Delegates to the Union Label Dept.'s 50th convention voted enthusiastic support for a stepped-up program of promoting the union label as one of labor's "most potent weapons" to improve working conditions of American workers.

The convention also asked the department's executive board to explore the feasibility of a uniform union label design to insure quick consumer recognition of the various labels, service pins and shop cards.

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany and Sec. - Treas. William F. Schnitzler emphasized in addresses to the convention the growing identification by the public of the union label as a symbol of quality in both merchandise and services.

"The public has learned increasingly to respect the products that bear the union label, and they expect those products to be good products," Meany declared.

In fact, the AFL-CIO president told the convention, he sometimes gets personal letters of complaint if a union label product fails to satisfy the purchaser.

Meany also emphasized promotion of the union label as the workers' means of helping fair employers. He said:

"We are helping the employer to sell his product. We are helping him to make a better product. We are helping him to get a wider market for that product and, in doing so, we are helping him get the profits that are necessary for him in order to stay in business and to expand his business."

Counters Propaganda

Schnitzler told the delegates that the label can be used to counter anti-labor propaganda which portrays unionism as something imposed on workers. The union label, he declared, can be used to tell the story of decent conditions, fair employers and high standards.

Pres. David Dubinsky of the Ladies' Garment Workers declared that his union's label has been a major weapon against "non-union gangster shops" which undercut union standards.

The ILGWU, he said, is spending $1 million a year to promote its label, and he reported that as a result some non-union employers have asked for a union contract "because customers were asking for the label."

Dubinsky urged the department to "give some thought" to a single, universal label which would identify all products made by members of AFL-CIO unions. This, he said, would eliminate consumer confusion as to which emblems were legitimate union labels.

Dept. Pres. Richard F. Walsh commented that the executive board's study of the possibility of a uniform label design was a step in that direction.

Auxiliaries Commended

A resolution unanimously adopted by the convention praised AFL-CIO Women's Auxiliaries for "volunteer support and untiring efforts" in helping to bring about "increased demand for union label products and union services."

Other resolutions expressed the department's thanks for the "wholehearted cooperation" of the labor press and praised the work of the federation's publication, the AFL-CIO News and the American Federationist.

The period of Sept. 3-9 was officially designated Union Label Week for 1962, and 1963 observance was set for Sept. 2-8.

The convention authorized the department's executive board to call, in its discretion, a national work conference in years when no AFL-CIO convention is scheduled.

The department's secretary-treasurer, Joseph Lewis, told the delegates that a stepped-up program of organizing local and state union label councils is essential to effective promotion of the union label at the community level. He expressed the hope that continued growth of the department would make it possible to set up area union label offices to provide greater assistance in convention and state fair exhibits and other promotional activities.

A memorial service, at which Walsh presided, paid tribute to John J. Mara, who had headed the department from 1956 until his death on July 17, 1960, and to George L. Googe, a vice president of the department at his death on Sept. 19, 1961.

Delegates also saw a preview of the department's new documentary movie, Parade of Progress, a half-hour color and sound film which includes highlights of the 1961 Union-Industries Show at Detroit.

Summer Students Give ICFTU $1,017

Detroit—Delegates to the state AFL-CIO summer school in Port Huron donated $300 to the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions and delegates to Auto Worker institutes gave another $717, Education Dir. Don Stevens of the Michigan AFL-CIO said.

LABELS AND INSIGNIA of affiliated unions flank the hall where the AFL-CIO Union Label & Service Trades Dept. held its 50th convention. Delegates were told the label has proved a "potent weapon" in improving working conditions.

Convention Approves Report:

Metal Trades Urge Code For New Organizing Drive

By David L. Perlman

Miami Beach—The AFL-CIO Metal Trades Dept. convention here has set the stage for a major organizing effort by the department and its affiliates by directing its officers to "do everything possible" to help resolve the labor movement's internal differences and improve the department's relationship with other AFL-CIO departments and unions.

The delegates unanimously approved a committee report recommending that the department draw up a "code of organizing ethics" and warning that organizing techniques which "discredit, undermine or criticize other unions are a disservice to the overall membership of organized labor."

Pres. A. J. Hayes of the Machinists, a vice president of the department, headed the committee on organizing. Its report also declared that exploitation by the public press of labor's internal differences has hurt the trade union movement and alienated potential members.

The convention criticized "the intentional airing of organized labor's differences in the public press" and called for a greater effort by the union movement to use publications, radio and television "to rebut anti-labor propaganda."

Earlier the convention had heard AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany warn of new legislative attacks on labor.

Conspiracy Doctrine Revised

He charged that the current attempt to bring unions under anti-trust laws would "put us back to the old doctrine where it was a conspiracy for two citizens to get together in order to improve their conditions."

Meany told the convention that one of the nation's largest employers, a member of the Presidential Labor-Management Advisory Committee, has taken the position that "the Number One cure" for labor-management problems "is to curb the excessive power of unions."

"This is the fight that we are facing in the legislative field," Meany declared.

The convention backed Metal Trades Dept. Pres. James A. Brownlow in his call for legislation which would prevent contractors of the Atomic Energy Commission from using public funds "to defeat equitable collective bargaining."

Brownlow charged in his report that the General Electric Co. had used taxpayers' money to fight the recommendations of a presidential panel for settlement of a dispute at the Hanford, Wash., atomic products plant which GE operates for the government.

He said GE had published advertisements attacking the recommendations of a panel set up by the AEC's Labor-Management Disputes Board, had erected barbed wire barricades and made other strike preparations "all at public expense."

Democracy Evident In Workers' Rights

Miami Beach—The labor movement "has a responsibility to show that democracy is not just profits and coupon clipping," AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany told the Metal Trades Dept. convention.

Democracy, he said, "is the right of the fellow who gets injured on the job to get his compensation. Democracy is the ordinary citizen facing up to a big corporation on a grievance."

Declaring that the trade union movement "has more to contribute to the advancement of American democracy than any other segment of society," Meany added:

"When we think of those things, I'm pretty sure that we will be able to keep our little internal problems in proper perspective."

Brownlow said only the direct intervention of Pres. Kennedy had averted a situation where a government contractor would have been using government money to break a strike aimed at winning acceptance of the recommendations of a government disputes panel.

Other Convention Actions

In other convention actions, the department:

- Condemned the use by some southern communities of tax exemptions, free land and low wages to lure industry and proposed federal aid to help modernize and retain factories in communities where they presently do business.
- Expressed concern at reports that the Administration is considering a freeze on all ship construction subsidies and warned that such an action would constitute a "death blow" to the American shipbuilding industry and endanger U.S. security.
- Urged establishment of safe work practice codes in the utility field in all states and strengthening of existing codes.
- Asked that the international bridge being built over the Niagara River be named after the late John H. Lyons, who was president of the Bridge & Iron Workers, "as a monument to the trade union movement and its members on both sides of the border."
- Voted to raise the salary of the department's president from $25,000 to $30,000.

The convention heard Assistant Sec. of Labor Jerry R. Holleman declare that the Committee on Equal Employment Opportunity, of which he is executive vice chairman, "means business" in enforcing the no-discrimination provisions of government contracts.

He said the committee will be "most patient" with those "trying to do the right thing" but will be "most impatient" with anyone trying to "circumvent" the government's policies.

Holleman also said labor must recognize that job opportunities are shifting from the North and East to the West and South "whether we like it or not" and gear its organizing efforts to this trend. One out of every six jobs in the U.S. is in California, Texas or Florida, he said, and "the trend is accelerating."

Earlier, Edward E. Goshen, director of the Labor Dept.'s Bureau of Apprenticeship, expressed concern at the decline in the number of registered apprentices at a time when the labor force is rising.

Goshen told the convention that a continuing influx of skilled craftsmen is needed "for the welfare and safety of this country" and called for extending apprenticeship opportunity "to all segments of the nation" on a non-discriminatory basis.

Other speakers included Rear Adm. M. J. Lawrence, Navy chief of industrial relations; Oscar S. Smith, director of the AEC's Office of Industrial Relations; AFL-CIO Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller; COPE Dir. James L. McDevitt; Pres. C. J. Haggerty of the Building & Construction Trades Dept. and Pres. Paul Hall of the Maritime Trades Dept.

CLC Backs Bolting Locals In Mine-Mill

Ottawa, Ont.—The executive council of the Canadian Labor Congress has pledged the "fullest support and assistance" to workers at Sudbury and Port Colborne, Ont., who are seeking to withdraw from the Communist-dominated Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers.

The council at a meeting here pointed out that the workers—ore miners, smeltermen and refinery employes of the Intl. Nickel Co.—have demonstrated a desire "to return to the legitimate labor movement" by a referendum vote and by endorsing CLC election programs in their local unions. The Steelworkers are offering them the opportunity to return, but the revolt against Mine-Mill is now in the courts.

The resolution said that the CLC, "in conformity with policies democratically established in regular conventions," will continue to render all possible assistance "toward the achievement of their objective of becoming part of the free trade union movement."

Because of its Communist domination, Mine-Mill was expelled from both the former Canadian Congress of Labor in Canada and the former CIO in the United States.

Nine Unions Launch Food, Beverage Dept.

Miami Beach—The AFL-CIO Food & Beverage Trades Dept., representing over 800,000 members of nine AFL-CIO affiliates, was officially launched here at a founding convention and set about the job of providing services for its membership.

The new department elected permanent officers, adopted a constitution that sets out its objectives and guidelines and received a charter from the AFL-CIO. The federation's Executive Council had authorized the creation of the department at its June meeting.

AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler, who presented the charter and served as a delegate of the American Bakery & Confectionery Workers, told the founding convention that the new organization had close contacts with the public and therefore the responsibility of securing the widest support of the consumer.

The 55 delegates meeting at the Carillon Hotel elected Harry R. Poole, executive vice president of the Meat Cutters, as president of the department, and Daniel E. Conway, president of the ABC, as secretary-treasurer. Seven vice presidents, chosen by their respective organizations, with two top officers, comprise the executive board.

The 800,000 members in the nine affiliates are engaged in the manufacture, processing, sale and distribution of food and beverage products.

The department will be financed by a per capita tax of 1 cent per member per month paid by each affiliate for that portion of its membership engaged in food and beverage trades. Local food and beverage councils, to be established by the department, will pay annual dues of $25.

Objectives Set Forth

The constitution sets out as objectives assistance to affiliates to secure improved wages and other benefits, coordination of the activities of affiliates, assisting in political, legislative and educational activities, and protecting and safeguarding the well-being of consumers of food and beverage products.

Poole told the convention a real need exists to coordinate activities because of the tendency of large corporations to merge with food and other types of companies in moves for diversification and because of a growing tendency on the part of employers to join forces to oppose legitimate bargaining proposals.

Conway predicted rapid growth for the new department. He added that growth alone should not be the yardstick, but the responsibilities and opportunities to "render greater service to the membership."

Schnitzler spoke also of the little-publicized records of frauds and embezzlements committed in the field of banking. For the first six months of 1961, he declared, bank embezzlements exceeded $8.5 million, an amount equal to 85 percent of the $10 million embezzled in all of 1960.

This story, he said, has been kept from the people. While the bonding companies were voluntarily reducing the rates charged trade unions under the performance bonds requirement of the Landrum-Griffin law, "they were raising the rates charged to all the banks," he said.

The department's seven vice presidents are:

Max Greenberg, president, Retail, Wholesale & Department Store Workers; Russell Lasley, vice president, Packinghouse Workers; James A. Suffridge, president, Retail Clerks; Paul Hall, president, Seafarers; Mort Brandenburg, president, Distillery Workers; Harold A. Schneider, secretary-treasurer, Grain Millers; Charles Paulsen, director of organization, Hotel & Restaurant Workers.

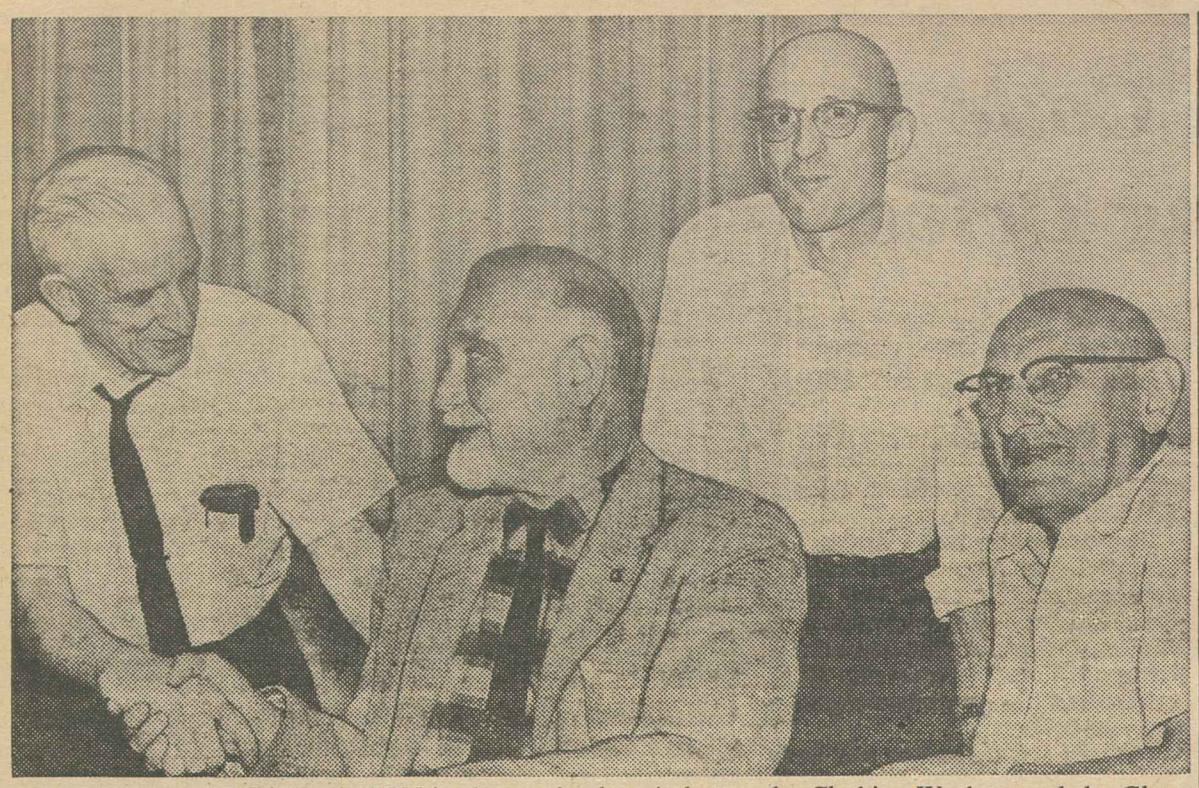
Tobacco Union Pacts Provide 7.5% Hikes

The Tobacco Workers have reached agreement on wage increases of 7.5 percent and other benefits for 14,000 workers in new contracts at American Tobacco Co. plants in Durham and Reedsville, N. C., and Richmond, Va.; Philip Morris plants in Louisville, Ky., and Richmond and Liggett & Myers workers in Richmond, Durham, and St. Louis.

The minimum increase under the three-year pacts is 13 cents an hour. TWIU Pres. John O'Hare said additional wage increases of 5 to 8 cents an hour go to workers in various categories, a fourth vacation week for employes after 25 years of service, an increase in weekly sick benefits, and other gains including an additional holiday and life insurance of $4,000 for seasonal workers.

Others on the union committee were Sec.-Treas. R. J. Petree and Vice Presidents Howard W. Vogt, George Benjamin, E. G. Harvey and William L. Banks.

The three firms produce Lucky Strike, Pall Mall, Herbert Tareyton, Philip Morris, Parliament, Duke and other brands.



TO FURTHER ORGANIZATION in the men's glove industry, the Clothing Workers and the Glove Workers signed a merger agreement in Miami Beach. Sealing the signed pact are Pres. Joseph C. Goodfellow of the Glove Workers; ACWA Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky; Sec.-Treas. James Van Der Wall of the Glove Workers and Sec.-Treas. Frank Rosenblum of the ACWA.

ACWA, Glove Workers Approve Merger Plans

Miami Beach—The Amalgamated Clothing Workers and the Intl. Glove Workers of America have approved a merger agreement that will enable the two AFL-CIO affiliates to "pool their resources in a common and united effort to raise working standards in the glove industry."

The merger agreement was announced in a joint statement by the top executive officers of both unions. The terms were previously ratified in a general referendum of the IGWA membership.

The IGWA has a membership of about 2,500; the ACWA has about 385,000 members in the male apparel and allied industries. The executive officers of the Glove Workers, Pres. Joseph C. Goodfellow and Sec.-Treas. James Van Der Wall, will continue to serve the merged organization as representatives of workers in the glove industry.

The joint announcement noted that in the past both unions have organized in the glove industry and there has been a history of intermittent conflict and litigation. "As a result," the statement declared, "employers repeatedly were able to play one union against the other, and the outcome all too often was that neither was successful in organizing and representing the workers."

The merger announcement said "we are planning an intensive organizing drive in the men's glove industry," adding that the unions hoped that "this amicable agreement between two former organizing rivals will set an example for other unions to emulate."

ACWA officers representing the union at the signing of the merger agreement were Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky, Sec.-Treas. Frank Rosenblum and Exec. Vice Pres. Hyman Blumberg. Officers of both unions said a distinctive union label for gloves will be adopted as soon as practicable. Both unions have traditionally laid great stress on the union label in organizing and consumer education activities.

The ACWA was founded in 1914 and before merger of the AFL-CIO was a CIO affiliate. The IGWA, founded in 1902, was an AFL affiliate prior to the federation merger six years ago. The merger agreement provides that the name of the union will be the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America.

Secondary Handbilling Ruled Legal Publicity

The National Labor Relations Board has extended the publicity proviso of the Taft-Hartley Act to a secondary employer's entire business in a case where two building trades unions handbilled a supermarket under construction in Beaver Falls, Pa.

A board panel by a 2-1 vote dismissed a complaint charging Plumbers Local 115 and Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers Local 712 with engaging in unfair labor practices by distributing "Do Not Patronize" handbills last March at the Golden Dawn Supermarket, where electrical and refrigeration work were being done by non-union workers.

When two contractors filed charges against the unions the NLRB general counsel issued a complaint that the unions were threatening, restraining and coercing the market owner to force him to cease doing business with other persons.

NLRB Chairman Frank W. McCulloch and Member John H. Fanning voted to dismiss the complaint, finding that the handbills were truthful, did not cause a work stoppage or a refusal by employes to handle products or perform services, and therefore were protected by the publicity section of the law. Member Philip Ray Rodgers wrote a dissent, arguing that the section applies only where the primary employer produces products distributed by another employer.

McCulloch and other members were on the majority side in two similar cases—Lohman Sales Co., and Northwestern Construction of Washington, Inc. They ruled that the publicity proviso protected a Denver Teamsters local whose members passed out handbills urging the public not to buy products of Lohman, a struck tobacco distributor. Also, it applied to IBEW Local 73 when it publicized a non-union contractor as "unfair," the majority held.

Court Backs Police Right To Organize

Muskegon, Mich.—A Michigan judge has struck down a city ordinance forbidding Muskegon policemen from belonging to a union. Most of the city's police officers are members of the State, County & Municipal Employes.

Circuit Judge Noel P. Fox held that policemen have a constitutional right to organize and to affiliate with a union of public employes. He said also:

"It is a contradiction in terms to say to a police officer: 'You are mature enough to discharge the responsibilties of a police officer, but you are too immature to form an association with your fellow governmental employes for the purpose of protecting and securing the essential decencies of a livelihood.' "

Declaring that policemen may join a union made up of other government employes—although not a union admitting non-governmental workers to membership—Fox said that "to limit the police officer's associational right simply to members of his own department is to reduce the right to petition to redress grievances to impotency."

The city has indicated that the decision will be appealed to the Michigan Supreme Court, which in 1947 ruled in a similar case that a city has the right to prohibit its policemen from belonging to unions.

Local 201, which represents the Muskegon policemen, is hopeful that the present court will take a different position.

Texas Labor Hits Insurance Firms

Austin, Tex. — The executive board of the State AFL-CIO, citing subterfuges by some insurance companies to avoid paying the losses of certain victims of Hurricane Carla, has urged state and federal officials to continue pressing for remedial legislation.

The board said hurricane losses exceeded $500 million, and commended Gov. Price Daniel (D), Sen. Ralph Yarborough (D) and members of the Texas House of Representatives and the Texas Board of Insurance for seeking to force contract compliance.

In a resolution of tribute to the late House Speaker Sam Rayburn (D-Tex.), the board urged Texas labor to raise funds for the Sam Rayburn Memorial Library at Bonham, Tex., and to work for a federally-sponsored "crash" research program into the causes of cancer,

Subsidy Laws Revision Asked:

Tax Havens Rapped By Maritime Trades

Miami Beach—A militant convention of the AFL-CIO Maritime Trades Dept. filed fresh attacks on the runaway-flag practices of American oil and metal companies owning shipping subsidiaries, and called on Congress to enact Pres. Kennedy's program to end present "tax havens" for such runaways.

The convention also endorsed a broad revision of existing ship subsidy laws governing construction and operation of American flag vessels to apply such subsidies on an industrywide basis.

Largest Convention

The largest convention in the department's history, numbering about 110 delegates from 29 national and international affiliates, also heard:

● Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg announce that he would soon recommend to Pres. Kennedy "more flexible machinery" than the present Taft-Hartley Act injunction procedure to meet situations involving "an impasse in collective bargaining in major industries."

● AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany hail the role of the U.S. trade union movement in building a worldwide brotherhood of free workers in unions and labor's role in supporting a U.S. foreign policy devoted to the defense of freedom.

● Maritime Trades Dept. Pres. Paul Hall report the department's role in recommending a new American transport policy and pledge a vigorous fight to salvage the industry and its workers from their present "critical" plight.

The "plight" of the industry was described in the officers' report submitted by Hall, Executive Sec.-Treas. Peter M. McGavin and Vice Pres. Jack McDonald.

In the 16 years since the end of World War II, the delegates were told, "practically all" our merchant marine has "disappeared" from domestic coastal and intercoastal trade. U.S. shipping is carrying only about 10 percent of our foreign commerce, they declared, and our shipbuilding capacity "has dwindled in proportion."

The "cancer that is destroying" the U.S. shipping industry is the U.S. ship whose registration is transferred to a foreign flag, thus escaping American taxation and American wages and safety provisions, the report said.

"Four-fifths of the qualified and documented American seamen" are now unemployed in the industry, it continued.

Goldberg told the sea and shipbuilding industry delegates that Kennedy had "no choice" earlier this year beyond invoking the Taft-Hartley injunction provisions to ward off a maritime strike that would "let the economy deteriorate."

The situation demonstrated "the inadequacy of Taft-Hartley" for dealing with national emergency industrial disputes, Goldberg said.

The President has already asked improvements in the law, the secretary said, and he must be provided "a wide range of alternatives" because the bargaining situation in each industry "must be viewed on its own merits."

Meany, discussing the long history of American labor in promoting a foreign policy devoted to total freedom, told the convention that our trade union movement has always warned against dictatorships "no matter under what banner."

Trade union freedom "is indivisible," Meany told the delegates, and "we know that the freedom of workers anywhere in the world is threatened by the loss of freedom by workers anywhere else."

No type of government except a democracy such as ours, he said, can allow the instrumentality of a free trade union movement.

"No dictatorship of whatever color can afford to allow a free union movement," he added.

That is why the U.S. union movement spends its funds to support a training school for English-speaking African workers in Uganda, he pointed out. It is why the AFL-CIO is developing a program to bring Latin American workers to this country to learn how to run free trade unions and protect their worker organizations from coming under dictatorships.

"We expect no dues-payers," the AFL-CIO President said, from these programs and from others supported in conjunction with the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions. "We are spending our money on the basis of humanitarianism, of brotherhood, to extend and preserve the freedoms" enjoyed by workers here.

Hall reported that the 29 national and international unions now affiliated with the Maritime Trades Dept. represent a 40 percent increase since the department's 1959 convention.

The convention voted an increase in the per capita dues of affiliates, from 2 cents to 3 cents per month per member, and also approved an increase in minimum monthly dues from affiliates to $50.

'To Build Loyalty':

Meany Spells Out Labor Press Goals

Miami Beach—The press of the trade union movement has a single major purpose—to build "understanding and loyalty among union members for the benefit of the entire union movement," AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany told the golden anniversary convention of the Intl. Labor Press Association here.

Labor editors, Meany declared, are "custodians" for the labor movement "of the newspapers they produce."

"They are custodians of the image of this movement of ours in the eyes of our members," he added.

There is no infringment in this doctrine of the concept of the freedom of the press, the federation president continued. It implies no desire "to conceal facts or to distort facts."

The labor press is free in the sense that it is "free from domination by commercial interests," he declared—the commercial interests working tirelessly "to blacken the image of the labor movement," the press for which readers are "an end in themselves" because the more readers, the more advertising, and "the more money it will make." Labor editors bear a different responsibility, he said.

"They have an obligation to see that the union membership gets the truth about the trade union movement, about its philosophy, its objectives, its achievements, and what it hopes to contribute to the preservation of the type of government making possible a trade union movement," he asserted.

In a three-day session devoted to both journalistic seminars and business sessions, the delegates also:

- Heard A. J. Liebling of the New Yorker magazine, author of articles and books on the press, discuss the "vacuum" left by daily newspapers today.
- Heard Agriculture Sec. Orville Freeman outline the inter-relationship of problems faced today by both the farmer and the urban worker and the plans begun by the Administration to use for the purposes of peace the vast abundance of our farms.
- Received reports from AFL-CIO staff representatives on problems in legislative, organizing and central body fields in the coming year.
- Distributed at the annual awards dinner the top awards voted outstanding publications by a committee of professional journalists outside the labor field.

A letter from Pres. Kennedy to ILPA Sec.-Treas. Bernard R. Mullady acknowledged the "crucial function" played by the labor press in helping inform the members of trade unions and stated that the strength and vitality of our whole society depend on keeping workers "informed and interested and active in their unions."

Mullady, editor of the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers' Newsletter, was elected president of the press association for a two-year term, succeeding Richard C. Howard, business manager of the railroad brotherhood's publication, Labor.

Elected secretary-treasurer was Kenneth Fiester, a member of the AFL-CIO public relations staff in Washington.

New vice presidents elected were Henry Santiestevan of UAW Solidarity, Detroit; Dean Ruth of the Machinist, Washington; Walt Davis of Retail Clerks Local 880 News and Views, Cleveland.

Pres. W. P. Kennedy of the Railroad Trainmen told the delegates that a "new approach" in labor press relations had been worked out in the current labor-management dispute in the work rules field, and that the results proved labor editors must expand their function.

The "featherbed" campaign of rail management, Kennedy said, "was forcing the issue to the hot fire of angry dispute" and "only the charges made the headlines." At this moment, he said, the rail labor press was called in to tell the true story—and the facts were furnished the labor movement.

"To interpret events in the light of your industry's terms is a task demanded by the very nature of labor communication," he said, and this is "where labor journalism can come of age."

Meany Urges Teachers To Choose AFL-CIO

Miami Beach—AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany has urged New York City's school teachers to vote for "the best kind" of union representation—"the AFL-CIO kind."

In a public message to the 45,000 teachers who began voting Dec. 6 in a mail referendum, Meany said that the AFL-CIO-affiliated United Federation of Teachers is "the only bonafide union in this contest."

Also competing for bargaining rights in the biggest white collar collective bargaining election in history are the Teachers Bargaining Organization, a coalition of so-called professional associations which have opposed collective bargaining in the past, and the Teachers Union, a splinter group expelled from the AFL-CIO American Federation of Teachers in 1941 after charges of Communist domination.

Meany told the teachers that as "a product of the New York school system" and as a native of the city, he has a "special concern" in the election.

"I want the New York teachers to have the best possible representation in collective bargaining, in processing their grievances and in all the other ways that employes normally deal with their employer," Meany declared.

He said representation by an AFL-CIO affiliate would give New York's teachers "the benefit of help from folks who have bargained with the biggest corporations in America"—For professionals as well as for production workers.

Meany pointed out that engineers, newspapermen, actors, singers and other professionals—including public employes — have benefited from union representation.

Each of these groups, he emphasized, "having decided to bargain collectively, has done so through an AFL-CIO union."

"Not," Meany pointed out, "through a well-meaning 'professional' society," but by following the doctrine that "if you're going to bargain, if you need to bargain, you ought to do it right."

Deadline for receipt of ballots by the Honest Ballot Association, which is conducting the election, is Dec. 13.

TOP AWARDS for general editorial excellence among international labor publications went to Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers and to Retail, Wholesale & Department Store Union editors. 20 Union Publications Win Top ILPA Honors

Miami Beach—Twenty union publications won top honors in the annual competition of the Intl. Labor Press Association, three of the publications scoring first prizes in more than one division. The judges were headed by Joseph A. Loftus of the New York Times Washington Bureau, first recipient of the Louis Stark Memorial Fellowship at Harvard University. Others were Nieman Fellows from the press currently holding fellowships at Harvard. Awards were made at a dinner in connection with the ILPA convention here.

Six publications were named for first place awards in the category of general editorial excellence.

Among newspapers, these were the Record, published by the Retail, Wholesale & Department Store Union, for international publications; the Oregon Labor Press, in the central body publications field, and the newspaper from the Homestead, Pa., Steelworkers, the Sentinel of Local 1397, in the local union area.

Among publications with a magazine format, top award for editorial excellence among the international publications went to the Electrical Workers Journal, published by the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers. Information, published by the Steelworkers' Education Dept. in Toronto, Ont., won the award for central body publications. For local publications, the winner was Hotel & Club Voice, issued by Local 6, Hotel & Restaurant Workers, New York City.

Among international union publications, these were the top awards:

The Machinist, among newspapers, and the Railway Carmen's Journal among magazines, for the best front page.

The Seafarers Log for the best single editorial of the year. The Guild Reporter, organ of the Newspaper Guild, for the best original cartoon and for the best regular special column, Dateline Washington, written by Willard Shelton.

Solidarity, published by the Auto Workers, for the two best feature articles.

Central Body Publications

Among central body publications, the Oregon Labor Press won top awards for the best single editorial and best original cartoon in addition to its award for general excellence.

The Building Tradesman of Detroit won the award for the best front page among newspapers, and San Francisco Labor for the best front page among magazines.

ILPA Cites Staff Of AFL-CIO News

Miami Beach—The AFL-CIO News and its staff were given a citation here by the Intl. Labor Press Association for the weekly News and for the parallel news service sent three times a week to hundreds of labor papers throughout the United States and Canada.

The citation, voted by the ILPA executive council, cited the News and the news service for "exceptionally meritorious service," saying they are of "invaluable assistance to all labor papers in presenting their readers a full and documented report on the labor movement and events of major importance to it."

Presented by ILPA Pres. Richard C. Howard, the citation was accepted by Saul Miller, AFL-CIO director of publications, and Willard Shelton, managing editor of the News.

Awards otherwise went to the Chicago Federation News for the best feature article; to the Tacoma, Wash., Labor Advocate for the best community project; to the Toledo Union Journal for the best regular column, written by Richard T. Gosser.

Among local union magazines, Hotel & Club Voice of Local 6, New York, in addition to its citation for general excellence, won awards for the best front page and for three feature stories.

The paper of the Retail Clerks, Los Angeles—the Voice of 770—won first award for the best front page among newspapers. Other local publication winners were:

Cyclone, published by UAW Local 669, Paterson, N. J., for the best single editorial; Equity, published by Actors Equity of New York, for the first and second best original cartoons; dining room employe, published by Hotel & Restaurant Local 1, New York, for the regular column by E. Sarni Zucca.

Utilities Ask $100 Million in Price Rigging

New York—Suits for treble damages of $100 million and up have been filed against 21 electrical equipment manufacturers by 44 privately-owned utilities which alleged they had been overcharged because of price-rigging.

The suits, filed in U.S. District Court here, named the General Electric Co., Westinghouse, Allis-Chalmers, McGraw Edison Co. and 17 other defendants.

The complainant companies represent about a sixth of U.S. electric power companies. They charge they were forced to pay higher prices for generators and other equipment because the manufacturers divided up territories and "rigged" prices. GE and Westinghouse replied that they had "given fair value" and would vigorously defend themselves in court.

All the defendant companies were among the 29 manufacturers and 45 executives fined $1.9 million in Philadelphia Federal Court last February when seven jail terms also were imposed for price-fixing.

The suits filed here alleged that price-fixing conspiracies started as early as 1948 and continued to various dates last year. One of the suits involved the sale of 96 turbo-generators to 32 of the complaining utilities by GE, Westinghouse and Allis-Chalmers.

The suit, typical of the 11 others, charged the companies with holding secret meetings, agreeing on bids, and carrying out agreed-upon price increases while creating the "semblance of competitive bidding and pricing" to deceive the buyers.

Other suits have been filed against the companies by the Tennessee Valley Authority and a dozen other federal agencies; by New York state, and by other utilities and electric cooperatives.

Council Cites Relations With Church Bodies

Miami Beach—The labor movement has "real ethical and religious significance," the AFL-CIO Executive Council asserted in detailing the trade unions' relations with the churches since the 1959 San Francisco convention.

This significance, the council explained, is based on labor's "long record of developing industrial democracy and brotherhood and of raising the standard of living for millions of Americans through collective bargaining with management for living wages, the reduction of the hours of labor, the securing of safe and healthy working conditions, and the establishment of labor-management arbitration agreements."

The council reported that during the past two years, Charles C. Webber, AFL-CIO representative for religious relations and a member of the General Board of the National Council of Churches of Christ in the U.S.A., has addressed more than 100 meetings of labor or religious groups.

The Office of Religious Relations works closely, the council said, with the Religion & Labor Council of America; participates in workshops aimed at promoting mutual understanding between labor and the churches, and has been active in lining up church opposition to so-called "right-to-work" laws and church support for legislation legalizing the right to organize for migratory farm workers.

SEVENTY BUILDING TRADESMEN gave 600 hours of work and employers donated material for a major face-lifting of educational television station KVIE in Sacramento. The picture shows some of the volunteers—union painters from Local 487, carpenters from Locals 586 and 2170, and laborers from Local 185—on the job at the community-owned station. All the unions are affiliates of the Building & Construction Trades Council of Sacramento & Yolo Counties.

Strike-Lockout Enters 3rd Year; Portland Reporter Staff Firm

Portland, Ore.—Striking and locked-out newspaper workers here entered the third year of their dispute with the Oregonian and the Journal with renewed determination to make a success of their own publishing venture, the Portland Reporter.

The Reporter, which started as a strike weekly and was transformed last February into a commercial daily, is gaining reader and advertiser acceptance slowly but steadily, reports Managing Editor J. Lynn Wykoff. Average net paid circulation for the quarter ending Sept. 30 was 52,734, he said, and advertising volume during the period was nearly 9 percent above the first quarter's operations.

The paper still needs a major break-through in advertising to go "into the black," Wykoff said. A number of the city's leading merchants have joined the list of regular advertisers, but several of the large volume accounts have avoided the new daily, he observed.

The Reporter is all that keeps Portland from a local newspaper monopoly. On the second anniversary of the strike, which began as a Stereotypers' walkout Nov. 10, 1959, Chain Publisher S. I. Newhouse completed his takeover of the evening Journal, once an independent and formidable rival for his morning Oregonian, by integrating production of the two dailies in the Oregonian plant.

Newhouse bought the Journal in August for a reported $8 million, thus achieving what local union leaders had charged was his main goal in the strike. Advertising and circulation of both papers had dropped sharply as a result of a boycott campaign pressed by the strikers.

As evidence that management had deliberately provoked the dispute, union leaders here cite the arrival of strikebreakers from all parts of the country immediately after the Stereotypers walked out over the publishers' demands for a longer workweek, no increase in pay and reduced manning. The strikebreakers replaced not only the Stereotypers, but members of the Typographical Union, ITU Mailers, Pressmen and Photo Engravers. These unions, plus the Newspaper Guild, subsequently took direct strike action themselves or declared a lockout in existence.

With use of the strikebreakers, the Oregonian and the Journal managed to publish, first as a single hybrid paper and later separately.

In an effort to turn the weekly Reporter into an effective strike weapon as a daily, the entire Portland labor movement rallied to provide financial backing. Eighty local unions formed a development company, purchased a building and remodeled it into a modern newspaper plant which it leased at a nominal fee to the Reporter Corp.

The ITU provided the press and printing equipment, and the Stereotypers, Photo Engravers and ITU Mailers came up with the equipment used by their members, all of which also was leased to the fledgling daily. Most of the Reporter's 250 employes have been working for strike benefits.

The paper is being financed through public sale of stock at $10 a share. Some 7,500 individuals now own stock in amounts ranging from $10 to $5,000, Wykoff said.

Another by-product of the strike was the Presidents' Committee of Allied Printing & Related Trades, formed by the heads of international unions involved in the dispute to coordinate their strike efforts and simultaneously to pursue some form of organic unity among the organizations.

Pres. Wilfrid T. Connell of the Photo Engravers heads the Presidents' Committee, and William J. Farson, ANG executive vice president, is secretary. Other founding members include ITU Pres. Elmer Brown, Pres. Anthony J. DeAndrade of the Pressmen and Pres. James H. Sampson of the Stereotypers.

One major project of the committee has been its campaign for state legislation to outlaw professional strikebreakers and their agents. The drive, with AFL-CIO backing, has been directed largely through state AFL-CIO bodies. So far it has won enactment of legal curbs against strikebreaking in Massachusetts, New Jersey, Maryland, Washington and Delaware. A similar statute has been in force in Pennsylvania since 1939.

ITU Turns City into Graphic Arts Center

Colorado Springs—Construction is proceeding rapidly here on a $2.5 million building program which will give the Typographical Union a new ITU training center and a new headquarters building.

Pres. Elmer Brown said the training center is nearly completed and will be in operation next fall, when ITU headquarters will be moved here from Indianapolis. Meanwhile temporary quarters have been set up in the building for the executive officers, but the office of Sec.-Treas. William R. Cloud will not be moved until the new administration building is completed.

Brown said this city, the site of the Union Printers' Home for 70 years, is undergoing a transformation that will make it "the graphic arts center of the world."

The change of headquarters will bring 75 new families to Colorado Springs. Up to 75 other local persons will be employed, and several thousand ITU members and industry representatives will visit the city every year, according to the ITU head.

The new training center will be 2.5 times as large as the Indianapolis building, and will have new classroom facilities and equipment including a new Color King web-fed offset press, a Linofilm system, two Fotosetters, two Linotypes, and a variety of cameras, printing presses and research facilities.

The new administration building will get new electronic data processing and record-keeping machines to service members in ITU's 800 local unions.

NLRB Reopens Probe:

Bribery Story Halts Hotel Injunction Bid

Monticello, N. Y.—A waiter's testimony that he was paid $600 to sabotage union organizing attempts at a Catskills resort hotel has halted, at least temporarily, a court hearing on an injunction against union picketing.

U.S. District Judge Charles M. Metzner was presiding at the hearing in New York Federal Court when the waiter, Larry Slofsky, told a story of alleged bribery, shooting and an attempted "frameup" by a hotel guard.

The National Labor Relations Board, through its Buffalo regional office, asked the court to postpone a decision until it has investigated Slofsky's charges that:

- He started to help Local 343, Hotel & Restaurant Employes, in an organizing drive at the Pines last summer when hotel management threatened to fire him and "blackball" him at other Catskills resorts.
- As a result of the threats, he agreed to tell hotel management what happened at union meetings and to turn over signed membership cards.
- Slofsky was an "undercover" man for the hotel management until Oct. 29, when he "purged" himself in a confession before union Sec.-Treas. Philip Kazansky. The union then permitted Slofsky to rejoin the picket line which has called public attention to the dispute since Sept. 7.

The NLRB regional office had refused to credit the union's complaint that the hotel had discharged 18 to 20 employes for union activities. Instead it acted on management's charge that the union was picketing to force recognition, and issued the complaint on which Judge Metzner will rule later.

After Slofsky testified, the NLRB agreed to reopen its investigation and asked the judge to postpone a ruling. The hotel management denied Slofsky's charges, saying they would be "rebutted at the proper time."

Fired With Others

Slofsky said he had been given $600 in four or five separate payments by hotel representatives. He had worked about two years for the hotel, which is 85 miles from New York City, but was fired after Labor Day with other union supporters "to make it look good," he said.

Kazansky has charged that, when he walked onto the hotel grounds last Aug. 12 to carry on his organizing attempts, a hotel guard fired two revolver shots, which missed Kazansky and another union member. The guard then "planted" some keys on Kazansky's companion and called South Fallsburg police, saying they were "burglar tools." Police refused to act without a magistrate's order.

Kazansky has filed suit for $100,000 damages as a result of the incident, and has asked the NLRB to order the reinstatement of all fired employes.

Los Angeles Labor In Voting Drive

Los Angeles—Unions in the Los Angeles area have launched a major registration campaign aimed at ensuring a heavy labor turnout in the 1962 gubernatorial and congressional elections.

The county COPE organization has urged each local union to have a registrar available in union offices and union meetings and to encourage members to qualify as deputy registrars so that they can enroll voters at plants, meetings, supermarkets and in door-to-door registration drives.

Former Vice Pres. Richard M. Nixon has announced he will seek the Republican nomination for governor although at present he faces primary opposition from former Gov. Goodwin J. (Goody) Knight. Democrat Edmund G. (Pat) Brown, who beat former Republican Sen. William F. Knowland by more than 1 million votes in 1958, is expected to seek re-election.

W. J. Bassett, treasurer of the Los Angeles AFL-CIO Council on Political Education, has informed members that Nixon supporters are mobilizing a "huge" registration drive in so-called "silk-stocking districts" in the state.

Yale & Towne Strikers Win JLC Support

Philadelphia—The Jewish Labor Committee, in a letter to religious, civic, and community organizations, has called for "moral and financial support" of Machinists who are in the fourth month of a strike against the Yale & Towne Co.

Chairman Joseph B. Meranze said food and funds are needed for the striking workers, and urged all interested groups to write the company urging good faith bargaining and calling on Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg to lend his services in bringing about "early and equitable settlement."

"Boulwarism techniques have been introduced," said Meranze, "in an attempt to destroy the unions. There is a complete breakdown of the collective bargaining process" by the company.

Members of IAM Local 1717 struck last Aug. 31 after months of fruitless negotiations. They charged the company official in charge, former General Electric Vice Pres. Paul Hartig, had followed the bargaining policy attributed to Lemuel Boulware, in his dealings with unions at GE, by refusing to engage in give-and-take bargaining and by demanding elimination or change in 35 of 37 union contract clauses.

These and other company policies, the committee said, "threaten the peace and welfare of the community."

Strike Time Drops Sharply in October

Both the number of workers involved in October strikes and the mandays of idleness dropped substantially from high September levels, the Labor Dept's Bureau of Labor Statistics has reported. More than two-fifths of the October idleness was due to Auto Workers' strikes at Ford Motor plants.

Some 300 stoppages in October and 210 continuing from September involved 277,000 workers who lost 2.38 million mandays, or 0.23 percent of total working time, BLS reported. The ratio for September was 0.35 percent.

The 10-month total for 1961 accounted for 0.16 percent of working time, equaling the low postwar level reached in 1957.

Executive Order to Follow:

Kennedy Recognizes Right Of U. S. Workers to Organize

Pres. Kennedy has approved a task force report recognizing the right of federal employes to organize and expressing the "affirmative willingness" of government to deal with federal employe unions.

Kennedy said he would issue an executive order by the end of the year to put into effect the governmentwide policy proposed by the cabinet-level task force, which was headed by Sec. of Labor Arthur J. Goldberg.

The voluntary check-off of union dues is the only task force proposal requiring legislative action.

In releasing the task force report, Kennedy said its recommendations "will provide an effective system" for improving relations between the federal government and its 2.3 million civilian workers.

The federal service is about one-third organized. The task force said its studies showed some 762,000 employes in unions. Of this total, 490,000 are in the Post Office Dept., which is 84 percent unionized. The largest federal employe union, the 150,000-member Letter Carriers, dates from the late 19th century.

Previously there had been no set federal policy, with agency heads deciding on recognizing and dealing with unions.

The task force unanimously made these main recommendations for federal policy:

- On basic principles, "federal employes have the right to join bona fide employe organizations. This right encompasses the right to refrain from joining. Wherever any considerable number of employes have organized for the purpose of collective dealing, the attitude of the government should be that of an affirmative willingness to enter such relations."

- On conditions, only unions will be recognized "which are free of restrictions or practices denying membership because of race, color, creed or national origin, which are free of all corrupt influences and do not assert the right to strike or advocate the overthrow of the government of the United States

- On forms, recognition may be "informal, formal or exclusive."

"Informal recognition" would give an organization the right to be heard, but put the agency under no obligation to seek its views. "Formal recognition" would be granted any group with 10 percent of the employes in a unit or activity of an agency; this would give the organization the right to be consulted.

"Exclusive recognition" would be granted any organization chosen by a majority of the employes in a unit. This would give the union the right to enter "collective negotiations" with management officials in seeking agreements "applicable to all employes of the unit."

- On union membership, "the union shop and the closed shop are inappropriate to the federal service."

- On grievances, unions should have "a recognized role." "Advisory arbitration" may be provided by agreement between an agency and a union granted exclusive recognition.

- On appeals, "a more uniform system of appeals of adverse actions should be established by government agencies. Veterans and nonveterans should have identical rights to appeal adverse actions to the Civil Service Commission."

- On the scope of consultation and negotiations, the union and agency will deal with working conditions and personnel policies and practices. Congressional authority concerning wage levels and other matters will not be interfered with nor will merit system principles.

- In the event of an impasse between management and unions granted exclusive recognition, solution should be "by other means than arbitration" and on an agency by agency basis.

OREGON LABOR honored a friend of labor everywhere, Sen. Wayne L. Morse (D-Ore.), at a recent testimonial dinner in Portland. Highlight of the affair was presentation of horse bridle to the senator, a part-time breeder and horseman. At left is Rep. Gene Heiss of the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, the toastmaster.

Morse Hailed, Called 'Best Ally' of Workers

Portland, Ore.—The issue "that pales all others . . . is peace," Sen. Wayne Morse (D.-Ore.) declared here at a testimonial dinner in his honor.

Morse told some 1,200 labor and political leaders and other supporters that the United States must show the world it is united behind Pres. Kennedy's foreign policy, it must remain militarily strong and be ready to negotiate for peace.

By working closely with the United Nations, Morse continued, this generation may leave the world "a peaceful procedure for settling world disputes."

Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg, stranded in Indianapolis by airplane and weather troubles, taped a portion of his speech by telephone.

"The working man has no better ally than Wayne L. Morse," Goldberg declared. "We need him for a new term in Washington."

Morse, who is up for a fourth term next year, was described by Goldberg as "one of the great constitutional lawyers" of the nation and a liberal in the tradition of George W. Norris and Robert LaFollette.

Goldberg said Morse was instrumental in passage of the extended jobless pay program, the area redevelopment program, the expanded housing program and the improved wage-hour law which now covers millions more workers.

Morse also was credited with the success in the Senate of the manpower development and training and the aid to education bills.

Goldberg said Morse "never gives up when he believes he is on the right side." Morse described his audience, made up mainly of trade unionists, as a "treasure house of biased friends."

"They stand with you through thick and thin," he added.

Morse, who has served the people of his state for 17 years, said his "secret weapon" in politics is an enlightened constituency.

He stressed his record as a "constitutional liberal" and said there should be no conflict between human rights and property rights.

"I am fighting to protect the general welfare of the people of this country so that economic freedom of choice and political freedom of choice can survive," he declared.

He said he has made mistakes in the Senate and often changes his mind on issues under debate.

"I follow where the facts lead," he said. "I renew my pledge that I will always be true . . . It is in that spirit that I serve that great President of the United States, John F. Kennedy."

Morse commented that while domestic problems are important, "the issue that pales all others . . . is peace."

He rapped past U.S. policy toward Latin America and said this country should "export bread, not bullets."

"We should export economic freedom, out of which will grow political freedom," he asserted.

George Brown, director of the Oregon AFL-CIO Committee on Political Education, estimated the $25-a-plate testimonial had grossed some $40,000.

Rep. Al Ullman (D-Ore.) said the union-sponsored gathering had brought together "probably the largest political audience ever gathered in the state of Oregon."

Other dinner speakers included Oregon Labor Commissioner Norman O. Nilsen and Portland Mayor Terry D. Schrunk. Unable to attend were Sen. Maurine B. Neuberger (D-Ore.), who is recuperating from an operation and Rep. Edith Green (D-Ore.) who was confined with influenza.

Slash in Hours of Work Urged by Steelworkers

Pittsburgh—Weekly or annual hours of work in the steel industry "must be shortened in response to the changes wrought by technology and automation," the Steelworkers have declared.

The union, issuing a 15-page economic study entitled "Steelworkers and Automation," also called for a cooperative effort in the areas of government and collective bargaining to ease the impact of technological change.

"Social progress will not flow automatically from the introduction of automation," the study said. "Technology must be managed or controlled, in part by government and collective bargaining, to produce social advancement."

The USWA report said the manufacturing sector of the economy has shown "an alarming trend," with output increasing as employment declines. It continued:

"Part-time work is becoming a norm in industries like steel, auto, rubber, electrical machinery and others. Many towns and cities in our nation can scarcely distinguish their present level of economic distress from that which prevailed in the Great Depression of the 1930s. If we continue to drift, we may well saddle ourselves with a really permanent unemployment problem resembling in duration that of the 1930s."

In steel, the study said, the 40-hour week has been a "misnomer." It has been achieved in only four years since 1937; three of those years were during World War II and the other was in 1951, during the Korean conflict.

Thus, to achieve a 40-hour week and previous job levels "is a dream without a chance of fulfillment," the USWA declared, adding:

"We can, however, increase employment opportunities substantially if we take prompt steps to reduce hours of work."

The report said a 32-hour week in steel would have created 45,300 more jobs in 1958, 65,400 more jobs in 1959 and 56,600 more jobs in 1960. If the economy had been at full capacity during the past three years, a 32-hour week in steel would have put most jobless steelworkers back to work.

The study reviewed the government's responsibility under the Employment Act of 1946 and the role of collective bargaining in meeting technological unemployment.

Injunction Lifted, Unions Push Boycott

Sacramento—Broadcast workers, on strike for 14 months against KXTV, the Jock Whitney TV station here, resumed their "Do Not Patronize" campaign within an hour after U.S. District Court lifted an injunction against the strikers.

The campaign will be extended across the country until the strike is won, said the union members in locals of the Television & Radio Artists and the Broadcast Engineers & Technicians.

The injunction, issued Feb. 23 at the request of the National Labor Relations Board's regional director, prohibited AFTRA and NABET from doing or saying anything to promote a consumer boycott of the John Hay Whitney-owned station or its advertisers. The injunction was removed on petition of the NLRB general counsel because of recent rulings by the new board majority that handbilling of a secondary employer is protected by the "publicity" provisions of the labor laws.

KXTV has been operating with strikebreakers since union members walked out Sept. 26, 1960. The strike came after Whitney interests bought the station and offered contract proposals that would have taken away many previous benefits, the unions said.

RLEA Charges Denial Of Rights, Bolts Hearing

St. Paul, Minn.—The Railway Labor Executives' Association has withdrawn its legal counsel from current hearings into a merger proposal by three railroads after reading into the hearing record a charge that the Interstate Commerce Commission had denied it due process of law.

The RLEA statement by Atty. William G. Mahoney came as ICC Examiner Robert H. Murphy opened the second phase of a hearing into management's request to merge the Great Northern, Northern Pacific and Burlington railroads into a line which, RLEA said, would be the world's largest railroad.

The ICC previously had rejected requests by RLEA, other railroads and state utilities commissions that the hearing be postponed to Jan. 16, 1962, or later to give the opponents of unification time to study the voluminous documents and prepare to cross-examine witnesses.

Mahoney said the railroads involved had spent over three years to prepare their proposal, but the date set for cross-examination actually allowed him only two working days to prepare his case because of conflicting dates growing out of other merger hearings.

The RLEA views most seriously, it said, the ICC's refusal to allow it adequate time because the interests of no party to the proceeding will be more vitally affected than will be those of the "thousands of employes of these railroads whose very livelihoods are at stake." The association said it does not understand the need for haste.

Educator Trustee Of Retraining Fund

Bellingham, Wash.—Dr. Wilson Martindale Compton, retired president of Washington State University, has been named trustee of the Re-Education Fund set up under an agreement between the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers and Intl. Good Music, Inc., of Bellingham.

The fund will finance a program for retraining radio station employes who lose their jobs because of replacement by automated equipment manufactured by the firm. It is financed by contributions of 5 percent on sales of the company's equipment and program services. With money available for retraining under several federal acts, the total fund is expected to exceed $500,000.

Compton was chosen trustee under a provision of the contract that the post go to a person not associated with either union or company. He is former president of the Council for Financial Aid to Education and former director of the U.S. Information Agency.

The Convention Opens

"WE OF THE EXECUTIVE COUNCIL, while keenly aware of the perils and problems ahead, look with confidence to the ultimate triumph of our cause—a better life for Americans and for all mankind."

This was the theme as the fourth convention of the AFL-CIO opened, rather than the shrill newspaper headlines dedicated to exploiting the differences that naturally develop in the search for solutions to some of the complex problems facing the nation and the labor movement.

It is the theme of labor's responsibility to the nation, to the community, to the millions of unorganized workers who need and gain the protection secured by legislation initiated and fought for by trade unions.

It is the theme of a labor movement come of age, recognized by national, state and local governments as an important segment of the nation's economy and an important group of the nation's citizens.

It is the labor movement in America helping to create a truly international labor movement reaching from the tip of South America into Africa and Asia, a world trade union movement fighting for peace and freedom.

IT IS ALSO THE THEME that labor must stand in the forefront of the fight against tyranny in any form and produce the proof that democracy works, that the American system is not based solely on the cold, unfeeling totals on a profit sheet.

Yet as the AFL-CIO's fourth convention opened two days after the sixth anniversary of the merger of the two separate labor centers, a highly exaggerated version of differences within the federation on how best to handle internal disputes dominated pre-convention press, radio and television reports from Miami Beach. The how and why of difficulties in organizing the unorganized were woven into conflicting stories almost completely missing labor's concern with the population explosion and the resulting growth of the labor force at a time of job displacement and a sharp shift in the nature of employment.

There is also the almost morbid fascination of the mass media with the endless flow of words from the leadership of a union ousted from the AFL-CIO because this leadership could not measure up to the ethical standards of the federation.

IN THIS ATMOSPHERE the delegates to the AFL-CIO convention face the difficult task of carefully examining the problems facing the labor movement and shaping the programs and policies to meet these challenges of a new decade.

That these challenges will be met there can be no doubt, not as one looks back down the 80-year history of the modern labor movement in America. And they will be met in the context of a labor movement thoroughly aware of its role in American life and of its responsibility to the nation and to the free world.

The AFL-CIO will emerge from this convention strengthened in its efforts to win for workers and for all Americans an increasing measure of economic security, equality of opportunity and personal well-being. In advancing these goals it will strengthen the nation, which in the ultimate is the single goal of American trade unions.

Newburgh Approach Rejected:

Positive Rehabilitation Goals Stressed for Public Welfare

THERE IS A GREAT DEAL of hypocrisy surrounding the ultra-conservative cliques around the nation these days who have chosen welfare aid to needy people as one of their primary targets.

They abound in tears for the sums federal, state and local governments spend to help unfortunate people and berate the spending as "socialism."

On the other hand, these same people appear not the least concerned about the far greater sums which go to private business and industry in the form of outright subsidies, depreciation allowances and tax loopholes.

It would seem that when the government aids the people, particularly the people who are down and out, that is "socialism." But when billions of dollars are handed to business and industry, that is, somehow, an acceptable part of private enterprise.

Since the target of the ultra-conservatives is the millions of people who cannot find employment and have used up all available jobless benefits and so need relief, a closer examination of the relief program is in order.

The inference left by those who are now issuing the broadsides against welfare programs—the John Birchers, Barry Goldwaters and their ilk—is that these vast sums are going to "chiselers and loafers" who are parasites on society and use the money for cheap booze and the spawning of illegitimate children.

By far the most highly publicized incident concerning relief has been the Newburgh, N. Y., situation. Here the city manager, who instituted the program, used the words "chiselers and loafers."

Yet, when he put on a drive to "make work" for the city using all able-bodied men on relief, all he could find was one person—a native of Newburgh itself. That, plus the opposition to stringent cut-backs in relief by New York State, forced the city manager to ease up.

But while Newburgh may be having second thoughts—though this is publicly denied—the drive there set in motion a chain reaction of similar plans for cruel relief limitations in various localities throughout the nation.

Today there are more than seven million Americans on relief at an annual cost of about $4 billion. Obviously, it is a subject that cannot be taken lightly. Many persons, happily, are seeking an answer other than that provided by Newburgh.

Sec. of Health, Education and Welfare Abraham A. Ribicoff, speaking to the National Conference on Churches and Social Welfare, faced this problem squarely.

First, on the Newburgh approach, he said:

"Newburgh's oversimplified 'solution' to our welfare problems is unrealistic, heartless and self-defeating. It is a 'solution' made by the men who did not bother to learn the facts before they acted . . . The city manager set out his conclusions before getting the facts. When his facts were disproved, his crusade for welfare reform fizzled flat."

REJECTING THIS HEARTLESS approach, the Secretary said public welfare can be a constructive force in society.

"Public welfare must be more than a salvage operation," he said. "It must not be confined to picking up the debris from the wreckage of human lives. Its ever-growing emphasis should be on rehabilitation and prevention."

He said public welfare programs must be part of the attack on such problems as dependency, juvenile delinquency, family breakdown, illegitimacy, ill health and disability.

"Public welfare," Ribicoff added, "must have a positive goal: to move people off relief (thus greatly cutting costs in the long run) by renewing their spirit and creating economic and social opportunities for them. It must lead to useful, happy and independent lives for them. It must stress the integrity and preservation of the family unit."

He acknowledged that as long as unemployment levels are high the relief rolls will bulge. But he added: "Almost everyone wants to work. Almost everyone, that is, wants to do genuine work . . . Many families struggle desperately to get off relief rolls. They hunger for self-respect. They want to buy a refrigerator or a TV set without being asked where they got it. We need to give them their chance."

Ribicoff said that from California to New York, trained social workers are constructively counseling families, training and retraining workers, making them a healthy part of society. He will propose extensive Federal aid for such programs based on recommendations made by a group of 20 social welfare leaders which he set up.

This, it would seem, would approach the problem with compassion and understanding and with full comprehension of the facts—a sharp contrast to the merciless ax of Newburgh. (PAI)

Morgan Says:

Antics of Radical Right Recall Pre-Nazi Interlude in Germany

By Edward P. Morgan

(This column is excerpted from the nightly broadcasts of Edward P. Morgan, ABC commentator sponsored by the AFL-CIO. Listen to Morgan over the ABC network Monday through Friday at 7 p. m. EST.)

IN HIS SWEEPING and magnificent work, The Rise and Fall of the Third Reich, the best selling history of Nazi Germany which moves with the pace, excitement and tragedy, almost, of an epic novel, William L. Shirer states flatly that "the Germans imposed the Nazi tyranny on themselves." The Hohenzollern Empire, he writes, "had been built on the armed triumphs of Prussia, the German Republic on the defeat by the Allies after a great war. But the Third Reich owed nothing to the fortunes of war or to foreign influence. It was inaugurated in peacetime, and peacefully by the Germans themselves, out of both their weakness and their strengths."

Morgan

Still, as Shirer demonstrates earlier in the book, Hitler's sinister star rose out of a swamp of post-World War I frustration, isolation and deeply wounded national pride. The industrialists wanted their empires back, the generals longed to recapture the power and glory of Prussia and the people in general wanted identity with something besides defeat. Cleverly, ruthlessly making the moderate Social Democrats and their associates in the Weimar Republic the scapegoats by constantly smearing them as the "November criminals" for their alleged part in the 1918 armistice—and later the Versailles treaty settlement—Hitler told the country as a whole more or less what it wanted to hear.

Opposed to him at first, the generals began to accept his reassurances that he was not going to undermine them. "The political blindness of the German army officers, which was to prove so fatal to them in the end," Shirer observes, "had begun to grow and to show."

"The political ineptitude of the magnates of industry and finance was no less than that of the generals and led them to the mistaken belief that if they coughed up large enough sums for Hitler he would be beholden to them and, if he ever came to power, do their bidding."

Then, Shirer relates, "the month of September 1930 marked a turning point in the road that was leading the Germans inexorably toward the Third Reich. The surprising success of the Nazi Party in the national elections convinced not only millions of ordinary people but many leaders in business and in the Army that perhaps here was an upsurge that could not be stopped. They might not like the party's demogoguery and its vulgarity, but on the other hand it was arousing the old feelings of German patriotism and nationalism which had been so muted during the first 10 years of the republic. It promised to lead the German people away from communism, socialism, trade unionism and the futilities of democracy. Above all, it had caught fire throughout the Reich. It was a success."

The jerky, disjointed movements of the radical right in the United States are not a success; they have not caught fire and there is no clear and present danger from any incipient fuehrer poised in the right wing of the American political stage. Nevertheless, there are some vague parallels between the ferment of the present day political scene in the U.S. and that fateful, restless pre-Nazi interlude in Germany, parallels from which we should be able to draw some useful lessons.

THE NEW YORK TIMES reports a sharp swing to the right at a meeting of 300 leading California Republicans, a swing to which Richard M. Nixon, in his bid for the party's gubernatorial nomination, "made obeisance." The Times dispatch reported ample evidence at the state GOP conference "that the ultra-conservative juices were coursing strong." A few of our military officers have displayed something akin to political blindness and some magnates of industry and finance a political ineptitude by their interest in radical-reactionary movements which arouse a choking gorge of "patriotism" in passionate promises—to paraphrase William Shirer—to lead the American people away from communism, socialism, trade unionism and, indeed, even the futilities of democracy.

As the day-to-day uncertainties, complications and reversals continue to deny us the probability of any clear-cut "victories" in the forseeable future, national frustration is bound to rise and temptations will increase to buy pat, ready-made solutions to all sorts of internal and external problems. This is the main reason why the Kennedy Administration looks increasingly on the right-wing extremists as a political threat in 1962.

It would be folly to overlook that threat but it would be a foolish mistake as well to inflate it beyond its true importance. The unfunny shenanigans of the radical right must not distract us from the larger job of grappling with communism in the world arena. We have, unfortunately, to cope with both extremes.

The growing concern of thoughtful elements of the electorate about both may be an encouraging indication that we will refuse to be panicked by either.

Community Service Activities Win Firm Place in Union Programs

Miami Beach—Community Service activities are now the rule rather than the exception in the trade union movement, the AFL-CIO Executive Council said in its report to the 4th constitutional convention here.

"Labor's identification with the health and welfare of the total community has resulted in immeasurable benefits not only to all union members but to all citizens as well," the Executive Council asserted.

"The goal of a community which has become fully representative of all the people and fully responsive to the people's needs has not been reached, but long strides have been made in that direction.

"This progress reflects the conviction shared by most AFL-CIO affiliates that the union is more than a union, that it is, in fact, also a community organization, and that the union member is first and foremost a citizen of his community with all the rights and responsibilities of citizenship.

"The extension of union activities beyond the plant gates into the community as a whole is a dynamic expression of this point of view in more concrete terms."

Since the last convention, the council said, CSA has continued to promote and develop its continuing programs and also has initiated new programs.

In 1960 it established blood banking as a priority program. As part of this it reached a formal understanding with the American Red Cross including among the principles a pledge against the segregation of blood along racial lines.

Community Leadership Stressed

This year community leadership has been the priority program "in recognition of our need for greater skills, new techniques and more precise tools for community participation." Rehabilitation also has had priority this year, the work being an implementation of the labor program for rehabilitation adopted by the Executive Council in 1960.

Much work has been done since the last convention in developing relief programs for the unemployed, including adequate public assistance and surplus food programs, the council said, with CSA continuing to press at the same time for labor representation on the boards of community health and welfare agencies; mass anti-polio vaccinations; scholarships for students of social work; fluoridation of water supplies; community health education and establishment of a national health fund or federation for "one-shot" giving.

Other programs continued include aid for Cuban refugees, consumer counseling, and activities geared to integrating Americans from Puerto Rico into life on the mainland of the U.S.

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

THE AFL-CIO EXECUTIVE COUNCIL filed with the convention in Miami Beach a documented record of the Supreme Court's steady reversal of the line of labor law pushed and shoved persistently by the National Labor Relations Board as it was made up under the Eisenhower Administration. Is it not a remarkable thing that the court can be so clear and decisive in its reversals while public opinion, allegedly formed by political leadership and the press, was unaware that the reversals were inevitable?

It is a legend of some sanctity that the Supreme Court follows the election returns. It is a fact, far more soundly based, that the administrative agencies are controlled by the President's power of appointment.

Mr. Eisenhower's NLRB appointees demonstrated the potency of this formula until their decisions reached the point of final challenge.

A trick has been practiced ever since the Taft-Hartley Act was passed over Pres. Truman's veto in 1947. It was a trick devised in the desire to slash the effectiveness of unions in organization, bargaining and political activity without acknowledging the purpose.

Oddly enough, informed commentors seldom seemed to realize that the Wagner Labor Relations Act remained the law of the land —no matter what the amendments, quibbles and lamentations ossified into the Taft-Hartley amendments and the 1959 Landrum-Griffin amendments.

NO CONGRESS HAS BEEN willing to pass a law repealing the recognition by Sen. Wagner's law that workers have a right to self-organization, to self-choice, to effective promotion of what they deem their economic interests.

The struggle of the past years has been a twofold one. It has been legal and psychological.

The Labor Board of these years—made up of conservative Republicans, company lawyers and self-seeking Democrats who met the literal legal requirements for a bipartisan board put generally were believed to have voted for Eisenhower—handed down a line of decisions saying common union practices were frightful and that common anti-union employer practices were exactly what the statutes intended to legalize and protect.

Workers have paid a penalty from the psychological shock effects. It used to be said that passage of the Wagner Act in 1935 meant that "Pres. Roosevelt wants you to join your union." Passage of Taft-Hartley meant to a great many small-community judges that they could hand out anti-union injunctions with full approval of the late senator from Ohio.

It meant that anti-union employers were encouraged to string out legalistic delays in fighting recognition of workers' organizations. It produced in the White House, as well as in the White House appointees, a belief that the general welfare was somehow served if penalties and sanctions for social stress were applied strictly against workers alone.

The Supreme Court is now reversing the decisions. The assumption of the court is the natural one that, since Congress did not repeal the basic recognition of the right of workers to self-organization, it had no intent to do so.

SEN. STYLES BRIDGES, who died Nov. 26, had one of the finest minds in the Senate. He used it in behind-the-scenes operations to keep the Republican Party a captive of the Old Guard. GOP liberals had little chance for advancement to committee posts of influence and power under his dominion—although he first won election to the Senate in 1936 as a type of New Deal Republican.

It seems generally agreed that Sen. Leverett Saltonstall of Massachusetts, much respected by his colleagues and new chairman of the GOP Senate Conference, will succeed Bridges as chairman of the all-powerful Policy Committee.

Senate Republican liberals have been reduced during Bridges' regime to such a state that it is not certain whether they will put up a fight to name one of their own—such as Sen. John Sherman Cooper of Kentucky or Sen. George Aiken of Vermont—as Saltonstall's successor as head of the Republican Conference.

AGREEMENT ON LOAN of $64,000 to finance improvements and additions to worker-operated meat packing plant in Uruguay is signed in Washington by AFL-CIO Inter-American Rep. How to Buy:

Large Families Perplexed by High Food Costs, Modest Pay

By Sidney Margolius

LARGE FAMILIES are running into a real problem, how to feed these families on a workingman's modest pay. Sometimes the problem causes misunderstanding, with the husband urging that food bills be kept within limits that won't bankrupt the family, literally, and the wife trying to point out the genuine difficulties.

One woman writes that she doesn't know whether to laugh or cry about our earlier statement that a family is doing reasonably well if it can feed itself for $1.25 a day per person. With her nine, that much would mean a total of $78.75 a week. Since the average industrial worker earns about $92 a week, if he works all year, we share her indecision whether to laugh or cry. Shoppers surveys have found large families spending as much as 45 percent of income for foods, compared to the more usual 30 percent.

Another reader says her husband gives her $35 a week to buy food and soaps for six. She says it really takes $50, particularly because her children like to eat well. She used to spend $3-$4 a week just for fruit for them. She has two girls, 8 and 11, a boy of 12 and another 21. But her husband, with equal realism, points out that if they don't keep down their food bills they can't meet their other bills.

Here are figures from the U.S. Agriculture Department showing how you can estimate food costs for families of different sizes and ages. Note how costs jump as children get older:

WEEKLY FOOD COSTS

	Low-cost plan	Moderate-cost plan
Children:
Under 1	$3.00	$3.80
1-3	3.70	4.60
4-6	4.40	5.70
7-9	5.20	6.80
10-12	6.10	8.20
Girls, 13-15	6.40	8.70
16-19	6.50	8.70
Boys, 13-15	7.00	9.60
16-19	8.30	11.20
Women:
20-34	5.50	7.60
35-54	5.30	7.40
Men:
20-34	7.20	9.70
35-54	6.70	9.10

But there's more to the story. These costs hold only if there are four in the family. Larger families usually can eat for less per person than small families because they can buy in quantity, and have less waste and spoilage. Government home economists estimate that for a family of two, you need to add about 10 percent for each person; for a family of three, add 5; for a family of five, subtract 5 percent; for a family of six, subtract 10.

Thus, for the reader's family of six, she would have to go on a low-cost plan, which would cost $33.40, and leave her just $1.60 a week for cleaning supplies—which is a tight squeeze.

SOMETIMES FAMILIES trying to keep down food bills rely on bacon as their chief meat, which is a mistake. Bacon gives you less protein for your money than any other meat. In fact, nutritionists consider it a fat, not a meat.

The real answer is the economical use of "good" grade beef, usually the lowest-cost grade generally sold at retail, and stretching this beef with other high-protein foods. The best extender is non-fat milk powder.

Soup to Nonsense:

But Gosh, Jane, What's Wrong With a Rich Brigitte Bardot?

By Jane Goodsell

READING A MAGAZINE is like being sent to the principal's office. I know I'm in for a good, brisk lecture on how to improve myself.

Never before have there been so many articles telling me how to correct my faults: How to Develop Tact; How to Cure Scaly Elbows; How to Sit Down Gracefully; How to Improve Your Handwriting; How to Succeed; How to Accept Failure; How to Relax.

If they aren't telling me to stop doing something (Quit Worrying; Don't Overeat; Don't Slump Like That; Don't Be Afraid of Fear) they're urging me to start doing something: Knit Yourself a Coat; Investigate Your School's Dental Program; Raise Your Child's I.Q.; Learn to Cook the French Way; Start a Neighborhood Lost and Found; Try a New Sideswept Hairdo.

I realize that all those articles are written to help me, and I'm grateful. I know I'm not perfect. But I do wish the experts could agree on how I should go about making myself into a better person. I'm a born follower, and everyone is giving me a different set of directions. I hardly know which way to turn.

Should I follow the advice in the article telling me How to Control Your Temper? Or the one that cautions me Don't Be Afraid to Get Mad? Which diet should I follow? The Magic Hollywood Formula? Or the Seven Day Grapefruit and Sauerkraut Reducing Plan? Or should I forget them both and listen to the dietitian who asks: Why Not Bake a Chocolate Whipped Cream Delight for Dinner Tonight?

One afternoon I read an article purporting to be A Lesson in Love from Brigitte Bardot. The author accused me (the Modern American Woman) of being a cold, ambitious, over-aggressive type, who had a cash register instead of a heart, and who drove her husband to ulcers. The article urged me to become More Appealingly Feminine, to buy myself a chiffon peignoir and a bottle of sexy perfume.

BUT BEFORE I HAD TIME to put this new program into effect, I ran across another article titled: Common Stocks Are a Woman's Best Buy.

This article scolded me (the Modern American Woman) for failing to live up to my obligations as a family financial expert and for wasting money on frivolous fripperies (like chiffon peignoirs maybe?). The article stated flatly that I should be able to discuss price-earnings ratios and corporate dividends intelligently with my husband. It was an important part of my duty as a wife.

You can see why I'm so confused. What am I supposed to do? Douse myself with My Sin and curl up on my husband's lap for a nice, cozy session with The Wall Street Journal?

There's only one article that hasn't been written: How to Stop Reading Self-Improvement Articles.

Parley to Study Barriers In Path to Higher Learning

The AFL-CIO will sponsor, in cooperation with the American Association of Land Grant Colleges and State Universities, a national conference on equal opportunity for higher education. The sessions will be held Jan. 4 and 5 in Washington, D. C.

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany said the purpose of the conference "will be to consider what barriers limit the general availability of higher education and to propose methods of removing those barriers so as to guarantee equal opportunity to all children."

Principal speakers will include Michigan State University Pres. John R. Hannah; Russell Thackrey, executive secretary-treasurer of the Land Grant College Association; Pres. Samuel D. Proctor of North Carolina A & T College; John Stalnaker, head of the National Merit Scholarship Corp.; University of Minnesota Pres. O. Meredith Wilson and U.S. Commissioner of Education Sterling McMurrin.

Meany himself will address a dinner session.

Discussion leaders will include trade union officers who serve on the boards of trustees of colleges and universities.

$500 Million a Year:

Nutritional Quacks Milking the Public

A DISTURBING INCREASE in quackery involving false and misleading claims for a great variety of vitamins, minerals, and other food supplements has taken place in recent years.

As a result, millions of Americans are dosing themselves with nutritional nostrums of every description, the Food and Drug Administration reports.

Exploitation of this market is the most widespread and expensive form of medical quackery in the country today. It is estimated that this racket is costing 10 million Americans more than $500 million a year.

Vitamin and mineral food supplements may of course serve a useful purpose when for some special reason the diet requires this kind of supplement.

But when unknowing or unscrupulous promoters distort the facts and claim benefits against diseases or symptoms which are not caused by a dietary deficiency at all—the results can be tragic. People who have serious medical problems are being misled by these false claims to rely on products which do not help.

It is not true that the American food supply is deficient in vitamins, minerals and other essential nutrients. This is the "big lie" of nutrition quackery. It is the theme song of a persistent propaganda campaign to undermine public confidence in the nutritional adequacy of staple foods, and thereby to "soften up the market" for special dietary products, according to FDA.

THE TRUTH IS THAT the American food supply is unsurpassed throughout the world in both quantity and nutritional value. Farming and food processing industries have provided the American people with an ever-increasing variety of wholesale and nutritious foods.

Important staple foods such as flour, bread, milk, margarine, corn meal, and rice contain added vitamins and minerals under standards set by the Food and Drug Administration. The so-called "protective foods"—fruits, leafy vegetables, dairy products, etc.—have become widely used in the national diet. As a result of such developments, coupled with nutrition education in the schools, the once prevalent diet-deficiency diseases such as rickets and pellagra have virtually disappeared in America.

Persons in good health who eat a variety of foods have no need to worry about nutritional deficiencies. Foods, not pills, are the best sources of vitamins, minerals and other nutrients.

Beware of promoters who rush to cash in on new developments in medicine and science to get attention for their products and their exaggerated claims.

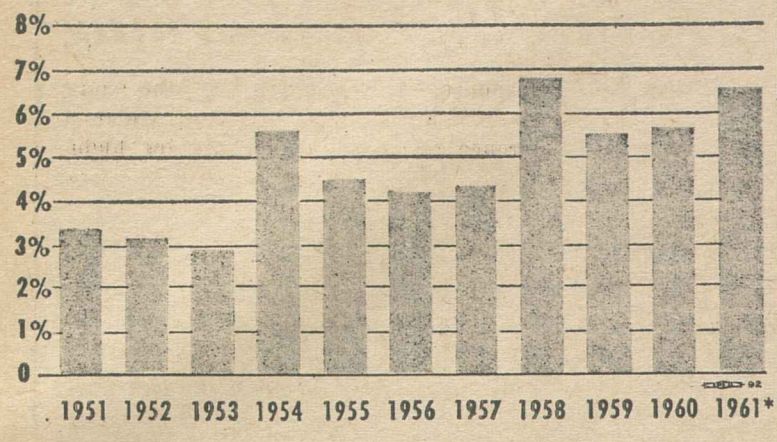
A good example is the attempted exploitation of legitimate medical research which seeks to determine the relationship, if any, between certain heart ailments and the kind of fats consumed in the diet. Much more research is needed on this question. But numerous promoters are taking advantage of incomplete research and are offering products which are claimed to protect against heart disease but which actually have not been proved of value for that purpose.

Similarly, the great public and scientific interest in the problems of aging has brought forth a rash of unwarranted claims for nostrums for older people. A recent example is the promotion of products containing so-called "royal jelly" for rejuvenation. Royal jelly is the special food prepared and given by worker bees to those whom they select to become queens.

For bees, royal jelly is indeed a miracle food, but it has no practical value for humans as a food, drug, or cosmetic. The claims made for it are groundless, says FDA.

Schemes such as these are often difficult to stop through enforcement action alone. To a large extent they can be thwarted only through widespread public understanding of the facts—so that prospective customers will recognize the false claims of self-styled food experts and promoters.

Steady Rise in Unemployment 1951-1961



*AFL-CIO estimate.
SOURCE: U.S. Dept. of Labor.

Expansionary Policies Urged to Spur Growth

Miami Beach—The federal government must develop "expansionary" policies "to carry the present upturn forward to sustained full employment and a rapid rate of economic growth," the AFL-CIO Executive Council told the federation convention here.

The council, in a report on the economic situation, set forth a wide range of policies which it said could bring a "rapid pickup" and help the economy "get off the rollercoaster of frequent recessions."

Reviewing the current economic picture, the report foresaw unemployment remaining at high levels in mid-1962. It said expansionary policies are needed to keep the economy moving upward past that point, since experience shows a slowdown sets in about a year after recovery from a recession.

The council proposed:

- A federal budget policy designed to stimulate rising sales, production and employment.
- A policy of monetary ease, with low interest rates on long-term loans, and an adequate money supply to encourage expanding economic activities.
- Measures aimed at eliminating long-term unemployment due to such factors as economically distressed communities and technological changes that make many old skills obsolete.
- Government estimates of needed changes in all major categories of economic activities to sustain full employment of our growing labor force, a maximum utilization of expanding plant and equipment and a rapid rate of economic growth. Such estimates for a year and for a longer-term period should serve as guidelines for private groups and governmental bodies.
- Rising real incomes to provide adequate family buying power in order to maintain growing mass consumer markets.

Obstacles to Full Recovery

The council saw several problems in the path of achieving full recovery from the recession and a sustained, rapid pace of growth.

"The pricing policies of a few key industries present such a problem and potential danger," the council said.

The price-fixing that occurred in the electrical industry is illegal and can be curtailed by "vigorous enforcement" of the anti-trust laws, the council observed, but another aspect is presented when companies follow the prices set by the dominant firm in a particular industry.

The council also cited steel and auto industry practices of low break-even points and administered prices as drags on economic growth. If prices are allowed to rise in such a controlled manner, the council noted, other price rises may be inspired throughout the economy and the pretext would be created for restrictive budget and monetary policies.

Administered-price formulas also pose the danger of providing a major incentive for high price levels and large profit margins instead of encouraging maximum production rates, the council said.

"To curb these potential dangers" from the pricing policies of giant firms in key industries, the council proposed a spotlight of public attention be turned on their cost-price-profit investment policies through federal agencies and congressional committees.

Recessions may still occur, the council warned, despite these proposed expansionary policies and despite the focus of public attention on pricing policies.

Therefore, the council added, the federal government should be armed with measures in advance to enable effective steps to be taken to minimize the impact and reduce the duration of recessions. The council listed such weapons as presidential discretion to reduce individual income taxes temporarily; a flexible public works program and federal standards on the level and duration of jobless pay benefits.

The council also proposed a series of actions to strengthen the balance of payments position of the U.S. and to strengthen world trade by lessening reliance on the U.S. as world banker through development of an international banking arrangement.

St. Louis—Henry F. Schmal, secretary-treasurer emeritus of the Photo Engravers and a member of the union since it was founded in 1904, died here after a protracted illness.

He served as secretary-treasurer from 1917 until his retirement in 1959, a period of 42 years that is believed to constitute a record for officers of international unions affiliated with the AFL-CIO.

Born in St. Louis in 1879, his apprenticeship as a photo engraver was interrupted by active service in Cuba during the Spanish-American War. He was president of St. Louis Photo Engravers Local 10 for six years and held other local positions before being elected international secretary-treasurer.

For many years he was a member of the board of governors of the Intl. Allied Printing Trades Association and in 1935 was fraternal delegate of the AFL-CIO to the convention of the British Trades Union Congress.

His wife died in 1925. Surviving are three sisters and a brother.

If Liberals Are to Increase:

Council Warns of Complacency In '62 Congressional Elections

Miami Beach—A "realistic appraisal" of the 1962 congressional elections indicates there is "no room for complacency" if liberals are to hold their present seats and increase their margin, the AFL-CIO Executive Council declared.

In its report to the 4th AFL-CIO convention here, the council noted that the party in power has lost congressional seats in every off-year election in this century except 1934.

The section on political activities emphasized that while the federation's Committee on Political Education is nonpartisan and supports "liberal candidates of both parties, it is a simple fact that many more Democrats than Republicans qualify for COPE support."

The success of liberal legislation in the immediate future, the report stressed, "will depend on the ability of Democrats to retain and extend their present margins."

Reviewing the events of the past two years, the report declared that "there are now more American trade unionists involved actively in political affairs than ever before in the history of the nation." But, it added, the job of broadening the base of the electorate is never-ending because of population shifts and a "mobile membership."

The 1960 elections, the report said, directed attention to four conclusions: the population shift to the suburbs and the growth of metropolitan areas, the increasing concentration of the minority vote in northern cities, the growth of the Republican Party in the south, and the new pattern in voting relating to presidential and congressional voting.

Exploring these four areas in detail, the report concluded that in 1962 COPE will carefully select the areas for concentration of its efforts, extend the successful registration and get-out-the-vote campaigns and expand its educational facilities on issues and the records of candidates.

Aid to Kennedy Cited

Referring to the 1960 registration campaign, the council report declared there is "general agreement" that Pres. Kennedy could not have won in the important industrial states which provided the bulk of his electoral vote without "the tremendous outpouring of new voters resulting from the AFL-CIO registration program."

In assessing the COPE record in the 1960 congressional and gubernatorial elections, the council report said that candidates given maximum assistance by state and local COPE organization won 15 of 19 senatorial elections, 14 of 19 gubernatorial contests and 157 of 258 House seats, or 73.3 percent.

In a review of the 1961 elections, the report commented that while "bossism" is an important issue it is not yet "a magic word" in the sense that "communism and corruption" were in the 1950s. The report noted also that candidates seeking to please both liberal and conservative groups proved unsuccessful while those who took straightaway positions were victorious.

By insisting that it is every American's right and duty to participate in the political process, "the American labor movement has changed the face of American politics," the report declared in looking to the future.

By insisting that campaigns be fought on issues instead of personalities or party loyalties, COPE "has directed a clear, bright light of publicity on the legislative process." By careful compilation and wide distributions of the records of public officials, the report added, COPE has helped the political performance match the promise.

The report pledged finally to "work unceasingly" to do "honor" to "our priceless heritage" of political freedom.

Insurance Firm Profits Cut Job Injury Benefits

Miami Beach—The AFL-CIO Executive Council has charged that state governments are allowing insurance carriers to profiteer from workmen's compensation programs at the expense of injured workers.

The council, in its report to AFL-CIO convention delegates, said only minor progress had been made in some state programs in the past two years and there was an increase in contested claims as insurance companies stepped up efforts to get more of each premium dollar.

"It is a tragic commentary," the council declared, "that after 50 years of workmen's compensation, state legislatures need to be told again and again that the purpose of workmen's compensation is to provide benefits to the injured workman rather than a livelihood for attorneys and profits for the insurance industry."

In a progress report, the council said all 50 state legislatures met in the past two years and only 16 improved their weekly benefit levels. The most significant advance of 1961, it added, was the increased allowance for medical care in many states.

The council said 44 state jurisdictions in effect delegate administration of compensation programs to private corporations. Only Nevada, North Dakota, Ohio, Oregon, Puerto Rico, Washington and Wyoming have exclusive funds for insuring this liability.

'Roughshod' Ride of Ike's NLRB Runs into High Court Reversals

Miami Beach—The Supreme Court has taken major steps toward overturning basic decisions of the National Labor Relations Board as it existed under former Pres. Eisenhower's appointees, the AFL-CIO Executive Council reported to the federation's convention here.

Eisenhower appointees "rode roughshod over elementary principles of evidence," the council charged. The result is that in the last two years unions have won 80 percent of major cases reaching the high court—"the greatest string of victories for the labor movement in recent history."

The council report stressed that many provisions of the two-year-old Landrum-Griffin Act have not yet been finally tested in court, but the act has already proved "costly and senseless" in many of its provisions and "burdensome for small unions."

So far as Landrum-Griffin reporting requirements for employers are concerned, the provision is "scarcely more than farcical," the council declared.

The report singled out Apr. 17, 1961, as "the most spectacular single day for unions" in the Supreme Court.

On that day, in four cases, the court "overturned the (former) labor board's Mountain Pacific doctrine on hiring halls, threw out its Brown-Olds mass reimbursement remedy and rejected its views on so-called foreman clauses and general laws clauses."

"It was inevitable," the council declared, that the Eisenhower labor board "would eventually receive its comeuppance at the hands of a fair-minded court."

Unions also won a major victory in two cases setting aside the NLRB's Curtis Brothers doctrine barring recognition picketing, the council noted.

Railway Case Recalled

The report described the railway union shop decision involving dues money expenditures for political purposes as a major case not arising out of an NLRB proceeding. The court, while avoiding ruling on a constitutional issue, set aside the original sweeping injunction of the Georgia courts which would have prevented enforcement of the union shop so long as any union funds were used for legislative or political purposes.

Unions lost one case in the court, the council noted, when the government's use of a Taft-Hartley injunction in the steel strike was upheld in November 1959.

Sharp criticism of portions of the Landrum-Griffin Act and its interpretation were contained in a section of the executive council report which declared:

- "Absurdities" in the election requirements "are causing large union expenditures . . . unrelated to the insuring of fair elections."

The requirement for mailing election notices to members at least 15 days before elections "has cost unions hundreds of thousands of dollars," the council said. Also hit as "costly and senseless" was the requirement for elaborate election procedure and notices even when an election is uncontested and no write-in votes are permitted.

- The act's requirement for "unfaithful discharge of duties" bonds "has cost 50 percent more than an honesty bond, without providing appreciably greater security."
- Among "the most nefarious" provisions of Landrum-Griffin are restrictions on organizational and recognition picketing.

The council noted that when this section was being considered by Congress "repeated assertions were made that it would not preclude picketing to protest an employer's unfair labor practices."

Despite these assurances, the council reported, the board has "thus far ruled" that such picketing is unlawful.

PENNSYLVANIA STATE EMPLOYES Council's 23rd annual convention heard addresses by James L. McDevitt, seated, director of the AFL-CIO Committee on Political Education, and Gordon Chapman, special assistant to the secretary of state and former secretary-treasurer of the council's parent union, the State, County & Municipal Employes. Right is Reuben H. Miller, who was re-elected to his sixth term as president of the state council at the Harrisburg convention.

Growth By Organizing Seen As Key to Future

Miami Beach—A "combined effort" of unions in the organizing field is required to meet a "break-the-union" objective among employers and to organize the unorganized, the Executive Council told the AFL-CIO convention here.

"Growth" is the key to the future of both the American labor movement and the American economy, the report said.

"No single union possesses the resources it needs to organize its field to the full," the council declared. To meet the challenge there must be an "intensive, coordinated effort, money and capable organizing personnel."

The council made this report to the convention in recommending a constitutional change creating a permanent standing committee on organization, to recommend programs and policies.

Under present circumstances, it is "all but impossible" for workers in some situations to form unions, the council said. Management uses an "ample supply" of professionals in union-breaking, and is aided by anti-union attitudes in some areas, by "local public officials" and by past "maladministration" by the National Labor Relations Board, the report stated.

Follows Subcommittee Study

The Executive Council report followed a study by a subcommittee including Vice Presidents Walter P. Reuther, L. M. Raftery and James A. Suffridge. The circumstances require "a more effective and adequate effort" in organization, the council declared.

The report also listed these activities:

Area organizing conferences have been held under the sponsorship of AFL-CIO regional directors and central bodies. As a consequence of 270 such meetings attended by more than 5,000 union leaders, many central bodies have reactivated dormant organizing committees and some major objectives have been won.

There has been increasing interest by workers in organization, the report said, and a steady annual increase in the filing of NLRB election petitions—from a quarterly average of 1,624 in 1958 to more than 2,400 in 1961.

In a 27-month period ending June 30, 1961, AFL-CIO unions took part in 9,957 NLRB representation elections and won 5,209 for a victory record of 52 percent involving bargaining rights for 378,000 workers.

The report said the use of violence against union representatives has occurred in at least eight states in recent years. The latest incident was in Ellijay, Ga., where two organizers for the Hosiery Workers were attacked by a knife-wielding mob and held incommunicado for 24 hours by Ellijay police on charges of "inciting to riot."

In the 28-month period ending Aug. 31, 1961, AFL-CIO organizing staff members provided more than 50,000 mandays of effort in organizing campaigns while an additional 1,800 were given to AFL-CIO departments and 21,000 to directly affiliated local unions and central bodies, the report said.

White Collar Potential

"There can be no doubt," the council told the convention, "that the American labor movement must reach deeper into white collar ranks if it is to continue to maintain its present influence and its present ability to bargain effectively.

"Money and manpower are indispensable ingredients for organizing. These must be forthcoming in greater supply if the organizing challenge of today is to be met."

Unless some "common sense, reasonable method" is adopted to resolve the question of organizing rivalry, the council stated, necessary organizing progress will not be made.

The report pointed out that the NLRB is probably the most important federal agency to organizing-minded unions. For the last eight years the labor law has been administered "in a manner inimical to trade union advance," the council said. With the appointment of a new chairman and another new member this year by Pres. Kennedy, the council said, "a halt to the glaring anti-union bias previously noted seems to have been made."

'A Major Force':

Council Cites AFL-CIO Drive Against Racial Discrimination

Miami Beach—Organized labor in the past two years has been "a major force" in the drive to wipe out racial discrimination practices—the last remaining "badges of human slavery" in this country—the AFL-CIO Executive Council declared in its report to the 1961 convention here.

Labor has geared its organizational machinery, the council noted, "to the task of rooting out all discrimination based on race, creed, color and national origin—in its own ranks, in employment, in schools, in housing, in public accommodations, in transportation and at the polls."

The AFL-CIO has directed its efforts, the council said, in two main directions:

- It has stepped up the pace of the civil rights drive in its own ranks through compliance procedures, area and regional conferences and through expanding civil rights machinery among AFL-CIO affiliates.
- It has helped mobilize public opinion and concerted community action in behalf of equal opportunity for all Americans through meetings, conferences, publications, films and radio and television programs.

Unfinished Business

Despite outstanding progress in several areas since the federation last convened in 1959, much remains to be done, the council observed.

It found encouraging signs in the calm, peaceful desegregation of schools this year in Atlanta, Dallas and Galveston and in the absence of incidents as integrated schools reopened in New Orleans.

"Yet these notable examples of progress stood out against the prevailing pattern of non-compliance with the Supreme Court's ruling in most of the southern states," the council found. "And even in Chicago more than 100 Negro pupils were denied admission to 11 schools with predominantly white enrollment and resorted to court action in an effort to gain acceptance."

Desegregation of public transportation facilities was advanced by the order of the Interstate Commerce Commission barring race discrimination on interstate buses and the terminals they use, the council recalled.

"The order was received in the South with calmness, but set off a new spate of litigation by those intent on resisting integration to the end," the report said.

The council termed 1961 "a record year" for the enactment of legislation to curb discrimination in housing, with 17 new laws put on the statute books in 10 states and three cities. The report added, however, that "housing still remains as much a restricted and segregated area as any in the whole civil rights field."

Quoting the findings of the U.S. Civil Rights Commission in September 1961 that Negroes in some 100 counties in eight southern states were denied voting rights "by discriminatory practices, by threats and by intimidation," the council declared.:

"Organized labor has insisted and will continue to insist on vigorous federal action to assure that there be full exercise of the franchise by all American citizens, without intimidation, restraint and coercion."

Kennedy Order a 'Landmark'

A landmark in progress toward a federal fair employment practices law, the report noted, was Pres. Kennedy's executive order last March establishing the President's Committee on Equal Opportunity. The council's report described the new committee's authority as more far-reaching than that of its predecessors and called special attention to the progress of its Subcommittee on Apprenticeship & Training, headed by AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany.

The council reviewed in detail the legislative history of the 1960 Civil Rights Act and the unsuccessful efforts of civil rights advocates this year to liberalize the Senate's "filibuster rule" requiring a two-thirds vote to cut off debate.

The Civil Rights Act, the council said, contained desirable but "only moderate" improvements.

"The obligation to pass strong and meaningful civil rights legislation remains a challenge for the Congress," the report declared.

The gains in labor's own civil rights program, the council said, must be considered "against this background of civil rights struggle against deep-seated obstacles and delaying action in the community at large."

Advancement of the AFL-CIO program since the 1959 convention, the council reported, has been marked by:

- Establishment of civil rights committees or administrative machinery by 24 national and international affiliates—an increase of 10—with 14 international unions reporting civil rights programs administered through their officers and staffs.

Sponsorship of civil rights committees and conferences by AFL-CIO state central bodies in 20 states, plus community-wide programs conducted by local central bodies in many cities and counties.

- Continued efforts of the AFL-CIO Southern Advisory Committee on Civil Rights, made up of executive officers of state bodies in 13 southern states, to help develop a practical program of furthering civil rights in the South.
- Establishment in 1960 of the AFL-CIO Midwestern Advisory Committee on Civil Rights, composed of representatives of central bodies in six midwestern states.
- Increasing use of trade union education programs to win recruits for labor's civil rights drive through conferences, summer schools and special seminars.
- Removal of the color bar from the constitution of the Railway Trainmen by a decisive vote of the union's convention in January 1960, pursuant to its commitment at the 1959 AFL-CIO convention. "The only remaining union with such a bar, the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen & Enginemen, which made a similar commitment, is to hold its next convention in July 1962," the report noted.
- Determined cooperation by national and international affiliates concerned with 9 out of every 10 complaints received by the AFL-CIO Civil Rights Committee, followed by firm steps to bring about full compliance with the federation's non-discriminatory policy.
- Financial aid, voted by the Executive Council and contributed by affiliates, which enabled some 400 Negro sharecroppers in Tennessee's Fayette and Haywood Counties to subsist in the face of an ecoonmic boycott against them because they had registered to vote.

Membership Report Lists 12.487 Million

Miami Beach—Per capita dues receipts of the AFL-CIO for the two years ending Sept. 30, 1961, indicated an average federation membership of 12.487 million, according to the report of the secretary-treasurer.

The report gives a breakdown of membership at each convention since the merger in 1955, excluding the organizations expelled from the federation in 1957 on grounds of corruption.

The totals, Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler said, were 12.305 million in 1955, 12.751 million in 1957, and 12.671 million in 1959.

Bargaining Gains Held Bulwark to Economy

Miami Beach—Despite major obstacles, collective bargaining won advances in wages and other benefits for workers during the past two years, the Executive Council reported to the AFL-CIO convention here.

"The rate of improvement unfortunately was restrained by unhealthy economic conditions," the council added, citing the 1960 economic decline and increased joblessness which followed an "incomplete recovery" from the 1958 recession.

The council said union bargaining gains proved "a valuable bulwark against dangerous pressures for wage limitation or cutback" in a period of economic decline.

The council presented these general features of bargaining situations which varied across the nation:

- The typical wage increase won through bargaining in 1960 and again in 1961 ranged from 8 to 12 cents an hour; on a percentage basis, from 3 to 5 percent.
- The majority of contracts were long-term rather than one-year pacts, generally for two or three years; they typically provided for annual wage hikes, either through reopeners or through "deferred" or "annual improvement increases."
- An obstacle in bargaining was "a huge industry propaganda campaign" to link union-won wage increases to inflation..
- An industry publicity campaign tried to brand unions as blocking efficiency through "work rules."
- In several industries, "noteworthy new experiments" were undertaken to have joint study committees work on problems away from bargaining pressures.
- Increased emphasis has been put on measures to ease the adverse impact of technological change.
- Unions continue to stress improvement of health and welfare benefit plans, with the steel and auto industry pacts shifting from a contributory to employer-paid basis.
- Progress continued in negotiating longer paid vacations and more paid holidays.
- Shorter workweeks received increased discussion as a way to maintain employment and meet technological change.

AFL-CIO Spirit, Purpose Found Firm

Council Hails Basic Strength Against Vast, Varied Pressures

decisions, national legislation, state legislation and reports of headquarters departments and the federation's trade and industrial departments.

Meany's report, in a summary of the political and economic developments of the last two years, found that on balance "it can be fairly said that in domestic affairs the country has begun to move forward again—not fast enough, not far enough, but at least in the right direction." Part of the credit, he declared, is due to the unity of the labor movement.

Some gains, he said, "have been made toward the permanent elimination of jurisdictional disputes" and he emphasized there are "no divisions" in the AFL-CIO on questions of sound trade union policy. The primary unresolved problem is organizing the unorganized, he said, noting that while the AFL-CIO has held its own numerically "we dare not close our eyes to the fact that our members are a smaller proportion of the total working population."

Meany singled out the "mounting belligerence of the Soviet Union" as creating a world crisis that even overshadows in importance the "problem of persistent unemployment in the United States."

Schnitzler's report showed a decline in the net worth of the federation of $171,061 to a total of $5,270,175, despite a special assessment voted by the council which added $733,483 to the federation's income.

He reported that as of June 30, 1961, on the basis of average per capita payments by all affiliates, the membership of the federation stood at 12,487,000, a decrease of 184,000 from the 1959 figure but 182,000 higher than the membership figure at the date of merger in December 1955.

The report's section on "The Labor Movement 1959-61" shows that all state and local mergers have been completed, that monitorships over two unions have been terminated since the last convention and that a permanent committee on organization has been created.

The council report for the first time contains a study of state and local central bodies indicating that about two-thirds of the total AFL-CIO membership is included in local unions affiliated with state bodies. The report urged full support from all affiliates to increase this proportion to strengthen AFL-CIO programs on all levels.

In the organizing area, the report shows that AFL-CIO unions won bargaining rights for 378,000 new workers during the 27-month period ending last June 30, winning 52 percent of National Labor Relations Board elections contested in that period.

It calls for a "common sense, reasonable method" to resolve the question of "organizing rivalry" in order that necessary organizing progress can be made, and centers attention on the problems of organizing white collar workers.

Growth Need Stressed

A detailed analysis of the state of the national economy points up sharply the need for economic growth and the persistence of a high level of unemployment. The report urged the government to convene an annual economic conference of leading representatives of the economy's major sectors to provide broad guidelines to sustain full employment and rapid growth.

A reliance solely on budget and monetary policies, the report said, would not reduce the rate of unemployment without broad legislative policies, and it held out the possibility of the need for a general reduction in the workweek with no cut in pay.

The report points out that the pricing policies of a few key industries present a potential danger to a full and sustained rate of economic growth.

The role of the AFL-CIO in meeting more directly the challenge of totalitarian communism is documented in the report and the federation's activities in aiding the developing countries of Africa is reviewed. The report deals also with the Communist take-over in Cuba under Fidel Castro and this threat to inter-American security.

This section of the report reviews also the policies of the AFL-CIO in seeking to advance the policy of gradual reduction of trade barriers among free world nations, with maximum benefit and minimum injury to workers.

A 22-page section on social security reviews federal and state legislative developments in old-age benefits, unemployment compensation, medical care, public assistance and workmen's compensation, as well as the labor movement's efforts to improve the organization of health services and expand the effectiveness of medical prepayment plans.

The crisis in education and the battle to secure federal legislation is detailed in the section of the report on "Worker and the Community." The council declares that the failure of Congress to act upon federal aid to education is a source of dismay considering the seriousness of the crisis from kindergarten to the graduate school level.

Progress in community services activities is recorded in the report, with special attention to the development of community leadership programs among labor unions.

The section on civil rights reports the AFL-CIO's endeavors and accomplishments since 1959, both in the legislative and community spheres and within the ranks of labor. In this area, the report says, the federation has "stepped up the pace" of its drive; a number of specific cases are described as examples of the "type of determined, day-to-day efforts carried on by the AFL-CIO to obtain full and lasting compliance with its civil rights policy.

The report declares that the labor movement may face new campaigns to enact so-called "right-to-work" laws in 1962 in at least nine states, indicating a renewed effort on the part of groups seeking to weaken and destroy the trade union movement.

In the area of labor law, the report details the administrative history of the Landrum-Griffin Act and the burdens it has imposed on the labor movement and reviews the recent string of union victories in the Supreme Court stemming from decisions by the NLRB in recent years.

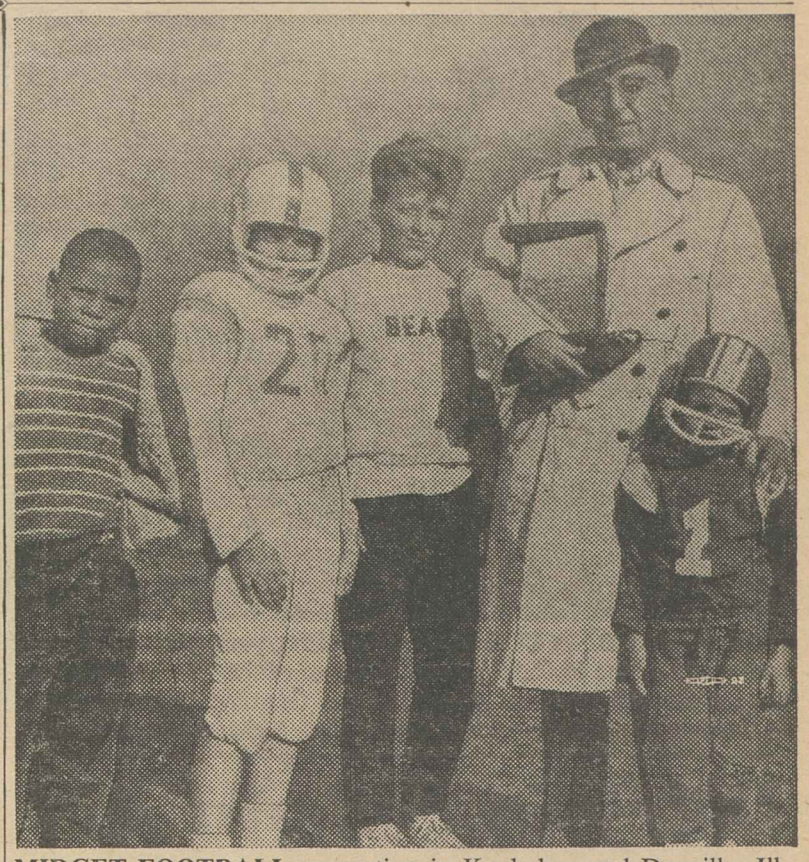
A comprehensive review of the AFL-CIO's work with Congress during the last two years is presented in a 55-page section on national legislation. The scope of the federation's legislative interests is indicated in the 59 areas covered and reveals labor's concern with broad social objectives.

Vote Drive Recalled

The section on political activities reviews labor's successful register-and-vote campaign in 1960 and pinpoints the areas that need further exploration and activity in planning for future campaigns. These include population shifts, the concentration of minority group votes in the North, the growth of the Republican Party in the South and the pattern of voting with regard to the presidency and Congress.

The 1961 elections are analyzed and the general outlook for the 1962 congressional elections is examined. The report stresses that new techniques are needed for communicating with union members and providing them with the tools and information to make mature political judgments.

The report concludes with sections on the activities of the federation's 13 headquarters departments and the constitutional trade and industrial union departments. The latter reports are compiled by the departments and are transmitted to the convention by the council "without approval or disapproval."



MIDGET FOOTBALL promotion in Kankakee and Danville, Ill., won this plaque from fans and players in the two cities for Willard (Bill) Widman, AFL-CIO traveling auditor. Widman, shown with some of his young friends, was a key figure in getting the game started in Kankakee and was active in the Danville program.

Limited Gains Found In State Legislation

Miami Beach—Only a handful of states have made significant progress during the past two years in the fields of labor, social and tax legislation.

The AFL-CIO Executive Council report lists only three increases in state minimum wages. Washington and Connecticut followed the pattern of the federal government and raised minimums to $1.25 in two steps. New York in 1960 adopted a $1 statutory minimum, with a provision for higher rates set by wage boards for various industries.

Laws curbing the use of professional strikebreakers—strongly pushed by printing trades and newspaper unions—were enacted in Delaware, Maryland, New Jersey and Washington.

Four states—Delaware, Idaho, Illinois and Missouri—enacted fair employment laws and Kansas strengthened an existing statute.

The council report noted that nearly all state legislatures were faced with the problem of raising additional revenue to meet continued rising costs.

"In most instances," the council reported, "this was done by increasing regressive levies—particularly sales taxes." The council added:

"In many states, however, the AFL-CIO . . . in cooperation with other groups blocked some of the regressive tax proposals and secured consideration of alternative methods of raising public revenues. For example, in West Virginia, largely due to the activity of the AFL-CIO, the legislature restored the progressive income tax which it had abandoned during World War II."

The council noted that last year "only 9 percent of all state and local tax revenue came from progressive income and corporate profits taxes related to ability to pay."

All sales taxes, said the report, "are insidiously regressive because the neediest are the prime victims.

Jobless Benefit Hikes Meager in Most States

Miami Beach—Although 19 states raised jobless benefits during the 1960-61 legislative years, most of the gains were "very modest" and were accompanied by higher eligibility requirements and stiffer disqualification penalties. Only four states extended duration of benefits.

This record, the AFL-CIO Executive Council reported to the federation's convention here, is significantly inferior to that of preceding years and bears out labor's warning that many states have reached a "saturation point at which they can no longer improve unemployment insurance without federal help."

The council noted that no state has yet met the AFL-CIO's goal of maximum benefits equal to two-thirds of average state wages, payable for up to 39 weeks of unemployment.

In an important departure from the "leave it to the states" philosophy of the Eisenhower Adminstration, Pres. Kennedy last June sent to Congress a proposal for minimum federal standards on amount of benefits, though not duration. However, up to 13 weeks of supplemental federal payments would be provided beginning with the 27th week of unemployment. Maximum benefits would be raised to two-thirds of the state's average wage and could not be denied a worker receiving retraining.

Although "not a perfect bill by AFL-CIO standards," the program asked would "help level out an erratic cycle of economic growth," the Executive Council noted.

Recession Stop-gap

The Executive Council noted that Congress turned to temporary extension of benefits as a stop-gap measure to relieve the hardships of the 1960-61 recession as it had done in 1958.

The 1961 law, however, avoided "an important flaw" of the earlier act by raising the tax on all employers to finance the extension. As a result, since it would not save employers in a state any money if the state refused to participate in the program, jobless workers in all 50 states benefited from the extension. In 1958, only a minority of states participated.

Overhaul Urged in U.S. Job Service

Miami Beach — "A thorough reorganization" of the U.S. Employment Service is needed to help bring about full employment and the retraining and relocation of displaced workers, the AFL-CIO Executive Council has declared.

Its report to the AFL-CIO convention here called for separation of the unemployment insurance system from the job-finding and counseling service "so that placement work is no longer subordinated to paying benefits."

In periods of crisis and rapid economic changes, the council noted, "there is no substitute for a national, centrally operated employment service."

19-Month Tugboat Dispute Settled

Pres. Kennedy has announced settlement of a 19-month-old dispute between the Masters, Mates & Pilots and the Reading Co. under which tugboat officers in the Philadelphia - Wilmington harbor area will get a wage increase of $3.40 a day.

Kennedy said an emergency board he appointed Oct. 11 to investigate the dispute has recommended that cost of living wage increases, accumulated since July 1, become part of the basic pay rates and that a moratorium on further increases be in effect until next Nov. 1.

The board, headed by Joseph Shister of Buffalo, said the agreement was worked out by the railroad, the union, and board members. Others on the board are Edward A. Lynch, Washington, and Lloyd H. Bailer, New York.

BOY SCOUT AND CUB SCOUT units for youngsters in the neighborhood of union headquarters are sponsored by the Philadelphia Joint Board of the Clothing Workers. The union was asked to take over the job through Business Agent Michael Genzano of Cotton Garments Local 170, who has been active in the scouting movement and who is shown above with some of the pioneer members.

Delay in Federal Aid to Schools Seen Damaging America's Future

Miami Beach—There have been few legislative failures "so damaging" to America's future as the refusal of Congress to take any substantial steps toward a program of federal aid for education, the AFL-CIO Executive Council charged in its convention report.

The country not only has an "educational crisis," the council asserted, "but despite the best efforts of the state and the communities to the contrary, the crisis gets worse each year rather than better."

The sharp jump in school age population — 10 million between 1951 and 1961—the startling classroom shortage, the failure of teachers' salaries and working conditions to hold competent men and women, school dropouts and the failure of thousands of qualified students to attend college because of the cost were cited to show the extent of the crisis.

The council pointed out that many more children of workers might receive college training through the spread of junior and community colleges. It also noted that "brainpower" sadly needed by the U.S. "is being as heedlessly wasted today as we once wasted our water and our forests" by the inability of many students to finance graduate work.

"Considering the growing seriousness of the educational crisis from kindergarten to graduate school," the Executive Council said, "the failure of Congress to act upon federal aid to education is a source of dismay.

Cannot Be Solved Locally

"Education in a national problem and it cannot be solved locally. Some states, having a higher per capita income, have more money to spend on education than others. Many of the states which spend the least on their schools actually lead the nation in the percentage of their income spent on education . . .

"It is apparent that inequalities in educational opportunity result not so much from lack of effort as from the inequality of income between the states.

"Federal aid would help level these differences between the states. What is more, since federal revenue is derived primarily through the income tax, federal aid would insure that education would be paid for by those best able to do so.

"This is in fact the key to much of the opposition to federal aid. The Chamber of Commerce and its allies would prefer to see schools financed by low and middle income groups who are the victims of state and local sales and property taxes."

An area of "especially urgent need for federal aid," the council said, is that of children of migratory workers whose educational needs are "uniquely a responsibility of the federal government."

The council cited the record of the 1960 and 1961 sessions of Congress, summarizing the provisions and legislative course of each bill for federal school aid—with final action in virtually every instance blocked in one way or another by the conservative House Rules Committee.

Fight Isn't Over

"The effort to provide adequate support for the schools is not dead," the council pledged.

"What was not accomplished in 1961 remains to be accomplished in 1962 and the years ahead. The education of our young people is a national as well as a local responsibility. This simple fact needs to be recognized through a comprehensive program of federal aid to schools.

"Teachers' salaries need to be raised to a level commensurate with their training and their responsibilities. Obsolete schools need to be replaced and new ones built to meet the requirements of our ever-expanding young population. Federal aid should include a system of scholarships for qualified college students, with no restrictions on their field of study.

"Special attention in a federal aid program should be directed to the community colleges and to the junior colleges which can do much to bring higher education within the means of workers' children. Organized labor will continue to press for such a program until it has become a reality."

Apprentice Training Stressed

The council gave considerable attention to apprenticeship and vocational training. It pointed out that the new technology requires a "tremendous reservoir of skilled workers" who can best be supplied through apprenticeship training, "yet apprenticeship programs continue to lag." To meet the needs of 1970, it said, there should be about 500,000 apprentices, or three times the present number.

"Unless we are successful in meeting the need there is an ever-present danger that manpower training will be undertaken in other ways that will have the effect of debasing the craft standards which we have established," the council said. "Unions must continue their efforts to extend and improve apprenticeship programs."

In addition, unions must help improve the skills of older workers whose skills have become obsolete, the council said.

Vocational training has always been recognized as a supplement to apprenticeship program and not a substitute, the council noted. Its purposes can best be served, the convention was told, if unions are represented on local level advisory committees and make sure that the programs do not invade the apprenticeship field.

The council said the AFL-CIO is backing changes in the Defense Education Act to clarify the difference between technicians, who usually require two years of training, and journeymen, who require four or five years; and to permit training to upgrade the skills of workers already in the trades.

State, Local Central Body Officials Meet

Miami Beach—Some 250 officials of AFL-CIO state and local central bodies met here on the eve of the federation's convention for an all-day closed-session conference on legislative and economic problems.

AFL-CIO Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller presided at the session, which was set up under the direction of Stanton Smith, AFL-CIO coordinator of state and city central bodies. It was the third national conference the group has held.

William Batt, head of the Area Redevelopment Administration, and Frank Fernbach, AFL-CIO economist, led a discussion of depressed area problems and the government's redevelopment program.

Developments in labor's fight against so-called "right-to-work" laws were discussed by Carl McPeak, AFL-CIO representative on state legislation, and John Redding, director of the National Council for Industrial Peace.

'Unceasing Aggressiveness':

World Crisis Laid to Ruthless Red Drive

Miami Beach—The "tragic aggravation" of the world crisis was blamed on the "unceasing ruthless aggressiveness of the Soviet Union" in the AFL-CIO Executive Council's report to the fourth constitutional convention.

The Soviet's "totalitarian empire," the council charged, "is a gigantic military camp poised for war, conquest and domination."

"Its economy is geared to production for war and aggression," the report continued. "The peoples under the yoke of the Sino-Soviet Axis are living under a despotism . . . more totalitarian than any other dictatorship in history.

"The war with which (Premier) Khrushchev now threatens the world would inflict on mankind far more catastrophic destruction than the war launched by Hitler."

Berlin continues to be the focal point of the world crisis, the Executive Council said, but Laos, Viet Nam, Iran and the Congo also are "tinderboxes of an international conflagration."

The AFL-CIO has worked consistently with the other free labor movements of the Americas to meet the threat to "democratic stability" in Latin America posed by "the Communist take-over in Cuba under Fidel Castro," the council reported.

Warnings Recalled

The council noted that as early as May 4, 1960, it had denounced Castro's "complete suppression of trade union independence, political opposition, freedom of press and other domestic rights."

The council on June 28, 1961, backed "unreservedly" Pres. Kennedy's pledge that the U.S. "would not abandon Cuba to communism."

The council pointed out that "persistent efforts and repeated concessions" by the United States have not "swerved the Soviet aggressors from their perilous course."

"On the contrary, the Kremlin rulers have seized upon every Allied concession as an indication of free world weakness and invitation to step up their drive for subverting and dominating every independent country and freedom-loving people," the report said. "Thus is the world being torn asunder by the Sino-Soviet dictatorships through their brute struggles for power inflamed by national conceit and fanatical Communist contempt for human liberty."

The report reviewed the course of relations between the free world and the Communists since the 1959 convention and summarized AFL-CIO actions and statements in relation to developments during the biennium.

It also welcomed the admission of 17 new African states to the United Nations but deplored the continued strife in the former Belgian Congo and warned that "violence and warfare have opened the door to Communist penetration."

The report recounted the backing the AFL-CIO has given the causes of liberty for Algeria and peace in North Africa, and emphasized the friendly relations between the AFL-CIO and the North African labor centers.

It recalled the AFL-CIO has consistently advocated that the crisis over Berlin and Germany be settled within the framework of the principle of self-determination. It noted that the Executive Council, on June 24, declared the Soviet's real aim is to make West Berlin a "so-called free city," and continued:

"This analysis has since been brutally confirmed by the wall which Moscow and its puppet Ulbricht regime have set up to seal off West Berlin from East Berlin. To achieve its goal in the German crisis, the Kremlin has resorted to atomic blackmail diplomacy in order to intimidate NATO and the Big Three in an atmosphere of thermonuclear terror."

The report said the AFL-CIO has continued its support of the foreign economic aid program and backed proposals for long-term planning and financing; persisted in its condemnation of Russia for its "bestial crime" in Hungary; and continued its opposition to dictatorship in Spain, the Dominican Republic, Haiti and Paraguay.

UN Supported

Support for the United Nations was continued and the death of Dag Hammarskjold was mourned.

The council charged the Soviet Union with attempting to use both the UN and the Intl. Labor Organization as propaganda sounding boards and said the ILO, "whose basic conceptions are diametrically opposed to the theory, practice and goal of totalitarian communism," has in recent years become a "special target" of penetration by the Communist bloc nations.

"To date," the report continued, "the western democracies have been able to save the free world from Soviet conquest and Communist domination only by their joint strength—military, economic and political.

"Stepped-up Soviet aggressiveness makes it imperative that this unity and strength be considerably augmented and that NATO be rebuilt so that it can serve ever more effectively in preserving world peace and human freedom."

In the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions, the AFL-CIO has "continued to play its vigorous role" since the last convention, the report said.

"The AFL-CIO has been in the forefront of the ICFTU affiliates in urging it to greater responsibility and activity in Africa," it went on, "in order to help spread the ideas of free trade unionism specifically and democratic ideas generally."

Meantime, the AFL-CIO has continued to work closely with the Inter-American Regional Organization of Workers (ORIT), the western hemisphere arm of the ICFTU.

Continued support also has been given the Joint U.S.-Mexican Trade Union Committee, the report said.

In another area, the report pointed out that the AFL-CIO has continued its policy supporting "gradual reduction of trade barriers among free world nations with maximum benefit and minimum injury to workers both at home and abroad."

"Our major emphasis," the report said, "has been on developing workable proposals for establishment of fair labor standards in international trade, avoidance of market disruption resulting from exports by low-wage countries, and development of a trade adjustment program to provide necessary assistance to workers, firms and communities adversely affected by imports."

Many affiliates have taken advantage of the AFL-CIO relationship with CARE to send food, tools, medicine and educational materials to underdeveloped areas, the report said. AFL-CIO Vice Pres. Lee W. Minton, a vice president of CARE representing the AFL-CIO, has helped to send 80 items of union-made office equipment to developing nations, it noted.

AFL-CIO Council Reports:

Social Security Health Care Would Aid 14.5 Million Aged

Miami Beach—More than 14.5 million persons over 65 entitled to social security or railroad retirement benefits would be protected against the financial consequences of illness by enactment of the labor-backed Anderson-King bill, according to the AFL-CIO Executive Council.

The bill, through social security, would provide types of basic health services centered on hospital care but would encourage the use of alternatives such as nursing homes, out-patient clinics and home health services, the council told AFL-CIO convention delegates in its biennial report.

The measure has the support of the Kennedy Adminstration, whereas the Eisenhower Administration opposed the comparable Forand bill in the previous session of Congress. The House Ways & Means Committee, which held hearings at which Pres. George Meany gave AFL-CIO views, refused to clear the bill for floor action.

The report noted that conservative elements have kept up a running attack on the social security approach to health care for the aged, with the AFL-CIO playing a major part in efforts "to spread information on the issue and offset the misleading campaign by the American Medical Association and the less apparent but widespread efforts of business and the insurance companies."

States Fail to Act

The Executive Council said the 1960 Kerr-Mills Act, under which federal matching money is made available to the states to expand medical care for old-age assistance recipients, has proved of little aid to those who need help because of failure of some states to enact supporting legislation and the creation of sometimes "very strict" means tests in other states.

AFL-CIO policy on health and medical care for all Americans, the report said, "is based on the premise that the benefits of modern American medicine should be available to every man, woman and child."

The major obstacles, it went on, are inadequate arrangements for financing medical care; scarcity of professional personnel; lack of necessary physical facilities, and the "poor organization" of health services. To overcome these obstacles, the report asserted, action is needed on the legislative front, on the collective bargaining front and through voluntary community organization.

The AFL-CIO supports amendments to existing federal legislation authorizing loans to non-profit direct-service health plans for the construction of necessary facilities.

"The need for legislation to provide loans for comprehensive medical care plans," the report said, "is receiving increased recognition as it becomes more apparent that high quality medical care can be made most readily available to workers and their families through a substantial expansion in comprehensive direct service health plans based on group practice."

The report in addition urged expansion of medical school facilities, with federal financial aid "the only realistic and practical answer," and reorganization of health services to assure workers and their families "of real protection in return for the funds expended on health plans."

The Executive Council noted that 1960 and 1961 saw a "significant expansion" of social security through amendments "even though efforts to add health benefits for the aged have not yet been successful and despite the fact that opponents of health care have mounted a major attack against the basic principles of the social insurance system."

The changes already made, the report said, "intensify the need" for an increase in the ceiling of $4,800 on annual earnings utilized for both benefit and contribution purposes. A "more realistic" ceiling, it asserted, would permit higher benefits while continuing to maintain the program's fiscal soundness.

The Council observed that a heavy burden "still falls on the state and local assistance programs, reflecting gaps in social insurance, high levels of unemployment, and other unsolved social and economic problems."

"Enactment of adequate social insurance laws, together with other union goals for elimination of poverty and slums," the council declared, "would save a substantial part of the $4-$5 billion expended from general revenues by federal, state and local agencies for public assistance.

"Above all, human dignity and security would be advanced since a means test, with its accompanying investigation into personal resources, is undesirable except as a last resort."

Improvements in Wage-Hour Law Hailed as Legislative High Spot

Miami Beach—Extension of federal wage-hour protection to 3.6 million additional workers, coupled with a rise in the minimum wage, was hailed as "a long step forward" by the AFL-CIO Executive Council in its report to the convention.

Recounting the two-year battle to get an acceptable bill through Congress, the council noted that predictions of opponents that low-paid workers and marginal industries would be priced out of the market haven't been borne out.

"It appears clear," the report declared, "that extended coverage and increased minimum wages have readily been taken in stride by the economy and with considerable beneficial effects."

The council's report, covering the last session of Congress under the Eisenhower Administration and the first session of the 87th Congress under Pres. Kennedy, spotlighted both accomplishments and shortcomings in the legislative arena.

One of the big plus marks on labor's legislative scorecard was enactment this year of a $4.9 billion omnibus housing bill, described by the council as "the most important and progressive housing measure in more than a decade."

Survived Test Votes

The Kennedy Administration's program, supported strongly by the AFL-CIO, was upheld on key test votes rejecting crippling amendments 47 to 42 in the Senate and 215 to 197 in the House.

As passed, the bill authorizes 100,000 low-rent, public housing loans for families displaced by urban renewal and for moderate income families, direct loans for housing for the elderly and a $2 billion urban renewal program.

The early months of the Kennedy Administration also saw passage of a water pollution bill, which expanded federal aid for construction of sewage disposal plants. Pres. Eisenhower had vetoed a similar bill in 1960 and had described contamination of the nation's water supply as "a uniquely local blight."

Depressed Areas Aided

Another Eisenhower-vetoed program, providing federal aid to depressed areas, was passed during the first months of the Kennedy Administration.

While the 1960 congressional session—the last under the Eisenhower Administration—added little to the record of accomplishments, it was notable for the rare overriding of a presidential veto of a 7.5 percent pay raise for federal and postal employes.

Balancing the congressional record, the Executive Council noted, was the failure to pass a number of major bills which labor considered important to bolster the nation's economy.

One of these is a stand-by program of federal matching funds for state and local public works during periods of heavy unemployment—sponsored by Sen. Joseph Clark (D-Pa.) and described by the council as "one of the most constructive and urgently needed measures introduced in the 87th Congress."

The Administration opposed its enactment this year but indicated that the bill might be endorsed in 1962 if unemployment remains high.

One of the big setbacks during the first session of the 87th Congress was the refusal of Congress to approve construction of facilities to convert waste steam from an Atomic Energy Commission plant at Hanford, Wash., into electric power.

The House repeatedly refused to budge from its opposition, and turned down, by a 251-155 vote, a compromise recommended by a House-Senate conference committee.

Sidetracked by the House Rules Committee was the Administration's manpower development and training bill, endorsed in testimony by AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany as "an investment in our human resources." Its passage will be high on labor's priority list for the second session of Congress.

The council's summary of the unfinished business of Congress included jobsite picketing legislation, final action on a group of Senate-passed bills to help protect migrant farm workers and their children against exploitation, a tightening of the Welfare & Pension Plan Disclosure Act, and an overhaul of the tax structure. On the tax reform, the Executive Council declared:

"In 1962, Congress should eliminate the unjustifiable loopholes which provide an unconscionable advantage for the few, reduce tax collections by billions, and undermine public support for the American tax system."

The council said part of the added revenue obtained through stopping up loopholes would permit "a downward realignment of the income tax structure and liberalization of the exemption for dependents."

'Work' Law Promoters Make Little Headway

Miami Beach—Sponsors of so-called "right-to-work" laws made little headway during 1960-61 legislative sessions, the Executive Council reported.

They were defeated in "back door" drives as well as frontal attacks on the union shop. Only in Mississippi, where an existing "work" law was written into the state constitution, and in Nebraska, where the "right-to-work" law was toughened by an amendment banning the agency shop, did labor suffer setbacks.

The council warned, however, that strong "right-to-work" forces pose a continuing threat in Oklahoma, Idaho and New Mexico and are active in other states.

In 1961, "right-to-work" laws or constitutional amendments were defeated or blocked in committee in the legislatures of Connecticut, Maine, New Hampshire, New Mexico, Oklahoma, Texas, Vermont and Idaho.

Also rejected—after legislators had been alerted to the maneuvers—were attempts in a number of states, including Oregon and California, to put through obscurely-worded "right-to-work" measures as amendments to civil rights bills or state labor relations acts.

Repeal Efforts Miss

Labor made significant tries in Indiana and Utah to get the legislatures to repeal existing "work" laws but fell short of the needed majorities in both states.

Here is how the council viewed the situation in states expected to be continuing major battlegrounds:

- Oklahoma—Although the legislature bottled up a "right-to-work" bill, a petition campaign has been launched to force the proposal on the ballot in the 1962 general election. The council noted that "ultra-conservative, radical right groups such as the John Birch Society" are active in the state.
- Idaho—"Right-to-work" was defeated by a small margin in a 1958 referendum and a broad-ranging "agricultural right-to-work" bill was narrowly beaten in the legislature this year. Stepped-up activity by business groups fighting the union shop continues to "pose a threat" in Idaho.
- New Mexico—Repeated efforts have been made, thus far unsuccessfully, to get a "work" law through the legislature and "it appears certain that proponents of 'right-to-work' will launch a campaign again in New Mexico."

Maine, Delaware, Vermont, Oregon, Wyoming and Montana are other states where there are "indications of continuing activity" by "right-to-work" forces, the council noted.

All-Out Fight Urged Against Work Hazards

Miami Beach—A call for "persistent, positive action" to promote occupational health and safety was voiced by the AFL-CIO Executive Council in its report to the convention.

"For too long," the council noted, "so-called old problems have gone unresolved while new occupational diseases have steadily multiplied. The time has come for labor, management and government to face realities and to act in concert."

The council agreed there has been a half-century of organized effort along these lines, but declared that "the American union movement is not satisfied with the results."

The report noted that the AFL-CIO Standing Committee on Safety & Occupational Health at its second national conference on job safety May 10-12, 1961, focused labor's attention on the present status of occupational health and surveyed current state programs.

It recounted also the success of the safety training institutes the AFL-CIO is conducting in cooperation with the Labor Dept. and spelled out labor's role in other safety and occupational health activities in the biennium.

AFL-CIO Net Worth Set at $5.27 Million

Miami Beach—The general fund net worth of the AFL-CIO for the year ending June 30, 1961, was $5.27 million, according to the report of AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler to the convention.

This was a decrease of $171,000 in a two-year period.

Total assets rose $351,000 to $7.975 million at the close of the two-year period, but liabilities rose by $522,000 to a new total of $2.705 million. The report was based on financial statements certified to by Main & Co., certified public accountants.

Meany Finds AFL-CIO 'In Good Shape'

Labor Called to Help Spur Growth of U.S.

Labor today, he stressed, is an integral part of the American system and has more to gain and more to lose if the system is endangered or destroyed. Labor, he said, is proud of its record in time of stress, in the two world wars and in the cold war.

The trade union movement, he emphasized, has a special obligation in helping wage the cold war against an enemy using the weapons of fraud and deceit in an attempt to dominate the world.

He reviewed the impact and importance of the economic problems facing the nation and the necessity for a higher rate of economic growth.

"It is not enough to preserve the system," he said, "we must step up our rate of growth."

More Jobs Needed

Despite a drop in the rate of unemployment, the "long-range prospect is still bad," the federation president stressed. Helping people with various forms of assistance, he said, is no substitute for a job.

In the area of civil rights, Meany won mounting applause when he declared that the "image of America can never look good to the uncommitted nations unless we eliminate racial discrimination from every sector of our nation. As leaders in the democratic trade union movement, we welcome and understand the determination of those seeking to give real meaning to the 14th Amendment and understand their impatience."

There is much work ahead, he declared, in many areas—in eliminating slums, providing educational opportunities for all youngsters and medical care for the aged under the social security system. All of these problems should be handled at the next session of Congress, he declared.

Meany told the convention that the success of the merger at state and local levels is paralleled at AFL-CIO headquarters in Washington, where real merger has been in effect since December 1955. Since the last convention the federation has had a good legislative year at the first session of the 87th Congress and a good political year in 1960, he said.

He commented in discussing the work of the federation at the international level that "a real trade unionist thinks of workers anywhere in the world" because improved benefits and real freedom anywhere in the world is a gain for all and a loss anywhere is everyone's loss.

Mergers Complete in State Central Bodies

Miami Beach—Merger of AFL-CIO central bodies at the state level has been completed, the Executive Council reported to the federation convention here, and all local central bodies have been merged except in two areas, where five central-body charters were revoked and organization is proceeding under the direction of AFL-CIO regional officers.

Since the last convention, two national conferences of state central body officers have been held and steps taken to increase the effectiveness of state federations. Among them were the following:

- A new office of AFL-CIO Coordinator of State & Local Central Bodies was created and has been functioning since Apr. 4, 1960.
- With Stanton E. Smith as coordinator and Pres. George Meany as chairman of an advisory committee, the office launched a national campaign to secure maximum affiliation of local unions with state and central bodies.
- The first check by state federations showed 48.5 percent of 33,327 locals affiliated or a total of 8.2 million members but the pace of affiliation has picked up though "much work remains to be done."

Reports filed during the first half of 1961 showed, the council said, that 951 local unions affiliated with state federations during the early stages of the campaign and 505 local unions affiliated with local central bodies.

"These affiliations represent only a small fraction of the potential," the report said. "The problem of affiliation at both the state and local levels can be solved only with full support from the national and international unions and vigorous action on the part of the central bodies."

The coordinator's office began a system of annual reports on financial information, officers and personnel, and general information which will give a clearer picture of the situation in 50 state federations and 800 local central bodies.

Per Capita Trend Up

On per capita dues, the council reported a decided upward trend in central body per capita taxes, with annual per capita ranging from a high of $3 per member in Nevada to a low of 24 cents in New York, and affiliated membership ranging from New York's 900,000 to North Dakota's 6,500. The most common rate reported was $1.20.

Local central bodies listed per capita running from 12 cents per year to $6, with the most frequent rate 60 cents.

The level of affiliation does not seem, the report said, to bear any direct relationship to the amount of per capita dues.

"The fact is that in many states a minimum program of activities cannot be supported, even with complete affiliation, except by a relatively high per capita dues rate" because of small population and therefore small union membership, it said.

"The high per capita dues" are an expression of the desire of the labor movement in those states to "maintain their state organizations and to advance the program" of the AFL-CIO, the council said.

Local central bodies reported paying up to $18,000 a year to chief executive officers with the average from $7,000 to $10,000. Staff directors averaged $8,000 to $9,000, office employes from $80 to $100 a week for local and state bodies.

Judge McCree Leaves UAW Review Board

Detroit — Judge Wade H. McCree, recently elevated from the Wayne County Circuit Court to the Federal District Court by Pres. Kennedy, has resigned as a member of the Auto Workers Public Review Board.

UAW Pres. Walter P. Reuther and Rabbi Morris Adler, chairman of the board, voiced high praise for the work of McCree.

choice only between a small group of property owners holding all the wealth and on the other hand the Communists."

'Redouble Your Efforts'

"I ask you to redouble your efforts" to help the new trade union movements in emerging lands, he told the AFL-CIO—to show by example that "freedom and economic growth go hand in hand, that ours is the way of the future."

Said Kennedy:

"I have come to Miami to ask your help—as on other occasions other presidents, from Woodrow Wilson through Roosevelt and Truman, have come to the AFL and the CIO, and each time this organization has said, 'yes'."

Said AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany in an immediate response:

"We are delighted that we have a chief executive in the White House who understands the ideals and the aspirations and the real welfare of the people, and say to you, 'don't worry about us. We'll cooperate 1,000 percent.'"

The President thanked the labor movement, too, for its role in the Presidential Advisory Committee on Labor-Management Policy—the first such joint group since Woodrow Wilson's day that "did not break up, that meets regularly to make plans so the country can go forward together in full employment."

He thanked the AFL-CIO for "tireless" support of his legislative program.

'Satisfactions' Listed

We did not achieve every goal, we may have disagreed on tactics, he said, but "we can take satisfaction that we did pass the $1.25 minimum wage bill with its expanded coverage, we did pass a social security bill, we did pass temporary jobless insurance and aid to children of jobless fathers, we did pass the area redevelopment bill, a water pollution bill, a housing bill stronger than those previously vetoed."

Announcing the first sharp drop in joblessness in more than a year —a decline in the rate from 6.8 percent in October to 6.1 percent in November—Kennedy said, "and we're going to have to get it lower."

He said that in the new Congress in January, unemployment compensation "must be placed on a permanent, rational basis of nationwide standards." The older and retired worker, he said, must be given "social security protection against the staggering costs of medical care."

In a direct challenge to the House Ways & Means Committee, through which the bill must clear originally, Kennedy said that "every member of Congress should have a chance to vote this bill up or vote it down."

"I am confident that when it comes to the floor, they will vote it up," he declared.

Despite the drop in joblessness, the President said, there is "only one way to balance the manpower budget—at full employment. A deficit of 4 million unemployed is as deplorable as any deficit in dollars."

He listed six major areas to which he directed attention:

- A bill to establish a youth employment opportunities program and full-scale government aid to the public schools are essential to meet the needs of millions coming into the labor market and the more than 1 million now out of school and jobless.

"Every child in this country has a right to an adequate education," and the denial of adequate schools bears most harshly on the children of minority groups, he said.

- A program to train and retrain workers whose jobs have disappeared is essential. Workers who lose one kind of job must be retrained to meet the requirements for the new jobs that are created.
- The rights of minorities must be protected, for discrimination in a job "makes no sense at all. It is a blot on our democracy, a drag on our economy."
- New tax incentives must be given industry to reinvest in new plants, so that our rate of reinvestment will be as great as it was in 1955, as a means of promoting full employment.
- There must be a program of federal grants to communities for needed public works. "We do not intend to go back to leaf-raking but neither do we intend to go back to breadlines."
- Our foreign trade must be maintained—our $5 billion surplus in exports.

The loss of these exports would be ruinous, warned the President. It would force us to bring back our troops from Europe, to withdraw to our mainland.

It would mean the loss of jobs here as U.S. investors began "exporting money" instead of goods to the powerful new European Common Market—already more populous than we, with twice the rate of growth and with income three-fifths of ours and going up.

Bidding strongly for support of a new foreign trade policy, the President pledged that he would seek a trade adjustment program to assist the relatively few workers and communities adversely effected by greatly broadened foreign trade, both exports and imports.

"I am hopeful for our country," he said. "I am hopeful for your support for a vital economy, vital trade policies, a sense of labor-management responsibility for stable price levels."

cession." But he emphasized that the nation has not yet achieved full recovery and "too many men and women have been standing idle in the shadow of unused plants."

A separate report on the nation's 150 major labor market areas showed that the number with substantial unemployment dropped in November to 60 from October's 68. These are areas with unemployment of 6 percent or over.

The total of 60 for November was a low for the year; there were 101 major areas with substantial unemployment last spring, an all-time record high. A year ago, 51 areas were so classified, and in 1959, there were 32.

The following eight major areas showed improvement which resulted in their moving from Group D, unemployment of from 6 to 8.9 percent, into Group C, idleness of 3 to 5.9 percent:

Organizing Given Top Priority Tag

By Saul Miller

Miami Beach—The AFL-CIO wound up a five-day convention here basically agreed on handling internal disputes and civil rights problems and united behind a wide-ranging legislative and political program geared to cope with the challenges of the Sixties.

The 950 delegates meeting at the Americana Hotel gave a top priority to "the major unfinished business of the American labor movement"—organizing the unorganized—and reiterated its goal of uniting in the federation all unions that can meet the ethical standards and principles of the AFL-CIO.

The federation's fourth constitutional convention voted the funds to carry on the labor movement's work by increasing the per capita by 2 cents to 7 cents per member per month, and voiced its confidence in its leadership by re-electing AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler and the organization's 27 vice presidents.

Meany termed the convention, that acted on nearly 200 policy resolutions, heard a dozen speeches and engaged in pointed floor discussion, "a sound, progressive, historic convention." But he added, "convention resolutions must be implemented to be effective. We intend to put these convention decisions into effect without delay."

The convention moved to give almost immediate implementation to the legislative and economic program by calling a conference on Jan. 22, 1962, in Washington to dramatize the urgency of the problems facing the nation and to urge the second session of the 87th Congress to move these problems.

Appeals Subcommittee Named

The federation's newly re-elected Executive Council also moved quickly to implement convention action on machinery for settling internal disputes, naming a council subcommittee to hear appeals and complaints on compliance, approving David L. Cole as impartial umpire and setting up a broad mediation panel.

In the civil rights area, the council moved to implement the strengthened enforcement machinery by approving Schnitzler as chairman of the Standing Committee on Civil Rights and supporting Meany's proposal for a completely revamped committee.

It also set up a council meeting two months hence to consider other steps to carry out the mandates voted by the convention. The council will meet beginning Feb. 26, 1962, at San Juan, Puerto Rico.

The convention adopted policy resolutions covering almost every aspect of American life, including a comprehensive foreign policy program, and programs to deal with internal matters. Here is an outline of the major actions taken by the convention:

- Gave its resounding approval to a new constitutional plan for settlement of internal disputes within the federation based on mediation, determination by an impartial umpire with appeal to the Executive Council and imposition of sanctions for non-compliance.
- Approved unanimously a broad civil rights program with strengthened machinery for enforcement of the federation's anti-discrimination policy by giving the Civil Rights Committee the authority to initiate complaints of violation of AFL-CIO policy and to refer unresolved complaints to the council.
- Told affiliates expelled in 1957 on findings of corrupt leadership that they could regain affiliation by satisfying the council that they are in compliance with the federation's constitution, rules,

New Disputes Plan Provides Mediation, Appeals Machinery

Miami Beach—The fourth AFL-CIO convention has given its resounding approval to a new constitutional plan for settlement of internal disputes within the federation.

The new disputes plan, written into the AFL-CIO constitution after more than two years of study and investigation, provides for mediation, determination by an impartial umpire if mediation fails, and the imposition of sanctions by the federations's Executive Council for non-compliance.

It provides also for an appeals machinery to the council in those cases where an affiliated union has reason to believe that the impartial umpire's determination is not compatible with the AFL-CIO constitution, not supported by the facts, or is otherwise "arbitrary or capricious."

A permanent subcommittee of the council is created under the plan to hear the appeal. The committee may disallow the appeal, and make the umpire's decision final, or it may refer the appeal to the Executive Council.

The disputes plan, which goes into effect Jan. 1, 1962, replaced the no-raiding agreement signed voluntarily between federation affiliates and the procedures for handling raiding cases provided for in the constitution.

The disputes covered under the plan include, besides the question of established collective bargaining relationships, established work relationships and attacks on the public repute of other affiliates.

At a meeting of the council immediately after the close of the convention, AFL-CIO Pres. George

Increase Voted In AFL-CIO Per Capita

Miami Beach—The AFL-CIO convention here voted a 2-cent increase in the monthly per capita tax paid by national and international unions affiliated with the federation, raising it from 5 cents to 7 cents a month.

The per capita increase was recommended by the convention's constitution committee, headed by Vice Pres. Joseph A. Beirne, on the basis of reports submitted by Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler. In presenting the committee's report, Beirne said increased revenue was needed for the AFL-CIO to meet its commitments to such organizations as the ICFTU, expand its organizing and legislative activities, and cover increases in normal operating costs.

'Most Comprehensive' Civil Rights Program Adopted By Convention

By John M. Barry

Miami Beach—A broad civil rights resolution with strengthened machinery for enforcement of AFL-CIO anti-discrimination policy was adopted as a major action of the federation's fourth constitutional convention here.

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany described the resolution as "the most comprehensive on this subject ever presented to any convention I have attended."

Vice Pres. A. Philip Randolph, head of the Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters, termed it "the best resolution on civil rights that the AFL-CIO has yet adopted."

The convention's action on civil rights occurred during Human Rights Week, proclaimed by Pres. Kennedy to commemorate and promote the principles of the United Nations' Universal Declaration of Human Rights.

In addition to establishing the new enforcement provisions, the resolution outlined organized labor's responsibilities as a democratic force in the whole field of civil rights. It listed the basic fair practices the AFL-CIO demands of its affiliates, and set forth a broad legislative program aimed at assuring equal rights for all Americans in every area of human endeavor.

"As trade unionists," the convention declared, "we insist on fair practices in unions, in employment, in housing, in public accommoda-

VICE PRES. WALTER P. REUTHER, chairman of the AFL-CIO Committee on Economic Policy, speaks to the convention on economic programs needed by the nation and the collective bargaining program of labor.

Wage Law Protection Urged For 'Exploited'

Miami Beach—"The need of America's working poor for fair labor standards has by no means been fully met," the AFL-CIO convention declared, despite what it called a "significant forward step" in extension of wage-hour protections to 3.6 million more workers and an increase in the minimum wage to $1.25 an hour in several steps.

The convention urged further expansion of the Fair Labor Standards Act's coverage, a faster schedule for reaching the effective date of the $1.25 floor, steps to increase the minimum wage to $1.50 an hour, elimination of unfair exemptions from the act, and reduction of the present 40-hour standard maximum workweek.

"It is gratifying that the Congress has at long last recognized the need for extending protection to unprotected workers and for improving the national minimum wage level," a resolution observed.

It added, however, that "more than 16 million workers who can be covered, many of whom are paid shamefully low wages and are worked for excessive hours, are still denied protection of the act."

The resolution referred specifically to major groups of uncovered workers in the hotel and restaurant, laundry and hospital industries. It described agricultural workers as "a particularly sub-standard and exploited large group" and condemned specific exemptions that exclude smaller groups as a "special favor for their employers" in such fields as food processing, logging and transit.

The convention found the $1.25 minimum wage "insufficient to provide enough to live on decently" and noted that even this amount has been postponed until 1963 for workers previously covered, and until 1965 for workers newly covered. It urged "a more adequate minimum" of $1.50 an hour "to come closer to the act's stated objective of assuring a "minimum standard of living necessary for health, efficiency and general well-being of workers."

Broadened coverage and a higher floor on wages are "required by simple justice," the resolution declared. "The nation's official fair minimum labor standards should be made fair and should extend to all rather than a portion of its workers.

'Attack on Poverty'

"These improvements are required as part of an intensified attack on American poverty and its human waste and social costs to our society. They are required to prevent continued growth of the unjustifiably wide income disparity between the defenseless lowest-wage workers and the rest of the nation.

"We must provide a greater share of our nation's general economic progress to our lowest-income families in order to shore up the moral, social and economic health of the nation."

The resolution also urged:

- An immediate halt to child labor abuses "still shamefully tolerated" in agriculture.
- Rapid elimination of minimum wage differential enjoyed by employers in Puerto Rico and Virgin Islands.
- Enforcement of the new amendments to the act on the same principles applied in the past of maximum protection for workers.

In Collective Bargaining:

Higher Pay, Shorter Hours Affirmed as Labor Goals

By David L. Perlman

Miami Beach—More pay and shorter hours will continue to be organized labor's key collective bargaining goals.

Higher wages, the AFL-CIO convention declared, are "vitally needed" to increase presently "inadequate" consumer buying power and stimulate the nation's economy to a faster rate of growth.

A reduction in hours, the federation said in a companion resolution, is needed to meet the problem of unemployment. To provide jobs for an expanding work force and "to convert our rapid technological progress into a boon rather than a burden."

The convention sharply rejected "efforts to bind bargaining by national formulas, by ceilings, and other constraints."

The public interest, the convention declared, "cannot be served in a democratic society by throttling geniune and unshackled collective bargaining."

"Strong unions are necessary for meaningful and responsible collective bargaining," the AFL-CIO said, warning that "at many bargaining tables" management has adopted a policy of "inflexibility" as "an anti-union weapon."

Good-faith bargaining, with "a sense of common purpose" by labor and management, can serve the interests of both groups, the resolution asserted.

In addition to wages and hours, the convention called for collective bargaining advances on these fronts:

- Programs to assure year-round employment or income and adequate benefits if a worker loses his job—in effect either a full-time job or its equivalent for laid-off workers.
- Improved health, welfare and pension programs.
- Measures "to minimize ill effects on workers of technological displacement and plant relocation."

The AFL-CIO called on its affiliated unions to give "the highest priority" to seeking ways to reduce hours of work so as to provide adequate job opportunities "now and in the future."

Legislation Urged

It urged Congress to consider legislation to help achieve this objective.

Consideration should be given, it declared, to longer vacations, improved retirement, limits on overtime work and other techniques in addition to lowering the basic workweek.

Discussing the convention's collective bargaining resolution, AFL-CIO Vice Pres. Walter P. Reuther gave an answer to those "who say to us that this is no time to fight for a short workweek." Reuther is chairman of the federation's committee on Economic Policy.

He told the delegates:

"We ought to say to them that we are prepared to work 40 hours a week if you can give every American who wants a job a job at 40 hours.

"And if they cannot, then we ought to fight to reduce the level of the workweek until every American who is willing and able to work has a job in the American economy."

The AFL-CIO's collective bargaining resolution warned that "slackening of wage advances" would curtail economic growth.

A continuing pattern of wage increases is needed, the convention declared, "to assure that effective consumer demand can grow rapidly enough both to stimulate and yet keep abreast of national productive ability."

Part of the Remedy

A reduction of hours, the AFL-CIO said, will not by itself solve all employment problems. But, the convention emphasized, when the choice is between "cutting employment or cutting hours, reduction of hours without loss of pay must be an ingredient of our attack on unemployment."

The resolution added:

"We cannot close our eyes to the evidence of the new technology's impact, the coming expanded flow of youngsters into the labor market, and the inability of existing economic policies to achieve full employment. We believe attention must be directed now to obtaining a substantial reduction of standard working hours in the 1960's."

Stiff Safety Standard Asked for 'Non-Skeds'

Miami Beach—Non-scheduled airlines should be required to meet the same operating safety standards that the scheduled lines have to maintain, the AFL-CIO convention told the Federal Aviation Agency.

Organized workers on the scheduled airlines, a resolution pointed out, have consistently fought for "the highest levels of airman performance in piloting, maintenance, dispatching, communications and ground operations."

Union-Busting Tactics Of Employers Rapped

Miami Beach—The AFL-CIO convention laid out a program to fight the new employer technique of "bargaining by ultimatum," to ban the use of professional strikebreakers and to protect the constitutional rights of trade unionists in the South.

A resolution entitled "Boulwarism" lashed the use of the "take-it-or-leave-it" bargaining technique of some employers and declared labor's implacable opposition to this perversion of collective bargaining." The technique is named for Lemuel Boulware, former vice president for labor relations at General Electric.

The convention action noted that, on the initiative of the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, the National Labor Relations Board has issued an unfair labor practice complaint against GE's bargaining practices.

Delegate David Fitzmaurice of the IUE told the delegates that Boulwarism has developed beyond "ultimate bargaining" to what the union sees as "no bargaining."

"Boulwarism," Fitzmaurice said, "is the letter to the homes of the members, the weekly newspaper of the company, the captive audience in the shop, the foreman talking individually to members, the company's paternalism [and] attitude concerning pickets . . . the working on our members day after day to soften them up so that when collective bargaining time comes around, the company is successful, and they divide our membership and turn them against the leadership. . . ."

He said labor must expose the intent of these practices to the membership and to shop stewards.

The resolution seeking a ban on the use of professional strikebreakers pledged the AFL-CIO, its state and city central bodies and all unions to press at the federal, state and municipal levels for citizens' job protection laws. The resolution cited the experience in many strikes including those at Kohler Co., the Wilson meatpacking firm, the Henderson, N. C., textile mills, the O'Sullivan company and at many newspapers.

The resolution on the denial of constitutional rights in the South called on the U.S. Dept. of Justice to draft and support civil rights law changes to protect trade unionists' rights. It also pledged the "resources, legal and otherwise," of the AFL-CIO to oppose unconstitutional local ordinances. It also urged the NLRB to protect the free speech rights of trade unions.

The resolution cited the beatings and jailing of two organizers of the Hosiery Workers at Ellijay, Ga., last September. It cited the knifing of two organizers of the Textile Workers Union of America in Fitzgerald, Ga., and the beating and kidnapping of a Hosiery Workers' organizer in Franklin, N. C.

In these and dozens of other cases, the resolution declared, local police and authorities have been witting or unwitting accomplices.

Locals Urged To Join With Central Bodies

Miami Beach—National and international unions were urged by the fourth constitutional AFL-CIO convention to take what action may be needed to make affiliation of their locals with state and local central bodies mandatory.

The action was taken on recommendation of the committee on state and local central bodies. The vote included support for the committee's position that locals be required to pay per capita taxes on full membership "so that the total strength of the AFL-CIO may be mobilized for the important tasks that lie ahead."

"State and local central bodies," the resolution said, "are being called on in ever-increasing degree to provide aid and services to local unions with respect to the administration of state and local laws and ordinances affecting unions and union members.

"The central bodies will be unable to achieve maximum results unless they have the greatest degree of support of the local unions in their respective jurisdictions.

"The records show that about half of the local unions representing approximately one-third of the membership of the AFL-CIO are not affiliated with state and local central bodies and, in many cases, the local unions which are affiliated do not pay per capita tax on their full membership."

The committee commended state and local central bodies for their cooperation in promoting implementation of the established policies and programs of the AFL-CIO, and for the aid they have extended to international and national unions and their locals.

Organizing Stressed As Unfinished Task

laws, standards and policies.

- Instructed the AFL-CIO to set up top-level conferences among unions organizing in the same field to pave the way for cooperative organizing campaigns by unions, groups of unions, or the AFL-CIO itself, and directed new efforts to resolve problems of organizing jurisdiction.
- Called for higher wages and shorter hours as collective bargaining goals to help eradicate unemployment and increase buying power to stimulate the nation's economy to a faster rate of growth.
- Urged an immediate campaign based on registration and get-out-the-vote drives to reverse the historic off-year election trend against the party in power, to help elect additional liberal senators and representatives in 1962.
- Approved resolutions calling for strong federal policies to promote economic growth to get the economy "off the roller-coaster of frequent recessions and aborted recoveries," including modernization of the federal budget and a sweeping program of tax reform.
- Backed a completely revised trade program with new emphasis on expanding two-way trade while safeguarding U.S. jobs threatened by imports.

Aid to Underdeveloped

- Renewed organized labor's support for long-term, large-scale economic and technical assistance for underdeveloped nations and called for a shift from emphasis on scattered projects to the promotion of sound national development programs.
- Voiced its conviction that a firm allied position, supported by acceleration and expansion of military preparedness and economic and political unity will force a halt to the Soviet Union's drive to extend Communist control over all Europe.
- Appealed to all nations to renew with a sense of urgency their efforts to achieve a system of disarmament with adequate controls and inspection and devote the resources thus released to a "massive effort" to raise living standards everywhere.
- Declared that the "resurgence of right-wing fanaticism with its now open attacks on democracy" constitutes a threat to the nation's liberties and national security.
- Assailed the business-led attempt to put unions under the anti-trust laws and pledged the federation's efforts to fight this campaign and the continuing threat of the campaign to pass so-called "right-to-work" laws.

Consumer Protections Sought

- Called for an agency in the federal government to protect consumers and urged a "leading role" for labor in the field of consumer protection in behalf of its own members and the public at large.
- Approved a broader and more intensive campaign to organize farm workers and called on all affiliates to support the organizing effort with funds and manpower.
- Urged further expansion of the wage and hour law beyond the 3.6 million additional workers covered in 1961 amendments, and an increase in the step-up schedule for reaching the new $1.25 per hour minimum wage.
- Gave a top priority to health care for the aged under the social security system as a "must" at the next session of Congress and specifically endorsed the pending Anderson-King Bill.
- Urged a renewed drive for federal standards to correct deficiencies in state unemployment insurance programs with minimum requirements for duration of benefits, eligibility and disqualification provisions.
- Called on Congress to enact a broad program of federal aid to education including both school construction grants and funds to help pay teachers' salaries.
- Emphasized the need for all affiliates to participate broadly in community services programs to help meet the personal and social needs of union members.

BEFORE AND DURING the AFL-CIO convention, the Executive Council met on necessary business before referring recommendations to the delegates, including Internal Disputes plan to facilitate agreements between affiliates. Plan was worked out in eight-and-a-half hour session on basis of report from subcommittee headed by Vice Pres. Al J. Hayes.

Convention Gives Approval to Plan For Settlement of Internal Disputes

Meany announced that David L. Cole, impartial umpire under the no-raiding agreement, would be the impartial umpire under the new plan with others to be named later.

Meany announced that the council subcommittee to hear appeals from the umpire's determination will consist of himself and federation Vice Presidents Joseph A. Beirne and James A. Suffridge. To insure that the committee would be available at all times, Meany also named substitute members: Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler for Meany, Vice Pres. A. J. Hayes for Beirne and Vice Pres. Joseph D. Keenan for Suffridge.

All members of the executive council will serve as members of the mediation panel, plus about 30 officers of federation affiliates with names to be suggested by council members.

The disputes plan, which becomes Article XXI of the constitution, was finally worked out at an eight-and-one-half hour meeting of the council on a report from a special council subcommittee headed by Hayes which has been seeking to establish disputes - settlement machinery since the last AFL-CIO convention in September 1959.

An attentive convention followed closely the reading of every word of the lengthy document and, with only the Typographical Union delegates dissenting, gave the plan the necessary two-thirds vote with a cheering show of hands.

Sanctions Provided

The sanctions provided in the plan for unions refusing to comply with the final determination would bar the non-complying affiliate from filing any complaints under the plan and would deny to such an affiliate the use of "any or all of the services or facilities of the federation," as well as give aid to the affiliate which suffers from the refusal to comply with the decision.

The plan specifically declares that it applies to all affiliates of the federation and to their local unions and other subordinate bodies. It also specifically bars resort to the courts to settle disputes or enforce decisions.

The disputes plan section of the constitution provides specifically that it can be amended by a majority vote of future conventions.

Beirne, chairman of the convention's Constitution Committee, which brought the disputes plan amendment to the floor, announced that the action of the Executive Council in recommending the plan was unanimous.

Meany, in calling for the vote after Elmer Brown, president of the ITU, reasserted his union's historic opposition to such plans, said "I commend this resolution most highly." He cited the two meetings of the council consuming nine and one-half hours in a single day in an attempt "to find a reasonable, decent way to solve this problem."

The concept of a new approach to handling internal disputes was adopted by the previous AFL-CIO convention in San Francisco in September 1959 and the council was instructed to develop machinery and if necessary to call a special convention to place the new plan in the constitution. The committee met during the two-year period and made a number of progress reports to the council culminating in the report during this convention.

Relationship Protected

In its 22 sections, the disputes plan spells out in comprehensive detail the rights of all unions and the machinery for settling disputes between them. It says that each affiliate shall respect the established collective bargaining relationship and the established work relationship of every other affiliate.

Dispute settlements and determination under the plan's provisions "shall not determine the general work or trade jurisdiction of any affiliate" but shall be limited to specific disputes.

The president of the AFL-CIO is authorized to establish a panel of mediators from within the labor movement and a panel of impartial umpires "composed of prominent and respected persons." The president may shorten or eliminate the mediation process if he sees fit and refer a dispute directly to the umpire.

An appeal from the umpire's decision must be filed within five days or the decision shall automatically take effect. Any decision referred to the council by the council subcommittee set up to handle appeals can be set aside or altered only by a majority vote of all members of the council.

The subcommittee also will handle complaints of non-compliance with an umpire's decision and determine if an affiliate is actually in non-compliance.

Any dispute in effect before Jan. 1, 1962 will be disposed of under procedures and principles previously in existence and not under the new machinery, except that decisions of the umpire under previous plans will be subject to the sanction provisions of the new plan.

Vigilant Fight Pledged Against 'Work' Laws

Miami Beach—"Right-to-Work" was labeled "the most insidiously misleading slogan of this generation" by the AFL-CIO convention.

The delegates pledged the federation to devote "utmost efforts to the defeat" of so-called "right-to-work" bills and to a continuing drive to repeal existing "work" laws.

The convention also called on Congress to repeal Sec. 14B of the Taft-Hartley Act and urged the Administration to sponsor a bill to that effect. This is the provision which permits states to ban union shop agreements.

Since the last convention, the resolution noted, attempts to outlaw the union shop were made in 16 states despite hopes that the massive defeats suffered by the "right-to-work" forces at the polls in 1958 "would quell for a while at least this assault upon the basic principle of union security."

While the "work" sponsors were defeated in all 16 states, the convention declared: "There are still 19 states where these iniquitous statutes are in force, and there is every reason to anticipate a massive effort to extend them further."

The "well-organized" and "well-financed" groups seeking to impose "right-to-work" laws, the convention charged, "have as their primary motive the weakening and ultimate destruction of the trade union movement."

308 Newsmen Cover AFL-CIO Convention

Miami Beach—A total of 308 reporters, photographers, commentators and radio and television technicians was registered by the Dept. of Public Relations during the AFL-CIO convention here.

Hundreds of feet of film and recording tape were used and the reporters and commentators, who had a battery of 50 typewriters at their disposal and used them all, filed a total of 567,000 words for transmission by Western Union.

Shortly before the convention adjourned, Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler read into the record an expression of appreciation from the working press for the "splendid aid" provided by the federation's public relations staff.

Jan. 22 Conference Set On Legislative Program

Miami Beach—An economic & legislative conference has been summoned by the AFL-CIO to urge the 87th Congress to move to meet the unresolved problems facing the country.

The conference, called by the fourth constitutional convention here, will be held Jan. 22 in Washington, D. C. The resolution specifically asked all national and international unions to send delegations of the same strength as are allotted at an AFL-CIO convention, and central bodies to send two delegates each.

The convention laid out three major purposes for the conference.

"First, it will dramatize the importance of the economic and social problems, led by unemployment, which confront our nation today, and will provide an opportunity to explain to senators and representatives labor's program for meeting them.

"Second, it will permit congressional leaders to express their views and set forth their plans to trade union leaders from all over the country.

"Third, it will serve to stimulate union leaders and other citizens in local communities to make their views known to the members of Congress who represent them."

Leaders of both political parties will be invited to participate and time will be allocated for visits to congressmen.

The convention declared that despite a "slight indication of improvement" in unemployment, "no substantial and continuing relief is in sight." Among other problems, the delegates said, is health care for the aged under social security.

"Action will be forthcoming during the second session of the 87th Congress only if the voters demand it," the resolution said. "This means the widest possible outpouring of opinion by private citizens, individually and through private organizations, clearly expressed to their elected representatives."

Delegates' Cheers Greet Mrs. Roosevelt

No-Raid Pact Agreed to by IBEW, CWA

Miami Beach — A no-raiding agreement between the Communications Workers and the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers was announced by AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany to the federation's convention here.

With Meany's assistance, the two unions reached agreement to respect each other's existing bargaining relationships with telephone companies.

Immediate effect of the agreement is withdrawal by the IBEW from organizing campaigns in California, New York and New England in established CWA bargaining units. The announcement said that while there are no reported cases of the CWA raiding established IBEW units in the telephone industry, the agreement requires CWA not to engage in the practice.

In organizing campaigns where neither union already represents workers, either party may call on Meany to help work out an arrangement giving exclusive organizing rights to one or the other. The two unions further agree that if Meany's efforts fail in such situations, they will not use campaign literature that would bring disrepute to either organization or to the AFL-CIO.

Organizing disputes between the IBEW and the CWA in other industries are left for future discussion or settlement under the machinery of the AFL-CIO.

Police-Fire Mergers Hit At Convention

Miami Beach—Opposition to any proposal that fire and police departments be merged was affirmed by the AFL-CIO convention with a warning that where consolidation has been tried, "both police and fire services deteriorate rapidly."

"The expected economies prove to be elusive," a convention resolution said. "The protection which a community has a right to expect is no longer prompt or efficient. The public in general and the labor movement in particular must be truthfully informed of the serious danger to their lives and property when consolidation is proposed."

The resolution, which was sponsored by the Fire Fighters, said, "There is substantial reason to believe" that municipal officials promoting mergers of the two departments "are motivated as much by hostility toward organized labor as by a desire to practice the economies they claim will result."

The Fire Fighters expressed themselves as "shocked" at the prospect that some of their members in a merged force might be ordered to function as police and be "required to suppress the legitimate activities of fellow union members" during a strike.

Welfare Priority Sought In Bankruptcy Act

Miami Beach—The fourth biennial AFL-CIO convention urged Congress to adopt the Celler Bill amending the Bankruptcy Act to give payments due welfare and pension plans the same priority as wages and other direct payments in bankruptcy cases.

The resolution the delegates approved pointed out that contributions to such funds are as much of a direct labor cost to an employer as wages or other fringe benefits.

Cancer Campaign Quotas Met by 27 Affiliates

Miami Beach—Twenty-seven national and international unions, ranging from the small to the large, met or exceeded their quotas in the AFL-CIO's $1 million drive for the Eleanor Roosevelt Cancer Foundation by the time a total of $680,448.43 was presented to the first lady of the free world during the fourth constitutional convention.

Additional contributions continued to come in during the convention, both to AFL-CIO headquarters in Washington and to convention headquarters in Miami Beach.

The unions which met or went beyond their quota before the presentation were:

Auto Workers, Bricklayers, Broadcast Employes, Building Service Employes, Cement Workers, Retail Clerks, Clothing Workers, Coopers, Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, Firemen & Oilers, Ladies' Garment Workers, Glass & Ceramic Workers, Window Glass Cutters, Hod Carriers, Horse Shoers, Hosiery Workers, Hotel & Restaurant Employes, Allied Industrial Workers, Maintenance of Way Employes, Marine & Shipbuilding Workers, Maritime Union, Meat Cutters, Painters, Sleeping Car Porters, Pulp, Sulphite & Paper Mill Workers, and United Textile Workers.

'Sister Roosevelt' Cited For 25 Years in Guild

Miami Beach—In a dramatic, emotion-filled ceremony at the AFL-CIO convention here, the Newspaper Guild paid tribute to its most distinguished member—Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt—by presenting her with a specially-struck gold pin commemorating her 25th anniversary of membership in the union.

ANG Pres. Arthur Rosenstock, in making the presentation, declared that "we are throwing away the mold" from which the pin was cast "because there is only one of you and there should be only one pin."

The normally impassive working press corps covering the convention joined the rising ovation that followed.

Mrs. Roosevelt joined the Guild's Washington local in 1936 as her husband, the late Pres. Franklin D. Roosevelt, was completing his first term in the White House. She became eligible for membership by virtue of her daily newspaper column—My Day. Her membership has been completely voluntary and has yielded no direct contractural benefits, since syndicated columnists are excluded from the coverage of Guild collective bargaining agreements. She is now a member of ANG's New York local.

"She has given us much," Rosenstock declared, "and there is little that she has asked for and nothing adequate that we can do in return."

Addressing her as "sister" in the traditional trade union manner, Rosenstock expressed the Guild's pride in possessing "a dues-paying member of the majestic quality of Eleanor Roosevelt."

Offers to Contribute

Earlier Mrs. Roosevelt had remarked that she hoped her own union would not forget to approach her for a contribution to Labor's March on Cancer. Rosenstock, in response, said that ANG had not intended to do so, but now that she had raised the point, she would be approached along with other members. He noted, too, that the Guild had pledged an amount in excess of its 10-cents-per-member quota in the AFL-CIO drive to raise $1 million for cancer research in Mrs. Roosevelt's name.

The Guild president observed that Mrs. Roosevelt, whom he described as "the first lady of the world," had been given many accolades in the past and concluded the presentation by repeating this citation which accompanied the humanitarian service award given her last year by the ANG's Kingston, N.Y., local:

"You have been on the angels' side of more questions touching the heart of the humanities than any other personage of our day, male or female, and you are as vibrant and dynamic in the autumn of your life as most of us would wish to be in our thirties.

"Your example is a grand challenge, albeit frustrating for most of us. All the superlatives have been exhausted in your name. May you continue to frustrate us for a generation to come."

New Top Post Gets Approval Of Auxiliaries

Miami Beach—The third constitutional convention of the National AFL-CIO Auxiliaries voted approval of a new constitution and a wide range of legislative proposals.

The main action at the four-day meeting, held in conjunction with the AFL-CIO convention, created the post of executive director as the top office in the organization. This post is filled by appointment by the AFL-CIO president, with the approval of the Auxiliaries' executive council.

Mrs. Marcella S. Beatty, who had been the Auxiliaries' special representative with offices in Washington, D. C., became executive director.

Elected to two-year terms were: President, Mrs. Beatrice Weiland of Clintonville, Wis., and Federal Labor Union No. 19806; secretary-treasurer for another term, Mrs. Elda Luebbert of Washington, D. C., who also is president of the Machinists' Auxiliary; first vice president, Mrs. Beatrice Warwood of Akron, O., who also is president of the Rubber Workers' Auxiliary.

Seven vice presidents were also elected. The former by-laws provided for eight vice presidents.

In a series of resolutions the Auxiliaries called for federal aid to education, health care for the aged, consumer protection on drugs, safeguards against exploitation of migratory farm workers, federal standards on jobless pay, and the promotion of health insurance plans.

'First Lady' Receives Cancer Fund Gifts

By Gervase N. Love

Miami Beach—She came in from the side, the lady everybody loves. She was half-hidden by her escort of AFL-CIO vice presidents, but the convention knew she was there. Delegates and visitors hailed her with a roaring welcome that told better than words of the affection and esteem America's workers have for her.

For this was Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt, widow of the wartime President whose programs helped revive the trade union movement, a notable character in her own right, a member of the Newspaper Guild, and as Pres. George Meany described her in his introduction, "the first lady of the world."

"Any occasion of a trade union character that can bring to our platform Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt is always a happy occasion," he said. "This is a particularly happy occasion."

It was particularly happy because America's working men and women, through their unions, were presenting Mrs. Roosevelt with $680,448.43, the first installment of the $1 million the AFL-CIO Executive Council undertook to raise for the Eleanor Roosevelt Cancer Foundation in honor of her 77th birthday.

There were 50 pounds of checks in three cartons, ranging in size from 40 cents to the Auto Workers' $100,000. These included the full quotas, at 10 cents a member, of 27 international unions—in most cases more than the full quotas.

The money will be used to build research facilities named for Mrs. Roosevelt at hospitals and medical schools, and to sponsor an international fellowship program for cancer research and training.

To Mrs. Roosevelt the 50 pounds of checks represented not so much paper or so much money—they symbolized the idealism of the labor movement.

Tells Labor's Role

"I think," she said after another ovation at the conclusion of Meany's introduction, "that the labor movement has a great role to play in our country today.

"The labor movement—and perhaps I can say my movement, too, because I think sometimes I work as hard as any of you—I feel that it is part of our job to keep alive the ideals that you started with, the ideals of really helping the people to better conditions, to a better way of life which is part of the basis of democracy. . . .

"So I thank you for the inspiration you give, for the great generosity and understanding you have shown. Through your leaders, I hope you will convey to all the members my grateful thanks, and the thanks of all the members of the board (of the Foundation) who are trying to do something concrete in the field of cancer."

Mrs. Roosevelt expressed hope that the educational part of the fight on cancer might be the most important part, "because we could save a great deal more people than we do if there were more understanding and less fear, if we recognized the symptoms immediately."

She referred to the leaflets that have been made available for distribution, the efficacy of which Meany had cited, and said they were important because they helped people to recognize symptoms of cancer. If people were to have regular examinations, she said, "there would be fewer deaths from cancer and we would be able to lower the percentage very much faster."

"I am particularly happy," she added, "over the international scholarships, because none of us knows who will be the fortunate scientist who will eventually discover the cure. It won't be discovered all at once. You will find one thing and that will lead to another. Very often important discoveries just come by chance or by the fact that two people were talking together, one mind rubbing against the other, and it led to some new train of thought they could carry out.

"Every time we work together for something that benefits mankind, we have taken a step in advance and away from the destructive forces which are so often in the minds of all the peoples of the world."

In his introduction Meany praised the labor press for publicizing the $1 million campaign and for its role in securing the distribution of the cancer leaflets.

Meany announced that a check for $1,000 for the drive had been received from Mrs. Daniel J. Tobin in memory of her husband, the late former president of the Teamsters.

Keep Your Ideals High, Mrs. Roosevelt Advises

Miami Beach—Labor's "great role" as a force for good in the nation drew the warm praise of Mrs. Roosevelt as she replied to compliments given when AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany presented to her labor's gift to the Eleanor Roosevelt Cancer Foundation:

"You have always had the ideal of serving the needs of the people," she told the convention delegates here. "That is a most important thing to remember, because in our country we are constantly accused of being materialistic people, thinking only of how much money we can make . . .

"I think that it is part of our job to keep alive the ideals that you started with, the ideals of really helping the people to better conditions, to a better way of life, which is part of the basis of democracy."

Citing the plight of low-paid agricultural workers and other areas of unfinished business, such as slums and racial discrimination, she declared:

"I hope that we are going to continue to make of our movement the star in our country that leads the way. We need it badly today.

"Naturally we think primarily of the cloud that hangs over us, the struggle between democracy and communism that goes on every day in the world. I think the very best way is to take the positive attitude that we are going to show in the things that we do for people that democracy has something to contribute that communism never contributes."

Martin Luther King Addresses Delegates:

Labor, Negro Alliance Held Vital to Liberal Progress

Miami Beach—"The two most dynamic and cohesive liberal forces in the country are the labor movement and the Negro freedom movement," Dr. Martin Luther King declared here as he urged the AFL-CIO to increase its efforts to help erase all vestiges of racial discrimination in American life including labor unions.

The famed Baptist pastor is president of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference and as such is a leader of the non-violent Negro resistance to racial barriers in the nation. He is president emeritus of the Montgomery Improvement Association, whose boycott succeeded in ending segregation on buses in the Alabama city.

Dr. King told the delegates that the labor movement "undeniably . . . has done more than other forces in American society" to wipe out discrimination.

"Aid from real friends in labor has often come when the flames of struggle heighten," he said.

"Negroes are a solid component within the labor movement and a reliable bulwark for labor's whole program, and should expect more from it exactly as a member of a family expects more from his relatives than he expects from his neighbors," he declared.

Recalling the history of struggle that has marked the American labor movement, Dr. King observed that Negroes find this history "mirrors their own experience."

"We are confronted by powerful forces telling us to rely on the good will and understanding of those who profit by exploiting us," he said. "They deplore our discontent, they resent our will to organize, so that we may guarantee that humanity will prevail and equality will be exacted.

"They are shocked that action organizations, sit-ins, civil disobedience and protests are becoming our everyday tools, just as strikes, demonstrations and union organization became yours to insure that bargaining power genuinely existed on both sides of the table."

Thus, he said, "labor's historic tradition of moving forward to create vital people as consumers and citizens has become our own tradition, and for the same reasons."

Negroes, he noted, are almost entirely a working people, with needs identical with labor's needs.

"That is why Negroes support labor's demands and fight laws which curb labor," he said. "That is why the labor-hater and labor-baiter is virtually always a twin-headed creature, spewing anti-Negro epithets and anti-labor propaganda" from his two mouths.

But, he added, "to say that we are friends would be an empty platitude if we fail to behave as friends and honestly look to weaknesses in our relationship." Among these weaknesses, Dr. King maintained, are racial bars against Negro membership in certain unions and denial of apprenticeship training and vocational education to Negroes in some areas.

In an apparent reference to AFL-CIO Vice Pres. A. Philip Randolph as "a Negro leader who has a reputation of purity and honesty which has benefited the whole labor movement," Dr. King urged "thoughtful examination" of Randolph's criticism of labor's efforts to end discrimination within its own ranks.

"A man who has dedicated his long and faultless life to the labor movement cannot be raising questions harmful to it any more than a lifelong devoted parent can become the enemy of his child," the Atlanta pastor declared.

He urged labor to "cement its bonds with Negroes to their mutual advantage" by rooting out vigorously "every manifestation of discrimination." He held the Negro people up as a political ally adding to the strength "you are going to need to prevent automation from becoming a Moloch, consuming jobs and contract gains."

"Negroes given the vote will vote liberal and labor because they need the same liberal legislation labor needs," he declared, adding:

"Together we can be architects of democracy in a South rapidly industrializing. Together we can retool the political structure of the South, sending to Congress steadfast liberals who, joining with those from northern industrial states, will extend the frontiers of democracy for the whole nation. Together we can bring about the day when there will be no separate idenfication of Negroes and labor. . . .

Dream of Democracy

"This will be the day when he shall bring into full realization the dream of American democracy—a dream yet unfilled. A dream of equality of opportunity, of privilege and property widely distributed; a dream of a land where men will not argue that the color of a man's skin determines the content of his character; a dream of a nation where all our gifts and resources are held not for ourselves alone but as instruments of service for the rest of humanity; the dream of a country where every man will respect the dignity and worth of human personality—that is the dream."

DR. MARTIN LUTHER KING, famed leader of desegregation movement, gets AFL-CIO convention guest badge from Pres. Meany after addressing delegates.

Meany, Schnitzler Are Re-Elected By Acclaim

Miami Beach—George Meany was unanimously elected to his fourth two-year term as president of the AFL-CIO and was given a standing ovation as he was hailed as "the greatest labor leader of our day" by Vice Pres. Lee W. Minton, who was presiding.

Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler also was chosen without opposition for a fourth term, and 27 vice presidents were re-elected by acclamation.

Meany was proposed for another term in a nominating speech by Vice Pres. Peter T. Schoemann. Schoemann also is president of the Plumbers & Pipe Fitters, the union to which Meany belongs.

"He was the guiding light which led us out of the division of darkness ino the daylight of unity," Schoemann said. "He was labor's sword and shield when we purged ourselves of the betrayers of loyal, clean unionism. He has been labor's defender in the halls of Congress. He is labor's voice and image throughout the free world. . . .

The nomination was seconded by Vice Pres. Louis Hollander of the Clothing Workers, who declared "we are proud of you, the whole labor movement is proud of you and the whole free world looks up to your continuous leadership."

In a brief acceptance speech Meany said the convention gave the AFL-CIO "the tools to go forward with our work," and urged that "these jurisdictional quarrels and these raiding scraps" be placed in their proper perspective.

"We have come a long way," he said, "but we are still threatened by those who toy with the idea that America would be a better place if we had no unions or impotent and weak ones. And in the final analysis weak or impotent unions are worse than no union.

The Job Ahead

"So we face the job, the very complicated job, of living up to the demands of citizenship . . . By getting these quarrels to where they can be handled in a proper way—not to interfere with our other activities—we can make our contribution to our membership and our contribution to the welfare and to the interests of all of the citizens

Schnitzler, like Meany, was nominated by the head of his own union, Pres. Daniel E. Conway of the American Bakery & Confectionery Workers.

"You and I have witnessed in this convention evidence of outstanding leadership by a great team which speaks more eloquently than any words that I could utter," Conway said. "You have already, by your unanimous action, returned one member of that team to office, and I am certain that you will want to do likewise for the other member of that team."

Seconding the nomination was Sec.-Treas. Charles H. Marciante of the New Jersey AFL-CIO.

Schnitzler predicted that with the "new kind of vitality" the convention gave the AFL-CIO, "we are going ahead now full-speed in the work of organizing the unorganized."

The vice presidents were renominated en bloc on nomination by Pres. John J. Murphy of the bricklayers.

Convention Approves Broad Civil Rights Plan

tions, in schools, in citizenship and in every field of life."

It called on all affiliates to:

- Eliminate any remaining segregation of local union membership on the basis of race or color. "Segregation is discrimination," the resolution declared. "Just as we cannot accept the maintenance of separate but equal schools, so we refuse to countenance the existence of separate but equal unions in the ranks of our movement."
- Make sure their contracts do not permit separate lines of seniority on the basic of race, religion or national orgin, and that equal opportunities on the job are guaranteed for all workers.
- Make a special effort to write into contracts non-discrimination clauses covering hiring, promotion and conditions of employment.
- Take the initiative in expanding apprenticeship and training opportunities for all workers and in insuring that qualified applicants are accepted without regard to race, creed, color or national origin.
- Cooperate with the President's Committee on Equal Opportunity in effecting compliance with the President's executive order banning discrimination in federal employment and under federal contracts.

The resolution also outlines procedures to be followed in investigating complaints of discrimination, seeking voluntary compliance with the cooperation of the affiliate involved, and referral of unresolved complaints to the AFL-CIO Executive Council for appropriate action.

The federation's Dept. of Civil Rights is directed, in any case where no effort is evident toward correcting discrimination by an employer or a union, to present its findings to the President's Committee on Equal Employment Opportunity.

Heart of the machinery set up to enforce compliance with AFL-CIO policy is a provision granting the federation's Civil Rights Committee the authority for the first time to initiate complaints on its own motion on the basis of prima facie evidence that discrimination is being practiced.

The convention reviewed "the solid progress" it said had been achieved in the past two years in furthering AFL-CIO Policy on civil rights, commending outstanding gains by a number of international unions, central bodies and AFL-CIO departments.

It gave special praise to Kennedy for setting up the President's Equal Employment Committee as "the beginning of a vigorous drive against discrimination" in areas of federal responsibility.

"Pres. Meany's active membership on the President's Committee and his chairmanship of the important Subcommittee on Apprenticeship and Training has provided a basis for close and constructive cooperation between organized labor and the government in the pursuit of the common objective of nondiscrimination in employment and in work-training," the convention observed.

It found, however, that "serious shortcomings and deficiencies" still persist in all areas.

The resolution renewed the AFL-CIO's support for enactment of fair employment practice acts by the federal government and in states where such laws are not already on the statute books. It called on states and communities to pass enforceable laws to halt discrimination in housing and urged the President to bar any form of federal aid that contributes to segregated housing or its financing.

The convention called for a stronger federal civil rights law, liberalization of the Senate's filibuster" rule, and review by the National Labor Relations Board of all unfair practice cases where false race hate propaganda has been used to coerce employes in their choice of a bargaining representa-

In an amendment offered during floor discussion of the resolution, AFL-CIO Vice Pres. James B. Carey sought to substitute different language dealing with employers' attempts to incite race hatred during NLRB elections. The amendment failed to pass.

Earlier in the convention, Randolph and Vice Pres. Milton P. Webster of the Sleeping Car Porters defended their union and upheld its civil rights activities against criticism in an Executive Council report of last October. The council's report had responded to criticism by Randolph of the AFL-CIO's efforts against discrimination. The convention approved a Resolutions Committee recommendation that all documents relating to the matter be deposited with the council.

Meany emphasized to the delegates that solution of civil rights problems "is not going to be done in Washington alone."

"We will get a good committee and we have a good staff," he said, but much of the effort must be applied at the local level "with the cooperation and assistance of the international unions, of the state federations and of the local central bodies."

Randolph praised the resolution despite his stated desire for stronger sanctions than those provided.

"I am determined," he declared, "in connection with the civil rights committee which may be appointed by the President, and with the civil rights department, with adequate personnel, to make the resolution work. And I hope that it will."

AFL-CIO Vice Pres. Walter P. Reuther said he hoped the policy statement "can be the first step in a whole series of vigorous steps to give meaning and purpose and substance to these noble words in the resolution so that we can go back home together and begin to fight the practical fight to give every American equal rights and equal opportunities and equal dignity in the labor movement and all over America."

AFL-CIO Vice Pres. - Joseph Curran also stressed that the resolution in itself would not "stamp out the evil that has infested our country and made the image of America something for the Communists and others to use."

Other delegates who took the floor to urge decisive action to implement the new program included Vice Pres. Russell R. Lasley of the Packinghouse Workers, Charles Hayes, also of the UPWA, and Louis Manning of the Transport Workers. The latter pointed out the presence of visiting trade unionists from Asian and African nations and declared:

"I want to see a strong resolution passed here today so that the brothers can take it back to their countries."

'Subsidy' of Struck Firms Denounced

Miami Beach — The AFL-CIO convention recorded its "emphatic opposition" to federal government "subsidization" of assaults against legitimate strikes by employers doing business with the government.

A resolution cited as a technique used "the device of contract renegotiation and the absorption by the government of a substantial portion of the additional costs incurred."

The delegates called on the Armed Services Committees of both branches of Congress to make a full investigation of this policy in the Dept. of Defense "or any other branch of the federal government."

"Labor does not deny that under the Taft-Hartley Act the company has a legal right to keep its doors open during a strike any more than we dispute the union's right to withhold its labor when all other means of collective bargaining have failed," the resolution said.

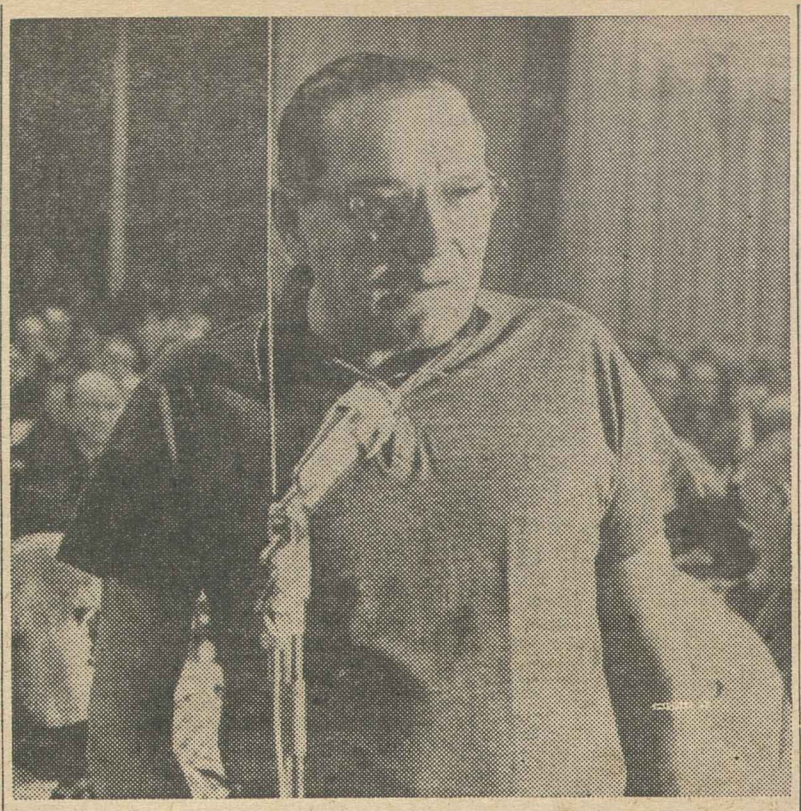
"We vehemently oppose, however, the use of taxpayers' money to assure any company that, no matter what its policies on labor relations, the customer who is buying more than 80 percent of its product will also underwrite three-fourths of the costs for what should be a private dispute between the company and the representative of its employes."

The resolution was prompted by disclosures made through the effort of Rep. Frank Kowalski (D-Conn.) that the Defense Dept. had paid $7.5 million to help underwrite the $10 million cost of strikes by the Auto Workers and Machinists at three United Aircraft Corp. plants.

Situs Picketing Issue Referred to Meany

Miami Beach—Two resolutions on situs picketing were referred by the AFL-CIO convention to Pres. George Meany on recommendation of the Resolutions Committee.

AFL-CIO Vice Pres. David J. McDonald, in making the proposal as secretary of the committee, said the hope was that Meany would be able to bring together the interested parties "with a view toward working out an accomodation."



E. C. HALLBECK, president of Postal Clerks, speaks from floor microphone during discussion of resolutions. He represented the union formed from the recent three-way merger of the Post Office Clerks, the Postal Transport Association and the previously unaffiliated United National Association of Post Office Craftsmen.

Federal Tax Reform, Budget Changes Urged

Miami Beach—The AFL-CIO convention has called for federal tax reforms to ensure "that taxes be levied on the basis of ability to pay and in a manner which advances the welfare of the entire nation."

The delegates also approved a resolution urging the modernization of the federal budget. This would enable the President to better manage government resources, the statement said, and lay the basis for sounder monetary, tax and public investment policies.

In the action calling for tax reforms, the AFL-CIO:

- Backed Kennedy Adminstration efforts to end preferential tax benefits for Americans and American firms overseas. Action to end these "unjustified benefits" would boost federal revenue by some $250 million a year, slow the "export of U.S. jobs" and help end the U.S. balance of payments deficit.
- Supported action to close not only the tax loopholes cited by Pres. Kennedy in a message to Congress "but all loopholes." The AFL-CIO estimated the Kennedy proposals would cancel a $1.5 billion revenue loss, whereas all loopholes and tax avoidances are estimated to amount to a $17 billion loss in revenue.

Congress failed to act on the Kennedy proposals to withhold interest and dividends taxes as taxes are withheld from wages and salaries; to repeal the preferential tax treatment granted dividends in 1954; to end the worst expense account abuses; to end the capital gains treatment of profit from the sale of depreciable business property.

- Opposed "the poorly conceived and unwarranted tax credit proposal" urged by the President to stimulate certain types of business investment.

"However," the AFL-CIO said, "we endorse the current Treasury review of the useful life of various types of capital assets in an effort to realistically reappraise legitimate depreciation allowances for tax purposes."

- Urged the Administration to support and Congress to approve flexible use of the federal taxing power so the levy on personal income can be adjusted temporarily according to the needs of the economy.
- Backed federal tax cuts after current loopholes are closed and national security needs are met.

The AFL-CIO, in the resolution on tax policy, also lashed the perennial Herlong-Baker tax reform bill as "a rich man's delight." In slashing the tax rate on higher incomes, this business-backed bill would "reward the already affluent" and undermine progressive taxation while cutting revenue, the AFL-CIO said. The Herlong-Baker proposal is backed by the National Association of Manufacturers.

The AFL-CIO also supported revenue-raising efforts of state and local governments, but urged that state revenue systems be based on ability to pay and not on continuing "regressive sales, payroll and property taxes."

Cooperative devices were urged to enable the federal government to aid state and local levels and the state to aid local sub-divisions.

Anti-Trust Drive Held Bid to Stifle Unions

Miami Beach—The AFL-CIO has branded the business-led attempt to put unions under anti-trust laws as a move aimed at weakening labor "to a point of ineffectiveness" and "halting" future collective bargaining gains.

A convention resolution directed the federation's Executive Council to fight the proposed legislation "with a vigorous education and public relations program."

In two other resolutions dealing with restrictive labor legislation, the convention:

- Called on Congress to review the Landrum-Griffin and Taft-Hartley Acts "with a view to correcting the numerous unfair, unworkable or unnecessary provisions."
- Denounced a bill introduced by Sen. John L. McClellan (D-Ark.) which would "prohibit strikes and establish compulsory arbitration for . . . any business enterprise engaged in the production of any material essential to the production of munitions." The resolution termed the bill "a threat to the American system of free enterprise and free labor."

The anti-trust resolution said that if big business groups were successful in repealing the Clayton Act provision which declares that "the labor of a human being is not a commodity," then:

"National or even company-wide bargaining would presumably be eliminated. Employes working for any of the multi-plant employers that dominate the American economy would be restrained from using their collective strength in bettering their wages and working conditions.

"Instead workers would be forced to bargain directly with the plant where they are employed as if that plant was a separate entity, completely devoid of the employer's other interests.

"Obviously," the resolution declared, "this would be an intolerable and totally unrealistic situation, and would fatally weaken unions."

The convention resolution on Landrum-Griffin charged that "absurdities" in election requirements were causing unnecessary expense to unions, as were "senseless" bonding provisions.

It attacked the "nefarious" Landrum-Griffin provisions restricting organizational and recognition picketing.

The convention urged the Senate and House labor committees to schedule hearings early in the 1962 congressional session on Landrum-Griffin and Taft-Hartley revisions.

Federal Action Urged:

Growth of Economy Called Key to Jobs

Miami Beach—The AFL-CIO convention has called for strong federal policies to promote economic growth "to get the economy off the rollercoaster of frequent recessions and aborted recoveries."

The resolution outlined a wide range of emergency and long-term policies in economic and fiscal areas to foster a steady expansion of jobs. Unemployment, though down in October, was reported by the Labor Dept. at a 6.1 percent level.

"Unemployment will yield only to a massive, total assault," Auto Workers' Pres. Walter P. Reuther declared in supporting the resolution.

"Halfway, half-hearted measures will not solve unemployment." Reuther, who presented the resolution as chairman of the AFL-CIO Economic Policy Committee, said the nation needs 41 million jobs in the next 10 years "just to stand still."

The Kennedy Administration has acted to promote recovery, he said, but he warned "there are danger signals ahead."

The resolution noted that "the present economic advance has a long way to go before full employment and maximum use of plants and machines can be reached."

Despite the urgent need for expansionary activities to overcome the slack in the economy, "there is a recurring outcry" for measures against "inflation," it pointed out.

Those who are alarmed over "an imaginary runaway inflation" seek a balanced federal budget within the coming months, a tighter money supply and "a tight lid on wage increases," the resolution said.

Would Mean Stagnation

Such policies would mean "weak consumer markets, rising unemployment and economic stagnation at home," it added.

To achieve full recovery and full employment, the convention proposed:

- "An expansionary federal budget policy" to meet the nation's needs and spur sales, production and jobs.
- Reform of the Federal tax structure, closing loopholes which could produce $17 billion more in revenue.
- Lower interest rates set by the Federal Reserve system.
- Federal Reserve System purchase of long-term government bonds in the open market, enabling banks to maintain lower interest rates.
- An attack on hard-core long-term unemployment problems along lines of the Area Redevelopment program.
- A federal program of retraining the jobless and updating skills, with government payments during training and for relocating to job areas.
- Improvement of the unemployment compensation system through federal standards on duration and levels of benefits.
- Reorganization of the United States Employment Service.
- A program through which the President's Council of Economic Advisers would set forth economic guidelines to aid private decision-making on prices, wages, salaries and investment, and government decision on spending and taxing.
- Authority to the president to make temporary income tax cuts and to put public works projects into operation to counter downturns.
- Control of corporate price policies through federal agencies or congressional committee studies.
- Efforts toward a more favorable balance of payment through an international banking arrangement to relieve America of burdens as a world banker and reduce reliance on the dollar.

Convention Turns Down Three Charter Appeals

Miami Beach—Three appeals which reached the floor of the AFL-CIO convention were rejected by the delegates on recommendation of the convention Appeals Committee.

One was that of former Pres. Walter Crammond of the Minneapolis Central Labor Union, the charter of which was suspended by AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany last July because of failure to comply with rules for keeping records.

A trustee took charge of the central body's affairs and under authority vested in him by Meany, suspended the officers. Crammond appeared personally before the committee, but it refused to upset Meany's action, which previously had been upheld on appeal to the AFL-CIO Executive Council.

The appeal of the Springfield (Mass.) Central Labor Council likewise was rejected. Meany had revoked the charters of the council and the Western Massachusetts Industrial Union Council last April because of their failure, despite repeated efforts, to work out a merger agreement. A new central body covering the Springfield area has been chartered.

The Troy (N.Y.) Area Industrial Union Council, which appealed through Former Pres. Joseph Killian, likewise failed to win reinstatement of its charter.

The charter and that of the Troy Central Federation of Labor were revoked on Oct. 27, also because of failure to merge. The difficulty, the committee reported, was that the jurisdiction of the Troy Area IUC overlapped that of the Albany Federation of Labor and that of the Troy CFL. In recommending denial of the appeal, the committee urged that a new merged central body be established in Rensselaer (Troy) County as soon as possible, "and the affiliation of all elements of organized labor in Albany and Rensselaer Counties to their respective central bodies, on an equitable basis, be actively sought."

A Ware Mistake Gets in Proceedings

Miami Beach—Delegates to the AFL-CIO convention got a hearty chuckle when they read the proceedings of the first day's session.

They had heard AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany say, in his keynote address, that "we don't buy the propaganda that you are better red than dead."

In the printed proceedings, it came out: ". . . better wed than dead."

Convention Urges Cooperation:

Organizing Termed Labor's Major Unfinished Business

Miami Beach—The AFL-CIO convention has proclaimed the drive to "organize the unorganized" as "the major unfinished business of the American labor movement."

The convention instructed the national AFL-CIO to encourage top-level conferences among unions organizing in the same field to pave the way for cooperative campaigns by unions, groups of unions or the AFL-CIO itself.

Each affiliate was urged to take a hard look at its organizing activities to determine if a greater and more effective organizing effort is possible.

The resolution also called on unions to encourage their field staffs "to attempt sincerely to solve local problems of organizational jurisdiction and to assist fellow unions in their organizing campaigns."

The AFL-CIO was directed to renew efforts to resolve organizing jurisdiction problems "and see that adequate funds are made available" for organizing "with particular attention being given to assisting unions responsible for organizing the larger sections of unorganized workers."

A committee report accompanying the resolution declared that successful organizing campaigns require "a greater commitment of manpower, time and money than ever before."

The committee called for "carefully prepared public relations and publicity programs" in conection with organizing drives, and warned that "closely coordinated" organizing programs are essential "to prevent the employer from turning potential union victory to union defeat through a last-minute scare and hate program.

Meany Asks 'Common Sense'

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany told the delegates that cooperation from international union representatives in the field—"a common sense approach"—is necessary for effective organizing. Internal disputes, he said, are "just one of a number" of obstacles.

"It is not nearly as big a factor as some of us have been told," he said. "Of course if a union is not progressing . . . I suppose one reason is as good as another."

AFL-CIO Vice Pres. Walter P. Reuther told the convention that his union—the Auto Workers—is prepared to "lay down $1 million today" for a joint organizing drive "and join with the people in this labor movement to get on the march."

Referring to help the UAW had received from other unions in the thirties, Reuther said:

"Just as the strong helped the weak in those days . . . we are prepared to help unions having a tremendous organizational potential, but who lack the resources."

Reuther termed labor the only element of society "that can mobilize an effective counter-thrust against the forces of reaction." Unless labor moves ahead organizationally, he said, then "not only the labor movement but American democracy" is "in trouble."

AFL-CIO Organization Dir. John W. Livingston, who opened the convention discussion, said labor has "not been standing still" in its organizing activities. The 1.5 million workers organized since the 1955 merger have been largely offset, however, by membership losses from technological changes and plant shutdowns, he said.

He added bluntly: "We haven't been moving ahead as fast as we should." Some reasons, he said, were:

- The "unfairness" of the National Labor Relations Board under the Eisenhower Administration.
- Use by employers of the McClellan Senate committee hearings to smear the labor movement.
- Appeals to race prejudice by southern employers.

Meany told the convention that labor's greatest organizing potential "outside of the retail and service trades, which are expanding," is "in an area where we have our strongest unions . . . the industrial unions and the building trades." He said:

Defines Potential

"There are the greatest number of non-union people or company union people who, I feel, would be most likely to respond to our organizing effort, because they are the same type of people that we have in our strongest unions. They do the same work."

Meany emphasized the need for agreement among competing unions before the AFL-CIO can put its own staff to work helping in an organizing drive.

The labor movement, he said, can "help the entire economy" by organizing workers "and raising their standard of life, and doing the simple trade union job that we were organized for many years ago." In other highlights of the debate:

- Sec.-Treas. John Chupka of the Textile Workers Union of America reported to the delegates on beatings of union organizers in the South, on local and state ordinances used to interfere with organizing campaigns and said:

"We ought to raise our voices against these outrages, and I think the AFL-CIO should lead the way because these things are happening all too often."

- Sec.-Treas. Al Hartnett of the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers said organizing can move forward if the labor movement can "rise above the most petty differences which separate us."
- Pres. Michael J. Quill of the Transport Workers declared that organizing progress depends on solving the problem of "inter-union raiding."
- Pres. Joseph Curran of the Maritime Union termed the resolution one "which every member and every delegate to this convention supports fully and is willing to do a job in behalf of."
- David Livingston, vice president of the Retail, Wholesale & Department Store Union, said the retail industry is dominated by chain stores and "if you want to organize, you must organize nationally." He called for "cooperative efforts" by all unions involved.

Convention Pledges Fight For Equal Redistricting

Miami Beach—The AFL-CIO has pledged to "utilize all its resources" to restore representative government through equitable redistricting of state legislative and congressional districts.

A convention resolution denounced the "disgraceful malapportionment" of most state legislatures, dominated by "rural minorities," which has resulted in city-dwellers being "cheated out of proper representation."

The same rural domination of legislatures is reflected in a wide disparity in population among congressional districts and in "geographically grotesque" gerrymandered boundaries, the resolution declared.

The delegates called on Congress to pass a bill introduced by Rep. Emanuel Celler (D-N. Y.) which would require "geographically compact congressional districts of reasonably equal population, enforceable by the federal courts."

The convention declared that the people "have the right to expect relief from the federal courts" to force state legislatures to adopt periodic, equitable redistricting.

"Every year that Congress and the state legislatures fail to act," the convention noted, "fewer and fewer citizens exert more and more weight at the polls."

The House of Representatives, the resolution charged, "fails to be truly representative of the people" because of inequitable districting. This, the convention declared, is "in violation of the clear intent of the constitution."

The convention voiced the hope that "with leadership from the President, support by Congress and in the courts and with the insistent demand of the people, the ancient disease of unrepresentative government which mars our federal and state law-making bodies can be ended."

Goldberg Bars Freeze, Stresses Productivity

Miami Beach—Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg told the AFL-CIO convention here that the Administration is opposed to a wage freeze and "believes in advancing wages and standards."

Overall, Goldberg declared, the wage increase pattern should be in line with the nation's productivity gains and he said this should be brought about through "responsible collective bargaining."

"We do not believe in a status quo situation," he emphasized. "There is plenty of room for advance in this highly productive economy."

Goldberg said he considered the collective bargaining pattern of the past year to have met this test of responsibility. He told the delegates that the Administration does not seek to impose "a single wage policy" on the economy or discourage correction of inequities between industries and within industries.

He added: "Inequities in wages do exist, there is no question about it. We do not propose in any way to restrict the ability of collective bargaining to remove or solve these inequities. That is the day-to-day business of trade unionism and we encourage and support it."

In a news conference here, Goldberg emphasized the Administration's desire to achieve full employment "on a 40-hour week" basis through full utilization of America's productive capacity.

He emphasized that he considers congressional enactment of "every aspect" of the Administration's six-point "Program for Economic Progress" as "vitally necessary" to solve the unemployment problem.

Drop in Jobless Rate

Goldberg termed the drop in the jobless rate from 6.8 to 6.1 percent in November "a significant breakthrough" and said he looks for further improvement. But he emphasized his concern at the unreduced level of long-term and hard-core unemployment. He noted that the number of persons jobless for 27 weeks or longer has been close to 700,000 over the past year and showed little improvement in November.

There are still "too many" persons who are working part-time because they can't find full-time jobs, Goldberg added. He put the number at 2.42 million in November, up slightly from the previous month.

Goldberg, in his address to the convention, voiced strong optimism "in the future of the labor movement, a united labor movement."

He expressed hope that the convention would "concentrate on what unites us" rather than on "what divides us. Let's concentrate," he said, "on the common devotion and common dedication to the great ideals that brought you all into the labor movement."

The Secretary of Labor reminded the delegates that millions of dollars spent on inter-union rivalry before the merger of the former AFL and former CIO had resulted in a net change of only a few thousand members—"the most expensive repatriation in the history of mankind."

Later, in his news conference, Goldberg said Labor Dept. statistics on labor's jurisdictional disputes show only an "insignificant" number of jobs involved.

Goldberg told the convention that the 1957 expulsion of unions which did not measure up to the AFL-CIO standards was "the finest hour of the trade union movement of America."

Low-Wage Sector

Goldberg said that one of labor's "unfinished tasks" is to "direct more of its attention" to the low-wage sector of the economy "where people are drawing substandard wages."

By building up the buying power in this area, Goldberg said, labor would "contribute to the general welfare and the business welfare as well."

Goldberg praised labor's support of the nation's foreign policy, hailed the AFL-CIO's "forthright stand" on Berlin, and welcomed the decision of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions to hold its 1962 world congress in that city, the "beleaguered outpost of the free world."

Community Services Get Pledge of Action

Miami Beach—Broad participation in the AFL-CIO Community Services program was urged by the federation's fourth constitutional convention here to help meet the "personal and social needs" of union members.

A convention resolution called on all affiliates and their locals to establish Community Services Committees, with full-time staffs if possible at the central body and international union levels, and to work with AFL-CIO community service activities in developing programs and policies.

The resolution noted that organized labor has long recognized that to advance the personal and social well-being of its members it must work "for a wholesome community which provides decent housing, good schools, adequate health facilities, sufficient recreational opportunities and good social service programs for all the people."

The AFL-CIO, the convention said, is committed to promotion of stronger community social service programs and greater participation of unions in community life. It pledge the federation to:

- Encourage equitable labor representation on agency boards and committees, both public and voluntary.
- Stimulate labor participation in formulating agency policies and programs through specialized training programs.
- Assist union members, their families and other citizens in time of need, particularly during strikes, layoffs and unemployment.
- Plan for union participation in local civil defense and disaster relief programs and operations.
- Assist in planning and developing health and welfare services to meet existing community needs in such areas as mental health, alcoholism, aging and the aged, youth, recreation, blood banks, rehabilitation, fluoridation and health education.
- Cooperate with other agencies through voluntary federation wherever possible, for voluntary health and welfare services.
- Cooperate with other agencies in dealing with and in solving social and health problems.
- Participate in all genuine efforts designed to improve the standards and practices of social work.
- Participate in international social welfare programs.
- Assist union members to carry forward their community responsibility more effectively through specialized community leadership training programs.

Opposition Voted To Postal Rate Rise

Miami Beach—Opposition to proposed legislation for postal rate increases which would boost the expense of distributing trade union publications was voted by the AFL-CIO convention.

"It is our conviction," said a resolution passed unanimously, "that the historic status of the postal service should be maintained as a public service properly supported by general tax revenues."

The proposed increases, the resolution said, would "seriously affect the exchange of news and views by placing mail services beyond the economic reach of many publications."

"The unimpeded flow of information to our trade union membership," it declared, "is vital to the preservation of our democratic institutions and our way of life."

A Challenge Met

THE RECORD of the fourth constitutional convention of the AFL-CIO is a record of facing up to the many problems and challenges confronting the trade union movement and fashioning the policies and programs to cope with them.

Out of the nearly 200 resolutions presented to the convention for action, the dozen speeches and the floor discussion, came the answers clearly displaying the determination of the labor movement to better serve its members, the nation and the free world.

The adoption of the internal disputes plan marks a great stride forward for the labor movement, for in this plan the AFL-CIO has created a method for fair and equitable settlement of disputes and quarrels within the federation.

It is the culmination of over two and one-half years of intensive effort to provide answers to problems that have troubled the labor movement from its historic beginnings 75 years ago.

The disputes plan represents the best thinking of the labor movement and reflects the determination of trade unionists to get on with the primary tasks of the union movement in the economic, political and social areas without the drag of internal differences.

The intense attention on the convention floor as the lengthy disputes plan was read, the sea of hands voting assent and the roar of approval that greeted the announcement of adoption was the most dramatic testimony to this feeling that there are too many other important things to be done.

ONE OF THESE important areas is the final push to wipe out all forms of racial discrimination in the nation and the few vestiges that remain in some areas of the trade union movement. The convention's civil rights policy is the most comprehensive ever adopted by any labor federation and contains importantly strengthened machinery for enforcing the policy adopted by the delegates.

The convention reflected strongly the feeling that this problem also, like the internal disputes problem, must be resolved so that there are no divisions within the labor movement as it moves forward to grapple with the problems of raising living standards for the exploited, organizing the spreading white collar sectors of the nation and fighting for an economy that can provide jobs for all those willing and able to work.

The delegates shaped policies for a strong and stable economy to cope with continuing high unemployment and job displacement, focusing attention on the need for increasing consumer purchasing power through higher wages and shorter hours.

They made it clear that all unions belong in the federation but only on the basis of meeting the ethical standards and policies that are fundamental to the operations of the AFL-CIO.

They soberly emphasized their determination to support the free world's struggle for peace and freedom and the federation's unyielding opposition to totalitarianism whether of the right or left.

And with a deep concern they dedicated the labor movement once again to the welfare of workers in all countries in building strong and enduring free trade unions that would help bring decent living standards and social justice.

In his keynote speech to the convention, AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany said simply: "Labor's job is never done."

This theme ran through the convention and affected its every action. It must be the theme also of the delegates as they return to their home areas to implement the programs and policies adopted by this historic convention.

OK, Let's Get Going

ILPA Head Tells Convention:

Labor Press Job—Informing Members—A 'Tremendous' One

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, introducing Richard C. Howard, president of the Intl. Labor Press Association, to the AFL-CIO convention at Miami Beach for a brief report as a fraternal delegate, said:

"This association is made up of editors and staff people who work on labor papers throughout the country. This association has been conducting a real campaign to improve the character and content of our labor papers and to spread the circulation. I happen to think that they are doing a real good job."

Following are excerpts from Howard's address to the convention.

I WAS PLEASED TO HEAR Pres. Meany credit the labor press for arousing interest and support for Labor's March on Cancer—not only among union members, but among influential segments of the general public.

This is another indication that the labor press is being read, and increasing its power and prestige. This progress is necessary and highly desirable, if the labor press is to do its job.

The job is a tremendous one. The labor press provides the only regular full-time media designed to keep the union member informed of the aims and programs of the trade union movement.

The commercial press will not do this job. In fact, most daily newspapers and some of the most widely circulated magazines constantly paint a distorted and unfavorable image of the trade union movement and its most respected leaders.

If you have doubts on this point, I would commend for your reading a book entitled "The Press" written by A. J. Liebling. The book surveys the omissions, distortions and fiction in some of the country's best known newspapers and magazines.

Liebling was a guest speaker at the ILPA convention. He lamented the fact that daily newspapers are doing such a poor job of reporting the news and suggested that the labor movement might find it necessary to establish competitive newspapers, particularly in those areas where one publisher has a monopoly.

Perhaps Liebling's comments might better have been made to this audience, for you are the trade union leaders who will decide when and where and to what extent the labor movement will fight back against a monopolistic and unfriendly press.

The labor press can do a more effective job but it must be adequately financed. You get only what you are willing and able to pay for.

THE ILPA HAS EXPANDED its program of service to the labor movement by publication of a booklet entitled "Press Relations." You will be hearing about this publication and we hope you will use it and find it helpful. Other publications designed to help the labor press editor and his union are planned, and one is nearly ready for the printer.

Our organization continues its long fight to unmask those phony publications that pose as representatives of the labor movement, only for the purpose of milking thousands of dollars in advertising revenue from gullible businessmen. These publications cannot become members of the ILPA, for they do not conduct their business as required by the ILPA code of ethics. Adoption of the ILPA code of ethics and living up to that code permits member publications to display the ILPA emblem, which is now recognized as the symbol of the bona fide labor press.

We do not expect to expose all the racketeers, or force them all out of business, for new ones seem to spring up as fast as others are exposed. But our fight will hurt them where it hurts the most, in the pocketbook.

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

ONE OF THE PROBLEMS California's Gov. Edmund G. (Pat) Brown (D) faces in what appears likely to be a hard fight for re-election against former Vice Pres. Nixon next year is the somewhat colorless image he projects. It may interest people in other states to know that by at least one western liberal journal of opinion, Brown is rated flatly as "the best governor California has had in many decades"—and "that includes Earl Warren," now the nation's Chief Justice but three times elected as the state's Republican chief executive.

This judgment is expressed in an editorial in Frontier, which subtitles itself "the Voice of the New West" and is circulated nationally—though not sufficiently, one fears—as a respected magazine of opinion.

There is always an area of disagreement about a public figure among those who support legislation of the kind in which labor believes. There are still those who think Roosevelt was a trimmer and there are lunatic-fringers who think he was a Communist and an arch-plotter who got our Navy scotched in Pearl Harbor.

Nevertheless, Brown has put together a legislative and administrative record far more comprehensive than most state executives are able to get in a lot more time.

He got rid of the cross-filing law that made California politics a nightmare, producing such results as the nomination of former Senator William F. Knowland on both Republican and Democratic ballots one year, while the next time around he lost to Brown for the governorship by more than a million votes.

Brown has improved the working conditions and the pay of state employes, backed the passage of a fair employment practice law, put through California's first effective water conservation program.

He has supported a good deal of labor and liberal-backed legislation, much of which he got through.

Nixon, however, has obvious pulling power and has carried his state four times in elections (though twice, one supposes, anyone riding Eisenhower's coattails would have got through).

In these circumstances, as Frontier points out, what Brown needs badly is enough money to get on television frequently and talk about his record. He also needs registered voters who care about that kind of thing. The one thing he won't have is newspaper support, and television and campaigns to every town and to factory gates are the salvation of the candidate the newspapers want to bury.

THE STUDENT NEWSPAPER of the University of Mississippi recently carried an editorial on so-called "right-to-work" laws pointing out that such a law allows "the abnegation of a majority. In fact, it encourages it."

"It weakens the effectiveness of the union and reduces its chances for success," the editorial continues.

A union "cannot be solidly united" unless within a shop it can establish its security "by the democratic practice of election." And "to deny the desires of a majority is to deny the process of democracy itself."

The piece, getting right down to cases about Mississippi's own "work law," ends:

The law "is no boon to the working man. It is an obstacle to his continued improvement. Therefore it must be repealed."

The writer signs himself simply "Coleman." He is a student and a son of former Mississippi Gov. J. P. Coleman. The younger generation can't be composed entirely of self-proclaimed "rightists" and "conservatives" who spout their apprehension of the past and future at NAM conventions.

SEN. CLIFFORD CASE (R-N. J.) is telling his constitutents that Pres. Kennedy will have to exert great persistence in order to win support for his major legislative programs, including school aid, from Democratic members of Congress.

This is true—and Case is a member of the GOP who, a triumphant winner as a liberal in his last election fight, has a right to say so. A few Republican votes in Charlie Halleck's House, in addition to Democratic votes, would also help.

CLC Makes Xmas Appeal For Royal York Strikers

Ottawa—Special financial support for Royal York Hotel strikers and their families at Christmas has been asked by the Canadian Labor Congress in a message to all unions throughout Canada.

CLC Sec.-Treas. Donald McDonald told officers of all national, international and provincial affiliates that the workers, on strike for some 31 weeks, need a bit of encouragement at the holiday season.

The strike followed nearly eight months of fruitless negotiations. Since then, McDonald said, the Canadian Pacific Railroad owners of the hotel have tried to force "unconditional surrender" on several hundred workers.

The big Toronto hotel has been operated by strikebreakers who cross the picket lines, manned mostly by women and girls. Top civic leaders have refused to cross the lines and many events have been canceled because the Musicians and others refuse to work without a contract.

The CLC is pressing for a settlement and lending its support to fund-raising activities to tide strikers over the holidays and help them brave the usual harsh weather.

For Attacks on Democracy:

Speakers, Delegates Denounce Extremists of 'Radical Right'

Miami Beach—The radical right came under a crossfire from speakers and delegates to the AFL-CIO's fourth constitutional convention here.

Federation Pres. George Meany, in his keynote speech, charged that the John Birch Society seems "determined to take us back into the 19th century" and that its "only consideration in this time of the nation's crisis is to tear down the character and the standing and the personality of the great leaders of this country."

Dr. Martin Luther King also likened today's right-wing extremists to "those who in the second half of the 19th century could not tolerate organized labor."

"Whether it be the ultra-right wing in the form of Birch societies or the alliance . . . between big military and big business, or the coalition of southern Dixiecrats and northern reactionaries —whatever the form, these menaces now threaten everything decent and fair in American life," Dr. King declared. "Their target is labor, liberals and the Negro people. . . ."

A convention policy resolution on civil liberties and internal security charged that "the resurgence of right-wing fanaticism with its now open attacks on democracy and democratic institutions constitutes a threat not only to our liberties but to our national security."

The resolution hit particularly the linking of the extreme right with a few high officers of the armed forces, declaring:

"As we have seen only too often in other countries, intervention of the military into politics results in the undermining of the democratic process of government.

Warren 'Prime Target'

"It is no mere coincidence that one of the prime targets of the John Birch Society is the Chief Justice (Earl Warren). The Supreme Court has been one of the forces which have served to moderate the hysterical excesses of reactionary extremists. The high court has also been the source of an historic advance in the desegregation of our public schools, aiming to outlaw second-class citizenship for a substantial minority of our citizens.

"These attacks on the Supreme Court and its chief justice are irresponsible and vicious; they are designed to undermine our democratic system of government. Their impact abroad — especially in the newly developing countries—can only aid the Kremlin and its allied totalitarian forces."

The convention also called for federal legislation to ban wire tapping except under specific court order in cases involving espionage, treason or kidnapping; upheld the unrestricted right to a passport and to travel consistent with national security, and rejected as "a totalitarian philosophy" proposals to contravene the recent trend to liberalize censorship.

The resolution urged the Administration and Congress to adopt standards of fair procedure in the conduct of all security programs, with guaranteed rights to full confrontation of accusers and cross-examination of witnesses; to specific charges; to subpoena witnesses; to a detailed, written decision; to reconsideration of past decisions, and to be examined and judged only as to the likelihood of unauthorized disclosures.

Building Service Union, AFSCME Reach Pact

Miami Beach—A "memorandum of understanding" on the issue of jurisdiction and organizing activities has been agreed to by the State, County and Municipal Employes and the Building Service Employes, AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany reported to the convention.

Meany told the delegates this may not be "world-shaking" but rather "it is preliminary, it is a beginning."

It is important, Meany added, because it brings together in a common effort two unions which have been fighting for 25 years.

He said the presidents of both unions had been meeting on the problem at his request and had reached preliminary agreement on the following principles, approved in turn by their executive boards:

- "The status quo, in terms of existing membership patterns, is to be maintained during the period of this agreement. Each union will continue to represent those members presently affiliated and those who will during the term of this agreement join and remain members of either organization."
- "Neither union will raid established, functioning, local unions affiliated with the other."
- "Wherever competitive organization exists, neither union will countenance any name-calling, scurrilous propaganda or any action of this type detrimental to the best interests of both unions and the best interests of the labor movement."
- "Further meetings between the top leadership of the two unions will be held to discuss on a broader basis the questions of jurisdiction and organizational activity."

Flight Engineers Re-Elect Brown

New York—Ron Brown, president of the Flight Engineers since August of 1959, was re-elected for a two-year term by the union's executive board at its annual meeting here. Also chosen for another term was Glenn B. Iverson as technical vice president. Still in office is Executive Vice Pres. Harry S. O'Brien, whose term has not expired.

Labor Urges Civil Defense Buildup, Raps Soviet Resumption of Testing

Miami Beach—An eight-point civil defense program aimed at correcting the failures of previous programs was adopted by the AFL-CIO convention in a resolution that also condemned Soviet Russia for its "immoral resumption" of atmospheric nuclear bomb testing.

"If we do not have a civil defense program that is at least approximately adequate," the resolution warned, "labor strongly believes that no potential aggressor can accept our statements of nuclear retaliation as seriously meant.

"Surely, if we mean to reply in kind, one of the demonstrations of this intent is a program that will hopefully assure some enhancement of the survival of our civil population."

Program Spelled Out

The principles the convention declared should be embodied in a civil defense program include:

- Total federal responsibility, with rejection as unfeasible of the Eisenhower Administration's policy "that the fallout shelter program is basically an individual problem."
- A group shelter program.
- Federal provision of informational and educational material and the training of competent civil defense leaders.
- Adequate warning devices.
- Transformation of the Federal Radiation Council from an advisory to an action agency with responsibility for gathering radiation data and establishing norms of radiation exposure.
- Government control over destructible new buildings in cities, and compulsory inclusion of shelter space in new structures such as schools, hospitals and office buildings.
- Authority for the President to assure that a civil defense program will not be watered down and subjected to the military program.
- Exploration and exposure to public debate of every possible means of lessening international tensions and of building world law and order.

The resolution called the possibility of thermonuclear war "terrifying" because it might reduce large areas in many countries, including the United States and Russia, to "veritable wastelands."

"Yet Americans have been told that while millions will die, some can survive if proper civil defense measures are taken," the resolution said in urging an adequate program. "As of this date, however, there is within the nation a mass of confusion and consternation concerning the dread threat. There has been no all-out massive preparation for the possibility of survival.

"It is not unreasonable to suppose that such preparation, while it would not guarantee that damage would not be done, would guarantee that an informed people would do the best possible to meet an almost unimaginable circumstance, nor is it unreasonable to suppose that adequate civil defense measures would add some slight deterrent in the minds of the Soviet leaders who might seek thermonuclear war . . .

"Even if there were no deterrent, the United States owes it to itself and to its people to have done everything possible to enhance mathematical chances of survival if war comes."

Delegates Listened, Debated—Acted

THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES comes to the convention and faces cheering delegates and visitors as AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany waits for audience to quiet before presenting Kennedy for his address. The President asked labor's support. Meany replied for America's trade union movement: "We will cooperate 1,000 percent."

MORE THAN 300 members of the working press, including reporters and photographers for all media, covered the AFL-CIO's fourth constitutional convention, where in five days the delegates acted on major issues confronting the federation and its affiliates. They filed a total of 567,000 words over Western Union facilities. Some convention highlights were carried "live" on television.

Health Care for Aged:

Anderson-King Bill Gets 'Must' Backing

Miami Beach—AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany described health care for the aged under social security as "a very definite must" on the federation's legislative program as the convention voted a strong endorsement of the Anderson-King Bill.

The resolution declared that neither private insurance nor the public assistance approach of the Kerr-Mills Act of 1960 has met the test of providing "the broad protection required for the great majority of the aged who have low incomes."

The labor-backed bill introduced by Sen. Clinton P. Anderson (D-N.M.) and Rep. Cecil R. King (D-Calif.) would provide health insurance as a matter of right to retired workers and their families. The program would be financed through an increase in the social security tax paid by employers and employes.

The convention charged the American Medical Association with "spending huge sums on false and misleading propaganda." The convention also blasted the AMA for "exerting improper pressures on organizations and patients" in an effort to deefat the social insurance approach.

Meany, speaking on the resolution after several delegates had testified to the importance of the bill to retired workers, said he considers the issue "one of the most important" on the domestic scene.

He added:

"There is hardly a family in America that is not affected by this problem of what we can do to meet the cost of medical care for the elderly people."

Retired workers with small pensions, he pointed out, "cannot afford to get sick. They cannot afford to fight the catastrophic illnesses that sometimes come with old age."

"The only practical way to handle this sort of a situation," Meany said, "is to place it under social security, where people will build up over the years the equity that is needed when they get on in years and have these serious illnesses."

He told the delegates that labor has "the full backing of the President of the United States" in its drive for enactment of the Anderson-King Bill.

The convention resolution called on the House Ways & Means Committee, which held hearings on the Anderson-King Bill last summer, to "promptly report" the measure "so that the House of Representatives and the Senate can act favorably this spring."

It noted that the issue is not a partisan one and pointed to endorsement by the governing council of the American Public Health Association as "the latest evidence of the soundness" of the social security approach.

The resolution pointed out that the Anderson-King Bill would "supplement, not replace," private insurance and public assistance.

Delegates declared in the resolution that "our members are willing to pay contributions necessary to assure more adequate protection for their aged parents and for their own years of retirement."

They supported provisions of the Anderson-King Bill calling for both a higher social security tax rate and a higher wage base on which social security taxes are based.

Struck Rutland Railway Rejects Arbitration Bid

Washington — Four railroad brotherhoods accepted a proposal by Sec. of Labor Arthur J. Goldberg that they submit differences with the Rutland Railway to final and binding arbitration, but the carrier rejected the suggestion.

A two-month strike against the railroad, which serves Vermont and parts of New York, is being continued by the Locomotive Firemen & Enginemen, Trainmen, Conductors & Brakemen and Locomotive Engineers.

THREE DELEGATES are snapped by photographer on convention floor. They are Elizabeth Trippett, IBEW; Mildred Homslo, Flint Glass Workers; Kay Frances Smith, Glass Bottle Blowers.

Soviets Condemned For Anti-Semitism

Miami Beach—The AFL-CIO convention has condemned "the renewed Soviet campaign of anti-Semitism and the persecution of other minority peoples in the USSR."

The adopted resolution said "these inhuman policies" expose Soviet rulers as violators of the ideals of the United Nations Charter and the Declaration of Human Rights.

The resolution said the Soviet government recently tried and convicted in secret the most prominent leaders of the Jewish community in Leningrad "on the trumped-up charge of anti-state activities."

Jewish lay leaders in Moscow and other Soviet cities also have been put on secret trial, convicted and given heavy jail sentences, the resolution said.

U.S. Standards Sought For Jobless Benefits

Miami Beach—Federal standards are needed to correct "basic deficiencies" in state unemployment insurance programs, the AFL-CIO declared in a convention resolution.

The convention noted that only a minority of workers covered by state jobless insurance laws now are eligible for benefits equal to as much as half their wages.

"This falls far short of the standards incorporated when the system began," the resolution declared.

Federal benefit standards and "a larger federal role in the financial structure" would enable the system to meet its purposes more effectively, the convention said, pending a "comprehensive overhauling" under a single federal program, which the AFL-CIO favors.

Pres. John F. Kennedy told the convention earlier that he would seek such nationwide standards in the next session of Congress to place the jobless insurance system on a "permanent rational basis."

The convention resolution said federal legislation should set minimum requirements on the duration of benefits, eligibility, and disqualification provisions of state unemployment insurance laws.

It is charged that the emphasis so far has been on temporary extension of benefits during recession periods and that the wage insurance purposes of the program are being neglected even as new problems arise in the form of long-term unemployment resulting from economic displacement.

States Not Free

"There is no indication that the states can free themselves to place primary emphasis on benefit adequacy and the needs of unemployed workers," the resolution asserted.

"Instead," it said, "the states continue to emphasize low tax rates, small tax bases, low reserve peril points and other characteristics of cheap financing. Experience rating schemes function not to stabilize employment but rather as an arsenal of tax-reducing techniques. Competition among the states for industrial development continues to emphasize tax-reducing methods and thereby undercuts any experimentation and modernization of the program.

"The prospects for a restoration of unemployment insurance and adaptations to new economic needs depend on federal action, both to remove benefit standards from destructive competition among states and to provide for national financing of the long-term unemployment that is caused by nationwide economic displacement."

The resolution went on to pledge:

- Support of the McCarthy-King Bill, which would raise weekly benefits and make them available for the long-term unemployed, extend protection to those now denied any wage insurance, and improve the financial structure of the system by providing some measure of equalization of cost and broadening of the tax base.
- Continued efforts to eliminate experience rating, remove employer interference with the administration of the program, discourage underfinancing of trust funds for purposes of industrial development, and assure the application of sound principles of social insurance financing.
- Efforts at both federal and state levels to expand coverage of jobless insurance.
- Support for suitable, specially-financed state plans to cover employes of non-profit institutions, so long as such plans do not adversely affect the established program.

Save Our Resources, Convention Asks U. S.

Miami Beach—The AFL-CIO has called on Congress and the Administration to give "high priority" to programs to conserve and properly develop the nation's "great but not unlimited" natural resources.

The federation also gave convention endorsement to a "full-scale nuclear power development program," aimed at making the cost of power generated by atomic fuel competitive with conventional sources of energy.

While welcoming signs of a new sense of urgency by the Kennedy Administration, the convention resolution noted critically that steps toward a unified federal resources policy have been "hesitant half measures, lacking the decisiveness that the situation demands."

The convention called on the federal government to meet its responsibilities as "the American people's principal steward of their natural resources."

The resolution asked:

- River basin development programs based on the Tennessee Valley Authority approach.
- "Higher priority and more adequate financing" for programs to develop inexpensive techniques for desalting ocean and brackish water.
- Federal aid in stabilizing prices of minerals and in assisting communities affected by the closing of mines.

In the atomic power area, the convention declared that existing subsidy programs to private utilities for development of nuclear power "have not produced the needed results."

The resolution warned against proposals to allow the federal government "to divert itself of special nuclear materials — the fuel of atomic power plants—and pass the ownership to monopoly and large business."

It called for a reversal of the congressional decision not to permit use of waste steam from the Hanford, Wash., plutonium plant to generate electric power.

"The Hanford plant power conversion features must and will be built," the convention declared.

The convention also called for strengthening of the Federal Radiation Committee with responsibility for establishing "minimum safe levels" of radiation in the United States.

Such an agency, the resolution declared, would be a source of information about fallout hazards and would coordinate research "on the effects of low level doses of radiation on human beings."

Also endorsed was a proposal for federal grants-in-aid for research in the natural resources field.

Pension Insurance Proposal Backed

Miami Beach—The AFL-CIO has called for establishment of a federal system for reinsuring private pension funds to protect the millions of workers whose savings could be wiped out overnight by company failure or technological change.

The convention resolution noted that the government during the great depression solved the problem of loss of savings through bank failure by passing the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation Act. This reinsured bank deposits.

Because public policy is affected, the resolution continued, private pension trusts should be required to obtain reinsurance from a new agency along the lines of the FDIC.

Present tax law properly grants privileged treatment to corporate pension trusts where there is protection provided to beneficiaries, the AFL-CIO said, and the same should apply under the proposed federal reinsurance agency contingent on payment of a premium.

Insurance Agents Backed

Miami Beach—The AFL-CIO convention has acted to strengthen the strike weapon of the Insurance Workers.

Delegates approved a resolution urging AFL-CIO state central bodies to seek legislation protecting insurance policies from lapsing because of non-payment of premiums during a strike or labor-management controversy.

Sec.-Treas. William A. Gillen of the Insurance Workers explained that the effectiveness of an insurance strike depended on stopping the sale of new insurance policies and also on stopping the flow of premiums into the company's coffers.

Thus, Gillen went on, "some of our dearest and closest friends and most ardent supporters find themselves compelled to scab on our strikes in order to keep their insurance in force."

Gillen also pointed out that the National Labor Relations Board in early December broke a 17-year-old rule which held only a statewide unit was appropriate for insurance employes. This and the proposed legislation, he added, will enable the union more effectively to face up to such giants as Metropolitan Life, Prudential, John Hancock and others.

Amendments Voted To Constitution

Miami Beach—Delegates to the AFL-CIO convention by the required two-thirds vote approved the following constitutional changes recommended by the Executive Council:

- The newly chartered Food and Beverage Trades Dept. was given equal status with other departments by the amendment of Section 1, Article XII.
- The Committee on Organization was made a standing committee by the amendment of Section 1, Article XIII. The committee was given responsibility for developing organizing policies and programs; it was specified an amendment "shall in no way affect the jurisdiction" of affiliated unions.
- The retirement compensation of AFL-CIO executive officers and their spouses, as covered by Section 9, Article V, was changed. The retirement compensation for the president and secretary-treasurer is to be equal to 60 percent of their highest annual salary; if, after attaining eligibility, the executive officer shall die, either before or after retirement, the surviving widow shall receive an annual annuity of 30 percent computed on the same basis as the officers' benefits.

Expelled Unions Must Meet Test:

Compliance With Constitution Ruled Price of Readmission

By Willard Shelton

Miami Beach—The AFL-CIO convention told the Teamsters union and other former affiliates expelled in 1957 on findings of corrupt leadership that they would regain affiliation by satisfying the Executive Council they have put themselves in compliance with the federation's constitution and its "rules, laws, standards and policies."

A resolution adopted by the convention instructed the council to "give consideration" to any application for reaffiliation from an expelled union in the light of existing AFL-CIO rules and the "current situation" within the applicant union.

"So that there will be no misunderstanding," AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany declared from the platform, "if and when" the Executive Council gets a reaffiliation application from the Teamsters, the council "will act—there is no doubt about that—under the constitution that was written by the people in this room—not by me."

"I thought it was a pretty good constitution," Meany said. "I am not the author. But as long as it is there, it is the Bible so far as I am concerned."

The convention resolution instructed the council, if it is assured that an applicant union is now operated so as to "protect the rights of all affiliates" and in harmony with basic federation principles, "to proceed with such reaffiliation."

AFL-CIO Vice Pres. Joseph A. Beirne in floor debate read the record on the expulsion of the Teamsters by the 1957 federation convention.

Everything was done in public, he declared, and in application of the publicly-known AFL-CIO constitution and codes. The Teamsters made an appearance before the appeals committee of that convention and the committee "reported in open session." After hours of debate, the convention "voted overwhelmingly to expel."

Beirne continued:

Record Was 'Overwhelming'

"You don't wipe out charges with sweet words . . . We expelled because the record was overwhelming against the ethics which we had also adopted after open debate, after frank and free exchange."

In discussing readmission of the Teamsters, he said: "We have to consider whether we want those ethics still to stand . . . I have heard nobody say, 'let us repeal them.' "

Lashing at verbal assaults on the AFL-CIO by Teamsters Pres. James R. Hoffa since his union's convention last July, Beirne said the AFL-CIO could not "back away" from its own findings against the Teamsters because the union's membership "may look attractive."

Let the Teamsters ask us to "measure them," he said, and we will "make the determination to see whether or not they are fit; make it fairly, squarely, according to our constitution, our ethics and our facts—not television, not the newspaper stories."

Approval of the resolution by the convention followed a half hour of floor debate marked by several exchanges.

AFL-CIO Vice Pres. Joseph Curran said he supported the resolution as formulated but said, in regard to Teamster raids on AFL-CIO affiliates and the AFL-CIO decision to charter seceded Teamster locals, that this was the "wrong approach."

The Teamsters and Hoffa have been cleared of various charges in court, he said, and "we don't have a free labor movement if we allow people on the outside like (Attorney Gen. Robert F.) Bob Kennedy" to tell us how to run it.

Curran said Hoffa ought to be notified that if he "wants to be brought back in" he must "make a proper request" and "stop the nonsense" of raiding and of public statements that cause "anger and aggravation and irritation."

Delegate Michael Quill said a Transport Workers' convention proposal for reaffiliation of the Teamsters was "flushed down the drain" by the Executive Council in its October meeting. He said that Hoffa was victimized by "trial by television," while "General Motors, General Electric and U. S. Steel" were not "tried by television."

Delegate Patrick E. Gorman of the Meat Cutters said that if a five-member committee were appointed, "most of the things we are now considering that keep these people out of the federation can be dissipated in the thin air" and the Teamsters would be "back in" before the convention ended.

Delegate Paul Hall of the Seafarers said nothing could harm the interests of the Teamsters more than to have "apologists" for Hoffa, "who is a fink from his very heart."

If anyone thinks "we should make a special arrangement for any special union" to get it into affiliation, Meany said, the constitution itself provides a manner in which it can be amended and that should be the approach.

Citation Hails Labor's United Funds Support

Miami Beach—Organized labor was thanked for its long and active support of united community campaigns and AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany was awarded a citation by Chairman Oliver G. Willits of the United Community Campaigns of America during the AFL-CIO convention.

Willits said labor had contributed millions of dollars over the years and provided leadership as officers of community welfare councils, United Funds and Community Chests and in United Way campaigns.

"Organized labor, along with business and industrial corporations, has put its spirit and strength into building a system of community services designed to make certain that no one who needs help is neglected and that this help is provided quickly, efficiently and economically," he said.

Willits presented to Meany a plaque expressing appreciation "for his distinguished contribution of personal time and interest and for the generous support of the American labor movement, on behalf of the millions of people helped through the progress and services of the 28,000 agencies supported through the nation's United Funds and Community Chests."

Meany, responding, said that "while this plaque is dedicated to me—and I appreciate it very much—it is really meant for the AFL-CIO and particularly for the active trade unionists who take part in our community service work under Joe Beirne, chairman of our committee, and Leo Perlis as director of our Community Services Activities."

Beirne, an AFL-CIO vice president and Executive Council member, is also president of the Communications Workers.

U.S. Agency Endorsed To Protect Consumers

Miami Beach—The AFL-CIO convention endorsed proposals to establish a Dept. of Consumers in the federal government and to create select congressional committees to investigate consumer problems.

A resolution adopted by the convention said labor must take a "leading role" in the field of consumer protection in behalf of its own members and the consuming public at large.

The resolution called for:

- Legislation to "bring down the high price on prescription drugs, combat misleading advertising by drug companies, and improve the safety and usefulness of drug products generally."
- Enactment of a federal "truth-in-lending" law requiring full disclosure of all finance charges on installment purchases and loans "both in dollars and cents and in terms of a true annual interest rate."
- Stronger protection of consumers by states to curb debt poolers, repeal wage assignment laws and reform "unreasonable" wage garnishment laws.
- Widespread extension of the principles of the consumer cooperative movement and expansion of credit unions, with support from unions, as a proven means of encouraging thrift and as a source of personal loans at a low rate of interest."
- Greater authority for the Federal Trade Commission in policing misleading advertising and deceptive merchandising and packaging practices.
- Stronger powers for the Food & Drug Administration in behalf of the consuming public, including authority to require manufacturers to pre-test therapeutic devices and cosmetic products for safety.
- Defeat of all proposals to permit fixing of retail prices under so-called Fair Trade Laws, whether state or federal.

UAW-Mack Truck Pact Ends 7-Week Strike

New York—Some 4,000 Mack Truck Co. employes returned to work after verbal agreement was reached by management and the Auto Workers on a new contract covering plants in Allentown, Pa., Somerville, N. J., and Cortland, N. Y. The workers, on strike for seven weeks, will vote when the pact has been reduced to writing.

'Buy Union' Drive Seen Potent Labor Weapon

Miami Beach—The AFL-CIO has called on union members and their families to use their "power as consumers" to strengthen the labor movement through supporting the union label principle.

In a resolution pledging "greater support than ever before" to the work of the AFL-CIO Union Label & Service Trades Dept., the convention declared:

"The economic power of America's millions of union members is virtually invulnerable. No law, no community opposition, no anti-union employer can prevent union members from spending their dollars in behalf of their own union standards."

The convention called on affiliated unions and city and state central bodies to intensify their efforts "in educating their members concerning the vital necessity for demanding union labels, shop cards and service buttons when spending their union - earned wages."

Speaking in support of the resolution, AFL-CIO Vice Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky called on the labor movement to "join hands" in making the union label a major tool in "the greatest organizing campaign in our history, not in behalf of one union or another alone, but in behalf of all labor."

The label, said Potofsky, stands for "all that we have accomplished for our own members and for the nation."

He pointed out that "billions of dollars are spent each year by the millions of union members and their families" and declared:

"If those dollars we spend could be harnessed to our own welfare and our own goals, what could stand in our way?"

He called for "a massive educational campaign, coupled with the determined use of our consumer power" to help keep the labor movement growing.

The convention also adopted resolutions proclaiming Union Label Week and urging participation by all unions and fair employers in the annual Union-Industries Show.

Also adopted was a resolution introduced by the Ladies' Garment Workers calling on the AFL-CIO Executive Council to study the possibility of "a single unified label to be used by all AFL-CIO affiliates."

A similar proposal, discussed at the recent Union Label & Service Trades Dept. convention, is being studied by that department's executive Board. It would encourage use of a standard union label design within which each union would have its own identifying label.

Forest Access Roads Urged to Halt Waste

Miami Beach—An expanded program of construction of access roads into forest areas of the United States and Canada was urged by the AFL-CIO convention in the hope of salvaging timber that now goes to waste when it is ripe for harvesting because crews cannot reach it.

Unions Urged To Invest in Home Building

Miami Beach—Affiliated unions were urged by Pres. George Meany to take advantage of the AFL-CIO investment counseling service set up under a resolution passed by the Executive Council at a meeting in August 1961.

He spoke after Alexander Bookstaver, head of the department, had shown how unions—particularly those with a voice in the control of large welfare, retirement and insurance funds—could increase the earnings on their money by having it invested in government-insured mortgages.

Bookstaver explained that the service was created to help unions with investment problems, and specifically to "encourage retirement, welfare and general trade unions funds to invest in government-guaranteed and insured mortgage and construction loans."

The purpose, he said, is to stimulate housing and employment, to provide a more adequate interest return on the invested funds, and to make mortgage financing available at reasonable rates.

"This department is at all times prepared to advise and counsel all affiliates with their current investment problems," he said, "as it believes labor's funds can be effectively put to work in the social area of housing."

Meany said "the entire program makes sense, and I recommend it to every organization."

Strong Support Given Aid to Schools

State Resources Held Inadequate for Need

Miami Beach—The AFL-CIO has asked Congress to enact a broad program of federal aid to education, including both school construction grants and funds to help pay teachers' salaries.

"Crowded classrooms, obsolete equipment, and a shortage of qualified teachers" are the result of past neglect of the nation's educational system, a convention resolution declared.

The federation also sought a "long-overdue" program of federally financed college scholarships and asked for federal assistance to help meet the cost of "necessary expansion of college facilities."

"Higher education is a public responsibility," the convention emphasized.

The resolution sought "expanded and improved" programs of apprenticeship and vocational training, declared National Defense Act funds should be used to train skilled workers rather than technicians, and sought special aid for the schooling of children of migratory workers.

The AFL-CIO criticized the "much too slow pace" of school desegregation, calling for "decisive federal action" to enforce the Supreme Court's 1954 decision.

Finally, the convention said, "the schools in a democratic nation should themselves be democratic institutions."

Special Interest Pressures

Educators "should be free from the pressures of special interest groups which may seek to use the schools for their own purposes," the AFL-CIO declared. The convention backed the efforts of organized teachers to establish the right of collective bargaining and said this drive "should have the support of all who believe in better schools."

The resolution pointed out that only federal taxing power can "insure educational opportunity in a nation of states which have unequal resources."

Federal aid should include improved testing and guidance facilities, the resolution declared, "especially in schools serving large numbers of low income families."

A companion resolution emphasized the importance of labor education programs carried on by unions and central bodies.

It commended groups which have carried on effective programs and urged all affiliates and central bodies to establish educational committees and programs in cooperation with the AFL-CIO Dept. of Education.

WILLIAM DODGE

WILLIAM WEBBER

CLAUDE BARTLETT

TUC Fraternal Delegate Hails Success of British Health Plan

Miami Beach—The British National Health Service is so tremendous a success that "any politician bold enough to advocate (its) abandonment would be committing political suicide," the AFL-CIO convention here was told by Claude Bartlett, a fraternal delegate from the British Trades Union Congress.

Bartlett was one of three fraternal delegates appearing before the convention. He was accompanied by a second delegate from the TUC, William Webber. William Dodge, executive vice president of the Canadian Labor Congress, represented his nation's trade union movement.

Ninety percent of the British people have chosen voluntarily to participate in the National Health Service, Bartlett told the AFL-CIO delegates. A proposal to abandon it "would not get the votes of the patients" and would be "lucky" to get a "tiny handful" of votes among "doctors or dentists, nurses or technicians."

British labor now is concerned about an increase in fees that are a substitute, to some extent, for tax support of the health service, Bartlett said. But since 1948 the service "has won public blessing and medical approval."

"It has survived a searching scrutiny of its costs by an independent investigating committee headed by one of the nation's leading economists. Step by step the forward-looking critics make converts among the conservatives," said Bartlett.

Unions in Britain, as those of the US, are now living through "one of their most testing times," with the Conservative Party government making "an assault on principles and practices which we believe to be essentials in the conduct of industrial relations," Webber told the convention.

This assault, he said, takes the form of what the government calls a pay "pause," meaning in effect a "freeze," and of severe restrictions on consumer credit and taxes on consumer goods.

White Collar Unions Militant

White collar workers are "especially vulnerable," Webber said, but their unions are strong and militant, and "may well emerge stronger" than before as a result of their resistance to the pay "pause."

British labor, he said, "welcomed" the government's decision to open negotiations on British participation in the great new trading area of Europe's Common Market. The exact terms of unification will be studied to see how they effect "the issues that matter most—full employment and higher living standards."

Speaking as Canada's fraternal delegate, Dodge reported on development of the New Democratic Party—a joint enterprise of the Labor Congress and of the former Cooperative Commonwealth Party.

Explaining why Canadian labor felt driven to help organize its own political party, Dodge said flatly:

"I was enthralled as I listened to the address of Pres. Kennedy" to the AFL-CIO convention. "No politician in Canada associated with the old political parties has ever talked that kind of language. And no politician pays the Canadian Labor Congress the high compliment of coming and laying before it the program upon which he speaks and hopes to have its assistance."

The political program of Canadian labor is highly developed, Dodge said. It includes economic planning to meet the "abject failure" of existing policies to solve the "acute" problem of unemployment, and a Bill of Rights that would "adequately protect freedom of speech and assembly and prevent racial and religious discrimination of any kind."

It also includes, he declared, a "complete system of social insurance including comprehensive health insurance. We are not frightened by people who call it socialized medicine—in fact we call it that ourselves sometimes."

Dodge said Canadian union members have a "deep sense of loyalty" to the international organizations with headquarters in the U.S. and added "guiding rules" by which U.S. trade unionists could help keep things that way.

- "Don't treat Canadians as if they were Texans or New Yorkers. Canadians are very determined not to be regarded as a 51st state."
- "Remember that French is one of the official languages of Canada" and that unions with membership in Quebec "should be prepared to accommodate the French-speaking sector."

Broader Drive Mapped Among Farm Workers

Miami Beach—A broader and more intensive campaign to organize Farm Workers was projected by the AFL-CIO convention here.

The delegates adopted a resolution calling on the federation and all affiliated unions "to lend their support to the agricultural worker organizational effort."

It urged the unions "to support the organizational undertaking financially, by publicity in their newspapers and magazines, by cooperation in the legislative effort on behalf of the hired farm workers, and by direct coordination with the actual organization effort."

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany hit as "wishful thinking" reports from California that labor was dropping its support of the Agricultural Workers Organizing Committee.

"We have revised our campaign. We intend to extend it into various areas," Meany declared. He said complete cooperation is being given by the California State AFL-CIO and local central bodies.

"Any newspaperman listening in can carry the news to California that the AFL-CIO is not getting out of the agricultural campaign," Meany added.

AFL-CIO Vice Pres. Walter P. Reuther, also president of the Auto Workers, announced that all unions would be solicited for help in the farm worker drive.

"We are going to come to you and we hope that you will contribute to the raising of funds to carry on this fight," he declared.

Al Hartnett, secretary-treasurer of the Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers, described the substandard conditions of farm worker families and protested their exclusion from the nation's social and labor legislation. He urged "active, urgent, vigorous" action by labor.

Harry Van Arsdale, president of the New York City Central Labor Council, announced that the Committee on Exploitation of Migrant Farm Workers—a group within an affiliate of the CLC—has offered "a full-time organizer to work in any campaign you undertake."

The resolution expressed the aim of "a secure and decent livelihood for farm proprietors and farm laborers alike." It supported the Kennedy Administration farm policies.

Noting that 5 percent of the nation's farms—"the largest and most profitable"—account for 70 percent of all expenditures for farm labor, the resolution urged a series of legislative safeguards.

The resolution urged Congress to end the exclusion of farm workers from legal protection of their right to organize and from the federal wage-hour law and urged fuller coverage under the social security system.

The resolution also called for an overhaul in the administration of policies affecting farm workers.

It commended Kennedy for his pledge to ensure that public law 78—covering the import of some 400,000 Mexican nationals a year—will be administered in a way so as to end its adverse effect on American farm workers.

Convention Backs FCC Law Changes

Miami Beach—A proposal that the AFL-CIO seek amendment of the Federal Communications Act to protect the rights of employes of holders of permits or licenses issued by the Federal Communications Commission was unanimously approved by the AFL-CIO convention.

Specifically urged were an amendment giving a union representing the employes the right to appear before the FCC as a party in interest and another authorizing the Commission to require, as a condition of approval of any action requested of it, that there be "fair and equitable treatment" of employes.

Wage Equality Backed For Federal Workers

Miami Beach—The AFL-CIO has backed up the claim of federal government employes for wages and working conditions "at least comparable" to those prevailing in private industry.

In approving a resolution submitted by 22 unions affiliated with the AFL-CIO Government Employes Council, the convention called for:

- A pay raise for both postal and classified government employes.
- Union recognition, including dues checkoff and arbitration of disputes.
- Exclusion of civil service retirement benefits from the federal income tax.
- Amendment of the Hatch Act to provide greater opportunity for government employes to participate in the affairs of government.
- Establishment of a 35-hour week in the government service.

Other sections asked an annual salary review by Congress, sought a continuing employe-management study of automation problems, opposed speedups and time study programs in government agencies, and called for an expanded and improved postal service.

Pension Changes Asked

The convention also called for optional retirement with full annuity after 30 years of service and an increase in benefits for persons on the pension rolls.

Also included was a call for legislation to require that blue collar workers "be paid on a weekly basis and receive their paychecks on the job site."

In a separate resolution, introduced by the Metal Trades Dept., the convention "vigorously objected" to the switch in payment of Navy Dept. blue collar workers from a weekly to a biweekly basis.

Delegates See Need Of Planning Agency

Miami Beach—A national planning agency is needed to deal with the complex economic problems facing America and the free world, the AFL-CIO convention has declared.

Delegates here adopted a resolution urging the Kennedy Administration to seek creation of such an agency.

The primary task would be to carry through the goals of the employment act of 1946; it also would include a technological clearing house to gather data on automation, atomic and solar energy and other developments, and study the interrelation of economic trends.

ILO Backed; NAM Scored For Quitting

Miami Beach — Continued attacks on the Intl. Labor Organization by "some short-sighted employer interests" and the "misguided decision" of the National Association of Manufacturers to withdraw from participation in the worldwide agency were sharply condemned by the AFL-CIO convention.

In a resolution warning that the ILO must not "flinch" from its responsibility of revealing violations of fundamental human rights, the convention also declared it should not be deflected "from its principal objective of improving the conditions of workers everywhere by either the self-serving propaganda of the Communist bloc or reactionary employer opposition."

"The ILO must be assured of sufficient funds to discharge its great mission of establishing and enchancing labor standards and securing social justice," it continued. "The United States, by far the richest member country of the ILO, has a special responsibility in securing adequate financing."

The resolution recalled the more than 40 years of support the U.S. labor movement has given the ILO and pledged continued support "in recognition of the tremendous contribution it has made toward raising the standards of workers, safeguarding human rights and, in recent years, helping the developing countries in their efforts to seek a better life."

It expressed regret at the recent resignation of David A. Morse as ILO director general, calling it a "great loss" not only to the organization but to workers all over the world.

"The international trade union movement," the resolution declared, "owes him a particular debt of gratitude for his unswerving devotion to the principle of tripartitism on which the ILO was founded."

FHA Probe Sought Of 'Sweat Equity'

Miami Beach—The Federal Housing Administration was urgently requested by the AFL-CIO convention to investigate so-called "sweat equity" practices in housing and to take what action the findings may indicate to protect the public interest, health and welfare.

"Sweat equity" is the name given to the practice of selling unfinished houses under the guise of a saving to the buyer, who either finishes the dwelling himself or has a contractor of his choice do the job.

'Active' Support Voted for ORIT

Miami Beach — Active support of the AFL-CIO for the Inter-American regional Organization of Workers (ORIT), the Western Hemisphere arm of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions, was unanimously voted by the fourth biennial convention here.

"We are in complete accord with ORIT's plans to step up organizational and educational activities, and with its support of the Alliance for Progress program through active participation in the promotion of social projects sponsored by its affiliated organizations," the resolution said.

It also praised ORIT's cooperation with the international trade secretariats which are active in Latin America.

UN Hailed by Parley; 'Troika' Plan Denounced

Miami Beach—Soviet Russia seized upon the death of Dag Hammarskjold "as a special opportunity for diversifying and stepping up its maneuvers to decapitate and devitalize the United Nations," the AFL-CIO convention charged.

Its denunciation came in a resolution which characterized the USSR's so-called "troika" plan for the UN secretariat as a device which would "paralyze the UN as an instrument for promoting world peace and freedom."

The convention reaffirmed its faith in the UN and the UN charter and urged the U.S. government to take the following steps to strengthen the worldwide organization:

- Continue to support Hammarskjold's position on the prerogatives of the secretary-general and to reject the "troika" scheme.
- Insist that member states meet their charter and financial obligations and the other responsibilities of membership.
- Seek establishment of a permanent Commission on the Preservation and Promotion of Human Rights.
- Seek to establish permanent machinery in the UN for holding democratic plebiscites.
- Support establishment of a permanent Commission on National Freedom to help "colonial and capitive peoples of Africa, Asia and Europe to achieve their national independence."

African Union Leaders Bring Thanks for Aid

Miami Beach—Four African labor leaders, one of them doubling as a diplomat, brought greetings to the AFL-CIO convention from the trade union movements of their countries—and thanks for American labor's aid.

Frederic F. Guirma, an official in the Building Trades Union of Upper Volta and that new nation's ambassador to the United Nations and the U.S. also brought greetings from Maurice Yameogo, president of Upper Volta and one of many African leaders with labor backgrounds.

"Please do not be worried if it seems that the African labor movement is less classical than what you know," he said. "Africa is a group of young countries. The people know that they must accept many sacrifices, and they are ready to accept them. We need only help and true friendship. It is important that we avoid the way which would lead to the loss of freedom."

Highlights of Algeria's fight for freedom from France were given by Assistant Gen. Sec. Mohamed Chennaf of the Union of Algerian Workers. For seven years, he said, the people and workers of Algeria "have been struggling to free our country from the colonial yoke, to restore our sovereignty and to found a democratic, social and republican state."

The "active friendship and assistance of the AFL-CIO and the people of the United States means a great deal to us Algerians," he said.

"Algerian workers are fully aware," he said, "that political freedom is a prerequisite for social and economic revolution, which in the final analysis is the only guarantee of progress."

Short addresses in French were made by Gen. Sec. Ben Azzedine of the General Union of Tunisian Workers and Mohamed Abderrazak, assistant general secretary of the Moroccan Union of Workers, after which AFL-CIO European Rep. Irving Brown translated into English greetings from their respective organizations.

Tunisian workers, Azzedine said, "are not prepared to forget what the AFL-CIO did to help in the liberation of our country." He warned that for trade unionists in Africa, political independence is not an end in itself but rather a means to secure "prosperity, greater well-being and justice."

Abderrazak said that the labor movement in Morocco "will never forget the support they received from American workers during the dark days of French and Spanish colonialism." In spite of difficulties, he added, Moroccan labor has helped improve living standards, "and at the same time has resisted reactionary feudalism and worked for the re-establishment of democracy."

Strike of 16,000 GM Workers Ends in Canada

Toronto—The Auto Workers and General Motors of Canada reached agreement on a new three-year contract which ended a two-day strike of 16,000 hourly-rated employes. The agreement, subject to worker ratification, provides wage increases and improved pension and welfare benefits in five plants—Toronto, Oshawa, Windsor, St. Catharines and London, Ont.

AFL-CIO Asks Disarmament With Controls

Miami Beach — The AFL-CIO convention has appealed to all nations to renew with a sense of urgency their efforts "to achieve a system of disarmament with adequate controls and inspection" and devote the resources so released to "a massive effort" to raise living standards everywhere.

"The survival of mankind makes imperative the achievement of effective disarmament," declared the resolution adopted by the delegates.

The resolution said the recent Soviet tests demonstrate the gravity and imminent danger to mankind of the threat of nuclear armaments.

The AFL-CIO said the "outrageous, unprovoked, unilateral termination" of the test ban by the Soviet Union and that nation's recent extensive nuclear testing in the atmosphere through high megaton explosions "has aroused the anger and the condemnation of the entire world."

The resolution urged the freeing of the burdens of armament costs on workers and factories so they can be turned "to stamping out hunger, poverty, ignorance and disease."

The conversion to full peacetime production in America can be met, the AFL-CIO said, by careful advance planning.

The convention commended Pres. Kennedy and his administration for the steps taken so far and welcomed the creation of the new disarmament agency to plan disarmament and conversion.

The resolution supported with enthusiasm the step-by-step program for effective disarmament which Pres. Kennedy "eloquently and forcefully" presented to the United Nations.

Soviet Aggression Hit:

Strong Free World Seen Key to Safety

Miami Beach—The AFL-CIO convention here voiced its conviction that a firm Allied position, supported by acceleration and expansion of military preparedness and economic and political unity, will force a halt to Soviet Russia's drive to extend Communist control over all Europe.

The delegates urged the democracies to open a "diplomatic counter-offensive" and demand from Moscow "the end of its aggressive acts, its breaches of agreement and violations of human rights committed since the end of the war." The allied powers are now in a position to negotiate with confidence, the resolution said.

"In all negotiations," it continued, "the democracies should rely on their own strength—military, economic, political and moral. This strength is enormous and should be greatly increased."

The convention assailed Russia for building the "illegal" wall between West and East Berlin, denounced Moscow for browbeating Finland and forcing itself into the smaller nation's presidential election, and condemned it for attempting to create an atmosphere of terror with its bomb tests.

At any conference the western powers cannot consider as negotiable, the resolution said, "their presence in Berlin, freedom of access to Berlin for themselves and the Germans, the right of Berliners to their own way of life and form of government, and the continuation of the present economic, legal and political relations from West Berlin and the German Federal Republic."

In a companion resolution on Latin America, the convention hailed the passing of several dictatorships and the gains made by democracy and expressed regret that, despite improvements, "oppressive regimes still persist, as they do in Cuba, Haiti and Paraguay."

"The Communist tyranny forced upon the Cuban people and maintained through deceit, terror and Sino-Soviet subversion and subvention is the most dangerous to the peace and freedom of all the peoples of the new world," the resolution said.

Commends Latin Labor

It commended free labor in Latin America for its opposition to Castro in Cuba and its support of the forces that tumbled the Trujillo dictatorship in the Dominican Republic, and called on it to aid democratic forces in Nicaragua and Ecuador. It also called for strengthening, through economic aid and political and diplomatic support, democratic regimes threatened by Communist tactics.

The convention appealed to workers and peasants of the Middle East to bring pressure on their governments to settle their differences, particularly between the Arab nations and Israel, "on the basis of mutual recognition of their territorial integrity and national independence."

Support for the principle of freedom of navigation for all nations in the Suez Canal was reaffirmed. Delegates denounced as "repugnant to our principles" attempts by Arab countries to "create distinctions" between American citizens because of their race or religion in the matter of passport visas or permission to do business.

Concern was expressed over the "continuing humanitarian problem" of Arab refugees in the Middle East.

The main task confronting African trade unions, said another resolution, is their strengthening as organizations "dedicated to the protection and promotion of the workers' interests and human rights."

The tie between the trade unions and the struggle for freedom was recognized and they were urged to oppose "every domestic or foreign policy of their country which undermines democracy, breeds dictatorship or fosters the development of the new Soviet colonialism."

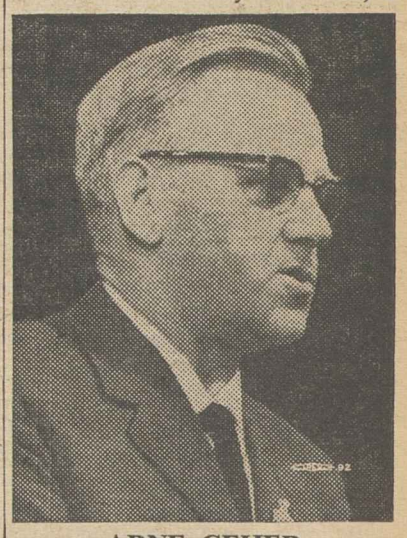
The convention urged the U.S. to support efforts to end the Algerian war by a French recognition of its independence; to denounce Portuguese colonialism in Angola and Mozambique; to reaffirm the boycott of South Africa because of its "outrageous" policy of racial discrimination.

The delegates also urged support for union members and nationalists in their fight for self-determination in North and South Rhodesia and Nyassaland; to help African unions obtain fair labor standards and working conditions on development projects financed by outside governments; and to cooperate with unionists in building an All-African Trade Union Federation dedicated to free trade unionism.

Strengthened ICFTU Cited In Resolution

Miami Beach — The AFL-CIO reaffirmed its long-standing support of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions in a resolution which recalled that it had been "reorganized and strengthened" since the last AFL-CIO convention.

Most of the big national affiliates have agreed to increase their voluntary contributions to the Intl. Solidarity Fund to help finance the development of trade unions in countries where they are weak, a convention resolution pointed out here, noting that AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany has become chairman of the committee which administers the fund.



ARNE GEIJER
President of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions

"The AFL-CIO reaffirms its vigorous and active support for the ICFTU," the resolution added, "and commends it for its efforts to extend free trade unionism throughout the world and pursuing its unceasing fight against all forms of totalitarianism."

Briefly discussing the resolution, Meany recalled that the AFL-CIO had made available 61 scholarships last year to the school for young African and Asian trade unionists being conducted in Israel by Histradrut, an ICFTU affiliate, and hopes to do the same in the coming year.

He praised the ICFTU as an organization which is attempting, "where freedom still prevails, to build up a bulwark of free trade unions against communism."

Labor Asks Two-Way Trade Program

Adjustment Aid Plan Proposed on Imports

Miami Beach—The basic elements of a completely revised foreign trade program, with new emphasis on expanding two-way trade while safeguarding U.S. jobs threatened with extinction by unusual imports, were approved by the AFL-CIO convention after an hour-long debate.

Pointing out that the orginal Roosevelt reciprocal trade agreements program dates back to 1934, the resolution noted that despite amendments of this plan from time to time, "America now needs an international trade policy geared to the vastly changed world of the '60s." The act expires next year.

"We need a new law and a new approach to the opportunities, problems and challenges of international trade," the resolution declared.

The new law, it said, should provide maximum opportunity for expansion of trade and "measures for easing the impact of increased imports," actual or anticipated, resulting from tariff reductions, through trade adjustment assistance and "other effective measures."

The AFL-CIO proposals would give the President broad authority to negotiate across-the-board tariff cuts to be applied over a period of years, discretionary authority to eliminate tariffs on low-duty items and to make non-reciprocal cuts, and the right to reserve "certain sensitive items in advance from inclusion in such reductions."

The escape clause provisions of the present reciprocal-trade law would be modified so as to apply only to "escapes" from tariff cuts deemed damaging to an entire industry. The "peril-point" concept of existing law would be abandoned and replaced by a clause requiring the President, when determining commodities to be covered by tariff negotiations, to "take account of injury that might be anticipated as a result of tariff reductions for such items."

The resolution also said the President should have the authority to remedy such a situation by raising tariffs, cutting quotas or invoking adjustment assistance without time-consuming administrative processes.

Easing the Market

The AFL-CIO proposals in addition would enable the President to take needed action to ease market disruptions in which "appreciable influxes" of imports result, or threaten to result in "significant" loss of U.S. jobs and U.S. production. Multilateral international action was held out as a possibility.

"In all phases of tariff and trade policy," the proposal continued, "the U.S. government should seek to safeguard historic levels of production of significant domestic industries. This would help assure that competitive imports in and of themselves would not depress U.S. production or employment below historical levels."

AFL-CIO Vice Pres. George M. Harrison, chairman of the resolutions committee, said that under this clause "imports would not be permitted to the point where they cause serious injury to any of our historic industries."

Other phases of the AFL-CIO program included:

- No American industry should be subject to unfair competition resulting from the sale abroad of raw materials at less than the domestic price. Raw cotton is now sold abroad at 8.5 cents a pound less than the domestic price.
- Provision should be made for "effective assistance" to workers, firms and communities adversely affected by imports.
- The government was urged to pursue vigorously every possible way of improving labor standards in international trade to protect U.S. workers against substandard competition from low-wage countries, and to assure workers in other countries a share of the increased returns resulting from expanded trade.

Floor debate produced no opposition to the principle of broadened export-import trade policies. Some speakers suggested that the resolution did not go far enough in setting up safeguards to protect the "exportation" of jobs of American workers.

Vice Pres. Enoch Rust of the Glass & Ceramic Workers asked that action be deferred until a committee from unions affected by imports could study the resolution and make recommendations. His suggestion did not come to a vote.

Pres. William Pollock of the Textile Workers Union of America, the members of which have suffered seriously as a result of imports, said that if such a resolution had been proposed at either a CIO or an AFL-CIO convention in the past, Textile Workers "as a union would have regarded it as a victory."

"We support this resolution," he said. "We think that the labor movement is going further in our direction than it has in the past 15 years. We feel, as a result of this resolution, that we can call upon the various departments of the AFL-CIO to join with us in our presentations before Congress and before the Administration so that they will listen to our problems and see that we are not sacrificed in an effort to take care of the world situation."

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany said the resolution sets forth "a very significant program for protection of our people who are going to be hurt or who are being hurt." All AFL-CIO departments will cooperate with the international unions, he added, to seek the necessary legislative safeguards.

Other speakers on the resolution included Pres. George Burdon of the Rubber Workers; Pres. George Baldanzi of the United Textile Workers; Pres. E. L. Wheatley of the Operative Potters and Pres. George Fecteau of the United Shoe Workers.

There were scattered votes in opposition when the convention approved the resolution.

MORE THAN 115 OBSERVERS from other countries were visitors at the AFL-CIO convention in Miami Beach. Here is a group from Indonesia, present by invitation of federation.

Acceptance of Strong Unions Seen Vital to Economic Development

Miami Beach—Before there can be full-scale economic development in a democratic society, all employers—including American employers—must realize "the trade union movement has come to stay," a top free world labor leader told the AFL-CIO convention.

Arne Geijer, president of the 57-million-member Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions and head of Sweden's labor movement, discussed the link between the aid required in the developing nations of Asia, Africa and Latin America and the need for economic stability in the advanced nations.

"If we want to prove that democracy is superior to dictatorship as a social order," Geijer said, "then we must solve the employment problem once and for all.

"What the trade union movement considers we are justified in demanding of an industrially developed nation with a democratic constitution is a job for all who are able and willing to work," the ICFTU leader declared.

This requires sound economic policies and these rest on labor-management cooperation, he added.

"But the elementary basis for this kind of cooperation is a sense of respect on both sides," Geijer said. "Thus the employers have to accept the trade unions as the representatives of the employes."

Geijer said he was aware many American employers oppose unions while complaining of what they call labor's unwillingness to assume responsibility for industrial development.

Attacks by Employers

"My personal experience tells me," Geijer declared, "that the trade union movement cannot be expected to take on this responsibility if it is continually exposed to attacks from the employers."

Arturo Jauregui, general secretary of the ICFTU's Inter-American Regional Organization of Workers, announced to the delegates that the workers of the troubled Dominican Republic have organized into free unions and have sought affiliation with ORIT. The Dominican group is the United Labor Front of Independent Unions.

"After 32 years of the Trujillo dictatorship, which ORIT and the AFL-CIO have consistently opposed, the workers of the Dominican Republic have finally had the opportunity to make a free choice and they have immediately come to us, the house of international free labor," Jauregui said.

Jauregui said ORIT has sought, against the opposition of totalitarian governments, hostile employers and ambitious politicians, three basic conditions: free unions and the right to organize; guarantees for bargaining; the right to strike.

Jauregui said ORIT, in supporting Pres. Kennedy's Alliance for Progress, expects it to meet the people's aspirations for housing, cooperatives, social welfare, public education, credit unions and strengthening of free unions.

Geijer said the main work of the ICFTU in the developing nations is to aid in organizing unions and, through the Intl. Solidarity Fund, in combating an illiteracy rate of 80 to 90 percent in Africa and Asia.

Geijer described the work of ICFTU labor colleges in Calcutta, India, and Kampala, Uganda, for English-speaking East Africa. He said another college is to be created for French-speaking West Africa and that other colleges are needed in Asia and Latin America.

Economic aid to the developing nations is "the great question of the day" facing the advanced nations, Geijer declared, asserting present needs require considerably more than the current support of $4 to $5 billion a year. He urged an increase in channeling of such aid through United Nations agencies.

Long-Term Aid Plan Urged by Convention

Miami Beach—The AFL-CIO convention renewed organized labor's support of long-term, large-scale economic and technical assistance for underdeveloped countries and called for a shift from emphasis on scattered projects to the promotion of sound national development programs.

The delegates were sharply critical of the Republican-Southern Democrat coalition in the House for compromising Pres. Kennedy's reguest for long-term borrowing authority and for cutting nearly $900 million from authorizations he had requested for fiscal 1962.

"The inevitable result," they said in a resolution, "will be to seriously hamper U.S. programs to help the developing countries. Restrictions on our own efforts will make it more difficult for us to secure the needed cooperation of our free world partners in the common undertaking to promote economic growth in developing areas."

Program Proposed

The convention urged these specific measures:

- Congressional delegation to the President of authority to borrow from the Treasury funds necessary to finance development loans, and the elimination of "wasteful, inefficient" annual appropriations.
- Authorization and appropriation of "adequate funds" for foreign aid by Congress, with the U.S. and other industrialized nations prepared to supply annually at least one percent of their gross national products.
- Emphasis on the human aspects of economic and social development through such programs as assistance for housing, medical care, vocational training, education, tax reform, land reform, cooperative undertakings and free trade unions.
- The development by the new Agency for Intl. Development (AID) of criteria for assistance to less developed countries that require a maximum amount of self-help.
- An attempt to increase the role of western European countries and Japan in world economic development programs now that their own economies are strong.
- Encouragement of private investment in less developed countries by revocation of the special tax privileges encouraging U.S. corporations to invest in industrial countries.

115 Foreign Visitors View 4th AFL-CIO Convention

Miami Beach—Free trade union leaders from around the globe witnessed the debates and actions of the fourth AFL-CIO convention.

There were some 115 union leaders and labor specialists from Latin America, Africa, Asia, the Middle East and Europe.

Present were national officers and local union leaders representing coal miners, transport workers, steel workers and civil servants.

From Latin America, the guests represented Brazil, British Guiana, Costa Rica, Ecuador, El Salvador, Uruguay and Venezuela.

From Africa, they came from Kenya, Tanganyika, Uganda, Nigeria, Somalia Republic and the Federation of Rhodesia.

From Asia, they came from Ceylon, India, Indonesia, Japan, the Philippines, Malaya, Burma and Vietnam.

From Europe and the Middle East, they represented Finland, Sweden, Turkey, the United Arab Republic and Great Britain.

Progressives Sought in Congress:

Labor Told to Start Work Now To Elect Liberals in '62 Voting

Miami Beach—Calling for a reversal of the historic off-year election trend against the party in power, the AFL-CIO urged all members to "start to work today" to help elect additional liberal senators and representatives in the 1962 voting.

A resolution adopted by the federation's fourth constitutional convention said despite the success of registration and get-out-the vote drives conducted by the AFL-CIO Committee on Political Education in the 1961 campaign, "there is no room for complacency in a realistic appraisal of the 1962 congressional elections."

"Off-year voter apathy must be overcome," the convention declared.

It reaffirmed the AFL-CIO's dedication "to the principle of nonpartisan political education as a necessary ingredient of responsible trade unionism" and outlined a program "to secure and protect the legitimate economic and political aspirations of America's working men and women."

The resolution:

- Charged each local union and central body with the obligation of insuring that all members and adults in their families are registered voters.
- Charged every national and international union with the responsibility for insuring that its local unions make their membership lists available to COPE for processing in registration and get-out-the vote drives.
- Called on all national and international unions to designate one or more staff members to work toward the full participation of local unions in the COPE program.
- Urged each local union to form an active COPE committee.
- Charged state COPEs with the responsibility for distributing the voting records of congressmen.
- Urged acceptance of the modest COPE quota of each affiliated national and international union as "a definite obligation" and the designation of the month of May for the voluntary COPE Dollar Drive.
- Urged establishment at the state level of active operating committees patterned after the national COPE operating committee, with frequent meetings to implement political policies and programs.

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany hailed the resolution as pointing the way "in which every local union can make its contribution toward getting out the vote of our own membership, and our friends who live and work in the industrial areas of our larger cities."

'Very Important Vote'

"This is a very important vote," Meany observed, "We found in 1960 that this effort can be successful, that we can increase the number of those coming to the voting places on Election Day and that we can in a good many places be the determining factor in marginal districts between the election of a candidate unfriendly to us and a candidate who is sympathetic to the things that we are for."

A companion resolution lauded the work of COPE's Women's Activities Dept., urged its expansion "as rapidly as possible," and called on state and local central bodies to strengthen their political effort by establishing WAD programs.

The COPE policy resolution said AFL-CIO members accept their responsibility "as Americans and as trade unionists to participate fully in the political life of the nation."

"There is no piece of legislation passed by the Congress, no administrative decision made by a government agency which does not bear in some way on the lives and fortunes of trade union members," the resolution said.

"There is no real question of whether trade unions should concern themselves with politics. We cannot in good conscience avoid concern with the fate of our country and the world. We are concerned with our children's education, with the decent treatment of our old people, with civil rights for all citizens, with the protection of our union contracts, with the wise management of natural resources, with the ability of the farmer to earn a fair price for his crop, with the maintenance of a climate in which business can flourish and expand.

"We are concerned with these things because they are all building blocks in the structure of our country, and our very lives depend on the strength of that structure."

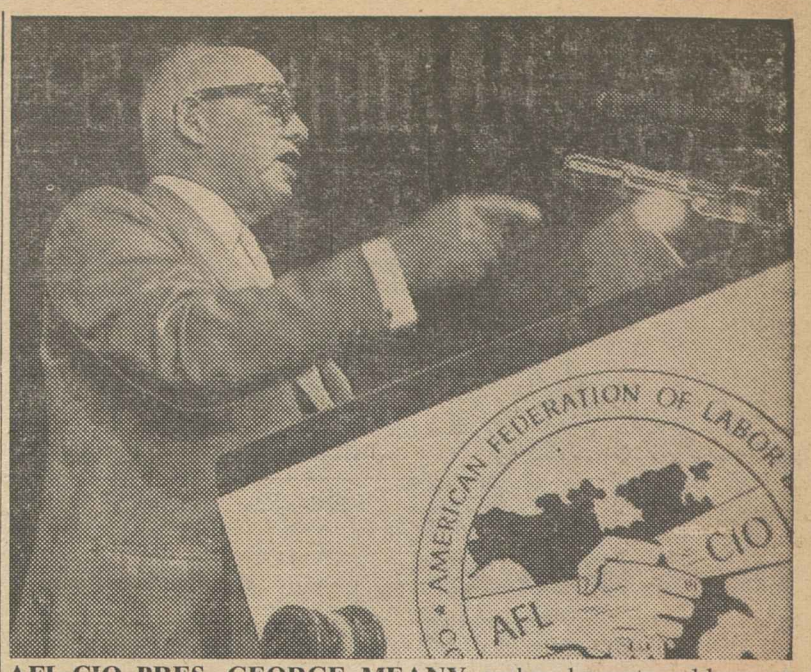
The convention cited the efforts of labor's enemies to enact restrictive labor laws and defeat progressive social legislation through heavily-financed campaigns.

Hits 'Cynical Coalition'

It condemned the "cynical coalition" which it said exists in Congress on the "unprincipled trading of votes against the rights of less privileged Americans, for votes against the legitimate and constitutional rights of Americans of minority races."

This coalition, the resolution charged, is strengthened by apportionment laws that "betray the principle of equal representation" and by "restrictive registration procedures which deny the principle of universal suffrage."

"We believe, without qualification, that Americans can be trusted to exercise their franchise wisely," the convention declared. "We take it to be one of our major aims to encourage and assist our members, their families and their neighbors to register and vote."

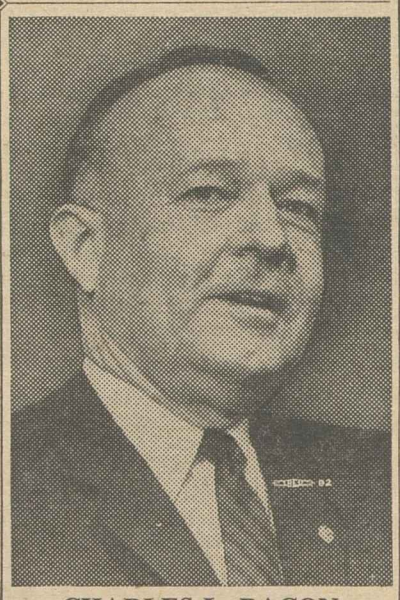


AFL-CIO PRES. GEORGE MEANY makes keynote address at federation's fourth constitutional convention, emphasizing labor's program for security and future of the nation and for the defense of freedom everywhere.

Legion Head Condemns Red Threat, Extremists

Miami Beach—Americans must exercise their traditional liberties and respect the equal rights of fellow citizens, American Legion National Commander Charles L. Bacon told the AFL-CIO convention in lashing out at political extremists.

"We must never fail to speak up for America nor fear to speak out against those who stand against her," Bacon declared. "At the same time we must remember during these sensitive days that irresponsibility of action or of word does a great disservice to the country we love."



CHARLES L. BACON
National Commander, American Legion

Bacon told the delegates that the Legion and the labor movement essentially are dedicated to the same goals.

"The American Legion believes," he said, "that above all our country owes each citizen an opportunity to make his way in life. We believe that liberty means freedom for the individual to achieve his personal destiny within the framework of an ordered society and with due regard to the equal rights of his fellow citizens."

Spelling out "areas of common interest," Bacon said labor and the Legion "are intensely interested" in adequate health, education and welfare programs "to the end that the greatest opportunity shall be available to the maximum number of our people and that those among us who are less fortunate and who are unable to take care of their needs shall receive proper care."

On the international scene, Bacon said, the recurrent crises of the past decade show that "communism thrives on a diet of unrest, discontent and misfortune among the world's people."

These conditions of tension can be expected to continue and America's children must be adequately prepared to carry on, he declared. The Legion will have in operation by the end of 1962 a community level program to teach children "that communism is evil" and "why and how it is evil," he said.

Bacon paid tribute to labor's fight against Communist infiltration of unions and said this is the Legion's message to labor:

"We stand in opposition to any who are not prepared to risk all to preserve what we have. We oppose them whether they are motivated by cowardice—such as those who mouth the hateful phrase "better red than dead"—or whether they are governed by that materialistic philosophy which believes in nothing, stands for nothing and will defend nothing. . . .

"We will support our government in its determination to resist the threats of the Communist empire. If necessary, we will go to war again as we did in the past."

More Consumer Counseling Urged

Miami Beach—Expansion of the consumer counselling of AFL-CIO Community Service Activities was urged in a convention resolution which recommended that all international unions and state and local central bodies bring the benefits of the program to their members.

AFL-CIO-CSA developed the program in cooperation with the Union Label & Service Trades Dept. It includes information courses, conferences dealing with specific consumer needs, and consumer clinics held in union headquarters by experts qualified to give guidance on the problems union members meet in getting full value for the money they spend.

Union Role Held Key In Defense Planning

Miami Beach—Labor's participation in emergency planning will be upgraded "so as to make full use of this vital manpower resource," Frank B. Ellis, director of the Office of Emergency Planning, told the AFL-CIO convention here.

Ellis recalled that the AFL-CIO has "vigorously endorsed" planning and programming for emergencies. He also paid tribute to local unions that have cooperated in research experiments, singling out for particular praise locals in Kalamazoo, Mich.; Allentown, Pa.; and Tallahassee, Fla.

"Nobody appreciates better than I do," he said, "that a well-organized labor force would be vital to a recovery action following nuclear attack. Nobody appreciates better than I that skilled manpower will determine how fast and how effectively we cope as a nation with the manifold tasks of emergency planning."

Since Pres. Kennedy took office, he said, he has undertaken to revitalize the entire emergency program. One phase has been the shift to the Defense Dept. of the shelter program, the warning system and the radiological defense program.

The Defense Dept., he said, is undertaking to mark available shelter space and stock it with five-day stocks of food, medical supplies and tools.

"Peddlers of pessimism contend that shelter is akin to "living like a mole," he said. "They forget that shelter is basic to defense; it was called 'trenches' in World War I and 'fox-holes' in World War II.

"I am no Cassandra sounding a message of doom, but does it not make good sense to use the same techniques when the battle lines may well be located on our front lawns?"

If people must use shelters, Ellis said, "they have a right to know that the world to which they emerge shall be livable."

FRANK B. ELLIS
Director, Office of Emergency Planning

He promised that food and medicine will be available; community and industrial activity will go on; transportation can be protected, and "we can restore and rehabilitate our free society under a system of affirmative planning now under way." He assured the delegates that "every thread which makes up the fabric of our society" will be "protected and preserved."

"We must know that individual Americans have the foreknowledge to take care of themselves and their families during the critical hours immediately following an attack."

While emergency planning is concerned with the possibility of war, "our mission is peace," he emphasized.

Emergency planning is an important element of strength, "economic, social and moral in character," and is in the nature of another great deterring weapon, he said, asking the delegates to think of it "not only in terms of the terror it seeks to blunt, but also in the positive light of its contribution to the struggle for peace."

"Our task as a nation is neither to provoke nor appease, but to cling tenaciously to the prayerful conviction that mankind must not be plunged into an atomic abyss.

It must be founded on diligent preparations, sustained efforts, and calm appraisal of every possibility, including the extreme possibility of nuclear war," he said.

Uniform Safety Standards Asked

Miami Beach—Uniform state and federal standards of occupational safety will be sought by the AFL-CIO under a resolution adopted by its fourth constitutional convention.

Present laws and regulations, the convention said, "differ to such a degree as to comprise a crazy quilt of safety requirements."

AFL-CIO Teachers Win New York Vote

Before Subcommittee:

Meany Prods U. S. Action on Jobless

By Gervase N. Love

The "full and energetic application" of the Employment Act of 1946 is required to meet the unemployment crisis and "approach the national goal of jobs for all," AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany asserted in testimony before the Joint Economic Committee's Subcommittee on Economic Statistics.

The "deeply disturbing" factors underlying unemployment percentage rates of recent months, he declared, "make matters worse than the unemployment rate would indicate."

"About 2.5 million jobs are required right now to reduce current unemployment to a tolerable level," he said.

"An average of 1.3 million new jobs will be needed each year for the next decade to absorb the increase in the labor force.

"An even greater number of jobs—2.3 million a year, by our estimates—must be found for workers displaced by automation and other technological changes.

"So even if the present backlog of unemployment disappeared; even if the country enjoyed full employment right now, 3.6 million jobs a year, 70,000 jobs a week, would have to be found in order to keep the American people at work."

The subcommittee is headed by Sen. William Proxmire (D-Wis.). Other members are Rep. Richard Bolling (D-Mo.) and Rep. William B. Widnall (R-N. J.). Sen. Joseph C. Clark (D-Pa.), chairman of the Senate Labor Committee's unemployment subcommittee, also was present.

Disturbing Factors Listed

Meany listed these factors among those that make the unemployment rate "deeply disturbing:"

- An "artificial slackening off" in the growth of the labor force, which in the past year increased by only 250,000 instead of the 1 million or more that could be anticipated from the population growth. The explanation, he said, is that "many potential workers . . . became discouraged by the extent of unemployment and didn't even bother to look for work."
- The duration of unemployment in some occupations and areas—about 30 percent of present jobhunters have been idle for at least 15 weeks, more than 17 percent for 27 weeks or longer.
- Failure over the last year to cut the number—2.4 million in November—working only part time because full-time work was not available.
- The increase "by leaps and bounds" in man-hour productivity since early 1961 and its extension from manufacturing into retail and wholesale trade, the service trades and construction.

"In laymen's terms," Meany observed, "there's little wonder, in view of rising population, manhour productivity and a slow rate of economic growth that the end of

Tally Gives UFT 60% Of Total

By Eugene A. Kelly

New York—The United Federation of Teachers won the right to represent 43,000 teachers in the public school system here by getting 60.5 percent of all votes cast in an election supervised by the Honest Ballot Association.

The vote was 20,045 for UFT, 9,770 for the belatedly formed Teachers Bargaining Organization, 2,575 for the Teachers Union of New York, unaffiliated, and 662 for no union. With 67 ballots blank or void, 33,119 votes were cast in one of the nation's biggest bargaining elections in many years.

In a message thanking all who helped win the crucial contest, UFT Pres. Charles Cogen said the result was "a smashing victory for the labor movement."

The next step will be to request immediate negotiations on a contract.

"We aim to get a contract," said Cogen, "that will set a standard for teachers throughout the country and which will show what can be accomplished through affiliation with organized labor."

Appeal by Meany

UFT is a local of the AFL-CIO American Federation of Teachers.

The week before the election, AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany sent a public message to all teachers saying the UFT was the "only bona fide union in this contest" and urging them to "vote for the best

Judge Blocks Firings Pending NLRB Ruling

Dallas, Tex.—Fourteen workers allegedly fired for union activities are back at their jobs at the DuBois Chemicals plant here as the company complied with a federal court injunction ordering their reinstatement.

The injunction, first of its kind issued against a manufacturer, was sought by the National Labor Relations Board to protect the right of the workers to their jobs until the NLRB has heard the case on its merits and renders a decision.

One other discharged worker, also covered by the court order, had been called into the armed forces before the injunction took effect.

Judge Sarah Hughes, a recent Kennedy appointee to the federal bench, issued the injunction.

It was the second case in as many weeks in which the labor board had turned the little-used Sec. 10j of the Taft-Hartley Act—usually a weapon against unions—into a means of protecting workers against an employer's unfair practices.

In Los Angeles, Judge Leon R. Yankwich issued a similar injunction directing the Telecomputing Corp. to "cease and desist" from refusing to recognize and bargain with the Auto Workers.

Contract Cancelled

The company had taken the position that consolidation of two of its plants under one roof voided an existing union contract, even though the same union had represented both groups of workers. The firm withdrew recognition and unilaterally changed existing working conditions.

If it had not been for the injunction, NLRB Gen. Counsel Stuart Rothman said, it would have been many months after a hearing before a labor board order could have been issued and enforced in court.

The Dallas case arose out of an organizing drive by the Packinghouse Workers at a small plant of

Minimum Pay Hike Brightens Season

An estimated 2.6 million workers will have received $165 million more in wages by Christmas than they would have if the 1961 amendments to the Fair Labor Standards Act had not been enacted, Sec. of Labor Arthur J. Goldberg has noted.

The amendments increased the minimum wage from $1 to $1.15 an hour effective Sept. 3. An estimated 1.9 million of the 24 million workers previously covered by the act had been receiving less than $1.15 an hour, the Labor Dept. said. In addition, an estimated 663,000 of 3.6 million workers brought under coverage of the act for the first time had their minimums boosted.

Strikers' Appeal Upheld In Royal York Dispute

Toronto—Chief Justice J. C. McRuer of Ontario has set aside a Toronto magistrate's ruling that in effect took away the right of workers to strike.

He allowed an appeal by Local 299, Hotel & Club Employes, which has been on strike at Toronto's Royal York Hotel for nearly eight months, from a decision by Magistrate Thomas Elmore dismissing two charges of violating the Ontario Labor Relations Act filed against the hotel by the union. In addition, McRuer found the hotel was wrong in dismissing 700 employes last July.

Elmore had held that the labor code carried no specific right to strike. No employe is protected in a strike, he suggested, even after his union has gone through required conciliation procedures. He held that workers were still covered under an ancient Master & Servant law.

The chief justice said that although the provincial labor act does not spell out a right to strike, it recognizes the common law right.

"I can find no basis in fact," he said, "for the theory that in order that employes may engage in a lawful strike, they must first resign from their employment. If an employe resigns, he is no longer an employe. . . ."

The employes fired last summer were discharged when they disregarded the ultimatum of the hotel, which is owned by the Canadian Pacific Railroad, to return to work or quit. The railroad's chief counsel, W. R. Jackett, claimed Elmore's decision was in line with a 1912 House of Lords decision.

"I hate to think we're back in the days of 1912 when the [House of Lords] judgment was delivered," Justice McRuer injected. ". . . There has been so much more thinking in 50 years' time on this matter. At one time striking was a criminal conspiracy. There has been a great evolution in thinking since then."

FAIRYLAND COME TO LIFE is what Joyce, who is 3½ years, old, sees in this pile of union-dressed dolls in Washington's Barney Neighborhood House. The dresses came from members of Transport Service Employes locals; Locals 2300 and 2323 of the Communications Workers, and the headquarters staffs of the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers and the Newspaper Guild.

Union Efforts Brighten Holidays For Needy Groups Across Nation

The blue bonnets of Salvation Army lasses are replaced by union buttons each year as AFL-CIO Community Service committees in Tampa, Birmingham, and Tucson recruit labor volunteers to man the Salvation Army Christmas Cheer Kettles.

In Tampa last year, 270 members of locals affiliated with the AFL-CIO Central Trades & Labor Assembly raised nearly $2,000 in two days, more than any other participating group.

This is one of the many ways in which the community service programs of organized labor help make Christmas bright for homeless and neglected children, for the hospitalized and for the needy.

A force of 1,200 union counsellors in Wilkes-Barre, Pa., raises funds each year for clothing, toys and food which are distributed at a Christmas party for homeless children. Business agents of the Ladies' Garment Workers obtain dresses, Boot & Shoe Workers collect shoes, and Clothing Workers get trousers, all donated by local manufacturers.

Lansing Repairs Toys

In Lansing, Mich., the community Services Committee of the Greater Lansing Labor Council gives a Christmas dinner for retired workers who then repair used toys as part of the Marines' "Toys for Tots" program.

For eight years, Upholsterers Local 37 in Philadelphia has given a Christmas party attended by 1,500 underprivileged children. Locals 101 and 102, Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, and Steelworkers Local 2898 also give parties in the Philco and SKF plants in Philadelphia.

Patients at the Evansville, Ind., State Hospital enjoy an annual Christmas party sponsored by the Community Services Committee of the Central Labor Council. The council also sponsors, through direct contributions of union members, Christmas baskets for needy families.

Los Angeles Parties Vets

For nearly 20 years, local unions now affiliated with the Los Angeles County Federation of Labor have carried on a Christmas program for patients at the Sawtelle Veterans Hospital in West Los Angeles. This year, the federation is distributing 50 cases of cigarettes, several television sets, and other smaller gifts as part of its community services program.

Other Christmas activities in the Los Angeles area include Auto Workers Local 887's "Dress the Dolls" program in which about 250 dolls are dressed and presented to mentally ill and retarded children; UAW Local 148's Christmas basket program which, last year, came to more than $2,000, and complete outfitting of 20 needy children by six locals of the Communications Workers.

Cincinnati Parties Kids

In Cincinnati, UAW locals have been raising funds and holding Christmas parties for underprivileged children for the past nine years. The first was held in 1951, with 300 children attending, for which the locals raised $3,000.

The Building & Construction Trades Council of Seattle has been a good friend to the Rainer School, a state institution for the mentally retarded. Last year, members built a complete intercom system to every room and dormitory and purchased radios for all isolated residents. This year, they will paint and redecorate, then give a Christmas party.

In Washington, D. C., CWA Locals 2300 and 2336 have sponsored a cottage at the Home for Retarded Children in Laurel, Md., for more than a year. Each month, a joint committee goes to Laurel and provides entertainers, dancing, films, games, and picnics. This year, CWA joined with Painters District Council 51 and completely redecorated the cottage as a Christmas present. Seventeen painters turned up on a Saturday morning and completed the job in one day.

The Union Label section of the San Francisco Council gives an annual Teen-age Christmas Tree Party for 200 teen-agers from institutions in the area. The hall and tree are decorated by the Stage Employes and the Electricians, and music is furnished by the Musicians. The entertainment unions give a special performance following a Christmas dinner prepared by the Hotel & Restaurant Employes.

"Community Service is a full-time, year-round job," says Leo Perlis, national director of AFL-CIO Community Service Activities, "but nowhere is its meaning clearer than in the efforts of trade unionists to bring cheer and hope to the less fortunate at Christmas time."

In Met Arbitration:

Federal Aid to Arts Urged by Goldberg

New York—Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg's arbitration award in a contract dispute between the Musicians and the Metropolitan Opera and his parallel call for wide governmental and public support of the performing arts have been hailed by Musicians' Pres. Herman Kenin as approaching "an emancipation proclamation" for artists.

The most important step the federal government may take immediately, Goldberg said, is to establish a Federal Advisory Committee of the Arts. Others who must help artists, he asserted, are the public, local and state governments, business and the labor movement.

Goldberg issued a 60-page statement settling wages and other contract issues and referring some issues back to the parties. Earlier he and Pres. Kennedy had won agreement of the Met and the union to open the 1961 season, which the opera company twice had prepared to cancel, and to ring up the curtain while awaiting his findings.

"Musicians everywhere," Kenin told Goldberg, "will take heart from your statesmanlike call for wide public and governmental support at all levels for music and the performing arts."

'Real Hope' Seen

Saying that the secretary's pronouncement gives artists "real hope that it may be possible" for this Congress to vote for a federal advisory council and authorize some federal funds to qualifying states, the AFM president asserted:

"While the wage awards can contribute little to the present economic problems of Met musicians, let us hope that the long-term fulfillment of your recommendations will contribute substantially to the security of musicians and all other deserving artists, thus preserving the human resources of our nation's culture."

In his award Goldberg:

- Set the life of the contract at three years, with automatic renewals each year or 90-day notice of proposed changes (the union asked a one-year term, the Met five).
- Set minimum weekly wages at $180 this season, retroactive to July 1; $185 for next season, then $190 (the union asked $268.80, scaled down to $220; the Met offered $175, then $180).
- Set up grievance procedure guidelines, with management the sole judge of artistic competence unless an arbiter determines that competence was not the real issue in a discharge.

On the issue of government aid to the performing arts, Goldberg said community responsibility should be combined with a diversity of support.

A Federal Advisory Council of the Arts, if composed largely of working artists and art directors, would "have important influence on government policies which have a direct bearing on the resources available" for support of the arts, he stressed.

The federal government should increase its support of art, he said, by commissioning sculpture and paintings and awarding music scholarships; by helping to build and maintain theaters, concert halls and galleries; by providing a direct subsidy to the theater and music provided a larger grant is given by other sources.

In making the wage award the secretary said Met musicians, members of AFM Local 802, were entitled to a larger increase. But the financial weakness of the Met is not an idle theory, he said, but a "hard historical fact."

Goldberg referred the firing of one orchestra member to Theodore W. Kheel, arbiter here, for a hearing on the facts.

W. J. McSorley Dies at 86; Led Lathers

William J. McSorley, president emeritus of the Lathers and president for 51 years prior to his retirement in 1955, died Dec. 15 at his home in Cleveland, three days after his 86th birthday.

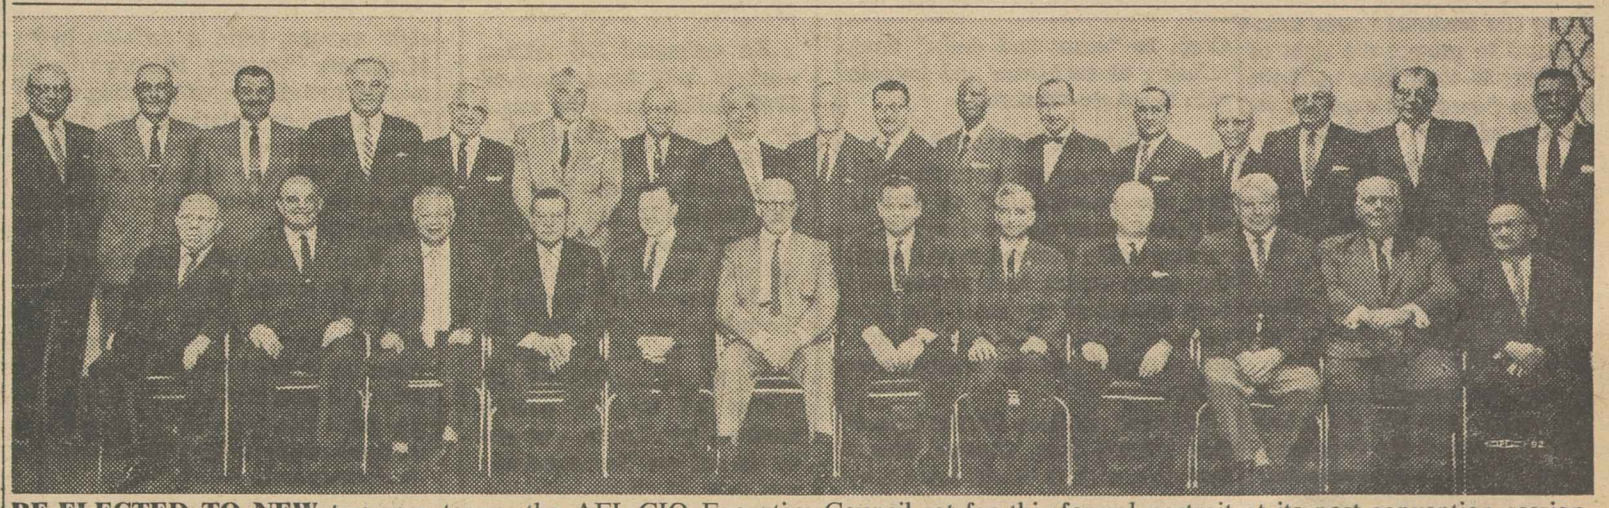
He had returned from the AFL-CIO convention in Miami Beach to observe his birthday at home.

In a telegram expressing "sincere condolences" to his widow, AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany and Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler paid tribute to his "long and distinguished life as a trade union leader" and described him as "a source of constant counsel and inspiration to younger men in our movement."

A native of Philadelphia, he became president of the Lathers in 1904 and went to Cleveland when the union office was moved there. He was president of the Building & Construction Trades Dept. of the former AFL from 1925 to 1929, represented the AFL at the founding congress of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions in London in 1949 and was an AFL delegate to the fourth ICFTU congress in Vienna in 1955.

In addition to his widow, he is survived by a son, William J. McSorley, Jr., assistant to the president of the AFL-CIO Building & Construction Trades Dept., and five daughters.

Meany designated Pres. Edward J. Leonard of the Plasterers as official AFL-CIO representative at the funeral.



RE-ELECTED TO NEW two-year terms, the AFL-CIO Executive Council sat for this formal portrait at its post-convention session. Seated from left are Vice Presidents William C. Birthwright, Joseph Curran, David Dubinsky, George M. Harrison, Walter P. Reuther, Pres. George Meany, Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler, Vice Presidents James B. Carey, Harry C. Bates, David J. McDonald, William C. Doherty, Emil Rieve. Standing, from left, Vice Presidents L. M. Raftery, L. S. Buckmaster, Karl F. Feller, Paul L. Phillips, Albert J. Hayes, Jacob S. Potofsky, Richard F. Walsh, Joseph D. Keenan, William L. McFetridge, Lee W. Minton, A. Philip Randolph, James A. Suffridge, Joseph A. Beirne, O. A. Knight, Peter T. Schoemann, M. A. Hutcheson, William A. Calvin.

Back Pay Ordered:

Virginia Paper Hit By NLRB Ruling

The National Labor Relations Board has found the Northern Virginia Sun of Arlington, Va., guilty of unfair labor practices and has ordered the reinstatement of 24 members of Typographical Local 101.

The newspaper immediately appealed the decision in the Fourth U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Richmond, Va. The union appealed a limited back pay remedy through the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia.

Shortly after the board ruling on the ITU case, an NLRB trial examiner issued an intermediate report finding the Sun guilty of unfair practices in firing an advertising salesman because of his support of the Washington Newspaper Guild. His reinstatement was recommended, with back pay.

A three-member panel made up of Philip Ray Rodgers, John H. Fanning and Gerald A. Brown upheld Trial Examiner Louis Plost in finding the Sun violated the law in firing or laying off 14 printers in March 1959. They agreed that 10 remaining printers struck legally when they walked out the next day in protest. Other charges were dismissed.

Reversed on Back Pay

The board ordered reinstatement even if non-union replacements must be dismissed, with a preferential hiring list to be created in the event new machinery or reorganization had reduced the number of composing room jobs.

On back pay, Rodgers and Fanning reversed the trial examiner and ruled that when the Sun tried to rehire three printers and was rejected by all printers to whom the offer was made, the latter became economic strikers and not entitled to back pay thereafter.

Brown dissented on this point. He said the Sun, by rotating the rehire offers, sought "to break the collective opposition" of the employes.

Brown, declaring that limiting back pay to the period up to the rehire offer "constitutes a windfall to the perpetrator of the illegal acts," reasoned thus:

"Here the respondents provoke a strike by illegal discharges and seek to have the discriminatees [those laid off] take the jobs of their striking supporters. Elimination of . . . back pay as a result of such an offer is to permit an employer to exploit his improper conduct and to profit thereby."

Brown would have required back pay from the date of discharge until a valid job offer.

Four Kennedy Administration appointees owned and operated the newspaper in 1959 when, the board ruled, the Sun's effort to oust the ITU came to a head.

They were found by the trial examiner to have recruited and paid non-union "reserves" to await expiration of the contract; to have secreted new machinery in a warehouse; and to have shifted to a non-union shop with armed guards.

Frontiersmen Named

The four are George W. Ball, recently promoted to under secretary of state; Philip M. Stern, deputy assistant secretary of state for public affairs; Clayton Fritchey, director of public affairs for the permanent U.S. Mission to the United Nations; and Arnold Sagalyn, director, Law Enforcement Coordination, Treasury Dept.

Ball, Stern, Fritchey and Sagalyn were the respondents in the ITU case. After the trial examiner's report, the board rejected their effort to substitute a new respondent on grounds they had turned all their interests over to a new venture called the Northern Virginia Sun Enterprise.

The NLRB said it appeared that Ball owns 40 percent of one of the new purchasing companies which in turn owns about 25 percent of Sun Enterprise; it said Stern's mother owns 100 percent of the other purchasing company.

Schnitzler's Mother Dies In Washington

Mrs. Marie Schnitzler, 80, mother of AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler, died Dec. 20 at Georgetown University Hospital, Washington, D.C., after a short illness.

Mrs. Schnitzler, widow of the late Wilhelm Schnitzler, had been making her home with her son at 6806 Bradley Boulevard, Bethesda, Md.

Additional survivors are two daughters, Mrs. Harriet Middleton and Mrs. Emma Lambui, and a son, August, all of whom make their homes in New Jersey.

The funeral service was to be held Dec. 22 at the Manger Home for Funerals, 1200 Clinton Ave., Irvington, N. J. Burial services was announced for Dec. 23 at 2 p.m. at the Woodlawn Cemetery, Newark, N. J.

Employers Send Regrets, Couldn't Make Convention

Six employer members of the President's Advisory Committee on Labor-Management Relations, who had been invited by Pres. George Meany to attend the AFL-CIO convention as guests of the organization, expressed sincere regret they were unable to accept.

Typical was the reply by Thomas J. Watson, president of Intl. Business Machines, who wrote Meany he had delayed his answer "because I have been trying in every way to free up my schedule so I could be present." He added:

"It would not be sensible for me to fly down for one or two hours and yet the way the schedule works out, despite any changes that seem possible, this would be all I could arrange to do. Therefore, I must regretfully decline your kind invitation.

"Since your thought is so an excellent one, I would hope that in the future it might be possible to bring about more meetings of this type in each direction."

Cincinnati Curbs Canine Picket Duty

Cincinnati—A city official, responding to a protest by the AFL-CIO against the use of police dogs on union picket lines, has agreed to put them "on leash" to the safety director.

City Manager C. A. Harrell told Council Pres. Al Bilik that, to "fix responsibility" for the use of the Canine Corps, police have been instructed not to use the dogs in labor disputes without the approval of the city safety director.

Harrell said he agrees with Bilik that the relations between police and labor have been good and "on a high level." He said, "We feel confident that such relationship will continue."

The council asked the city to stop using police dogs on picket lines because of the psychological effect on workers of "one of these large creatures tensely waiting for a command."

The dispute grew out of a strike of 120 members of the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers at Queen City Dinettes, Inc. The strike was settled weeks ago, but the council asked for a change in city policy and objected to Harrell's assertion that the use of dogs even on peaceful picket lines, is "very much like the use of any other" police tool.

Entertainment Unions Form Confederation

Miami Beach—Eleven U.S. entertainment unions have ratified the draft constitution of a new inter-American confederation formed to strengthen inter-union ties and advance the cause of democratic trade unionism in the Western Hemisphere, it was announced here.

The new organization is known as the Inter-American Confederation of Performing Unions.

Acceptances of the draft constitution also are coming in from other unions in the 15 countries represented at the founding meeting last May in Costa Rica.

U.S. unions which played a leading part in launching the organization were the Musicians, Theatrical Stage Employes, Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, Broadcast Employes & Technicians, Screen Extras, Musical Artists, Theatrical Press Agents & Managers, Actors & Artists and three of its affiliates, the Screen Actors, Variety Artists and Actors' Equity.

UFT Wins Heavy Vote In New York Schools

kind" of union representation—"the AFL-CIO kind."

Earlier Meany had pledged the full cooperation of the AFL-CIO and the help of Regional Dir. Michael Mann and his staff. AFL-CIO national headquarters staff workers joined Mann and the UFT for the campaign, as did representatives of the AFL-CIO New York Central Labor Council.

Ballots were mailed to all teachers by the Honest Ballot Association and returns began coming in Dec. 6. The Dec. 15 deadline was extended one day to Dec. 16, and a crew of 80 workers tallied the results and announced them to news agencies the next day.

Behind the announcement of union victory was more than a year of struggle by the UFT, including a brief strike, the intervention of the New York central labor movement, a study by a panel of experts and a final recommendation by Prof. Nathan P. Feinsinger of the University of Wisconsin, who set up rules for the election.

In compliance with the rules, the UFT filed petitions with the City Labor Dept. bearing 15,000 signatures, including 5,500 on dues checkoff authorization cards.

The Teachers Bargaining Organization was hastily put together as a combination of associations, including a group sponsored by the National Education Association, which was branded a "company union" by the 1957 AFL-CIO convention. The local Teachers Union involved was one expelled from the American Federation of Teachers in 1941 and barred in 1950 from official dealings with the Board of Education, following charges it was dominated by Communists.

Anti-union elements in the school system forced the UFT to go through two lengthy campaigns and win two elections to establish representation rights. The first was on the issue merely of whether teachers "favored" collective bargaining, and they voted for it last June, 27,367 to 9,003. The union was the only teacher organization, UFT said, that endorsed collective bargaining and campaigned for a "yes" vote.

The union was girding for another massive effort to move the School Board to action when the Republican-controlled state legislature passed a law abolishing the old board and Mayor Robert Wagner named nine new members. The new members and the city's Labor Dept. took steps that resulted in the second straight-out vote on choice of bargaining representative.

UFT is preparing a set of bargaining proposals built around these general needs of the school system: base salaries of $5,000 to $10,000 a year; improvements in pensions and leaves of absence; relief from non-teaching chores for elementary school teachers; a class size of 30 or fewer children in normal classes, 20 in difficult classes; and more democratic practices in the relationships of teaching employes to principals, supervisors and superintendents.

Pact Settles Mailers' Strike In Milwaukee

Milwaukee—A 27-day strike of the Mailers Union against the Milwaukee Journal has been concluded with a compromise settlement on a new 28-month contract.

Members of Mailers Local 23, affiliated with the International Typographical Union, voted 77-7 to accept the settlement at the Journal, and also at the competing Milwaukee Sentinel.

After nine months of negotiations the union struck the Journal over what it said was management's "unyielding" position. Key issues in the settlement, worked out with the aid of a federal mediator, were these:

- The union will be notified in advance of any changes in operating procedures and may take any resulting dispute to arbitration through the grievance procedure.
- The Mailers retain jurisdiction over work that members performed before the strike and may not extend jurisdiction to work now done by other employes.

The contract also provides wage increases of $3.50 a week effective Dec. 11 and an additional $2.75 a week in the second and third years. The work week remains at 37.5 hours.

The strike had the support of the Milwaukee County AFL-CIO. In a resolution of appreciation, the union expressed thanks to the labor movement, to the Milwaukee Newspaper Guild for its "generous moral and financial backing," the Milwaukee Labor Press for reporting the facts, and to members of other printing trades unions who cooperated.

New Hope

MORE than 16 years have elapsed since the end of World War II. The peace of the world is still to be won and with it the good will to men that is a condition of peace.

These have been 16 uneasy years as the world moves from crisis to crisis triggered by the Soviet Union's twin campaigns of terror and subversion designed to bring the free world to its knees.

But at Christmas 1961 it is more evident than ever before in recorded history that there is no alternative to peace. In this age of H-bombs, intercontinental missiles and space satellites, peace is a condition of survival.

This Christmas there is a new spirit evident in the land, a spirit that is making itself felt throughout the free world—that a free, democratic world can create the conditions for a lasting peace if it has faith in its own institutions.

THE TERRORISM of 50-megaton bombs can intimidate the weak and those of feeble faith. The subversion of the Communist conspiracy can only take in those who put a low price on freedom, liberty and human dignity.

The free world, with America at the helm, has the resources, the manpower, the talent and the desire to rid the world of hunger and disease, to provide the basis of social justice in which all men can taste of bread and freedom and good health.

In the past year this truth has been put to work through programs initiated by the Kennedy Adminstration—Food for Peace, the Peace Corps, the Alliance for Progress and a revamped foreign aid program.

THESE ARE BEGINNINGS, but they move in the direction of basic solutions. For when the millions in Asia, Africa and Latin America see and feel and hear the material evidence that the free world is interested in their welfare and their fate, then the foundations for extending freedom have been built. And as social justice in a framework of freedom expands, the area for Communist dictatorship diminishes and a basis for lasting peace is created.

To achieve this end, the free world must first see to its own foundations, to make sure that its own peoples are not among the exploited and the oppressed, to build strong and viable economic structures that will withstand the impact of change.

To achieve this end calls also for the patience and fortitude to meet the tactical pressures of the Communist world, to withstand the stupidities of the reactionary right which neither understands nor is capable of working with a program of peace based on extending freedom and liberty.

At this Christmas there is new hope.

Social, Economic Revolution:

Labor Dept.'s Statistics Depict Shifting Nature of Work Force

THE DEPT. OF LABOR has just published a report of more than 500 pages which, on the surface, makes just about the dullest reading that human ingenuity could put together. It is a page-after-page compilation of statistics gathered during the past half-century on American jobs and earnings.

There is barely a line to explain what the mountains of figures mean, yet they tell an amazing and at the same time warning story of what a revolutionary change has taken place in the American economy during the years 1909-1960 and what may happen in the future.

For the American worker, the story has immense significance and for American leadership —political, labor, educational, business and industrial—an equally immense challenge.

Here are the statistical facts that reflect the huge social and economic revolution that has been going on in the United States for the past 40 to 50 years:

● During this period the number of non-agricultural workers has more than doubled, rising from 27 million in 1919 to well over 54 million in 1960. But the distribution of these workers has changed greatly.

● There are industries that have lost ground at a startling rate and there are other segments of the economy that have far outpaced the overall growth of the work force. Let's take some examples:

● The mining industry has dropped from more than 1 million in 1919 to barely 700,000 in 1960 with production workers alone dropping more than 300,000 in the past 15 years.

● Back in the Twenties, the railroads employed about 2 million workers. Today, there are about 780,000—a commentary on the revolutionary changes that have taken place in the American transportation system.

● The story in manufacturing is especially significant. The United States is the world's greatest manufacturer, yet in the 40 years that its non-agriculture work force has doubled, its manufacturing jobs have increased only about 60 percent

● The durable goods industries—that is, the heavy duty goods that don't wear out fast—have pretty well held their own with a doubling in the work force from 4.7 million in 1939 to 9.4 million in 1960. But even among the durables the story is not all rosy. Primary metals, for example, which includes steel, have actually lost job ground during the past 15 years, dropping from 1,279,000 employes in 1947 to 1,228,000 in 1960.

The story of the non-durables is nowhere nearly as good as that of the durables with the manufacturing work force increasing barely 50 percent from 5.5 million to 7.3 million during the 1939-1960 period.

Here is a grave warning for the future. The millions of new workers for whom jobs must be found are not going to find them in manufacturing if the present trend continues. Either we do something about boosting manufacturing employment or we have to find new kinds of jobs, reduce hours or increase purchasing power.

There are, on the other hand, segments of our economy that have shown tremendous growth. This is especially true in the service industries which employed 2.3 million workers in 1919 and today employ 7.4 million, more than tripling. Employment in construction also has soared relatively over the years.

THESE CHANGES in the makeup of the American work force have meant far more than mere shifts from one type of job to another. They have meant a basic change in the very fabric of the nation. They have produced a huge middle class in direct contradiction of Marxist concepts of a working class sinking deeper and deeper into poverty. They have produced high educational levels because of the growing need for higher skills.

But they have also produced correspondingly great problems that are far from being solved, problems that cannot be solved by the cliches of conservatives who long for the good old days that obviously are gone. Old-fashioned, backbone industries, such as textile and railroads, have been hard hit by changing fashions in transportation and clothing, by mechanization and by automation.

Thus far the American people and their government have met these problems largely by looking the other way. But the maladjustments are crowding in on us more and more.

Next year's session of Congress will have to deal with such crucial problems as foreign trade, continued unemployment, and the state of the economy in general. It will need all the facts it can get. The Labor Dept.'s statistical story of what has been happening during the past half-century—tedious as it is—may turn out to be a best seller after all.

Morgan Says:

New Civil Defense Policy Still Leaves Unanswered Questions

By Edward P. Morgan

(This column is excerpted from the nightly broadcasts of Edward P. Morgan, ABC commentator sponsored by the AFL-CIO. Listen to Morgan over the ABC network Monday through Friday at 7 p. m. EST.)

THE ADMINISTRATION HAS MOVED onto higher, harder ground from the swamp of confusion which it earlier called a civil defense policy, but it still has a long way to go before it can convince the country it is on the right track.

There will and should be a good deal of energetic discussion of how the whopping $700 million civil defense item the Pentagon will ask for in the 1962-63 budget can best be spent. All but $200 million of it is earmarked for shelters—with the emphasis on the construction of community fallout shelters in public buildings. This concentrates the effort where it belongs and although individual citizens who want to build their own underground rendezvous with destiny have the government's blessing and can get its advice and counsel on the project, Washington is no longer endorsing, as it earlier seemed to be doing, a policy of everybody for himself and a devilish H-bomb take the hindmost.

Morgan

There has been further clarification. On its very first page a fact sheet accompanying a Defense Dept. announcement warned: "There is no panacea for protection from thermonuclear attack. In a major attack on this country, millions—and probably tens of millions—of people would be killed." This was a far and candid cry from a monstrously unrealistic presentation in the Sept. 15 issue of Life magazine claiming that 97 out of 100 persons could be saved in an attack by following some simple instructions.

Hopefully the new line will put a damper on a kind of vigilante movement by a scattering of ruthlessly rugged individuals around the country for the construction of private shelters with machine guns mounted at the door to keep out those citizens who didn't happen to have a spot of ground to build on or a spot of cash to build with. And by stressing community enterprise, the Administration hopes to give people a sense of participation.

It dismisses as completely invalid the argument that a shelter system will encourage a national feeling of false security and/or a kind of smug belligerence which will grossly inhibit the President's exploration for negotiable grounds with the Russians and will, in effect, dare the Communists to strike. The very horrors of even a "simple" nuclear strike, Administration sources insist, would restrain us from adopting such unrealistic attitudes.

But this raises a vital point which the government has not yet squarely faced and it is hard to see how it can justify any major civil defense program until it does. This is the point of explaining to the public with cool candor and as careful a projection as possible from the known facts just what nuclear horrors to expect.

This has not been done and the new civil defense brochure—to be distributed, appropriately enough, during or just after the coming holidays—will not do it, though it does take a more sober approach to the problem than its original outlandish versions.

THE PENTAGON and its civil defense officials in particular argue that this is not their mission. Maybe not. But certainly it is the mission of some agency of government to give us a clearer idea of what we may be up against.

Ironically a lot of information is available from expert and responsible private sources and even from congressional testimony but it is not coordinated so the public can catch and comprehend it.

Paradoxically enough, one of the best treatments of the problem I have seen was written by the publisher of the Scientific American, Gerard Piel, not in his own magazine but in the liberal London weekly, New Statesman. In just one of a number of disturbing points, Piel noted that congressional hearings last summer developed the fact that there has been no research on the so called environmental fire problem rising from a major nuclear attack, that is the burning of forests, prairies and croplands.

"It may be," Piel said, "that the effects of the firestorms are, literally, unthinkable."

A corollary of that, developed independently of the article, is the apparent fact that birds are more susceptible to radiation than insects. So a bomb attack kills the bird population in a large area and what happens? Unmolested insects destroy the vegetation.

Theoretically, the administration's new shelter program will save from 20 to 50 million more lives. But what kind of world will they survive into? That question must be pursued, not to scatter us all in fear to permanent hiding in our federally-financed shelter burrows but to mobilize our insistence that every human resource we have be used to find an honorable way to live like men and not like moles and gophers or even troglodytes.

Union and NLRB Ask 2 Courts To End Bar to Banana Boat Vote

Two U.S. courts have been asked by the National Maritime Union and the National Labor Relations Board to remove legal blocks to an NLRB vote on 18 "banana" boats in the "runaway" fleet owned by the United Fruit Co.

The legal bars were slammed down as the NLRB prepared to start an election among 500 seamen on whether they want the NMU, the National Maritime Syndicate of Honduras (Sindimar) or neither to represent them as collective bargaining agent.

One block was a temporary restraining order issued by a U.S. District Court judge in Washington, D. C. The other was an order by a U.S. Court of Appeals judge in New York to the NLRB regional director to show why he should not be restrained from holding the election.

The NLRB was named defendant in both suits brought by a Unifruit subsidiary. The NMU, intervening, asked that the legal barriers be overruled so the election could proceed. There is no emergency, the judges were told, because the election balloting cannot be completed much before Feb. 15, 1962.

A union spokesman said other courts have ruled in similar lawsuits that federal courts do not have jurisdiction to override NLRB elections in union representation cases.

Last week two U.S. courts in New York held hearings and refused management petitions to stop the balloting. Two other courts then granted the petitions.

Action of the Unifruit subsidiary—Empresa Hondurena de Vapores—was called an "end run" by an NLRB attorney. A union spokesman called it a "cheap dodge by the company to prevent the crews from choosing the NMU."

The labor board held hearings over a two-year period and decided that the Empresa fleet owned by Unifruit is a substantial part of U.S. commerce and that U.S. laws should apply.

Among the points at issue were these: that the ships fly the Honduran flag, that Empresa is a Honduran company, that the seamen are not U.S. citizens, that Empresa has a contract with a Honduran "company" union.

The NLRB considered the arguments and ruled that none of the facts could bar an election.

IBEW's Yule Cheer Goes to the Needy

The Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers abandoned its traditional pre-Christmas party this year and instead gave to charity what the party would have cost.

"As Christmas is a time for giving," explained Pres. Gordon M. Freeman and Sec. Joseph D. Keenan in announcing the decision, "we feel, instead, that it would be better to increase our contributions to drives organized to take care of the less fortunate.

"May we this year extend our greeting of friendship to you in this manner."

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

IN THE NAMING OF JUDGES of the federal bench, the custom of generations gives a senator from the nominee's home state an almost absolute power of veto. Pres. Kennedy is now having trouble about this.

Virginia's Gov. J. Lindsay Almond, Jr., is retiring from office under the archaic provision of state law forbidding a governor to succeed himself. He goes out with the bitter hostility of the Byrd machine, because he broke the Byrd machine's policy of "massive resistance" to school desegregation.

Gov. Almond played a curious role in the desegregation fight. In public he was originally among the most vocal opponents of the Supreme Court's decision, one of those vowing most overtly that Virginia would never yield.

Some observers, however, believed he would lead Virginia out of the total indecency of closing all public schools rather than allow white and colored children to attend school together. And so he did. He drove through, in a closely divided and embittered state legislature, a repudiation of "massive resistance."

He is qualified on the normal counts for the federal bench. He has had a public career, he is known, his talents are tested. Politically he supported Kennedy while Sen. Harry F. Byrd disavowed any interest in the subject of the election.

There is a vacancy on the federal district bench in Virginia to which Almond would normally be appointed. But Byrd can block this by allowing it to be known that he would consider the appointment as personally offensive—"personally obnoxious" in the phrase a senator uses if the issue ever gets to the floor. So Almond will get, if anything, the lesser post of a judgeship on the U.S. Court of Customs and Patent Appeals.

A LOUISIANA U.S. DISTRICT judge, J. Skelly Wright, has handed down decision after decision patiently declaring illegal a succession of laws of the state legislature designed to block school desegregation. Judge Wright has been upheld by the appellate court and the Supreme Court. He has been the target of abuse and malignancy.

Judge Wright is eminently qualified for promotion to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the 5th Circuit, with jurisdiction in the area in which he practiced law and has spent his life. The Kennedy Administration would have liked to appoint him but it couldn't: Louisiana's two senators, Russell Long and Allen Ellender, felt that for the sake of their own political lives, they could not allow it to happen.

Judge Wright has therefore been named to the U.S. Appeals Court for the District of Columbia, which happens to be even more important than the 5th Circuit. Cases are brought there from all over the country.

There is an element of sadness, nevertheless, when a judge of integrity and obvious ability can win promotion only in an area removed from his home state, because the people there will not allow their senators to accept his confirmation to any higher judicial post directly affecting the land of his birth.

It is sadder to think that Senators Long and Ellender themselves no doubt recognize that Judge Wright could have made no rulings in desegregation cases different from those he gave, and that they are in no sense comparable to Byrd of Virginia in their private attitudes. Judge Wright is being "exported," and he is not the kind of judge the South can afford to dispense with.

UNION-MADE FURS, dresses and millinery made a hit with 600 women at the AFL-CIO Auxiliaries' fashion show in Miami Beach. The audience, mainly members of AFL-CIO families, saw union models such as the one above. The show was presented by the Ladies' Garment Workers, the Hatters, and the Meat Cutters' fur and leather department, along with the Millinery Institute of America and the Fur Information & Fashion Council.

Text of New Internal Disputes Plan

Following is the text of the AFL-CIO Constitution's new Article XXI, incorporating procedures for the settlement of internal disputes, as adopted by the AFL-CIO's fourth constitutional convention:

ARTICLE XXI

Settlement of Internal Disputes

SECTION 1. The principles set forth in this Article shall be applicable to all affiliates of this Federation, and to their local unions and other subordinate bodies.

SECTION 2. Each affiliate shall respect the established collective bargaining relationship of every other affiliate. No affiliate shall organize or attempt to represent employes as to whom an established collective bargaining relationship exists with any other affiliate. For purposes of this Article, the term, "established collective bargaining relationship" means any situation in which an affiliate, or any local or other subordinate body thereof, has either (a) been recognized by the employer (including any governmental agency) as the collective bargaining representative for the employes involved for a period of one year or more, or (b) been certified by the National Labor Relations Board or other federal or state agency as the collective bargaining representative for the employes.

SECTION 3. Each affiliate shall respect the established work relationship of every other affiliate. For purposes of this Article, an "established work relationship" shall be deemed to exist as to any work of the kind which the members of an organization have customarily performed at a particular plant or work site, whether their employer is the plant operator, a contractor, or other employer. No affiliate shall by agreement or collusion with any employer or by the exercise of economic pressure seek to obtain work for its members as to which an established work relationship exists with any other affiliate, except with the consent of such affiliate. The foregoing sentence of this section shall not be applicable to work in the railroad industry.

SECTION 4. In the event that any affiliate believes that such special and unusual circumstances exist that it would be violative of its basic jurisdiction or contrary to basic concepts of trade union morality or to the constitutional objectives of the AFL-CIO or injurious to accepted trade union work standards to enforce the principles which would apply in the absence of such circumstances, such organization shall nevertheless observe such principles unless and until its claim is upheld in the manner prescribed in Section 17 of this Article.

SECTION 5. No affiliate shall, in connection with any organizational campaign, circulate or cause to be circulated any charge or report which is designed to bring or has the effect of bringing another affiliate into public disrepute or of otherwise adversely affecting the reputation of such affiliate or the Federation.

SECTION 6. Dispute settlements and determinations under this Article shall not determine the general work or trade jurisdiction of any affiliate but shall be limited to the settlement or determination of the specific dispute on the basis of the facts and considerations involved in that dispute.

SECTION 7. The President shall establish procedural rules for the handling of complaints under this Article so that all affiliates involved in or affected by a dispute will have notice thereof, will have an opportunity for the voluntary settlement of the dispute, and, in the event of a failure to reach a voluntary setttlement, will have a full and fair hearing before an Impartial Umpire. The rules shall be such as to insure a speedy and early disposition of all complaints arising under this Article.

SECTION 8. The President shall establish a panel of mediators composed of persons from within the labor movement. The members shall serve at the pleasure of the President. Any affiliate which claims that another affiliate has violated this Article may, by its principal officer, file a complaint with the President. Upon receipt of such complaint the President shall designate a mediator or mediators, selected by him from the mediation panel, and direct that all affiliates involved or affected meet with such mediator or mediators in an effort to effect a settlement.

SECTION 9. A panel of Impartial Umpires composed of prominent and respected persons shall be established. The members of the panel shall be selected by the President with the approval of the Executive Council. If voluntary settlement of a dispute is not reached within fourteen days after the appointment of a mediator or mediators, a hearing shall be held before an Impartial Umpire selected from such panel. Impartial Umpires shall be assigned on a rotating basis, subject to their availability to conduct hearings. The terms of employment of the members of the panel shall be established by the President, with the approval of the Executive Council.

SECTION 10. The Impartial Umpire shall make a determination, after hearing, based upon the principles set forth in this Article. He shall make such determination within a time specified by the President, unless an extension of time is agreed to by the parties. The President shall transmit copies of the determination to all affiliates involved. He shall, at the same time, request any affiliate which the Impartial Umpire has found to be in violation of this Article to inform him as to what steps it intends to take to comply with such determination. Any response received, or the fact that no response has been received within a time fixed by the President, shall be communicated to the other parties to the dispute.

SECTION 11. The President may extend any time limit if, in his judgment, such extension will more readily effectuate an early settlement or determination of a dispute. Whenever, in the judgment of the President, pressing reasons require an accelerated settlement or determination, he may shorten or eliminate the mediation process or refer the dispute directly to an Impatrial Umpire.

SECTION 12. If no appeal is filed from a determination of the Umpire within five days as provided below the determination shall automatically go into full force and effect. Any affiliate which is adversely affected by a determination of the Umpire, and which contends that the determination is not compatible with this Constitution, or not supported by facts, or is otherwise arbitrary or capricious, may file an appeal with the President within five days after it receives the Umpire's determination. Any such appeal shall be referred by the President to a subcommittee of the Executive Council.

SECTION 13. The subcommittee of the Executive Council may disallow the appeal, in which event the determination of the Umpire shall be final, and subject to no further appeal and shall go into full force and effect; or the subcommittee may refer the appeal to the Executive Council, in which event the determination of the Umpire shall be automatically stayed pending disposition of the appeal by the Executive Council. The determination of the Umpire shall be sustained unless it is set aside or altered by vote of a majority of all of the members of the Executive Council. The decision of the Executive Council where an appeal is granted shall be final, and shall be effective as of the date therein specified.

SECTION 14. Any affected affiliate may file a complaint with the President that another affiliate has not complied with an effective determination of the Impartial Umpire or of the Executive Council on appeal. Upon receipt of such a complaint the President shall immediately convene a meeting of the subcommittee of the Executive Council referred to above. If noncompliance with the determination is found at such meeting, notice of such non-compilance shall be issued by the President to each affiliated national or international union and department.

SECTION 15. Immediately upon the issuance of such notification, the following shall apply:

(1) The non-complying affiliate shall not be entitled to file any complaint or appear in a complaining capacity in any proceeding under this Article until such non-compliance is remedied or excused as provided in Section 16;

(2) The Federation shall, upon request, supply every appropriate assistance and aid to any organization resisting the action determined to be in violation of this Article;

(3) The Federation shall appropriately publicize the fact that the affiliate is not in compliance with the Constitution;

(4) No affiliate shall support or render assistance to the action determined to be in violation of this Article.

In addition, the Executive Council is authorized, in its discretion, to:

(1) Deny to such an affiliate the use of any or all of the services or facilities of the Federation;

(2) Deny to such an affiliate any protection under any of the provisions or policy determinations of the Federation;

(3) Apply any other authority vested in the Executive Council under this Constitution.

SECTION 16. Any affiliate which has been found to be in non-compliance and which has been deprived of its rights under this Article may apply for restoration of such rights. Notice of such application shall be given to all of the affiliates involved in the determination or determinations as to which there is non-compliance. If such affiliates consent, the President shall be authorized to restore the rights of the non-complying affiliate after it states its intention in writing to comply thenceforth with the provisions of this Article. If any affiliate involved in the cases of non-compliance opposes the application, the rights of the non-complying affiliate shall be restored only under the following conditions:

(a) The non-complying affiliate states its intention, in writing, to comply thenceforth with the provisions of this Article;

(b) The non-complying affiliate has undertaken whatever measures may be necessary and practicable to remedy the situation;

(c) The application for restoration of rights is approved by two-thirds vote of the Executive Council, or by a majority vote of the convention.

SECTION 17. Any affiliate which claims justification under Section 4, for action, which would, in the absence of such justification violate the provisions of this Article, shall process its claim, prior to taking action, under the provisions of this Section. Such claim shall set forth the basis upon which the claim is made and the action which the affiliate proposes to take. The claim shall thereafter be processed as provided in this Article except that the determination as to whether the facts justify the proposed action shall not be made by the Impartial Umpire. The Impartial Umpire shall determine whether the proposed action would violate the provisions of this Article in the absence of justification, shall find the facts with respect to the claim of the justification, and submit a report to the Executive Council. The Executive Council shall determine on the report of the Impartial Umpire whether the proposed action would violate the provisions of this Article in the absence of justification; and, if it concludes by majority vote that the proposed action would so violate it shall find such justification only by a vote of two-thirds of the membership of the Council.

SECTION 18. The President shall be authorized to delegate to such person or persons as he may designate any of his powers or functions under this Article except the authority granted by Sections 12, 14, and 16.

SECTION 19. Where a dispute between affiliates subject to resolution under this Article is also covered by a written agreement between all of the affiliates involved in or affected by the dispute, the provisions of such agreement shall be complied with prior to the invocation of the procedures provided in this Article. If such agreement provides for final and binding arbitration, and an affiliate party to such agreement claims that another such affiliate has not complied with a decision under that agreement, it may file a complaint under the provisions of Section 14 of this Article and the procedures provided in this Article in the case of noncompliance shall be applicable. Where a dispute between affiliates subject to resolution under this Article is also covered by a written agreement between affiliates but involves or affects an affiliate not a party to such an agreement, the affiliate not a party to such agreement may invoke the procedures provided in this Article for the settlement and determination of such dispute.

SECTION 20. The provisions of this Article with respect to the settlement and determination of disputes of the nature described in this Article shall constitute the sole and exclusive method for settlement and determination of such dispute and the provisions of this Article with respect to the enforcement of such settlements and determinations shall constitute the sole and exclusive method for such enforcement. No affiliate shall resort to court or other legal proceedings to settle or determine any disputes of the nature described in this Article or to enforce any settlement or determination reached hereunder.

SECTION 21. The provisions of this Article shall take effect on January 1, 1962. Upon such effective date, the provisions of Article III, Section 4, of this Constitution, except the first sentence thereof, shall be of no further force and effect. However any dispute which has become subject to a formal complaint under such provision prior to January 1, 1962, shall be disposed of under the procedures and principles theretofore applicable and not under the procedures or principles set forth in this Article, except that any recommendation of the Impartial Umpire issued subsequent to January 1, 1962, shall be subject to the provisions of Sections 14 through 16 of this Article.

SECTION 22. Notwithstanding any other provision of this Constitution this Article shall be subject to amendment by the convention by a majority vote of those present and voting either by a show of hands, or, if a roll call is properly demanded as provided in this Constitution, by such roll call.

Meany on Meet the Press:

Job Lag May Force Shorter Workweek

There "just isn't any other answer" than a shorter workweek if large-scale joblessness continues and nothing "takes up the slack," AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany declared on the National Broadcasting Co.'s Meet the Press program.

"There is nothing sacred about a 40-hour week," he said.

"A great many people work less than 40 hours. At one time we had a 72-hour week and the economists of those days said the whole country would go to pot if we reduced that.

"What do we do if we have automation and technological improvements continuing to come in? In the word of the leading manufacturer of this type of equipment, his machines are intended to displace workers, to displace human labor. And they do.

"If there is no other employment to take these people up who are displaced and you spread this right through the entire economy, the answer will have to be a shorter workweek."

Meany was questioned on the program by Lawrence E. Spivak, permanent panel member; Herbert Kaplow of NBC News; Bernard Nossiter of the Washington Post, and Richard Wilson of the Cowles Publications.

Steel, Autos Cited

Spivak asked Meany how he explained the persistence of unemployment despite the upswing in business. The AFL-CIO president suggested that "there are a number of explanations" and that automation or technological improvement is one. He cited the basic steel industry, in which between 1955 and 1960 the work force was cut 10 percent, from 660,000 to 600,000 workers, but 10 percent more steel was produced. In automobiles, he went on, "we are producing more . . . with less and less people every year."

"If there were some other great industry to take up this slack, to take up these people who are shunted aside, then we wouldn't have any problem," Meany said. "But there doesn't appear to be any industry unless it is construction, and perhaps an attack on our real housing problem at this time. We are back again to this point where the only answer to this unemployment problem is a shorter workweek."

Meany rejected suggestions that the recent AFL-CIO convention approved resolutions assailing the basic economic policy of Pres. Kennedy.

"I think his basic policy is to get the people of America back to work," Meany said. "That is our basic policy. We think that some of the things that could be done are not being done."

He conceded differences on the budget, which the President wants balanced. Balancing the budget "would be too much of a blow to the economy," Meany said, at a time when 4 million are unemployed and 2.5 million more are working only part time.

In reply to another question, Meany said higher wages don't have to increase prices—"you could increase wages without increasing prices if you took a little less profit."

Wages should be "partly based on productivity and partly based on ability to pay," he said, and also, in the lower brackets, on "some sort of a system of human decency so that you don't pay people less than enough to live decently."

Conservative Named to Fill Bridges' Seat

A self-described conservative New Hampshire Republican, State Atty.-Gen. Maurice J. Murphy, Jr., has been appointed successor to the late Sen. Styles Bridges (R.) by Gov. Wesley Powell, also a conservative.

Bridges, GOP dean of the Senate, controlled the staff of the party's Policy Committee, which frequently issued reports assailing unions and union "bosses" because of labor's political activities. He was rated a power in his party's right-wing conservative group and often threw his influence to the promotion of other conservatives to leadership posts.

Murphy, 34 years old, is a protege of Powell, who in turn was a protege of Bridges. Murphy said that "on major issues" his thinking would be "much along the same lines" as the late senator's.

Another future change in Senate membership was revealed when conservative Republican Sen. John Marshall Butler (Md.) announced that for personal reasons he would not seek re-election when his term expires next year.

In a special House election Dec. 19, to fill a vacancy caused by the death of Rep. Overton Brooks (D.), Louisiana 4th Dist. voters chose Democrat Joe D. Waggoner over Republican Charlton H. Lyons. Both candidates campaigned as conservatives and avowed segregationists.

Judge Blocks Firings Pending NLRB Ruling

a multi-state manufacturer of industrial chemicals.

After the union had signed up a majority of the workers last September and requested recognition, the company fired seven employes. Thereupon the remaining workers walked out in protest. They, too, were fired.

Judge Hughes said the evidence pointing to an unfair labor practice was "sufficient" for the NLRB regional director to have "reasonable cause" to believe that the firings were aimed to discourage union membership. She ordered "a preservation of the status quo" pending an NLRB hearing on the case.

Moves to obtain injunctions against employers followed public suggestions by NLRB Chairman Frank W. McCulloch that the labor board might seek to "take the profit out of unfair labor practices" by providing immediate protection for workers and their unions.

The present board's first attempt to use a 10j injunction for this purpose met with a setback when a federal judge in Georgia refused to halt the closing of a Peerless Woolen Mills plant after its workers had voted for union representation.

Meany Urges Federal Steps to Assure Jobs

each recession has left us with an ever-rising backlog of jobless."

Meany told the committee that a combination of greater business activity, greater production and a faster rate of economic growth fall short of meeting the problem of providing enough jobs, essential as they are. This is in part, he said, because they do not contain in themselves "the provisions needed to fit workers to the new occupational demands of a changing society."

These tools for creating jobs, he said, must be supplemented by federal government action, including:

- A flexible public works program such as that proposed by Clark in a bill backed by labor.
- Improving the economic health of distressed economies through the Area Redevelopment Act.
- A national program of retraining and—where necessary—relocation of workers whose skills have been made obsolete.
- Federal unemployment compensation standards.
- Strengthening of the educational system with emphasis on upgrading of vocational education.
- Special assistance for older workers displaced by automation or plant migration.
- A federal study of the effects of automation with a view to shortening the work week without any cut in pay.

Proxmire, thanking Meany for "hard-hitting and vigorous exposition," expressed concern that the program advocated would unbalance the budget, particularly when linked with Meany's proposal that the President be given power to make a limited cut in the withholding tax in order to create purchasing power.

The creation of enough jobs to keep Americans at work and the country strong in view of the world situation is more important than balancing the budget, Meany declared.

"The intensification of the technological changes is displacing more and more people, and the country has to look at it as our most important problem," he said.

It is obvious that if "this accentuated trend to automation" continues, Meany said, "we're going to have to cut hours—I don't see anything else we can do."

2-Earner Families Build Middle Class

The income a second wage-earner brings into a household is often "the key to the family's role as a consuming unit" and "the key to the escape of workers from what the Communists call the proletariat into the American middle class," AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany testified before the Proxmire subcommittee of the Joint Economic Committee.

The observation was based on a short excerpt from a National Industrial Conference Board study, which Meany quoted in his testimony, showing two or more wage-earners in 20 million of the nation's 45 million families. The NICB said, "Here, in sturdy measure, is the basis for our exceptionally large middle-income class—that segment of the population which provides the core of demand for a wide range of consumer goods and services."

Retirees Give Party for 150 Orphans

Miami Beach—Retired union members at the President Madison Hotel here forgot their age and whooped it up as they entertained about 150 orphans at an all-day party Dec. 10 during the AFL-CIO convention.

The President Madison, the first in the Four Freedoms project sponsored by seven AFL-CIO unions, was alive with children of many races and colors and union officials.

Among those who attended the gala affair along the pool side bordering the beach were ILGWU Pres. David Dubinsky, Pres. Joseph Curran of the National Maritime Union and Pres. Edward L. Wheatley of the Operative Potters.

Roy Reuther, director of political activities of the UAW, substituted for his brother, UAW Pres. Walter P. Reuther, and served up the hot dogs, hamburgers, and soft drinks to the eager, shouting, screaming kids.

Joe Glazer, the singing minstrel of the labor movement, provided the songs and some of the entertainment. Glazer, former education director of the Rubber Workers, is now working for the United States Information Agency and will soon go to Mexico City.

The residents of the President Madison—all retired workers ranging in age from 62 to 85—joined in the celebration. Some even participated in the new dance craze, the twist, with the kids.

NLRB Ruling Tightens Ban On 'Hot Cargo'

Contract clauses requiring employers to give preference in contracting out work to firms having agreements with the same union were outlawed in a National Labor Relations Board decision broadening the "hot cargo" clause ban set up in the Landrum-Griffin Act.

The board specifically did not decide on the legality of all contract clauses which aim "to preserve the jobs and job rights of the employes in the unit covered by the contract" that is, when such clauses imply forbid "contracting-out."

The decision was based on 1959 Landrum-Griffin Act provisions prohibiting any contract clause in which an employer agrees to refuse to handle the goods of another employer or to stop doing business with him.

"We see no meaningful distinction," the board said, "between a contract which prohibits an employer from handling products produced by a non-union firm and a contract which causes an employer to cease subcontracting work to a non-union firm."

The issue rose in a complicated dispute between an automotive trimmers' association in St. Louis and the Teamsters which resulted in Machinists Dist. 9 invoking a clause in its contract with a separate auto dealers' association providing that when work is sent out, "preference must be given to such shop or subcontractors approved or having contracts with Dist. 9."

The union won a mediation panel decision that the clause was binding on all members of the dealers' association, and the trimmers' association filed charges of violation of the "hot cargo" ban.

The board ordered IAM Dist. 9 to cease and desist from enforcing the clause and from entering into or enforcing any other contract under which members of the dealers' association "cease or refrain, or agree to cease or refrain, from handling, using, selling, transporting or otherwise dealing in any of the products of any other employer, or from doing business with any other person."

CofC Lays Job Lag To Federal Policies

The chief economist for the Chamber of Commerce of the U.S. blamed higher-than-normal unemployment on the federal government in testimony before the subcommittee of the Joint Economic Committee.

Dr. Emerson P. Schmidt said the "government deeds and misdeeds" were "at the heart of . . . needless hardship." These included, he said, the minimum wage increase, which "barred workers" who could not find employers "willing and able to pay the higher rates;" the administration of labor laws which makes it 'troublesome, onerous and costly to employ human beings," and the "opening of the door" by the Secretary of Labor to higher union wage settlements.

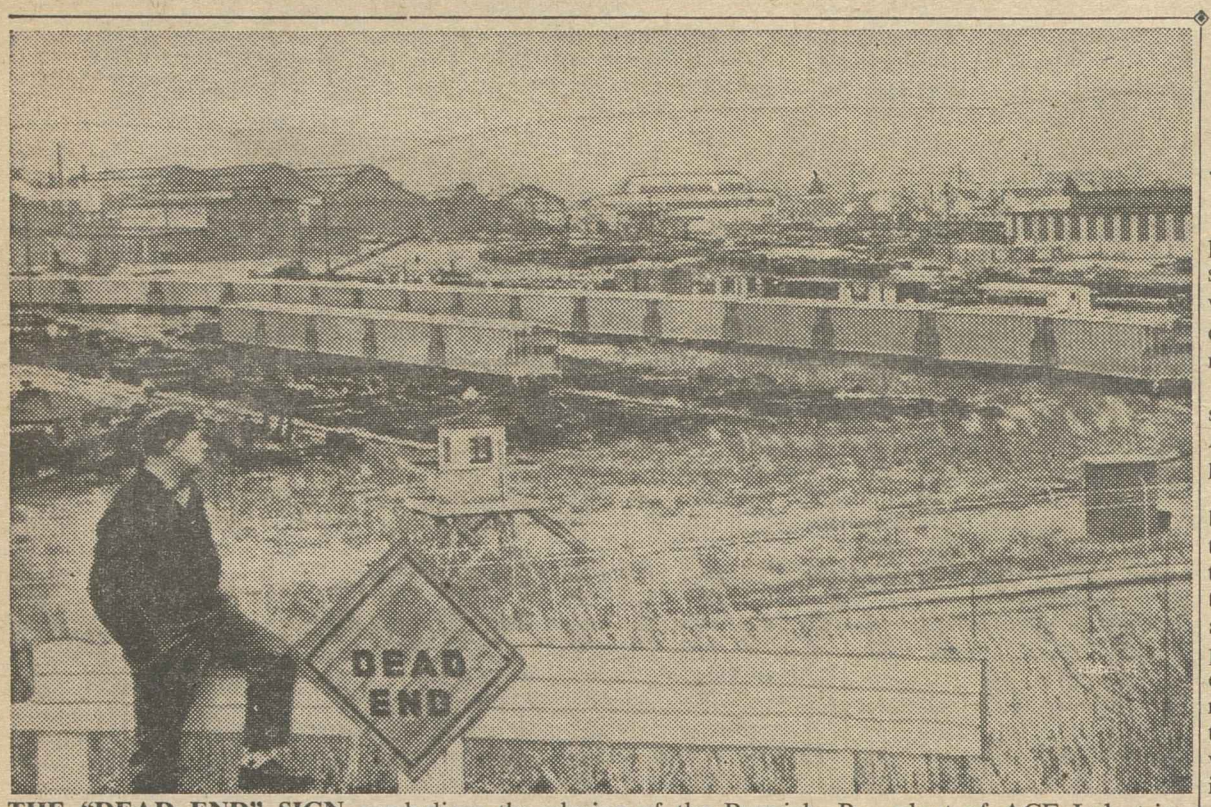
Meany Pledges Labor's Aid To Meet 1962's Challenges



THE "DEAD END" SIGN symbolizes the closing of the Berwick, Pa., plant of ACF Industries, Inc., which will shut its doors by next October, leaving without jobs 2,750 members of Steelworkers Local 1864. But the local's president, Paul Simon, shown looking at the sign, is hopeful that new industries will come into Berwick and that the workers and their town are not really at a "dead end."

Sees New Vitality Pervading Nation

The past year "marked the end of government complacency" and provided a basis allowing organized labor to "look forward with some degree of confidence to the awesome challenges that 1962 will pose for us, for our country and for the cause of human freedom," AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany said in his annual New Year message.

"In meeting these challenges and striving for so noble a cause, the AFL-CIO expects to play its full part," he added.

Although "the nation has indeed begun to move again," Meany said, the two "overriding problems of our times" remain unsolved—"meeting the threat of communism abroad and creating enough jobs for our people at home." The general economic improvement has not materially bettered the job situation, he said, and "a broader, more vigorous" program must be pushed in 1962.

"We in the AFL-CIO are hopeful," Meany said, "that with the promised support of the Administration, Congress will enact an emergency public works program, to take effect at once and continue until unemployment falls to a more tolerable level.

"We will press again for legislation to empower the President to cut withholding income taxes within a certain definite limit as a means of increasing purchasing power and thus stimulating employment.

'Unfinished Business'

"We expect early action on two major items of unfinished business — measures of tremendous social importance which will also have healthy economic effects. They are federal aid to education and old-age medical care under the social security system."

The AFL-CIO also looks forward to mounting benefits from the area redevelopment, minimum wage and housing laws enacted in the last year, Meany said. Other measures such as youth opportunities, vocational training, etc., "will command our continuing support," he added.

"We are also greatly encouraged by the outlook for rapid strides in the vital field of civil rights," he continued.

"The President's executive order barring discrimination in federal employment and on federal contracts; his evident intention to remove racial restrictions in home mortgages and other

In Petition Campaign:

Work Drive Backed By Oklahoma GOP

Oklahoma City—The Oklahoma Republican State Executive Committee, carrying out a mandate laid down by the state GOP convention last May, has voted to give official support to a "right-to-work" drive launched by local industrialists, businessmen and various national "work" propagandists.

Harry Bellmon, state chairman, said he had asked for 2,000 petitions so GOP county and precinct leaders could get behind the quest for enough signatures to put a "work" proposal on the ballot for a vote.

After the 1958 elections, Republican leaders in several states ascribed the defeat of many GOP candidates to the party's identification with "right-to-work" forces.

State AFL-CIO leaders previously had charged that the radical right-wing John Birch Society and other extremist groups were backing enactment of a "right-to-work" law.

Pres. Roy Tillman of the Oklahoma State AFL-CIO said the Birch group was "calling the shots" on an anti-labor campaign throughout the state. He said Glenn A. Green, director of information for the so-called "National Right to Work Committee" of Washington, "an avowed Bircher," was masterminding the drive.

In announcing the state Republican Party's action to support the "work" law drive, Bellmon said the GOP Executive Committee felt such a law would "do no damage to legitimate labor organizations." He said the Republicans believed it would "have the beneficial effect of ultimately making more jobs available to Oklahoma citizens by making our state more attractive to industries which are now bypassing Oklahoma."

The legislature, controlled by the Democrats, has refused to enact a so-called "right to work" law.

Christmas In Berwick A Bit Grim

Berwick, Pa.—It was Christmas, all right. But somehow the lights in Berwick seemed a little less bright than last year, the carols were a bit more tremulous and the people were—well, distraught.

For their minds were only partly attuned to the holiday. Through the holly and pine, the snow that swept in off the Susquehanna River and whipped against the Yuletide decorations that made the streets gay, there insistently pressed a vision—an unpleasant one—of next October, when as the leaves on the surrounding hills begin to turn, Berwick's largest industry, the 62-year-old ACF Industries, Inc., will close its doors forever.

When the key turns in the lock for the last time, some 2,750 members of Steelworkers Local 1864 will be without jobs—about 25 percent of all jobs in this pleasant city of 13,000.

Their seniority goes back to 1921. Approximately 80 percent of them are between 40 and 55 years of age—too old to get other

IAM Sues United for Lost Pay

Hartford, Conn.—Two Machinists locals in Connecticut have sued the United Aircraft Corp. for multi-million dollar damages, including wage losses to members, resulting from the company's alleged failure to live up to rehiring provisions of a strike settlement agreement.

The breach of contract suits, filed in U.S. District Court here, charge that the company's Pratt & Whitney and Hamilton Standard divisions violated the agreement which ended a nine-week strike in the summer of 1960 by:

- Failing to rehire a large group of strikers for their former jobs "although such jobs were available."
- Failing to recall IAM mem-

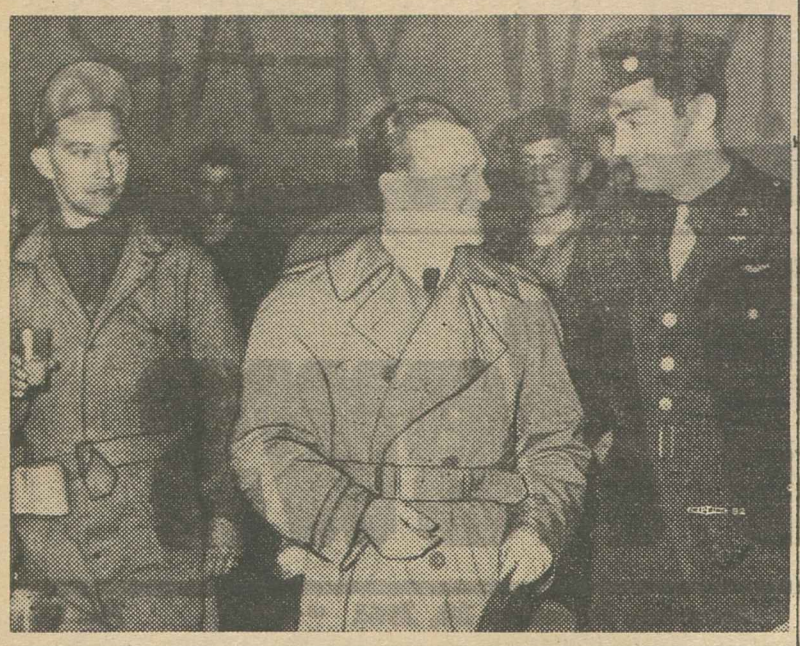
Cost of Living Dips in November

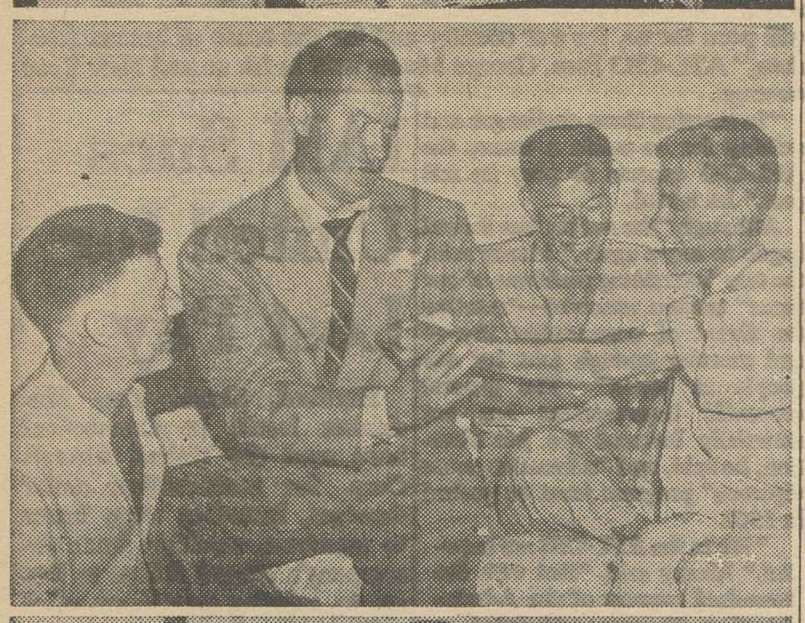
The nation's cost of living index dropped slightly in November, the Labor Dept. has announced.

The Consumer Price Index declined by one-tenth of 1 percent to 128.3 because of lower costs for women's clothing, used cars and some foods. This means the market basket which cost $10 in the 1947-49 base period now costs $12.83.

The average factory worker's take-home pay and buying power moved to record highs with a recovery in working hours and a stabilized cost of living.

20 Years of USO





TWENTY YEARS OF USO service to members of the United States armed forces, at home and overseas, are exemplified in these scenes showing union performers in typical USO activities. From the top are James Cagney, wartime president of the Screen Actors Guild, visiting a GI mess hall following a USO show; film star Laraine Day cutting a cake for service men and women at the famed Hollywood canteen, organized by members of the entertainment unions; comedian Bob Hope, a winner of the AFL-CIO's Murray-Green award, clowning with troops in an Army hospital in Korea; and singer Eileen Barton, with AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler, left, and Leo Perlis, director of AFL-CIO Community Services Activities, before touring in 1960 with the AFL-CIO's "Salute to the Armed Forces."

Race Bias Prompts Convention Shift

The executive board of the State, County & Municipal Employes has voted to shift its 1962 convention to Milwaukee, charging that racial discrimination "still exists" in Kansas City, Mo., where the convention had been scheduled to be held.

Pres. Arnold Zander said a survey showed segregation in hotel facilities, restaurants "and even in bowling alleys." He said it would be "unthinkable" for the union to meet "in any city whose business establishments practice racial discrimination."

Praising the efforts of the Kansas City Commission on Human Relations to eliminate discrimination, Zander said the AFSCME board believed the change in convention city would "aid the commission's work."

Union Artists Swell USO's Holiday Tours

During the holiday season, 14 USO shows involving more than 100 union performers were sent out to entertain United States servicemen overseas, according to Donald F. Conaway, secretary of the Associated Actors and Artistes and AFL-CIO representative on USO's national board of governors. Heading the shows were such stars as Roy Acuff, Danny Kaye, and the perennial GI Santa Claus, Bob Hope.

The shows took place as USO rounded out its twentieth year of service to the armed forces. From the organization of the Hollywood Victory Committee in January of 1942, to the present-day Overseas Shows of the national USO entertainment department, men and women in the entertainment unions have served with distinction.

The unions are Screen Actors Guild, Actors' Equity Association, American Federation of Radio & Television Artists, and the American Guild of Variety Artists. AFL-CIO participation in the programs is coordinated by AFL-CIO Community Service Activities.

In a report to its membership on the first anniversary of Pearl Harbor, the Screen Actors Guild noted that 1,141 stars had presented 352 USO shows during the year.

By the time of the 20th anniversary of Pearl Harbor, more than 50,000 performers had given well above two million USO shows at U.S. military installations

With the help of the entertainment industry, performers organized and operated the American Theater Wing Stage Door Canteen in New York and the Hollywood Canteen. There, during World War II, the young soldier might find Marlene Dietrich serving him a sandwich, Paul Henreid pouring coffee, Joe E. Brown clearing tables, Harry Von Zell leading the floor show,

Although two decades have passed and some of the names have changed, the greats of show business still drop in at the USO clubs just off Times Square in New York and in downtown Hollywood to chat with this generation's young men in uniform.

"The closing chapter of the story of these performers, their unions, USO and the GI overseas, has not been written," notes Ralph Bellamy, president of Actor's Equity. "It is still being chronicled in the day-to-day participation in USO's Overseas Shows program. And this support will not end so long as there is an American in uniform overseas."

NLRB Examiner Files Report:

Parleys Resumed In Defender Strike

Chicago—The publisher of the Chicago Defender, held guilty of unfair labor practices that resulted in a strike by the Newspaper Guild, has returned to the bargaining table.

Representatives of Publisher John Sengstacke and the Guild met for contract talks the week before Christmas and are scheduled to meet again after New Year's Day in efforts to reach agreement on ending the eight-month dispute.

National Labor Relation Board Trial Examiner John H. Eadie, after hearings in August on the Guild's charge of refusal to bargain, filed his intermediate report Dec. 6 recommending that Sengstacke's company be directed to:

- Bargain collectively with the Guild and put any agreement reached into a signed contract.
- Reinstate 25 composing room employes without prejudice to seniority or other rights, and make them whole for lost pay, dismissing if necessary any persons hired since the strike started.
- Reinstate 33 editorial and maintenance employes and pay them for time lost from Apr. 16 to the date of an offer of reinstatement.
- Cease discouraging membership in ANG Local 71 and stop refusing to supply pertinent data requested by the Guild.

The examiner recommended dismissal of the complaint that the company unilaterally changed wages and conditions by "farming out" composing room work after Apr. 16 without giving the union an opportunity to bargain on the conditions.

When negotiations were resumed, both the publisher and the Guild asked the NLRB for a 30-day delay to Jan. 27 in filing exceptions to the examiner's report.

The Chicago Guild has had a contract with the Defender for editorial and business office employes for approximately 15 years, and last Feb. 14 won an NLRB election covering composing room, pressrom, stereotype and mailroom employes.

Defender employes voted to walk out when months of meetings failed to produce an acceptable contract offer. The publisher offered small increases to about 20 editorial employes but did not set a firm date for composing room negotiations. The management pleaded inability to pay but failed to offer proof of its claim, the examiner found. Said Eadie:

"It is clear that the strike was from its very inception an unfair labor practice strike, motivated and prolonged by the respondent's failure to bargain in good faith.

"I further find that the union on Apr. 24, 1961, made an unconditional offer to return to work on behalf of the striking employes."

Although the plant has been operated by strikebreakers, the union's picket line has remained solid. Not a single striker has accepted a management offer to return to work.

Chicago Guild Executive Dir. Kenneth Byrd said a special collection before Christmas raised $3,200 for Defender families and that, since the strike started, Guild members and other union sources have contributed an additional $22,000 in strike support. The need for support is greater than ever, he said.

One of the 25 strikers Sengstacke has been directed to reinstate is his nephew, maintenance man Isaiah Major.

The paper, largely circulated in the Negro community here had 21,357 daily circulation as of last May 1.

Coast Unions Urged to Push Bias Fight

San Francisco—Intensification of the fight to win equal rights on the job for members of minority groups has been urged on central labor and craft union councils throughout this state by Executive Sec.-Treas. Thomas L. Pitts of the California State AFL-CIO.

Pitts in a letter reviewed steps California labor previously has taken to assure equal rights in job opportunities and particularly in apprenticeship training programs. He recalled that by convention action the state body is "pressing hard on many fronts to secure and extend the equal rights of all individuals, regardless of their race, color, creed, religion or national origin."

"I call these activities to your attention," Pitts wrote, "because of a number of disturbing stories in the daily press which would leave the impression that organized labor is somehow condoning discriminatory practices within its own ranks. I believe the record of our activities speaks for itself, but it is incumbent upon all of us to make certain that our positive efforts to elminate the blight of discrimination are continued and expanded."

Pitts enclosed copies of statements by AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany and Pres. C. J. Haggerty of the AFL-CIO Building & Construction Trades Dept. supporting the Powell bill. The measure, now before Congress, would prohibit federal support of apprenticeship training programs that discriminate.

He urged the central bodies to ask their congressmen to back the bill when it comes up for action.

Oklahoma GOP Joins 'Work' Law Backers

The signature campaign is under way now. The Rev. Raymond Armstrong, executive director of Oklahomans for "Right-to-Work," said the group expects to start circulating the petitions about Jan. 15.

Tillman said Green "readily admits" being a member of the John Birch Society, "whose leader accused even the conservative Eisenhower Administration of being 'captive of the Communists.'"

"Their hired propagandists are hard at work in Oklahoma now. Their aim is to beat down Oklahoma wages of both organized and unorganized workers with this anti-labor law."

The so-called "right-to-work" forces, Tillman charged, seek the destruction of effective collective bargaining.

"If successful, they will destroy the healthy labor-management relations we have so long enjoyed in Oklahoma," he added. "They will also destroy basic rights of Oklahoma workers. The result is sure to be turmoil and strife, followed by lower wages, which merchants should realize also mean lower purchasing power."

'Woolworth' Reversed:

NLRB Changes Rule In Election Cases

The National Labor Relations Board has unanimously voted to abandon its seven-year-old "Woolworth doctrine" on employer misconduct in election cases and to extend the period over which it will weigh union charges of objectionable activities during campaigns before representation elections.

The older practice, enunciated in 1954 in the F. W. Woolworth Co. case, provided that the board review alleged objectionable conduct from the date an election is ordered. Under the new practice, which became effective Dec. 14, it will go back to the date a union files an election petition with the board.

The decision to change the ground rules grew out of the board's consideration of alleged objectionable conduct prior to an election at the Ideal Electric & Manufacturing Co., Mansfield, O., which the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers lost to a local terming itself the Independent Electrical Workers Union. The IUE filed objections. The board decided against it under the Woolworth rule, but handed down the new rule.

Such a change had been strongly recommended to the NLRB in a brief filed in the Ideal case by AFL-CIO Gen. Counsel J. Albert Woll and his law associate, Theodore J. St. Antoine.

The AFL-CIO brief urged that to restrict union charges of unfair employer practices to a period immediately prior to an election—"unually just 30 days or less"—was unrealistic and "ill-justified."

Earlier Cases Cited

There have been "numerous cases," it stated, in which the board refused to investigate employer conduct "which may well have affected employes' rights," simply on the ground that the alleged conduct took place prior to the date the NLRB ordered an election.

It is still "basic federal policy," the brief declared, that workers should be protected in the exercise of "full freedom of association, self-organization, and designation of representatives of their own choosing."

Setting an arbitrary "cutoff" date, behind which union charges of illegal employer practices will not be considered by the board, is to establish a period for "insulated" employer misconduct that impairs the law's purpose, Woll argued.

In deciding the case, the board recalled that the time between the filing of a petition and the ordering of an election has been substantially reduced by its delegation of representation case powers to the regional directors.

"Remoteness no longer necessitates the delayed cutoff date adopted in Woolworth," the board said. "At the same time the recent delegation does not appear to have removed the possibility of intentional delay by parties at the hearing stage under the Woolworth cutoff policy.

"The board has now reconsidered the entire problem and concludes, in all circumstances, that the date of filing of the petition rather than the issuance of decision and direction, or of notice of hearing, should be the cutoff time in considering alleged objectionable conduct in contested cases. From that time, when the board's processes have been invoked and a prompt election may be anticipated pursuant to present procedures, we believe that conduct thereafter which tends to prevent a free election should appropriately be considered."

Construction Strikes Settled in Toronto

Toronto—Two strike settlements have ended six months of strife in Toronto's commercial construction industry.

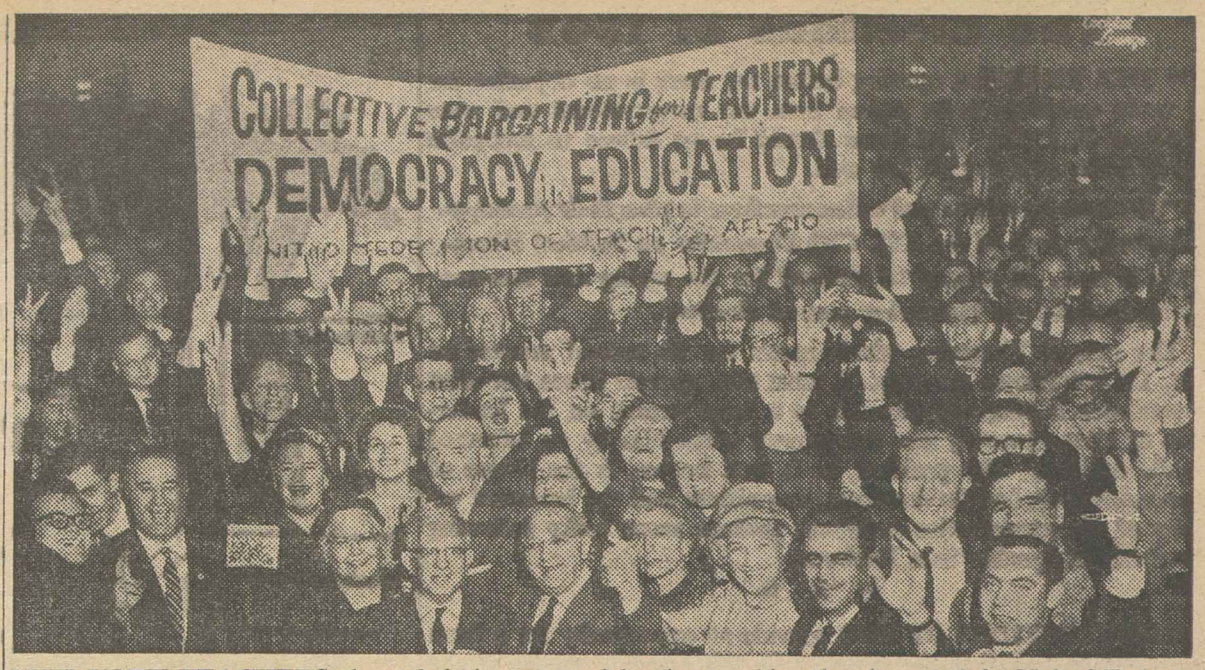
A three-stage increase totaling 18 cents an hour, plus an additional 5 cents to set up a welfare fund, ended a six-week strike by rodmen, who are members of the Iron Workers. They had been receiving $2.66 an hour.

The Sheet Metal Workers settled a three-month walkout by accepting an 18-cent increase in a 19-month agreement, with 15 cents retroactive to Sept. 1. The previous rate was $3.42 an hour.

Woodworkers Re-Elect Four Top Officers

Portland, Ore.—Top officers of the Woodworkers have been re-elected for new two-year terms in a referendum vote.

Certified as elected by the international executive board were Pres. A. F. Hartung, Vice Presidents, Claude Ballard and Ronald F. Roley, and Sec-Treas. William Botkin.



NEW YORK TEACHERS show their joy at a celebration marking the victory of the United Federation of Teachers, affiliated with the AFL-CIO American Federation of Teachers, in an election supervised by the Honest Ballot Association. Berwick Christmas Made Grim By Word of Big Plant Closing jobs easily, too young to go on pension. They cover the range from common labor to tool and die makers with the highest skills.

Plans Work Shift

ACF announced it is closing its $25 million plant, which has 10 miles of railroad tracks connecting the buildings, because of dwindling business and rising operating costs. It has newer and more efficient plants at Milton, Pa.; Huntington, W. Va., and St. Louis, and plans to transfer to them its railroad and subway car construction operations.

USWA Local 1864 dedicated a new $300,000 hall less than two years ago. Paul Simon, the president, who has four children, is confident "we'll fare out of it all right."

"We have a lot to offer here," he declared. "We have a nice town, a low tax rate, a brand new high school, a brand new hospital and a largely-skilled work force."

Wages under the contract covering the company's railroad and subway car operations average $2.81 an hour plus hospitalization, a $5,000 insurance policy and supplementary unemployment compensation. Work has been spotty, reaching a peak early in the year and dropping sharply during the summer. But even on short time a man could do better than in most of the other industries in the area, where the average wage has been a little more than $1 an hour.

Simon is extremely hopeful that some other firm will take over the sprawling ACF plant, but pointed out the company has not revealed its own plans for the facilities after the closing if it has any.

Both the local and the international union have ben communicating with firms that might possibly use the plant. Representatives of four companies have inspected the buildings and railroad yards.

Development Loans Approved

Loans under the state development program—sort of a "little Area Redevelopment Administration"—totaling $57,600 have been approved and are expected to create 125 new jobs. Sen. Joseph S. Clark (D-Pa.) visited the city with State Sec. of Labor & Industry A. Alan Sulcow and conferred with union leaders, Mayor-elect Wayne Schuyler, Chamber of Commerce officials and businessmen.

Clarence Garrison, who is 46 and a shop steward in the press department, is typical of those who see their jobs vanishing next autumn. He has five children, the youngest two-year-old twins. and lives so close to the No. 2 gate he can go home for lunch.

"It will be lousy," he conceded. "I only worked 17 weeks this year but even so, that's not so bad for me. I have 21 years' seniority, and where can I get a job at my age even though I have a trade? I'll try to stick here—I think something will come in."

Thirty-six years of seniority have enabled Andrew Horvat to pay off the mortgage on his home and to see his three children married.

"Now for me to go out to get a job—where can I get a job?" he asked, bitterly.

Employes above 55 who have 20 years or more of service can go on pension when the plant closes.

Schuyler, who becomes mayor after New Year's Day, is a purchaser for ACF. The mayor's post is a part time job and pays $50 a month.

"We realize we've been hit hard, but we're not crying," he said. "The local government and the public at large are rapidly banding together to see what can be done."

2 Ontario Locals Ratify Steel Pacts

Toronto—Two Ontario locals of the Steelworkers have ratified new agreements.

In Sault Ste. Marie, the 6,000-member Local 2251 ratified a three-year agreement with the Algoma Steel Corp. yielding an estimated 21 cents an hour in wage increases and fringe benefits and providing that the first union-sponsored health center in Canada, financed by company-paid premiums, be in operation by 1963.

At Hamilton, a one-year contract with the Stanley Steel Co. was approved by Local 4444, which has 100 members. It provided for a general increase of 3 cents an hour on rates which ranged from $1.77 to $2.815 under the old agreement, and for a half-cent increase in the 6-cent stepup between job categories.

IAM Seeks Damages in United Case

bers to "other available jobs for which they qualified."

- Rehiring strikers for jobs at lower rates of pay and refusing to upgrade them to their former levels when vacancies developed.
- Hiring new employes before recalling IAM members on the preferential hiring list.
- Failing to establish and maintain preferred hiring lists and refusing to supply the union with information it needed to police the agreement.
- Working employes overtime to avoid having to recall union members before the Jan. 1, 1961, expiration date of the preferential hiring agreement.

In a companion action, the IAM has filed unfair labor practice charges against the company with the National Labor Relations Board. The NLRB is currently investigating the case after having won enforcement in federal district court of subpoenas directing the company to produce employment records. The company had refused to furnish the information which the NLRB said it needed for its investigation.

The IAM cited as support for its charges of contract violations a recent report of U.S. Comptroller Gen. Joseph Campbell revealing that United Aircraft is seeking reimbursement from the Navy for a considerable amount of overtime worked in the post-strike period.

The union charges that the record thus demonstrates that United had resorted to overtime instead of carrying out a rehiring schedule. The comptroller general's report was made public by Rep. Frank Kowalski (D-Conn.).

The Elections of 1962

IN THE YEAR just opening before us, there is no objective for trade unionists more urgent than the congressional and state elections of 1962. And there should be no failure to recognize the difficulty of doing the job well.

The time for unions and union members to plan their participation in the work of the AFL-CIO Committee on Political Education is now. It cannot be delayed for the spring and summer primaries, for the November general elections.

The present Congress, which meets for its second session on Jan. 10, is a known quantity. It must take up vast issues but what it produces legislatively depends to a large degree on the leadership of Pres. Kennedy and the support given him by an informed public opinion. The problem, as is well known, is the House of Representatives and its dominant committees and the incessant activity of the conservative coalition, perhaps more balky following the death of Speaker Sam Rayburn.

THE ELECTIONS OF 1962 provide an opportunity for a fresh start. It is then that the people will select the members of the House and Senate that the President must seek to lead for the last two years of his second term.

Here is the simple truth that people interested in liberal causes must face: there has been a tendency, in the past, for voters to get lazy about offyear elections. The party in power has historically lost votes.

Those who want Kennedy's programs to succeed legislatively must recognize that they are unlikely to succeed in 1963 and 1964 if any more liberals are lost in Congress. A net decline of 21 liberals in the House as a result of the 1960 elections blocked action on many programs in the year now ending.

There could be no more disastrous mistake than to imagine that what was done in the AFL-CIO registration campaign of 1960 will automatically extend its benefits to elections held near the tag end of 1962.

AMERICAN CITIZENS are highly mobile. They tend to change residence, to go where the jobs are, to move from one area to another. And when they move they lose their registration.

Many must register again if they are to vote in the primaries and the general elections.

The money raised in 1960 by voluntary gifts to COPE was used effectively. These gifts must be replenished if liberal candidates in 1962 are to have the backing for the bare essentials of printing, television, radio and travel costs, campaigning often against opponents much more lavishly supplied from special interests seeking to block liberal legislation.

The recent AFL-CIO convention laid down a program for political education and activity in the registration and COPE contribution fields at national and local levels. It is a practical program, proved effective in the past, and the causes it seeks to advance are good for the country and good for common people everywhere.

Equity's Edict Sounds Knell For Segregation in Theaters

The following is excerpted from an article in the November 1961 AFL-CIO Free Trade Union News by Dick Moore, editor of Equity Magazine, publication of Actors' Equity Association, entitled "Eliminating Race Barriers from America's Theaters."

By Dick Moore

ON OCT. 6, 1961, at a meeting of 500 union members in New York, a quiet man announced one of American labor's major achievements in the field of race relations.

Effective June 1, 1962, Equity's Executive Secretary Angus Duncan told the quarterly meeting of Actors' Equity Association, "no segregation will occur in the legitimate theater throughout the United States and Canada where Equity members perform."

Since the 13,000 members of Actors' Equity Association (AFL-CIO) comprise all professional actors who work on the stage, the action will effectively eliminate segregation in legitimate theaters.

This announcement was the culmination of years of work by Equity, most of which has been done quietly, without fanfare.

As far as the public is concerned, this campaign to eliminate racial segregation in theaters began in 1948, and focused then on the National Theater in Washington, D. C.

Clearly, it was morally unacceptable and philosophically inconsistent for segregation to be praticed in the capital city of the United States.

The union sought agreement on its stand from the League of New York Theaters, the employer group composed of producers and theaters owners who originate and book Broadway and touring shows. This is the group with which Equity negotiates its main collective bargaining agreement. The league agreed with the actors' position: theaters in Washington must be integrated.

But the struggle was not easily won. While all but one of Washington's theaters quickly acceded to the new policy, the sole holdout, the National Theater, was the largest and most famous in the city. Rather than capitulate, the National closed. It remained closed for four years, while actors sacrificed scarce jobs.

Finally, in 1952, the theater was sold, and a gala premiere saw an overflow audience of all races celebrate its rebirth.

Since that time there have been other victories on quieter fronts: through conciliation, persuasion and appeals to reason theaters in St. Louis and Baltimore have dropped segregation policies, and employment opportunities for performers of minority races have been expanded.

Toward this end, Equity maintains its Committee on Ethnic Minorities, the function of which is continually to explore new avenues for increasing employment for Negro actors, and eliminate racial stereotypes in theatrical presentations.

The first collective bargaining agreement barring segregation outside of Washington, D. C., was negotiated between Equity and the producers of Industrial Shows in June 1961.

While not so far-reaching as the agreement with the League of New York Theaters announced on October 6, it was significant nevertheless: for the 54 producers signatory to the pact assemble productions for some of the largest companies in America.

THE ANTI-SEGREGATION clause in the new contract with this group is identical to the one most recently agreed upon with the League of New York Theaters.

Thus armed with its first negotiated contract universally barring segregation within the entire framework of a jurisdiction, Equity again approached the League of New York Theaters. Segregation in Washington, D. C., theaters where Equity members work had been prohibited by contractual stipulation with the league since 1948; now the union asked that this clause be extended to apply to the entire United States and Canada.

The league agreed. But the problem could not be resolved quite so easily as all that, and many things needed to be done before such an agreement could be announced. For one thing, there were contracts in existence with theaters, some of which had practiced segregation or even exclusion.

The June 1, 1962, cut-off date helped solve that problem.

In any event beginning June 1, 1962, each booking contract will contain a clause providing that no discrimination or segregation will be practiced against any actor or patron of the theater by reason of race, color or creed.

Facing the future, both the actors and the producers realize that some already-scarce jobs and some profits may be sacrificed to this principle of human rights, for worthwhile gains are not always easily won. But they have chosen their course, and, in Duncan's words, "Equity is grateful to all those whose cooperation makes this achievement possible."

Challenge of Common Market A Pivotal Issue for Kennedy

By Edward P. Morgan

(This column is excerpted from the nightly broadcasts of Edward P. Morgan, ABC commentator sponsored by the AFL-CIO. Listen to Morgan over the ABC network Monday through Friday at 7 p. m. EST.)

HISTORY IS TIGHT-FISTED with the opportunities it gives men for greatness. A leader of courage and conviction may fall short of the measure for the lack of a cause or for faulty timing in its development. And yet out of a dull and dusty looking issue may emerge bold decisions that make history and immortalize the decision takers.

Morgan

Does such an intriguing possibility confront John F. Kennedy? Some observers think it does, not in the quivering terrain of human rights, not directly over the issue of war or peace, but in the improbable field of economics.

In its annual projection of the coming congressional year, one of the capital's more sophisticated lobbies, NCEC, the National Committee for an Effective Congress predicts that the hard core of victory in the Cold War depends on how intelligently we seize the opportunity of forging a kind of economic alliance with Western Europe. The specific issue is U.S. trade policy and our relations with the Common Market but it is really much more than that with which the coming Congress must deal.

"The Kennedy Administration," says a special NCEC report, "is being compelled to accept the challenge of the Common Market and make it pivotal to other major problems. . . . the flow of gold, the transplanting of American capital to the Common Market, the wage-price spiral, unemployment and automation at home, tax inequities, and farm surpluses are some of the problems involved.

"If the Administration casts the proposition in its proper size," the report goes on, "it would become one of those keystone issues which politician-statesmen long for. It would put Kennedy clearly on the stage of history, while giving him leverage to work at his housekeeping problems. Whether he wants this or not, Pres. Kennedy is being offered a design and purpose. The inner logic of the problems of fighting for a free economic community can give coherence and long-range meaning to his smallest acts.

"This is the new watershed in American economic policy. The problem runs right up from the workingman's bench to the foreign minister's table; it is closely connected with survival as well as with pay envelopes."

But what justifies such sweeping statements? The answer is rather simple and Lincoln gave it when he said "united we stand; divided we fall." Only now we are talking about not just the American union but the union of open societies of the West, carried as they have been to such an incredible peak of advancement and power by the industrial revolution despite the devastating interruptions of past wars. Capitalism has managed to mock Karl Marx's prediction that it would destroy itself, largely because it demonstrated an amazing flexibility, a capacity to change. Now if it can adapt again, developing a common market of the non-Communist world, it may be able to make the mockery of Marx permanent. Khrushchev senses this danger and is trying with new intensity to divide the western alliance.

SO MUCH DEPENDS so heavily on us, the Americans. The Common Market not only exists; it flourishes, and Britain must surely join it. If the New Frontier exists anywhere today, says the NCEC report with some irony, it exists in the elan, the spirit of this newly integrating Europe. But to make partnership with it will be hard. There will be competition within this market and to compete successfully we must not only produce quality but produce it at costs that require responsible discipline in the fields of profits and wages.

The NCEC argues that actually only about 1 percent of American business requires tariff protection to survive. So far, protectionist lobbies have managed to dramatize the hurts of this minority out of all proportion to the national welfare.

In the clutch, the decision may depend on a few votes, on the House Ways and Means committee which must write a bill, and on the Rules committee, which must clear it. Here will come perhaps the acid test of the Kennedy leadership, not just in wheeling and dealing but in what the NCEC calls legislative craftsmanship.

In the coming political battle it suggests fascinating possibilities of political realignment which could clearly separate conservative Republicans from the radical right, and further isolate the latter. Indeed the committee, with a kind of devilish glee, quotes the highly conservative economist and writer, James Burnham, as declaring in the National Review that logically, Sen. Goldwater's own position requires him to support U.S. partnership with the Common Market as part of the hard line against communism.

Actually, of course, the leaders of finance—mainy Republican—are with leading Democratic politicians on this issue already. And an independent voice of the GOP, none other than its 1936 presidential candidate, Alf Landon, asserts no special interest has a moral right to stand in the way of uniting the economic strength of the free world, because this is a matter of survival.

10-Point Development Program Proposed to Lift Latin Nations

Unless current development programs result in swift social evolution in Latin America, the world "must face the reality that other countries will succumb to a Castro-type Communist dictatorship," a six-man Postal, Telegraph & Telephone Intl. team recently reported after an intensive economic, social and political survey of 18 countries south of the Rio Grande.

The team proposed a 10-point program it said should be undertaken immediately. It reached its conclusions after interviewing workers, professional and business people and government officials.

The PTTI—the international trade secretariat of anti-Communist unions in the communications field—undertook the project in seeking ways to carry out the spirit of Pres. Kennedy's Alliance for Progress.

The group that turned out the 88-page report included two Americans—Chairman William C. Doherty, Jr., PTTI inter-American representative, and Vice Pres. Ray Hackney of the Communications Workers.

The committee recommended:

- Recognition of the fact that strong healthy, democratic, free trade unions are essential to a sound economy and should be encouraged.
- Eligibility of bona fide free unions, as well as government and industry, for direct loans under inter-American assistance programs.
- Safeguards to assure that workers will benefit from the flow of capital and investment to Latin America.
- Financing of housing projects through direct loans to unions or union-sponsored cooperatives.
- Stabilization of world commodity prices to prevent fluctuations in the incomes of countries dependent on one or two basic products.
- Formation of a common market in the Western Hemisphere, with elimination of trade barriers.
- Provisions to attract capital and penalties on the flight of capital.
- Sound programs of wholesale tax and land reforms.
- Immediate improvements in health, education and recreation facilities.
- Promotion of an extensive campaign to make the Western Hemisphere realize it is a single community.

"Our studies and this survey adequately demonstrate," the report said, "that our unions in every country without exception are anxiously awaiting the opportunity to participate in a responsible and industrious manner in the Alliance for Progress . . .

"We hold that the most efficient, direct and immediate form of assistance to the people can be rendered through the trade union movement."

Sec. of Labor Arthur J. Goldberg, who was presented with a copy of the report, predicted that projects of this type will "lead to constructive programs and actions in harmony with the Alliance for Progress."

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

REPUBLICANS IN THE SENATE appear headed for a showdown fight on a choice of Policy Committee chairman to succeed New Hampshire's late Sen. Styles Bridges. The stage is set for a replay of the internal struggle of the GOP in 1959, when the more liberal group unsuccessfully ran Sen. John Sherman Cooper of Kentucky against Sen. Everett McKinley Dirksen of Illinois for the post of floor leader.

In the leadership fight of 1959, Sen. Leverett Saltonstall played a mediating role. He himself was already chairman of the Senate Republican Conference—the full GOP delegation that at least theoretically controls the assignment of Republicans to committee posts and otherwise is influential. He has now served for years as head of the conference, and a few weeks ago it was assumed generally that he would succeed Bridges on the Policy Committee.

This was before the party's genuine right-wing conservatives decided they would prefer a more partisan successor to Bridges and therefore hitched themselves to the wagon of Sen. Bourke Hickenlooper of Iowa.

By the reality of things, the Policy Committee chairmanship is the second most important in the Senate Republican hierarchy. The committee has a staff that the chairman controls, and Bridges showed how that staff could be used to promote the chairman's personal ideas of the proper kind of right-wing politics. Indeed, Bridges' use of the staff for that purpose was one of the reasons Sen. George D. Aiken of Vermont led the liberal revolt of 1959—declaring publicly that the results of the 1958 elections showed the Republican Party needed a "new image."

POLITICS IS SWIRLING in many areas as Congress turns its attention to the upcoming elections. Republican House Floor Leader Charles A. Halleck of Indiana speaks hopefully of a "wave of conservatism" in the nation. He says the GOP has a "fighting chance" of winning control of the House next November, which would require a net gain of 44 seats.

Most political observers think Halleck's vision is extremely unlikely to become a reality. What clearly is a possibility is Republican gains in the offyear elections that would have an effect both in rollcalls and in the psychological atmosphere.

This will depend partly on the net effects of redistricting laws passed by state legislatures in New York, California and Illinois; partly on the failure of some states to redistrict so that in these states all members of the House may have to be elected at large; on the general tone and effectiveness of the Kennedy Administration's leadership in the coming months; on the quality of the candidates themselves in various states and districts.

It is perfectly plain that most of the Republican congressional leadership still believes that a highly partisan and conservative line is what the country wants. This is shown by the attacks of National Chairman William E. Miller on Kennedy's foreign policy as well as domestic programs. It is revealed in the presence of the conservative Sen. Barry Goldwater as Republican Senate Campaign Committee chairman and Rep. Bob Wilson of California as House Campaign Committee chairman.

And it shows up in the Senate specifically in the Hickenlooper challenge to Saltonstall.

1961: A Year of Adjustment for Labor

Jobless Rate, International Crises Spur Search for New Programs

By Harry Conn

The year 1961, for American labor, was one of adjustment—adjustment to an increasingly critical international situation; adjustment to a friendly Administration in Washington; adjustment to changes in the nature of the labor force; adjustment to need for new programs to solve the harsh problems of built-in high unemployment and jobs devastated by automation.

Following is a month-by-month review of the year from the files of Press Associates, Inc.

January

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, in annual New Year's message, says the "No. 1 challenge" facing the nation is to "put America back to work" . . . factory workers' income is down as jobless rolls grow. . . . ICFTU begins expending greater effort to assist unions in new nations. . . . Kennedy task force asks massive attack on deepening recession. . . . AFL-CIO pushes 20-point program for 87th Congress. . . . Three postal unions merge. . . . Unionists named to key spots in Labor Dept. . . . Labor views on health care prevail at White House parley. . . . Rail labor warns economies threaten railroad safety. . . . Kennedy Inaugural sounds eloquent cry for peace, freedom, prosperity. . . .

February

Kennedy gives "State of the Union" message to Congress, outlines vigorous program to meet perils. . . . House votes to restrict power of Rules Committee in major Kennedy victory. . . . "Greedy" corporate policies denounced by judge as he hands out fines, prison terms to electrical firms, executives. . . . Frank McCulloch named to head NLRB. . . . Textile Workers Union of America asks seven-point program to protect hard-hit industry. . . . Sitdowns, raids on union headquarters mark lettuce workers' organizing drive in California. . . . Ike's lame-duck NLRB decides against agency shop in Indiana. . . . Kennedy pushes Congress on social security, education and health bills. . . . Calvin of Boilermakers named to AFL-CIO Executive Council.

March

AFL-CIO urges more vigorous Cuban refugee aid. . . . "Good Neighbor" Latin American policy of Kennedy hailed. . . . Living costs drop first time in year . . . New Mexico rejects "work" law. . . . Kennedy names Judge Simon Rifkind to head Rail Study Commission. . . . Former IAM Sec.-Treas. Eric Peterson dies. . . . IUD rallies in Washington to "Get America Back to Work." . . . Succor for 'Captive Consumers':

AFL-CIO Calls on Congress To End Drug Industry Abuses

The AFL-CIO has strongly urged that Congress come to the aid of the "captive consumers" of prescription drugs through legislation to eliminate industry abuses.

Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller of the federation's Dept. of Legislation told the Senate antitrust subcommittee that labor supports legislation sponsored by Sen. Estes Kefauver (D.-Tenn.). He inserted in the record the resolution on Consumer Protection passed Dec. 12 by the recent AFL-CIO convention.

The convention called on Congress to enact legislation to "bring down the high price of prescription drugs, combat misleading advertising by drug companies and improve the safety and usefulness" of drug products.

Support for the Kefauver measure was voiced also on behalf of Auto Workers' Pres. Walter P. Reuther and by Mrs. Sarah Newman of the National Consumers League and Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey of the AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept.

Biemiller testified that labor has followed the investigations of the antitrust subcommittee into drug abuses "with interest, shock and concern" and reported the AFL-CIO convention's findings in these words:

Consumer 'Uniquely Helpless'

"The most glaring of the consumer interest issues . . . is that of the high price of prescription drugs, based on monopoly patent rights, restrictive licensing agreements, brand-name promotion and vast outlays for advertising."

The basic problem, Biemiller told the subcommittee, is that the consumer is in a "uniquely helpless position" because his choice of a drug is narrowed to what the doctor prescribes.

Asserting that the $2.5 billion prescription drug industry resembles a public utility in that the patient cannot shop for the best buy but must pay the asking price, he said the industry cannot expect to operate solely as a "commercial money-making operation" but must accept more controls and special "ground rules."

Biemiller said the federation accepts the conclusions in the majority report of the Kefauver subcommittee as to the "enormous profits" the industry has been able to reap, the "startling difference" between drug prices in this country and abroad, the rigid prices on drugs sold only by one group, and the "extraordinary difference in prices" of drugs sold under brand names and those sold under unknown brands or by a generic name.

The witness expressed general agreement with the remedies proposed in Kefauver's bill:

- Ending exclusive monopolies after three years while permitting patent holders to have royalty rights for 14 years.
- Requiring manufacturers to put generic names on drugs that are "genuinely descriptive and reasonably simple."
- Giving power to the Secretary of Health, Education & Welfare to setttle any dispute about drug names.
- Cracking down on "costly and misleading" drug advertising and warning on side effects of drugs.

Biemiller said he has calculated that total labor costs in the drug industry are less than 10 percent of manufacturers' selling prices.

Reuther's statement said legislators have "an abundance of expert testimony" and evidence underscoring the need for a law which will "help bring the cost of prescribed drugs" within the reach of all.

Carey testified that the so-called "dynamic product competition" in the drug industry is "just one big game of catch, with monopoly being the ball and the public the losing team."

Mrs. Newman declared it is "imperative" that Congress permit the Food & Drug Administration to inspect and license drug companies, and to test the effectiveness and "true therapeutic results" of a drug before it is marketed, as Kefauver proposes.

URW Names Abbott Education Director

Miami Beach, Fla.—Appointment of William L. Abbott as education director of the Rubber Workers was announced by URW Pres. George Burdon following a meeting of the union's executive board here.

Abbott, assistant education director for nine years, succeeds Joe Glazer, who resigned two months ago after having held the post for 12 years to join the U. S. Information Agency.

The new education director is 35 and was born in Milwaukee. He is a graduate of the University of Wisconsin and holds a master's degree in history from that university. He taught English for a year in Southern France, and joined the URW staff after serving two years as legislative director of the former Wisconsin State CIO. An Army veteran of World War II, he is married and has three children.

HIGH DRUG PRICES and what can be done about them interest Sen. Estes Kefauver, right, and Andrew J. Biemiller, director of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Legislation. Support for Kefauver's bill to protect consumers was voiced by Biemiller on behalf of the federation.

USW Wins On 2 SUB Issues In 1959 Strike

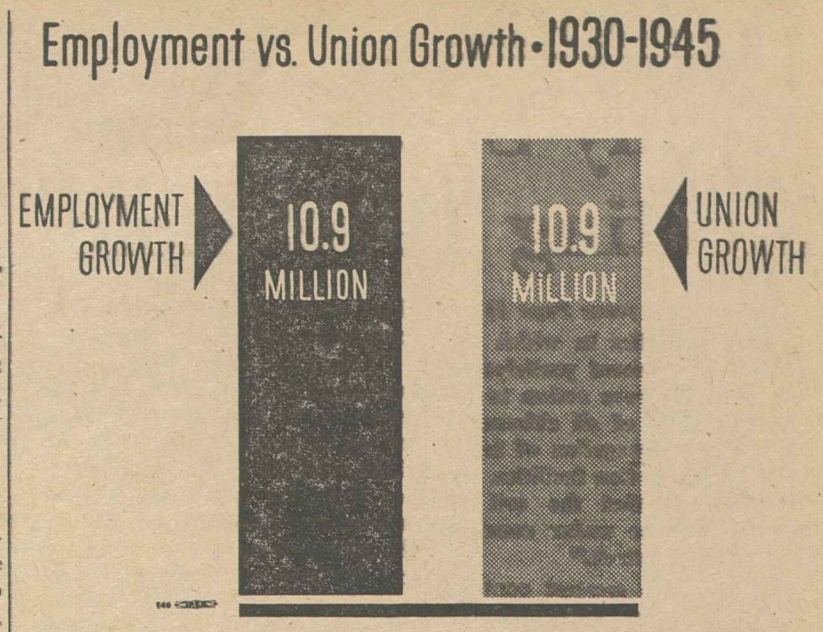
Pittsburgh — The Steelworkers have won an arbiter's ruling that the 11 major steel companies involved in the strike of 1959 must pay benefits from the supplemental unemployment benefits (SUB) fund to workers laid off before the strike for reasons not strike-connected.

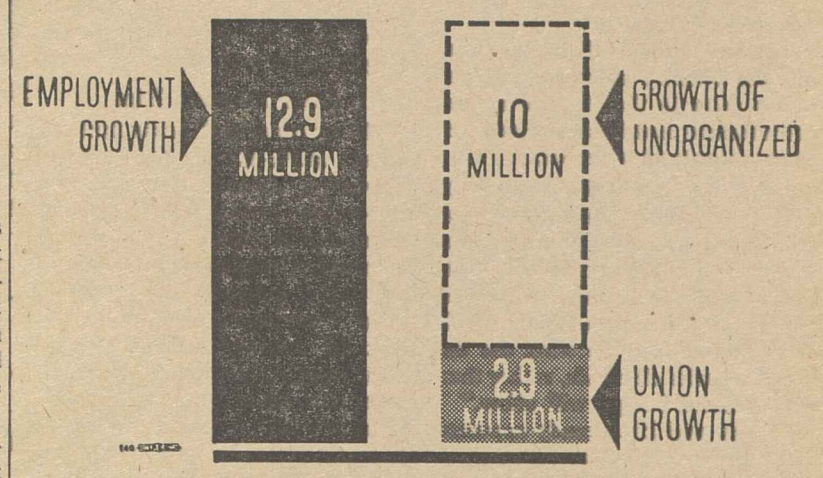
Arbitrator Ralph T. Seward rejected the companies' claim that their obligations to employes on prior layoff expired when the contracts expired. He ruled that coverage continues as long as the SUB plan itself continues—until all funds have been paid out.

Seward also ruled for the union on another point—whether steelworkers on strike from July 15 through Nov. 7, 1959, retained their eligibility for SUB benefits. He said they did.

On a third point the arbiter ruled for the companies. Seward said that the balance of the "contingent liability"—the amount of money to be paid in by the companies, accrued as of July 14, 1959—was canceled on that date. Both the SUB agreement itself and the memorandum of agreement after the strike ended declare that the contingent liability for that period was canceled, he said.

The SUB agreements between the union and the 11 major firms went into effect in 1956 and were extended from June 30, 1959, through July 14, 1959. The companies ceased paying SUB benefits after July 14 to those who had been laid off from any USWA bargaining units which went on strike, but continued to pay benefits to workers in non-USWA groups. After the strike ended in a new agreement on SUB and other benefits, the union carried three unsettled issues to arbitration.





Union Growth Keyed to White Collar Organizing

The seeds of employment growth—and of union membership growth—are largely in the white collar fields, AFL-CIO Research Dir. Stanley H. Ruttenberg concludes in an analysis of broad job and union growth data significant for organizing policy.

His analysis was originally prepared for a meeting of the AFL-CIO General Board last Oct. 9. Its highlights were picked up in an article in the December issue of the American Federationist as the monthly Collective Bargaining Report of the Dept. of Research.

The story is told graphically in the charts above. Between 1930 and 1945, union growth kept pace with employment growth, although this was a coincidence—the higher union membership came from those already in the work force and not from new workers. But between 1945 and 1960 the number of workers increased by 10 million more than the number of union members.

"Unions can provide an effective helping hand so white collar employment growth can be translated into improved employe dignity and well-being and a meaningful employe voice in determining conditions of work," Ruttenberg adds in his conclusion.

He points out that while the changing composition of employment has created problems for union organizers in the past, it may create "even greater problems in the future." The most significant shift, he notes, has been from mining, transportation, manufacturing and construction industries to government, trade, services and finance industries. Historically, he recalls, most union membership growth has been in the blue collar jobs.

"This means the most rapidly expanding employment is in sectors of the labor force where union strength is the lowest," he says. "The statistics on employment growth trends in the white collar areas make it clear that if organized labor is to continue to grow and expand with the changing labor force, substantial organizing progress must be made in the white collar sectors."

Ladies' Room 'Bugging' Kills Vote

Someone "bugged" the ladies' lounge at the Providence, R. I., plant of Glass-Tite Industries, Inc., and for that and other reasons the National Labor Relations Board has set aside an election lost last Feb. 16 by the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers.

The management denied being responsible for a microphone which three IUE supporters found shortly before an NLRB election last February, taped around some ceiling beams in the women's restroom.

But NLRB Trial Examiner Louis Libbin said he was convinced the "mike" was installed for the purpose of overhearing talk about the union, and that the company was responsible.

Three board members sitting as a panel upheld the examiner's findings and ordered management to cease interfering with employe freedom of choice. They also directed the Boston regional director to set up another election when circumstances permit a free choice.

Three women employes gave this testimony at a hearing conducted by Libbin:

- Employe Rose Tartaglione, acting on a telephoned tip, went into the ladies' room about 7:15 a.m. on Feb. 8, 1961, with two other IUE supporters, Nola Coulter and Martha Paglio.
- By standing on a chair at the point named by their informant, each in turn saw a microphone fastened with masking tape to the top of a steel beam. They traced a wire from the "mike" to the first aid room, across a corridor, through the drill room, and "down to the maintenance department."
- The microphone was still there the next day, but was gone by the following Monday, the three IUE supporters found.

Other testimony was to the effect that the union printed a handbill telling about the "bugging," but that managment made no mention of the subject in talks to the employes the day before the election, which the union lost, 74 to 209, with 21 ballots challenged.

The examiner and the board also found the company guilty of unfair labor practices in permitting foremen and supervisors to stand in line with employes at the polling place, and in giving economic benefits to workers to thwart the union campaign.

Hails Nation's Vitality:

Meany Sees Labor Meeting 1962 Role

housing activities in which the federal government participates; the more rigorous action to insure the right of all citizens to vote; the desegregation of interstate transportation facilities, are all evidence that the evil of bigotry will be under constant and effective attack."

"Perhaps the greatest contribution of the new Administration," Meany said, "has been in terms of spirit—a revival of the restless quest for something better, the refusal to yield to the inevitable, which have been the well-spring of America's greatness."

In international affairs, he went on, the country cannot claim any major gains in the struggle against communism and has even suffered some short-term reverses.

"Yet we can take heart," he said, "in having an international policy that is flexible on all matters except the cause of human freedom; a policy unhampered by preconceived attitudes; a policy which gives first priority to what the national security demands, rather than what a fixed budget will allow."

Meany said it is already apparent that "this clear-eyed, tough-minded, non-doctrinaire approach" has drawn the democratic nations closer.

"Our country's bonds with its free allies will be further strengthened," he said, by the revision of the reciprocal trade program in 1962—a "revision for which the Administration and the AFL-CIO will fight shoulder-to-shoulder, and which I am confident will be adopted by Congress."

Meany also voiced optimism about matters directly affecting the trade union movement. He said.

"Although a comprehensive overhauling of the nation's basic labor-management laws may not be in immediate prospect, despite the obvious need for it, the National Labor Relations Board and its general counsel have sharply modified the regressive policies in effect during the previous eight years and have returned to the fundamental principle that the encouragement of collective bargaining is in the best interests of the United States.

"We can once more look to the NLRB for the protection of workers' rights. This in itself will lower one of the chief barriers to organizing the unorganized."

Hails Disputes Plan

Meany expressed pride that the recent AFL-CIO convention adopted a formula for resolving inter-union jurisdictional disputes and said that "while it may not be foolproof, I predict without hesitation that it can and will work."

No comparable progress is in sight in labor-management relations, he said, predicting more employer support in 1962 for so-called "right-to-work" laws and the application of anti-trust laws to unions.

"Nevertheless," he said, 'the Administration as a whole and the Secretary of Labor in particular are diligently seeking to fulfill the goal they set a year ago —better understanding between the parties away from the bargaining table. The AFL-CIO will continue to cooperate wholeheartedly in this effort, in the hope that management will eventually show equal concern for the common good."

Four Freedoms Award Presented to Dubinsky

New York—The world has learned that freedom "can't be walled off and it can't be divided up," Pres. David Dubinsky of the Ladies' Garment Workers declared in accepting the Four Freedoms Award of the United Italian American Labor Council.

"The four freedoms described by [Pres.] Roosevelt are of one piece," he asserted. "One without the other has no real meaning."

The presentation was made at a dinner marking the 20th anniversary of the council, which was formed early in World War II to combat Fascist propaganda and to serve as a center for liberal Italian-Americans. Presiding was ILGWU Vice Pres. Luigi Antonini, IALC president, with AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany the principal speaker.

Dubinsky deplored the fact that even now, freedom for many millions "remains a dream, a hope that has to be whispered because it can mean death."

"The Communists promise freedom from hunger," he said. "But even where they fill the bellies for a while, they keep mouths gagged against the freedom to speak, and brains washed against the freedom to believe.

"Many of us are veterans of earlier battles for freedom—against the sweatshop, for the right to organize and to bargain collectively, against Fascism, against communism. As the world grows smaller and tighter, the fight for freedom grows greater. And our faith in the basic freedoms that have always guided us grows stronger.

"Freedom cannot be divided; it must become universal. Its meaning must be measured not by more power, more wealth, more silent agreement, but by the increase of individual human dignity."

Decade Reviewed

Meany outlined the continuing efforts of organized labor to defend and extend freedom, both home and abroad, on the political, economic and social fronts. He reviewed developments of the past 10 years that have made the trade union movement an increasingly powerful bulwark of freedom.

Among the developments he listed the AFL-CIO merger, "which is going to last—newspapermen to the contrary notwithstanding", labor's open fight on corruption, "which Dubinsky led years ago"; labor's impact on the shaping of U.S. foreign policy and its efforts to eliminate race bias from its own ranks; and the help it has given in building the first effective international labor movement.

The IALC did itself a great honor in selecting Dubinsky as the recipient of its award, Meany said. He hailed Dubinsky's building of the ILGWU and his fight in other areas on behalf of the cause of human freedom, and lauded Antonini's leadership in fighting fascism and its agents

Briton Heads ILO's New Labor School

Geneva—Director Gen. David A. Morse of the Intl. Labor Office has named Hilary A. Marquand, former minister of pensions and minister of health in Great Britain, as director of the new ILO Intl. Institute for Labor Studies beginning in January.

The institute was established by the ILO Governing Body to improve understanding of labor problems in all countries, and propose methods for their solution. Its first course next September will have participants from labor, government, management and the professions.

Marquand has resigned as a member of Parliament to take his new post. Since 1926 he has been a lecturer in economics, professor of industrial relations, author, public official, and guest lecturer at the University of Wisconsin and other U.S. universities. His books include The Dynamics of Industrial Combinations, and Industrial Relations in the USA.

Brighter Job Picture Seen By Labor Dept.

The employment picture for November, showing an all-time high in average weekly earnings of factory production workers and the highest factory workweek in two years, 40.6 hours, has been cited by a government spokesman as indicating basic improvement in the U.S. economy.

Backstopping a report made to the AFL-CIO convention by Pres. Kennedy, Dr. Seymour J. Wolfbein said workers on nonfarm payrolls in November totaled 55.1 million, equal to the all-time record. He is head of the Labor Dept.'s Office of Automation and Manpower.

Kennedy and Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg previously had reported a drop in joblessness from 6.8 percent in October to 6.1 percent in November.

Other features portrayed by Wolfbein in an analysis for newsmen were these:

- Total unemployment at 3.99 million was virtually unchanged from the month before or from November 1960. But unemployment has "fallen significantly" since February, the month when things began to move upward, in Wolfbein's view.
- In manufacturing industries, 16.14 million were employed last month — up about 100,000 in a month when the total usually drops.
- Transportation equipment, mostly autos, employed 105,000 or more workers than in the preceding month.

The Labor Dept. spokesman added these details:

Hours climbed from an average 40.4 a week to 40.6 in a month when the workweek usually gets shorter. Wolfbein saw this as "the first significant increase" in the workweek since late summer.

The average earnings figure for November was $95.82 a week for factory production workers, $6.61 more than a year ago.

"Significant amounts" of long-term unemployment persist. Still jobless after 15 or more weeks are these major groupings: men 45 years old or more; the Negro worker; the assembly line worker; the unskilled laborer.

Joblessness is most persistent in "hard goods"—the metal industries. Three times as many steelworkers and auto workers are jobless as their proportion of the work force would average out.

Goldberg Chosen For Dewey Award

New York — The United Federation of Teachers has announced that Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg will receive the union's annual John Dewey Award at a luncheon here next Mar. 3.

The award is made to an individual judged by the UFT executive board to have made a major contribution to Educator John Dewey's principle of "democracy in education, education for democracy." Formerly UFT legal counsel, Goldberg made a "most important contribution" toward winning a collective bargaining election for teaching employes, the board said. UFT won the election.

Perlis Lauds Judge's Veto of Newburgh Plan

New York—Supreme Court Justice Robert Doscher's invalidation of 12 of the 13 points in the stringent recent relief regulations of the city of Newburgh, N. Y., has been hailed as "a triumph of reason over the irrational" by Leo Perlis, director of AFL-CIO Community Service Activities.

The decision, Perlis declared, has implications "reaching far beyond New York State itself, since it could be the turning point in what has proved to be a nationwide ground swell of editorial and organized conservative reaction against public welfare."

The application for the injunction which Justice Doscher handed down was filed by the State Board of Social Welfare and State Commissioner of Social Welfare Raymond W. Houston, who, said Perlis, "deserve the heartfelt thanks of all who are concerned with the plight of the poor."

The Newburgh City Council set up the program July 15 in a resolution directing the city welfare commission to take action. On Aug. 18 Supreme Court Justice John Donahoe granted a temporary injunction restraining the city and City Manager Joseph McD. Mitchell from enforcing the same 12 points Justice Doscher has now ruled invalid.

The point that still stands requires able-bodied relief recipients to report monthly to the city welfare department for reviews of their cases.

The points outlawed under the permanent injunction include the denial of relief to unmarried mothers who bear more illegitimate children, a proposal which Perlis declared earlier amounted to visiting the sins of the parents on the children; a three-month maximum of benefits except for the aged, the blind and the disabled, and the assignment of physically qualified men on relief to 40 hours of work weekly for the city.

The injunction suit was based on the claim that federal and state laws were violated by the regulations.
